00108677

BOMBAY BRANCH
OF THE
ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.
TOWN HALL, BOMBAY.

Digitized with financial assistance from the Government of Maharashtra
on 26 June, 2018

122

L ASIA. No. 1 (1878).

ASSOCIATION
BOMBAY AND AGRA
OF THE ANGLO

CORRESPONDENCE

RESPECTING

10877

CENTRAL ASIA.

CX-K 5D

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty.
1878.

00108677

LONDON:
PRINTED BY HARRISON AND SONS.
[C.—2164.] Price 2s. 4d.

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
19	Mr. Taylour Thomson.	May 20, 1874	Meshed Agent reports that no Russian expedition will be dispatched against Merv this year	18
20	„ „	28,	Copy of Circular addressed by General Llamakin to the Turkomans	19
21	India Office ..	Oct. 29,	General Llamakin's Circular claiming possession of Persian territory between the Attrek and Georgan demands serious attention of Her Majesty's Government	20
22	To Lord A. Loftus ..	Nov. 6,	Sends copy of foregoing, with instructions to call attention of Russian Government to General Llamakin's language	20
23	Lord A. Loftus .	17,	Interview with M. de Westmann. He describes the Circular as a malentendu which has been satisfactorily arranged with Persian Government. Further conversation respecting the affairs of Persia..	21
24	To Lord A. Loftus ..	Dec. 16,	Approves language quoted in foregoing. Instructs him to correct M. de Westmann's statement as to correspondence respecting Persia in 1834 and 1838	22
25	Lord A. Loftus ..	23,	Conversation with M. de Westmann in pursuance of above instructions ..	23
26	To Lord A. Loftus ..	Mar. 19, 1875	Conversation with Count Schouvaloff on general question of Central Asian affairs.. ..	24
27	Lord A. Loftus ..	30,	Apprehensions of the Russian Government as to occupation of Quetta	25
28	India Office ..	May 3,	Lord A. Loftus should be informed of Treaty right to station English troops in any part of Khelat	25
29	Prince Gortchacow to Count Schouvaloff..	Apr. 5,	Forwards historical Memorandum on Central Asia, for communication to Her Majesty's Government. Gives assurances as to intentions of Russian Government	25
30	To India Office ..	May 26,	Inclosing copy of above. Proposed instructions to Lord A. Loftus	40
31	Lord A. Loftus ..	20,	Article from "Moscow Gazette" respecting projected expedition by General Llamakin to the Attrek, and reported submission of the Akhal Tékés to Russia. The intelligence dates from February last	41
32	India Office ..	June 22,	Observations on Prince Gortchakow's despatch of 5th April, and Memorandum inclosed in it. As to answer to be returned	43
33	Mr. Doria	23,	Conversation with Baron Jomini relative to the Russian scientific expedition to Hissar, and in regard to Central Asian affairs ..	44
34	„ „ ..	July 13,	Conversation with Baron Jomini .. to debate in the House of Commons on question of Central Asia. His views of possible contact of British and Russian Empires	45
35	India Office ..	Aug. 5,	Despatch from Government of India suggesting that Russian Government should be informed of Treaty right to station British troops in Khelat	46
36	Mr. Doria	3,	Baron Jomini declares there is no foundation for report of an intended expedition against Merv	46
37	India Office ..	21,	Detention of a Russian captive by Téké Turkomans at Merv. Have asked Ameer of Cabul to advise his release. To be communicated to Russian Government ..	46
38	To Mr. Doria ..	30,	Instruction to communicate substance of preceding to Russian Government	48
39	Mr. Doria	28,	Invasion of Russian territory by insurgents in Khokand, and measures taken to repress them. Statement in the "Invalide Russe" respecting	49
40	Mr. Scott	26,	Baron Jomini confirms news respecting Khokand	49
41	„ „ . ..	Sept. 1,	Despatch of Governor-General of Turkestan announcing his intention of invading Khokand, and his reasons for doing so. Translation from "Invalide Russe"	49
42	India Office ..	11,	Intention of the Ameer of Afghanistan to take military measures in regard to Merv. Suggests informing Russian Government ..	50

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
43	To Mr. Doria ..	Sept. 15, 1875	Instructions to inform Russian Government of Treaty right to station English troops in Khelat	51
44	Mr. Doria	7,	Russian scientific expedition to the Amu-Daria, and submission of Akhál Tékés to General Llamakin. Artice from "Moscow Gazette" on	52
45	" "	9,	Defeat of Khokand bands at Mahram, and projected attack on capital by General Kaufmann. Account from "Journal de St. Pétersbourg"	53
46	" "	15,	Russian advance in Khokand. Extract from "Journal de St. Pétersbourg"	53
47	To Mr. Doria ..	20,	Instructions to communicate substance of No. 42 to Imperial Government	54
48	Mr. Doria	18,	Has communicated to Baron Jomini copy of No. 37. He has forwarded it to the Emperor	54
49	" "	24,	Details of events after battle of Mahram. The new Ruler of Khokand has signified his submission to the Emperor	55
50	" "	27,	Maimena. Conversation with Baron Jomini respecting intended action of the Ameer in regard to	55
51	" "	Oct. 6,	Reported intrigues of the Ameer among Turkoman tribes Baron Jomini wishes to bring to notice of Her Majesty's Government ..	56
52	" "	13,	General Kaufmann's Proclamation to the people of Khokand. From the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg"	56
53	To Mr. Doria ..	20,	Approves action reported in No. 48. ..	57
54	" " ..	25,	Sends copy of Memorandum by Prince Gortchakow on Russian policy in Central Asia, with copy of a similar document in reply to it, to be communicated to Imperial Government	57
55	Lord A. Loftus ..	27,	Deposition of Nasr Eddin, lately installed as Khan of Khokand by Russian Governor-General, by his subjects. Communicated by Baron Jomini	60
56	" " ..	Nov. 9,	Has handed Memorandum to Baron Jomini (forwarded in No. 54). His Excellency expresses great satisfaction at sentiments of Her Majesty's Government, and has forwarded document to the Emperor . ..	60
57	India Office ..	18,	Forwards correspondence respecting relations of the Ameer with the Téké Turkomans, and the efforts made by the former to obtain release of Russian captives from Merv	61
58	" " ..	20,	Affairs in Afghanistan. Forwards copies of Cabul Diaries respecting. Arrival of Envoy with letter from General Kaufmann ..	62
59	To Lord A. Loftus ..	29,	Sends copy of No. 57, to be communicated to Russian Government	65
60	India Office ..	Jan. 6, 1876	Afghanistan. Reply of the Ameer to General Kaufmann	66
61	Lord A. Loftus ..	Feb. 2,	General Skobeleff's operations in Khokand: The "Invalide Russe" upon	67
62	Prince Gortchacow to Count Schouvaloff	$\frac{3}{15}$,	Reply to English Memorandum on Central Asia. Agree in abandoning idea of intermediate zone..	68
63	To Lord A. Loftus ..	29,	Has contradicted report that Indian Government had supplied Ameer of Kashgar with military instructors and arms	69
64	Lord A. Loftus ..	Mar. 15,	Decree of the Emperor incorporating the Khanate of Khokand, lately occupied by Russian troops, in Russian Empire. From "Journal de St. Pétersbourg"	70
65	" " ..	27,	Copy of Imperial Ukase annexing Khokand under title of "Province of Ferghanah" ..	70
66	India Office ..	Apr. 27,	Afghanistan. Sends copies of Cabul Diaries with letter from General Kaufmann to Ameer	71
67	" " ..	29,	Letter from Ameer to General Kaufmann ..	72
68	Lord A. Loftus ..	May 12,	Favourable impression produced by Mr. Disraeli's speech on Mr. Baillie Cochrane's motion in the House of Commons ..	73
69	India Office	Aug. 25,	Sends Cabul Diaries with letter from Governor-General of Russian Turkestan to Ameer ..	75

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
70	To Lord A. Loftus ..	Sept. 6, 1876	Forwards copy of above	79
71	India Office ..	22	Correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer at Cabul. Telegram from the Viceroy urging Her Majesty's Government to remonstrate with Russian Government respecting	79
72	To Lord A. Loftus ..	Oct. 2,	To call attention of Imperial Government to correspondence between General Kaufmann and Ameer, to remind them of assurances, and obtain disclaimer of intention to negotiate Treaties with Afghanistan	80
73	,, ,, ..	10,	Conversation with Count Schouvaloff respecting above reports. His Excellency disclaims knowledge of the matter, but will communicate with his Government on the subject ..	80
74	,, ,, ..	12,	Telegram read by Count Schouvaloff, denying categorically any negotiations by General Kaufmann at Cabul	80
75	India Office ..	14,	Release of Russian captive at Merv. Diary of British Agent at Cabul relative to efforts made by the Ameer to obtain	81
76	To India Office ..	14,	Denial by Russian Government of action by General Kaufmann at Cabul. May text of letter be communicated?	81
77	Lord A. Loftus ..	13,	General Kaufmann's negotiations with Cabul. Sends copy of note to the Imperial Government remonstrating	82
78	India Office ..	17,	Has no objection to communication to Russian Government of text of General Kaufmann's letter to the Ameer. Despatch from Government of India commenting on it, and sending further reports respecting ..	82
79	To Lord A. Loftus ..	21,	Approves note addressed to Russian Government respecting General Kaufmann's correspondence with Ameer	86
80	,, ,, ..	24,	Will show Count Schouvaloff copy of General Kaufmann's letter, to be laid before Imperial Government. Sends copy of No. 78 .	86
81	Lord A. Loftus ..	19,	Reported preparations at Herat for an expedition against Merv. Conversation with M. de Giers respecting	86
82	,, ,, ..	19,	General Kaufmann's letter. M. de Giers can find no information respecting. He has applied to General Kaufmann for an explanation, which he will communicate	86
83	India Office ..	Nov. 4,	Sends copies of further correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer ..	87
84	To Lord A. Loftus ..	7,	Has given copy of General Kaufmann's letter to Count Schouvaloff, which has been returned by him without comment. Copy may be handed to M. de Giers	88
85	,, ,, ..	15,	Inclosing copy of No. 83	89
86	Lord A. Loftus ..	15,	Interview with Prince Gortchakow. He denies project of an expedition against Merv, or existence of a Russian Agent at Cabul ..	89
87	,, ,, ..	17,	M. de Giers describes General Kaufmann's letter to the Ameer as one of courtesy, and disclaims any political communication. General Kaufmann's report as to military preparations in Afghanistan	89
88	To Lord A. Loftus ..	22	To communicate to Russian Government text of correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer, inclosed in No. 85 ..	90
89	India Office ..	Dec. 2,	Forwards Cabul Diaries from 18th August to 11th September. Calls attention to a requisition made on behalf of Governor-General of Russian Turkestan for surrender of a criminal	90
90	Lord A. Loftus ..	Nov. 28,	Has communicated text of correspondence between General Kaufmann and Ameer to M. de Giers. Sends copy of note inclosing it	91
91	,, ,, ..	Dec. 6,	Has called M. de Giers' attention to a statement as to reception of Russian Envoy by the Ameer of Cabul. M. de Giers knew nothing of this report, and denied political negotiations with the Ameer	92

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
92	Lord A. Loftus ..	Dec. 6, 1876	Copy of note from M. de Giers disclaiming existence of any political negotiations between General Kaufmann and the Ameer. He inquires respecting reported action of Indian Government against Swat, and of Afghanistan against Darwaz	93
93	,, , ..	16	Copy of note from M. de Giers inclosing Report from General Kaufmann denying having sent any Agents to Cabul, and disavowing political negotiations with the Ameer ..	94
94	To Lord A. Loftus ..	27,	Approves language to M. de Giers reported in No. 91	96
95	India Office ..	Jan. 13, 1877	Sends Cabul Diaries (17th October to 7th November.) Calls attention to passages relating to treatment of Russian Envoy at Cabul, and the arrival of a further messenger from General Kaufmann to the Ameer..	97
96	To Lord A. Loftus ..	19,	Inclosing copy of above. To draw attention of Russian Government to passage respecting treatment of Russian Envoy	99
97	India Office ..	27,	Cannot accept general view of the correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer, as stated in M. de Giers' note, to be correct. Denies any hostile intentions by Indian Government against Swat. Suggests note to M. de Giers in sense of the foregoing remarks	99
98	Mr. Taylour Thomson	Dec. 19, 1876	Asterabad Agent reports General Llamakin to be encamped thirty-two miles from Kizil Arvad, on his return from Khiva	100
99	To Lord A. Loftus ..	Feb. 7, 1877	Conveys substance of No. 97, to be communicated to M. de Giers	101
100	Lord A. Loftus ..	14,	M. de Giers declares that the bearer of General Kaufmann's letter was sent to Ameer of Bokhara, and was in no way authorized to assume character of a Russian Agent to Cabul	102
101	,, ,, ..	22,	Copy of note to M. de Giers embodying substance of No. 99	103
102	To Lord A. Loftus ..	Mar. 7,	Approves foregoing	104
103	Lord A. Loftus ..	15,	Reply of M. de Giers to note of 22nd ultimo. Renewed assurance that General Kaufmann has no political negotiations with the Ameer.	105
104	Mr. Taylour Thomson	Feb. 19,	General Llamakin has returned to Krasnovodsk. Reported object of his expedition.. ..	106
105	,, ,, ..	Mar. 16,	Reports from Meshed Agent. Persian Government have no knowledge of alleged negotiations between Akhal Chiefs and Russian authorities	107
106	,, ,, ..	22,	Reported submission of several Akhal Chiefs to General Llamakin, and his intention to proceed to Kizil Arvad and Bameh Boormeh	108
107	,, ,, ..	Apr. 17,	Sends translation of Proclamation issued by General Llamakin to Yemoot Turkomans ..	108
108	,, ,, ..	28,	Russian movement towards Kizil Arvad. Report from Meshed Agent upon	109
109	,, ,, ..	May 12,	Report from Meshed Agent. Submission of tribes to Russians	109
110	Lord A. Loftus ..	June 4,	Sends official bulletins from seat of war in the Caucasus. Attack of Turkomans repulsed by General Llamakin at Kizil Arvad ..	110
111	India Office ..	12,	Alleged movement of Afghan troops towards Darwaz. Indian Government have no knowledge of. Remarks on explanations as to correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer	110
112	To Lord A. Loftus ..	13,	To inform Russian Government that Her Majesty's Government hope the Russian force sent against the Turkomans will not make any advance upon Merv. Such a step would impose upon Her Majesty's Government the necessity of making a corresponding advance	111
113	,, ,, ..	19,	To inform Russian Government that Indian Government have no knowledge of any Afghan operations against Darwaz ..	113

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
114	Lord A. Loftus ..	June 22, 1877	Copy of note to M. de Giers conveying substance of No. 112	11
115	„ „	30,	Copy of note to M. de Giers conveying substance of No. 113	11
116	Mr. Taylour Thomson	16,	Report by Asterabad Agent of occupation of Kizil Arvad by Russians	115
117	To Lord A. Loftus ..	July 19,	Approves note to M. de Giers respecting Merv	116
118	Mr. Taylour Thomson	June 20,	Meshed Agent reports proposals of Russian authorities to inhabitants of Karee Kala and Kokhor to give their allegiance to Russia ..	116
119	„ „	30,	Russians have withdrawn from Kizil Arvad ..	117
120	„ „	July 5,	Russian proceedings at Kizil Arvad and Karee Kala. Letters from Meshed Agent giving details of	117
121	„ „	Aug. 7,	Report from Meshed Agent of withdrawal of Russian troops from Kizil Arvad ..	118
122	„ „	7,	Report from Meshed Agent of Russian movements, and of negotiations of Turkomans with Persian authorities	119
123	Lord A. Loftus ..	Sept. 12,	M. de Giers remarks on reported mission of an Envoy from the Sultan to the Ameer of Afghanistan, to excite populations of Central Asia to revolt against Russia. Hopes Her Majesty's Government will advise Ameer to abstain from any action in matter.	121
124	Mr. Taylour Thomson	Aug. 31,	Further as to negotiations between Téké Turkomans and Persian Government	121
125	„ „	Sept. 5,	Ditto	121
126	To Lord A. Loftus ..	Oct. 17,	Her Majesty's Government have no reason to suppose mission of Sultan's Envoy was to preach a crusade. Will urge Ameer to maintain peace with Bokhara	122
127	Lord A. Loftus ..	23,	Has communicated foregoing to M. de Giers. His Excellency had received no further reports respecting Turkish Mission ..	123
128	„ „ ..	23,	Russian movements on the Attrek. M. de Giers has forwarded a reply through Count Schouvaloff to Her Majesty's Government. Sends copy of despatch	123
129	Mr. Taylour Thomson	Jan. 3, 1878	Compact concluded between Persian Government and Turkomans of Merv	124
130	India Office ..	Mar. 8,	News Reports on Afghanistan. Reported visit of Russian Envoy to Cabul	125
131	„ „ ..	Apr. 5,	Sends News Report from the Government of the Punjab. Intentions of Ameer with regard to a jehad	126
132	Mr. Taylour Thomson	Feb. 14,	Submission of Merv Chiefs to Persia. Sends copy of the Shah's Firman	127
133	Lord A. Loftus ..	May 22,	Sends Memorandum on military intelligence. Calls attention to reinforcement of troops in Turkestan district	128
134	„ „ ..	June 5,	Relations between Persia, Russia, and England. Sends article from "Russki Mir," suggesting Russian occupation of Merv and Herat, in case of war with England ..	128
135	Mr. R. Thomson ..	Apr. 29,	Sends letter from Boojnoord, stating that Russians have notified to the Tékés that they intend to march upon them early next month	130
136	India Office ..	June 24,	Alleged approaching visit to Cabul of a Russian Ambassador. Sends copy of telegram from the Viceroy	130
137	Lord A. Loftus ..	18,	Is not aware of any fresh military movements in Central Asia. General Tchernaieff has been recalled. Is disposed to think military projects have been suspended	131
138	To Lord A. Loftus ..	26,	Sends copy of No. 136. To ascertain whether there is any truth in statement	131
139	Mr. R. Thomson ..	May 20,	Rumour respecting a Russian expedition into Akhal country received through a correspondent at Boojnoord. No confirmation has been received here	131
140	Lord A. Loftus ..	July 3,	Interview with M. de Giers. His Excellency denies any knowledge of a mission to Cabul, or of any intrigues with the Ameer ..	132
141	„ „ ..	10,	Orders for formation of corps of operation at Tashkend, from "Turkestan Gazette" of May 26	133

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
142	Lord A. Loftus ..	July 17, 1878	Further information from "Moscow Gazette" of military preparations in Turkestan ..	134
143	India Office ..	26,	News Reports from the Punjab. Russian communications with Cabul	135
144	„ „ ..	Aug. 2,	Rumoured Russian preparations in Central Asia against Afghanistan. Sends despatch from Government of India respecting ..	137
145	Mr. Plunkett ..	July 31,	Account from "Moscow Gazette" of M. Weinberg's mission to Bokhara	140
146	India Office . ..	Aug. 8,	Copies of telegrams from Indian Government announcing reception of Russian Mission at Cabul, contrary to existing understanding with Russia. For representation to Russian Government	142
147	„ „ .	9,	Further telegram from India on above subject. Russian Envoy received in Durbar on the 26th	144
148	„ „ ..	13,	Statement of the views of the Secretary of State for India on movements of Russian troops in Turkoman country and on the Oxus	145
149	Mr. Plunkett ..	12,	Accounts of surveys taken in neighbourhood of Krasnovodsk and Kizil Arvad.. ..	146
150	„ „ ..	14,	M. de Giers declares all military and political preparations against England to be stopped, and gives assurance that no Russian emissary had proceeded with a letter from the Emperor to Cabul. Possibly General Kaufmann may have sent a letter	147
151	„ „ ..	14,	Article in "Golos" respecting supposed destination of forces which had left Tashkand. Measures now stopped	148
152	To Mr. Plunkett ..	19,	Recapitulates assurances given by Russian Government as to Afghanistan, and expresses hope of Her Majesty's Government that if a Russian Mission has proceeded to Cabul it may be at once withdrawn	149
153	Mr. Plunkett ..	16,	Sends extracts from the "Agence Russe" and "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" announcing that military preparations in Central Asia have been stopped	150
154	„ „ ..	16,	Surveys made by Colonel Majen in view of march of Russian expedition towards Afghanistan	152
155	Mr. R. Thomson ..	July 1,	Letter from Meshed Agent describing rumoured Russian advance on Akhal, and referring to mission of M. Bakouline to Meshed ..	152
156	„ „ ..	7,	Russian troops landed at Chikislar supposed to be for expedition against Akhal and Merv ..	153
157	„ „ ..	8,	Sends letter from Asterabad Agent conveying details of foregoing	153
158	Mr. Plunkett ..	Aug. 27,	Has communicated to M. Melnikoff a note embodying instructions contained in No. 152. Sends copy of it	154
159	„ „ ..	28,	Surveys of routes towards Oxus. Further respecting	156
160	„ „ ..	Sept. 4,	Articles giving details of movements of Russian expeditionary force. It seems probable that General Stoletoff, not General Abramoff, was Russian Envoy to Cabul	157
161	India Office ..	10,	Afghanistan. Despatch from Government of India forwarding news Reports relative to Russian Mission	159
162	Mr. Plunkett ..	10,	Conversation with M. Melnikoff, who states that answer to note contained in No. 158 has left Livadia on 8th; and that Russian Chargé d'Affaires in London has been instructed to give explanations	162
163	To Mr. Plunkett ..	16,	Approves note to M. de Giers contained in No. 158	163
164	Mr. Plunkett ..	13,	Sends copy of M. de Giers' note in reply to representations respecting Russian Mission to Cabul	163
165	To India Office ..	20,	Sends copy of No. 164. Lord Salisbury infers from M. de Giers' note that he acknowledges all the former assurances respecting Afghanistan to have recovered their validity ..	165

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
166	To Mr. Plunkett ..	Sept. 25, 1878	Approves language to M. Melnikoff reported in despatch of 10th instant	165
167	„ „ ..	30,	Substance of explanations given by Russian Chargé d'Affaires	165

Appendix No. 1.

Correspondence in 1865.

No.	Name	Date.	Subject.	Page
1	Mr. Lumley ..	July 3, 1865	Article in "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" on Sir R. Murchison's address to Geographical Society as to progress of Russia in Central Asia. Views of Russian policy	167
2	„ „ ..	19,	M. de Westmann's denial of any intention of a Russian advance on Kashgar and Yarkand.	170
3	To Mr. Lumley ..	31,	Proposes an interchange of notes on the subject of the policy of the two Governments in Central Asia. Declaration of views of Her Majesty's Government as to Persia, &c. ..	170
4	Mr. Lumley ..	23,	Conversation with M. Stremoouchoff as to supposed intention to conclude Treaty with Bokhara for partition of Khokand	171
5	„ „ ..	23,	Improbability of any Russian expedition against Kashgar and Yarkand ..	171
6	„ „ ..	Aug. 5,	Conversation with Prince Gortchacow as to proposed exchange of views between the two Governments in regard to Central Asian policy	172
7	Prince Gortchacow to Baron Brunnow ..		Designs of Ameer of Bokhara against Khohand and Tashkend. They may necessitate measures on the part of the Russian Government	173
8	„ „ ..	5,	Assurances in regard to policy of Russian Government in Central Asia	174
9	To Sir A. Buchanan..	Sept. 16,	Inclosing copy of above. Prince Gortchacow's assurances are satisfactory, but would have preferred a declaration similar to that of Her Majesty's Government	175
10	Sir A. Buchanan ..	12,	Conversation with Prince Gortchacow as to exchange of views on Central Asian policy. Assurances given as to intention of Russia to respect the independence and integrity of Persia	175
11	„ „ ..	12,	Conversation with Prince Gortchacow respecting Bokhara and Khokand	176
12	„ „ ..	14,	Audience of the Emperor. His Majesty's observations on policy of Russia in Asia ..	177
13	„ „ ..	Oct. 9,	Negotiations with Bokhara at Tashkend ..	177
14	„ „ ..	11,	Instructions sent to Baron Brunnow respecting policy of Russia in regard to Persia and Central Asia. Remarks as to	178
15	„ „ ..	Dec. 6,	Conversation with Prince Gortchacow. His Highness is unfavourable to further extension of Russian frontiers to the East ..	178

Appendix No. 2.

Correspondence: 1870–73.

1	India Office ..	Aug. 2, 1870	Letter from General Kaufmann to the Ameer of Afghanistan. Advice given by the Viceroy as to reply	179
2	„ „ ..	Oct. 12,	Ameer's reply to letter of Viceroy	186

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
3	India Office ..	June 15, 1871	Letter from General Kaufmann to Ameer of Afghanistan. Advice given as to reply ..	188
	„ „ ..	6, 1872	Further letter from General Kaufmann to the Ameer	191
5	Governor-General of India	24,	Letter from General Kaufmann to Ameer respecting return to Cabul of Secunder Khan .	193
6	„ „ ..	Aug. 5,	Reply of Ameer to General Kaufmann's last letter	196
7	„ „ ..	Sept. 9,	Further correspondence between Ameer and General Kaufmann. Observations of the Ameer, and advice given by the Viceroy ..	196
8	„ „ ..	Oct. 10,	Further correspondence. Anxiety of Ameer respecting	200
9	India Office ..	Jan. 30, 1873	Cabul Diaries. Request made by Ameer to Governor-General of Turkestan that Abdul Rahman Khan may be kept away from Cabul	202
10	„ „ ..	Aug. 14,	Forwards copy of despatch from Government of India of 30th June, 1873, on policy in Central Asia. Suggests its communication to Russian Government	204
11	„ „ ..	14,	Suggestion from Government of India that proposals should be made to the Russian Government for definition of northern and western frontier of Yarkand	205
12	To India Office ..	25,	Do not think it desirable to communicate despatch of Indian Government to Russian Government, nor to raise question of frontier of Yarkand	206

Correspondence respecting Central Asia.

No. 1.

Mr. Doria to Earl Granville.—(Received December 29.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, December 20, 1873.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith to your Lordship copy of the Treaty of Peace between Russia and the Khan of Khiva, which is published in the "Petersburgh Journal" of the 13th instant. The text of the Treaty is preceded by a preamble, and explains the reason by which Russia was actuated in undertaking the expedition to Khiva, and the motives by which she has been influenced in making the various stipulations in the Treaty.

I am, &c.
(Signed) WM. DORIA.

Inclosure in No. 1

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of $\frac{1}{13}$ December, 1873.

ON lit dans le "Messager Officiel" d'aujourd'hui, 30 Novembre:—

"On connaît les motifs que ont amené l'expédition de Khiva. Des brigandages continuels, l'imposition de redevances sur les Kirghises soumis à notre domination, des excitations à la révolte parmi ces nomades, la capture de nos sujets réduits à l'esclavage, —tels sont les faits qui depuis bien des années réclamaient l'adoption de mesures décisives contre ce Khanat; toutefois notre Gouvernement n'avait pas perdu l'espoir d'arriver par des voies pacifiques à l'établissement de relations plus régulières avec ces turbulents voisins.

"Plus d'une fois nous avons fait parvenir au Khan des réclamations modérées, mais elles sont demeurées sans réponse ou bien elles ont provoqué de sa part un refus arrogant.

"Après l'insuccès de ces efforts réitérés, une expédition fut décidée. Le but en était d'abord de châtier le Khan pour le passé, ensuite de créer un état de choses qui garantît nos sujets des incursions et des déprédations des Khiviens et des Turcomans, et rendît possible le développement de relations commerciales pacifiques.

"La difficulté de ce problème consistait surtout en ce que les bases fondamentales de tous les Etats de l'Asie Centrale sont tellement précaires et si peu solides qu'il était à craindre qu'en frappant le Khiva d'un châtiment mérité, il ne cessât d'exister comme Etat indépendant; or, un semblable résultat n'aurait nullement répondu aux vues de notre Gouvernement, qui jusqu'à présent voue ses constants efforts à soutenir et à consolider l'existence autonome des autres Etats limitrophes de nos possessions dans l'Asie Centrale, tels que le Boukhara et le Kokand.

"Lorsque Khiva eut été occupé et qu'on fut à même de connaître les conditions de la vie intérieure du pays, on put se convaincre que même avec la meilleure volonté de la part du Khan et de ses conseillers d'entretenir avec nous des relations de bon voisinage, la force nécessaire à cet effet lui aurait fait défaut, car son influence sur les Tourkmènes nomades ou demi-nomades ne se manifeste que par intermittence; souvent elle est nulle, et il arrive parfois que lui-même, ainsi que ses sujets colonisés, ont à subir l'ascendant de ces brigands des steppes.

"Ainsi, après le départ de notre corps expéditionnaire, les mêmes incursions et déprédations auraient infailliblement recommencé et exigé un nouveau châtiment, et alors aucun effort n'aurait réussi à préserver l'existence autonome du Khiva.

"Il était donc nécessaire de se prémunir contre une éventualité si peu désirable, qui nous eût exposé à de grands sacrifices et à une grave déviation du programme de notre politique dans l'Asie Centrale.

"C'est pourquoi il a été jugé indispensable d'établir un point fortifié pourvu d'une garnison suffisante, afin de garantir nos frontières contre les attaques des brigands, de protéger nos caravanes et celles des Khiviens, et en même temps de soutenir le Khan s'il était menacé par les Tourkmènes.

"Le meilleur point à choisir pour l'établissement de ce fort aurait pu être la rive méridionale de la Mer d'Aral, qui nous eût assuré une communication par eau avec les bouches de l'Amou-Daria. Malheureusement, cette côte, entourée de marécages ininterrompus, ne présente aucune localité favorable à l'érection d'une station fortifiée.

"On dut donc construire ce fort sur la rive droite de l'Amou-Daria; en outre il était nécessaire d'assurer les communications du fort et de sa garnison avec la Province de Turkestan. Sans parler des difficultés de la navigation sur le bas Amou-Daria—en hiver elle devient entièrement impossible et il ne reste d'autre voie que la steppe—il a été jugé indispensable de réunir à nos possessions le désert aride qui s'étend entre ce fort et la Province de Turkestan. Certes, si l'on avait pu trouver une autre garantie quelconque qui nous rassurât efficacement pour l'avenir, on y aurait donné la préférence. Mais quelque stérile et onéreuse que soit pour nous une pareille acquisition territoriale, elle a été inévitable, vu que le Khan de Khiva lui-même a reconnu et déclaré qu'il ne serait en mesure de remplir ses obligations envers nous et de rétablir les relations désirées avec notre Gouvernement, qu'à la condition absolue d'avoir à proximité un fort et un corps de troupes Russes. Ses vœux allaient même plus loin encore; il a instamment sollicité le maintien des troupes Russes pour l'avenir dans la ville même de Khiva.

"En outre, comme il a été dit plus haut, cette solution était la seule qui pût garantir nos frontières et notre commerce, et éviter ainsi, dans l'avenir la nécessité d'une nouvelle expédition avec toutes les conséquences qu'elle eût entraînées, c'est-à-dire la destruction définitive du Khanat de Khiva,—conséquence qui eût été tout-à-fait contraire à nos principes politiques et à nos vues sur l'Asie Centrale.

"Afin de déterminer les obligations du Khiva et ses futurs rapports avec nous, un Traité a été conclu entre l'Aide-de-camp Général de Kaufmann et le Khan de Khiva. Pour se former une idée claire et complète de la signification et du sens de cet acte, il est indispensable d'en diviser les stipulations, d'après leur teneur, en deux catégories distinctes.

"A la première doivent être rapportés tous les Articles qui fixent d'une manière précise et permanente les relations et les obligations du Khiva envers la Russie, et qui ne doivent par conséquent subir aucune modification quelconque dans l'avenir.

"A la seconde catégorie appartiennent les clauses, motivées par les exigences du moment, qui ne doivent servir qu'à l'établissement de rapports ultérieurs invariables et permanents, et peuvent être adoucies, modifiés ou même entièrement abrogées par nos autorités locales supérieures au fur et à mesure que leur maintien en vigueur ne paraîtra plus utile ou nécessaire.

"Il ne sera pas superflu, ce nous semble, d'examiner successivement chacune des clauses de ce Traité et de préciser tant leur signification que les considérations qui les ont motivées.

"L'Article I, indépendamment de sa signification morale à la suite des actes hostiles du Khiva, a pour but fondamental, conformément à nos constants efforts, de prévenir entre les Souverains de l'Asie Centrale les querelles et les collisions qui auraient pour résultat inévitable de les affaiblir mutuellement et de créer parmi eux le désordre et l'anarchie.

"La délimitation stipulée dans les Articles II et III a été suggérée par le désir d'avoir en tout temps la possibilité de réprimer les entreprises hostiles des pillards Khiviens et Tourkmènes, et de garantir les communications par terre et par eau de nos troupes et de nos caravanes.

"La rétrocession stipulée dans l'Article IV en faveur du Boukhara, d'une partie de la rive droite de l'Amou-Daria, et de la portion méridionale de la steppe qui s'étend entre cette rivière et la Province de Turkestan, est mise à exécution dans le but de placer sous la domination, et par conséquent sous le contrôle et la responsabilité de l'Emir de Boukhara, les routes de caravanes conduisant des possessions Boukhares à celles de la Russie.

"Les restrictions à la navigation sur l'Amou-Daria contenues dans l'Article V sont indispensables jusqu'au moment où les nomades Khiviens et Boukhares auront renoncé à leurs habitudes de brigandage et cesseront de profiter de la navigation sur l'Amou-Daria pour y donner cours.

"Les Articles VI à XV établissent des règles commerciales fondées sur la réciprocité et l'égalité des droits respectifs.

"L'expérience du passé a démontré la nécessité de l'Article XVI, vu que le Khiva était un asile toujours ouvert à tous les criminels échappés de nos frontières.

"L'Article XVII met un terme à l'esclavage et au trafic des prisonniers à Khiva.

"Enfin, l'Article XVIII détermine la valeur, les termes, et le mode de paiement de la contribution de guerre, laquelle a eu en vue moins de rembourser les dépenses faites par nous que d'infliger au Khiva un châtiment sensible.

"Si nous réussissions avec le temps à dompter les Tourkmènes, à les habituer à un genre de vie paisible et à consolider la domination du Khan sur ces tribus, nous aurions ainsi résolu le difficile problème de garantir la sécurité de nos sujets, de développer le commerce et en même temps d'assurer la conservation, si désirable pour nous-mêmes, de l'indépendance du Khiva."

[For Treaty, see "Russia No. 2, 1874."]

(Translation.)

THE following appears in the "Messager Officiel" of to-day, November 30:—

"The motives which gave rise to the expedition to Khiva are well known. Continual acts of brigandage, exactions imposed upon the Kirghese subject to our rule, incitement to revolt among those nomad tribes, and the capture and enslavement of our subjects—such are the facts which have for many years called for decisive action against that Khanate; our Government had not, however, given up all hope of arriving by peaceful means at the establishment of more regular relations with these turbulent neighbours.

"More than once we have addressed to the Khan temperate representations, but they had either remained unanswered or had been met by a haughty refusal on his part.

"After the failure of these repeated efforts an expedition was determined upon. Its object was, in the first place, to punish the Khan for his past conduct, and next, to originate a state of affairs which would secure our subjects from the incursions and depredations of the Khivans and Turkomans, and render possible the development of peaceful commercial relations.

"The difficulty of this problem lay chiefly in the fact that the fundamental bases of all the States of Central Asia are so precarious and ill-consolidated that it was to be feared that in inflicting upon Khiva a well-deserved chastisement, it might cease to exist as an independent State. Such a result would have been in no way consistent with the views of our Government, who, until now, have devoted their constant efforts to the maintenance and consolidation of the autonomous existence of the other States bordering upon our possessions in Central Asia, such as Bokhara and Khokand.

"After the occupation of Khiva, and when we were in a position to learn the conditions of the internal life of the country, we were convinced that, even with the best intentions on the Khan's part, and on that of his advisers, to maintain with us relations of good neighbourhood, he would not have had the strength necessary for the purpose, since his influence with the nomad or semi-nomad Turkomans is only displayed intermittently; it is often null, and it sometimes happens that he himself, no less than his colonized subjects, have to submit to the ascendancy of these brigands of the steppes.

"Thus, after the departure of our expeditionary corps, the same inroads and depredations would infallibly have recommenced and required fresh punishment, and then no effort would have succeeded in preserving the autonomous existence of Khiva.

"It was therefore necessary to take precautions against so undesirable an eventuality, which would have exposed us to great sacrifices, and to a grave deviation from the programme of our policy in Central Asia.

"It was therefore considered indispensable to establish a fortified position, provided with a sufficient garrison, in order to secure our frontiers against the attacks of brigands, to protect our caravans and those of the Khivans, and, at the same time, to support the Khan if he should be threatened by the Turkomans.

"The best point to have chosen for the erection of this fort would perhaps have been the southern shore of the Sea of Aral, which would have assured us a communication by water with the mouths of the Amou-Daria. Unfortunately, this coast, surrounded by uninterrupted marshes, presents no favourable spot for the erection of a fortified station.

"We had, therefore, to construct the fort on the right bank of the Amou-Daria; it was, moreover, necessary to assure the communications of the fort and of its garrison with the Province of Turkestan. Without mentioning the difficulties of navigation on the Amou-Daria—in winter it becomes entirely impossible, and no other way but the steppe remains—it was considered indispensable to annex to our possessions the arid desert which stretches between the fort and the Province of Turkestan. Certainly, had it been possible to find any other guarantee which would have given us satisfactory securities for the future, it would have been preferred. But, however barren and burdensome such a territorial acquisition might be to us, it was inevitable, inasmuch as the Khan of of Khiva himself admitted that he would only be able to fulfil his obligations towards us and to re-establish the desired relations with our Government, on the positive condition of having a fort and a body of Russian troops in his proximity. His wishes went even further; he urgently requested the maintenance of the Russian troops in the town of Khiva itself.

"Moreover, as has been said above, this solution was the only one which could secure our frontiers and our commerce, and thus avoid in the future the necessity of a fresh expedition, with all the consequences which it would bring with it, that is to say, the definitive destruction of the Khanate of Khiva, a consequence which would have been entirely contrary to our political principles, and to our views as regards Central Asia.

"In order to determine the obligations of Khiva and its future relations with us, a Treaty has been concluded between Aide-de-camp General de Kaufmann and the Khan of Khiva. In order to form a clear and complete idea of the meaning and intention of this act, it is indispensable to divide its stipulations, according to their tenour, into two distinct categories.

"To the first class should be referred all the Articles which fix in a precise and permanent manner the relations and obligations of Khiva to Russia, and which consequently are to undergo no modification whatever in the future.

"To the second category belong the clauses, founded on the requirements of the moment, which should only serve for the establishment of ulterior relations of an invariable and permanent character, and which admit of being gradually softened, modified, or even entirely abrogated by our superior local authorities, according as their maintenance in force appears no longer useful or necessary.

"It will not, we think, be superfluous to examine successively each of the clauses of the Treaty, and to state clearly both their meaning and the considerations which dictated them.

"Article I, independent of its moral signification with reference to the hostile acts of Khiva, has for its fundamental object, conformably with our constant efforts, to prevent the quarrels and collisions between the Sovereigns of Central Asia which would have the inevitable effect of mutually weakening them and creating disorder and anarchy amongst them.

"The delimitation stipulated in Articles II and III was suggested by the desire to have at all times the power of repressing the hostile enterprises of the Khivan and Turkoman robbers, and to guarantee the communications by land and water of our troops and caravans.

"The retrocession stipulated in Article IV in favour of Bokhara, of a part of the right bank of the Amou-Daria, and of the southern portion of the steppe which stretches between that river and the Province of Turkestan, is put in execution with the object of placing under the dominion, and consequently under the control and responsibility of the Ameer of Bokhara, the caravan tracts leading from the Bokharian possessions to those of Russia.

"The restrictions on the navigation of the Amou-Daria contained in Article V are indispensable until such time as the Khivan and Bokharian nomads shall have renounced their habits of brigandage and shall cease to avail themselves of the navigation on the Amou-Daria to indulge in them.

"Articles VI to XV establish commercial regulations founded upon the reciprocity and equality of respective rights.

"The experience of the past has manifested the necessity of Article XVI, since Khiva was an asylum always open to all the criminals who escaped from our frontiers.

"Article XVII puts an end to slavery and to the traffic of prisoners in Khiva.

"Finally, Article XVIII determines the amount, the dates, and the mode of payment of the war indemnity, which was imposed not so much with the view of reimbursing the expenditure incurred by us as of inflicting on Khiva a sensible punishment.

"If we should succeed with time in subjecting the Turkomans, in accustoming them to a peaceable mode of existence, and in consolidating the dominion of the Khan over these tribes, we shall thus have solved the difficult problem of guaranteeing the security of our subjects, of developing commerce, and at the same time of assuring the preservation of the independence of Khiva, which is so desirable for ourselves."

No. 2.

Lord A. Loftus to Earl Granville.—(Received January 23.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, January 19, 1874.

AT an interview I had with Prince Gortchakow shortly after my return here, his Highness referred to certain articles of the press in regard to Central Asia, in which public attention was called to the advance of Russia in that country. In referring to remarks of the press on the Treaty concluded between General Kaufmann and Khiva, his Highness said that the motives had been clearly explained in an article from the "Messager Officiel" (copy of which was forwarded to your Lordship by Mr. Doria in his despatch of the 20th ultimo).

His Highness then repeated the arguments made use of in that article, stating that the Imperial Commander had strictly abstained from remaining in occupation of Khiva, although requested to do so by the Khan for his own protection, but that he had been obliged to occupy such a position as would enable him to maintain peace and order, which otherwise would have been impossible. The wish of the Imperial Government was to maintain the Khan in his sovereign position, and to do so they were obliged to grant him their protection.

Had the Russian forces retired altogether, disorder would have recommenced, and if they had been obliged to make a second expedition to Khiva, no other course but that of annexation would have remained.

On my relating to his Highness my conversation with the Emperor,* and the dangers which might arise from an expedition against the Turkomans, his Highness said that no such expedition was intended unless the Turkomans took the offensive against them.

His Highness took occasion to state that Russia considered Afghanistan as beyond the sphere of her action, and that they would strictly adhere to this policy.

His Highness referred to the interview he had had with the late Earl of Clarendon at Heidelberg, and expressed his belief and hope that no difficulties would arise between the two Governments on Central Asian affairs.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 3.

Lord A. Loftus to Earl Granville.—(Received January 23.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, January 19, 1874.

I HAD the honour to be received in a private audience by the Emperor on my return from England.

On this occasion I renewed to His Majesty my felicitations on the happy event which was to unite the two Royal and Imperial Families, and which I trusted would be the means of establishing an intimate and cordial feeling between the two nations. I expressed my satisfaction at seeing the two national flags flying together on the arrival of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, and I hoped that they would ever continue to do so.

His Imperial Majesty, who received me most graciously, reciprocated warmly these felicitations and good wishes. He expressed his anxious desire for the cultivation of friendly feelings with England in the interests of peace, of civilization, and of humanity. His Majesty said that he had no aggressive policy. The expedition to Khiva had been forced upon him by the lawless behaviour of the Khan towards the traders who passed through that country, and that it had been found absolutely necessary to put an end to the state of pillage and robbery carried on by the nomad Turkoman tribes in that country.

* See No. 3.

I stated to His Majesty that there had been one act of His Majesty, which would form the brightest page in the history of his glorious reign, namely, the abolition of slavery in Khiva and its adjoining Khanates. No measure would tend more to arrest the robberies carried on by the nomad tribes, for whom the markets were closed. There would be no further inducements for the horrid practice of man-stealing, so resorted to of late years by the Turkomans. I then observed to His Majesty, in regard to the groundless fears expressed by the English journals of the advance of Russia towards India, to which His Majesty had referred, that the punishment inflicted on the Khan for his misgovernment in that Khanate, as regarded foreigners and commercial travellers, had not alarmed the public mind in England. The question of Khiva had now been settled. But I confessed to His Majesty that there was a feeling of alarm in some portion of the public mind in England; a feeling, I might say, that was in no way dictated by any hostility to Russia, but rather by a fear lest unforeseen events might engender future difficulties, which might do injury to the good relations between England and Russia, namely, a feeling of alarm at certain reports propagated by the press of an intended Russian expedition in the spring against the independent Turkoman tribes, a restless race, who led a wandering life among the steppes situated between the Caspian and Afghanistan. Such an expedition might be productive of dangers now unforeseen. It might drive the Turkomans on the soil of Afghanistan or into the Province of Herat, which might produce complications with the Ruler of Afghanistan. This was a danger which it would be wise to foresee, in order to avoid.

His Majesty said at once that there was no intention of making any expedition against the Turkomans; but, if they should attack or molest the Russian settlements, they must suffer for the consequences of it.

I remarked to His Majesty that I was happy to learn this refutation of the reports from His Majesty's own lips, and that in referring to them I had merely acted as a pilot on board ship, whose duty it was to point out the rocks, to warn the navigator against them.

His Majesty expressed his anxious wish that no cloud, as regarded Central Asian or any other question, should darken the happy relations between the two Governments; and he told me on every occasion when any difficulty manifested itself, to address myself directly to the Chancellor, adding that he would be happy to receive me whenever I judged it necessary. I thanked His Majesty for his gracious permission, and said that I should gladly avail myself of it if circumstances should render it necessary.

In closing this Report, I may add, that nothing could exceed the gracious kindness of His Majesty, nor the heartiness of his expressions of good-will and friendship towards England.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 4.

Lord A. Loftus to Earl Granville.—(Received February 2.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, January 28, 1874.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch No. 23 of the 7th instant, on the affairs of Central Asia.*

In conformity with your Lordship's instructions, I communicated that despatch yesterday to Prince Gortchakow, and left a copy of it in the hands of his Highness.

Prince Gortchakow stated that he should lay it immediately before His Majesty the Emperor.

With a view to place on record the assurances given to me by the Emperor and Prince Gortchakow that there was no intention of undertaking any expedition against the Turkomans unless they should take the aggressive against the Russians, I have communicated my despatches of the 19th instant to Prince Gortchakow. His Highness informed me that he submitted them to the Emperor, who had expressed his appreciation of the accuracy of the report of my audience of His Majesty.

After communicating your Lordship's despatch, Prince Gortchakow said that he could only repeat to me the assurances he had always given that the Imperial Government had no intention of sending any expedition against the Turkomans, or of occupying Merve.

* See "Russia No. 2 (1874)," No. 2.

His Highness observed that Her Majesty's Government could materially assist the pacific intentions of the Imperial Government by using their influence through the Ameer of Afghanistan to restrain the lawless and predatory habits of the Turkoman tribes.

"We shall not," said Prince Gortchakow, "attack them; but if they attack us, or commit depredations on our commercial travellers, we shall be obliged to inflict punishment on them."

I remarked to his Highness that Her Majesty's Government had no doubts of the pacific desires of the Imperial Government, but that, unfortunately, these desires had been frequently counteracted by the military commanders, who acted on their own responsibility in contravention of the instructions of the Central Civil Government.

Military jealousy and military ambition were powerful stimulants at so great a distance from the Central Government, and were not always to be controlled.

His Highness replied, with great decision, that, although there was a party anxious for military activity and decorations, he felt that his influence was sufficiently strong to counteract such endeavours, and so long as he held power, these efforts would be restrained.

As regards Afghanistan, his Highness repeated to me that the Imperial Government considered that kingdom to be beyond the sphere of their political action, and that, happen what might, in the internal state of that country the Imperial Government would not interfere.

He referred to the positive injunctions given to Abdul Rahman Khan by the Imperial Government, as the condition on which he was permitted to reside at Samarcand, that he should abstain from all intrigues and designs dangerous to the present Ruler of Afghanistan, and his Highness repeated to me that should he contravene them he will be removed from his present place of residence.

His Highness further informed me that a scientific mission was intended to explore and survey the course of the Lower Oxus, for the purpose of improving the navigation.

It had been suggested to him that this expedition for a similar object might extend these explorations and researches to the Upper Oxus, as far as Sirikul, or Wood's Lake, which portion forms the boundary of Afghanistan.

His Highness remarked, however, that he was opposed to this suggestion, considering that it might give rise to false suppositions, and be attributed to wrong motives.

His Highness expressed his desire and hope that a perfect understanding by a free and amicable exchange of opinions should continue to exist between the two Governments, so necessary for the interests of both, and so conducive to the maintenance of peace and order in Central Asia.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 5.

Sir J. Kaye to Lord Tenterden.—(Received February 10.)

My Lord, India Office, February 10, 1874.

I AM directed by the Duke of Argyll to forward, for the information of Earl Granville, copy of a despatch from the Government of India, dated 26th December, 1873, with inclosed Cabul Diaries.

I am, &c.
(Signed) J. WM. KAYE.

Inclosure 1 in No 5.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

My Lord Duke, Fort William, December 26, 1873.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers relating to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We have, &c.

(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
R. TEMPLE.
B. H. ELLIS.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.

Inclosure 2 in No. 5.

The Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawur Division, to Mr. Aitchison.

Peshawur, December 4, 1873.

FORWARDS, for the information of the Supreme Government, translation of Cabul Diary from the 21st to the 24th November, 1873, inclusive, together with its inclosures.

Cabul Diary from the 21st to the 24th November, 1873, inclusive.

Copy of a murrasilla sent to the Russian Governor-General of Turkestan, mentioned in the Cabul Diary of 17th November, 1873, is inclosed along with a copy of letter sent to Koshad Khan, Chief of Merv Shahjehan, alluded to in the same Diary.

Abstract Translation of a Murrasilla, dated November 16, 1873, from the Ameer to the Russian Governor-General at Tashkend.

I received your kind and friendly letter dated the 1st August, 1873, on 22nd idem, and was extremely gratified with its contents. The cause of the delay of a few months in the dispatch of a reply to it is evident, viz., first you went to St. Petersburgh, and afterwards you were occupied in the Kharism expedition. I hope you have now returned in health and comfort to Tashkend, and I have, therefore, considered it advisable to take the opportunity of sending a reply to your murrasilla. I am much gratified with the contents of your letter explaining that His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia is anxious for the peace and welfare of neighbouring States, and that you have considered it one of your most pleasing duties to report to His Majesty that you have had every reason to be satisfied with me, and that I have upheld the friendship existing between us. It is as evident as daylight that at present His Majesty is a great and powerful Monarch, and it is, therefore, becoming that neighbouring States should enjoy tranquillity and convenience. This policy will tend to confirm the friendship existing between His Majesty and these States. I have expressed my gratification in my murrasilla dated the 15th "Rabiul-awul," 1288, written in reply to your murrasilla of the 28th March, 1870=25th Zilhej, 1287, containing your promise that no Russian officer will interfere with the affairs of Afghanistan, and that no assistance or advice will be given to the enemies of that kingdom which may be turned against it. I still entertain the hope that by the Grace of God the friendship existing between us will not be disturbed, and that the neighbouring States will be allowed to enjoy peace.

My attention will always be devoted to this point.

I hope you will continue to inform me of your health, &c.

Inclosure 3 in No. 5.

The Agent at Cabul to the Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawur Division.

(Translation.) December 1, 1873.

TO-DAY the Ameer received a murrasilla from Khiva from the Russian Governor-General of Turkestan through his Agent, Mirza Mohamed Tahir Khan, at Bokhara, as the Governor-General forwarded it through the King of Bokhara. The contents of this murrasilla are to the following effect:—

"By order of the Emperor of Russia we took possession of the country of the Khan of Khiva by force of arms, as his actions were, in some instances, contrary to Mahommedan law; but as the Emperor does not wish to enlarge his dominions, we have restored this country to the Khan on these two conditions, viz., (1) That he releases all the slaves in his territory; and (2) That in future no trade in slaves takes place. The Khan has accepted both these conditions. As friendship exists between you and our Emperor, and as among the slaves released in Khiva 400 were the residents of our Kingdom, we send information of the same to your Highness."

Copy of this murrasilla will be submitted as soon as it is procured.

No. 6.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received March 5.)

My Lord, India Office, March 5, 1874.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to forward, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copy of a despatch from the Government of India, dated 23rd January, 1874, with inclosed Cabul Diaries.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 6.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

My Lord Duke, Fort William, January 23, 1874.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We have, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
B. H. ELLIS.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.

Inclosure 2 in No. 6.

The Secretary to the Government of the Punjab to Mr. Aitchison.

Lahore, December 17, 1873.

I AM directed to forward the accompanying closed envelope from Syud Noor Mahomed Shah to the address of His Excellency the Viceroy, referred to in the Cabul Diary of the 4th instant.

Inclosure 3 in No. 6.

Syud Noor Mahomed Shah, Chief Minister of the Afghanistan Government, to the Viceroy and Governor-General.

(Translation.) 11 Shawul, 1290 A.H. (December 2, 1873).

A LETTER has recently been received from General von Kaufmann, the Governor-General of Turkestan, on the part of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia, to the address of His Highness the Ameer. His Highness has read the letter, and has fully understood its contents. A true copy thereof is herewith sent for your Excellency's perusal. Your Excellency may, in every respect, rest assured in regard to this direction, and will continue to favour me with accounts of your health.

Inclosure 4 in No. 6.

General von Kaufmann to the Ameer of Afghanistan.

(Translation.) 10 Shawul, 1290 A.H. (December 1, 1873.)

ACCOMPANIED by troops I left Tashkend for Khiva. Your Highness may have heard that the Khan of Khiva had commenced committing unjustifiable and unlawful acts, whereupon His Majesty the Emperor of Russia directed me to go to Khiva with a view to compel him by force of arms to act according to law. This undertaking was attended with full success. Having obtained a victory over the army of Khiva, I conquered the country. Afterwards the Khan of Khiva and his dependents surrendered themselves to the favour of His Majesty the Emperor. At present peace has been established in the country. It is not the wish of His Imperial Majesty to add territories to his extensive Empire. For this reason, by order of His Majesty, the country of Khiva has been allowed to remain as an independent territory as before, and I have placed Syud Mahomed Ruheem Khan on his own guddee and in possession of his ancestral dominions. Now the said Khan has agreed to fulfil certain conditions, and has also engaged to observe certain conditions for the preservation of peace and tranquillity in the country, and for the maintenance of friendship with the neighbours. After the restoration of his territory His Majesty the Emperor ordered the Khan to set at liberty all the slaves. The Khan then issued a Proclamation, prohibiting a Slave Trade, as this act was against law. The order of the Khan on the subject is now being carried out. Among the slaves released there are 400 Afghans who were collected in this territory. They want to go back to their country, some through Bokhara, some through Balk, and some through Maimena.

As your Highness is our friend, I consider it proper to bring this event to your notice.

With a view to the promotion of the welfare of your Highness's subjects, may the Almighty God prolong your life.

No. 7.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to Earl Granville.—(Received March 20.)

My Lord, Tehran, January 24, 1874.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith a translation of the intelligence received by me from Khorassan regarding recent raids upon Russian property effected by the Turkomans of Merv and Akhal.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 7.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) December 21, 1873.

I SAW a letter from Bokhara, in which it was reported that a month and a-half ago the Russian authorities issued a general order for the early supply of 16,000 water-skins and 16,000 felts.

As the march upon Merv is a difficult undertaking for the troops and guns, and there is a scarcity of water, the above articles are apparently required for that expedition.

Inclosure 2 in No. 7.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) December 21, 1873.

THE Governor of Deragez has written to say that a caravan of 100 camels, laden with indigo, green tea, &c., and accompanied by two Russians, was attacked by the Turkomans of Merv whilst proceeding from Bokhara to Khiva. The Turkomans carried off the whole to Merv; one of the Russians was killed when the attack was made, and the other carried off into captivity. He also states that the Khan of Kharesm has sent seven or eight messengers, at the instance of the Russian General, to the Akhalees, to tell them that if they will give up their plundering habits and desist from their slave traffic all the property, &c., will be restored to them which the inhabitants of the surrounding country may have taken from them in retaliation; but, should they not accept this proposal, the troops from Khiva and Bokhara will be simultaneously sent against them either whilst the snow is on the ground or in harvest time.

Some Turkomans of Merv, having gone on a plundering expedition to Khiva, carried off one of the employés of the Russian Commissariat and have confined him in Merv. A person was sent to ransom him, but the Turkomans replied that his ransom had been fixed at double his weight in Imperials.

On the 14th instant I saw another letter which had been received from Serrekhs. It was to the effect that the Russian General had sent an agent to Merv to demand the restitution of the plundered caravan, and of the Russians; otherwise they would be treated like the Yemoot tribe. The Turkomans replied that they were quite ready to fight, and that they would not give up the captives for less than 20,000 tomans.

No. 8.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to Earl Granville.—(Received April 12.)

My Lord, Tehran, February 20, 1874.

SINCE writing my despatch of the 24th January last, I have received no further intelligence of Russian preparations for a campaign against the Turkoman tribes in spring.

Preparations are, however, now being made to have in readiness here, four or five regiments for early service, and I have some reason to believe that it is the intention of the Persian Government to form in the spring two camps on the Attrek, one at Karee Kala, and the other at Ishkabad. Should a Russian force be also directed in spring to the same quarter, with the object of acting against or intimidating the Turkomans of the Akhal tribes, it is not improbable, having in view the policy which dictated the Shah's acquiescence in the Attrek River as the line of Persian frontier, that its presence there would not be displeasing to him. His Majesty has learned, by experience, how little confidence can be placed in his own troops, when dependent on their own resources, in a campaign against the powerful and united tribes of the Akhal and Téké; but in the presence of a Russian force in the neighbourhood of the Persian camp, he probably would hope to find not only the courage of his own troops increased therefrom, but also a more favourable disposition on the part of the Turkomans to submit themselves to Persia as the weaker Power, and one from which they would have comparatively little to dread.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

P.S.—I am since informed, on better authority, that the troops destined for the two places mentioned above are to be despatched from Asterabad, and that the Persian camp of 10,000 men, of whom seven regiments, of 800 men each, are infantry; 4,000 cavalry, and 18 guns, 2 being 18-pounders, and the rest 9 and 6 pounders, is to be formed at Cheh Cheheh, a small fort recently constructed between Koochan and Kelat-i-Nadir. It is believed that the Russian force will number 2,000 men.

W. T. T.

No. 9.

Prince Gortchacow to Baron Brunnow.—(Communicated to the Earl of Derby by Count Brunnow, April 13.)

Mon cher Comte, St. Pétersbourg, le 24 Mars, 1874.

JE profite du Feldjäger que Sa Majesté l'Empereur expédie à Londres pour vous envoyer un dossier de pièces diplomatiques qui, je l'espère, vous offriront de l'intérêt.

En outre, j'ai chargé Stremoukow de vous écrire au sujet de l'Asie Centrale. Les ordres de l'Empereur pour qu'aucune expédition ne soit entreprise contre les Turcomans Tékés, ce qui veut dire dans la direction de Merv, ont été donnés en termes si péremptoires, qu'aucune convoitise locale n'osera se permettre de les transgresser, tandis que l'expédition scientifique, déjà très-restreinte quant à son étendue, restera circonscrite strictement sur le terrain de la science par suite d'une volonté suprême aussi catégoriquement manifestée. Donc sous ce rapport, mon cher Comte, aucun nuage sur le terrain politique ne se trouvera lors de la venue de notre auguste Maître à Londres.

Vous connaissez l'itinéraire de Sa Majesté, et vous savez que je la quitte à Stuttgard pour aller chercher ce dont j'ai un besoin urgent, le repos, l'air, et le soleil.

Recevez, &c.

(Signé) GORTCHACOW.

(Translation.)

My dear Count, St. Petersburgh, March 24, 1874.

I TAKE advantage of the "feldjäger" whom His Majesty the Emperor is sending to London to send you a budget of diplomatic documents, which will, I hope, interest you.

I have also directed Stremoouchoff to write to you on the subject of Central Asia. The orders of the Emperor that no expedition should be undertaken against the Téké Turkomans, which means in the direction of Merv, have been given in such peremptory terms that no local ambition will dare to take the liberty of transgressing them, while the scientific expedition, already much restricted in its scope, will remain strictly limited to the domain of science by a supreme decision, which has also been categorically expressed. On this head, therefore, my dear Count, there will be no cloud on the political horizon on the occasion of our august Master's visit to London.

You know the plan of His Majesty's journey, and you know that I leave him at Stuttgardt to seek what I urgently require—rest, fresh air, and sunshine.

I remain, &c.

(Signed) GORTCHACOW.

No. 10.

M. de Stremoukow to Baron Brunnow.—(Communicated to the Earl of Derby by Count Brunnow, April 13.)

M. le Comte, St. Pétersbourg, le 25 Mars, 1874.

JE me fais un devoir de soumettre ci-joint à votre Excellence le résumé des délibérations d'une Conférence qui s'est réunie sous la Présidence du Ministre de la Guerre, chez M. le Général Kaufmann, et à laquelle le Prince Chancelier a bien voulu me charger de représenter le Ministère des Affaires Etrangères. Les conclusions de cette Conférence ont été revêtues le 7 Mars de la haute approbation de notre auguste Maître.

Votre Excellence y relèvera qu'un programme tout-à-fait pacifique a été posé pour règle de conduite à toutes les autorités militaires appelées à diriger les affaires dans la contrée Trans-Caspienne.

Quant aux velléités de nos troupes du Caucase d'entreprendre un mouvement contre les Turcomans Tékés, elles ont été formellement repoussées.

Il n'y a donc pas à prévoir pour cette année aucun mouvement militaire important dans la Steppe d'Orenbourg et dans le pays au delà de la Caspienne.

C'est dans le même esprit de modération qu'ont été dictées à notre Ministre à Téhéran les réponses à faire aux propositions du Gouvernement Persan, par rapport à une action simultanée et combinée contre les Turcomans.

D'ordre de notre auguste Maître le Conseiller Privé de Beger à été chargé de décliner toute proposition de ce genre, vu qu'une action en commun avec les Persans ne ferait que compliquer davantage la question Turcomane. Il a été également recommandé à notre Ministre de déclarer au Gouvernement Persan que nous n'avions en vue aucune entreprise contre les Tékés, mais qu'en cas d'agression dirigée contre nos caravanes ou contre nos topographes, nous ne saurions nous empêcher de les repousser à main armée, au moyen de petits détachements volants que nous tiendrons prêts à cet effet.

Veuillez, &c.

(Signé) PIERRE STREMOUKOW.

(Translation.)

M. le Comte, St. Petersburgh, March 25, 1874.

IT is my duty to submit herewith to your Excellency the summary of the deliberations of a Conference which met under the presidency of the Minister of War, at General Kaufmann's, and at which the Prince Chancellor did me the honour to instruct to me to represent the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The conclusions of that Conference received on the 7th March the gracious approval of our august Master.

Your Excellency will perceive from them that an entirely pacific programme has been laid down for the guidance of all the military authorities charged with the direction of affairs in the trans-Caspian countries.

As to the desires of our troops of the Caucasus to undertake a movement against the Téké Turkomans, these have been formally rejected.

There is no occasion, therefore, to expect this year any important military movement in the Steppe of Orenburg, and in the country beyond the Caspian.

The replies to be returned by our Minister at Tehran to the proposals of the Persian Government in regard to simultaneous and combined action against the Turkomans have been dictated in the same spirit of moderation.

By order of our august Master, Privy Councillor De Beger has been instructed to decline any proposal of this nature, inasmuch as joint action with the Persians would only further complicate the Turkoman question. Our Minister has also been recommended to declare to the Persian Government that we do not contemplate any enterprize against the Tékés, but that, in case of aggression against our caravans or against our topographers, we cannot abstain from repulsing them by force by means of small flying detachments, which we shall hold ready for this purpose.

I have, &c.

(Signed) PIERRE STREMOUKOW.

No. 11.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received April 20.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, April 15, 1874.

IN conversation to-day with M. de Stremoouchoff, the Director of the Asiatic Department, I referred to the reports mentioned by Mr. Thomson in his despatch of the 24th January of certain raids by Turkomans on Russian property, and of an intended Russian expedition against the Turkomans.

M. de Stremoouchoff stated that no Russian caravan had been attacked between Khiva and Bokhara, observing that there was no trade in the direction named from Bokhara to Khiva, and that no Russian subjects had been killed nor carried into captivity.

His Excellency considered this report as one of pure invention, originating probably in some Eastern bazaar.

His Excellency further stated that some time ago on my mentioning to Prince Gortchakow that the Russian Minister at Tehran had spoken of an intended expedition against the Turkomans, he had by order of the Prince addressed a telegram on the subject to M. de Beger, who had telegraphed in reply that he had never spoken of any such intended expedition.

I imagine that all these reports are of old date, and were correct at a time when there was real foundation for them, and that the change which has lately taken place in regard to Central Asia, and the abandonment, at least for the moment, of any fresh military expeditions, has not yet been made known in those distant quarters.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 12.

The Earl of Derby to Mr. Doria.

Sir, Foreign Office, June 3, 1874.

THE Secretary of State for India has received a telegraphic despatch from the Viceroy, stating that reports have appeared in the newspapers that the Indian Government is sending arms and ammunition to Yarkand. The Viceroy says that these are without foundation. The Indian Government is forwarding a small quantity of ammunition given by the Sultan to the Envoy last year at Constantinople, and he supposes that this may have given rise to the reports.

Mr. Shaw has, the Viceroy adds, left for Yarkand. His orders are to maintain friendly relations with the Ameer's Government, and to attend to British commercial interests.

He will refrain from offering suggestions to the Ameer in matters of Government or foreign policy; but, if consulted, is willing to assist with information and appropriate advice.

In the event of questions arising between the Ameer and the Russian Government, he will, if opportunity arises, impress on the Ameer the risk of complications with that Government, and the importance of avoiding any step that might unnecessarily prejudice amicable relations with its Representative.

You should mention the general tenor of these instructions to the Russian Government.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 13.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received June 4.)

My Lord, India Office, June 4, 1874.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward, for the information of the Earl of Derby, copy of a letter from the Government of India, dated the 17th April, 1874, with inclosed Cabul Diaries.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 13.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Fort William, April 17, 1874.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We have, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
B. H. ELLIS.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
JOHN INGLIS.

Inclosure 2 in No. 13.

The Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawur Division, to Mr. Aitchison.

April 4, 1874.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 27th to the 30th March, 1874, inclusive.

Copy of a murrasilla lately received by the Ameer (through Naib Mahomed Alum Khan) from the Russian Governor-General at Tashkend, in reply to one from his Highness to the latter, congratulating his Highness on the nomination of Sirdar Abdoolla Khan, is inclosed. His Highness also received another friendly murrasilla from him, together with one to the address of Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, requesting him to send the murrasillas to the address of the Ameer to his Highness.

Abstract Translation of Murrasilla of 7th Mohurrum (25th February, 1874) from the Officiating Governor-General at Tashkend to the Ameer.*

The murrasillas forwarded by your Highness on the 6th Zilhij (25th January, 1874) to the address of the Goobernat von Kaufmann reached me, but, as he is still at St. Petersburgh, I will forward them to him without delay. As for the present his duties are intrusted to me by His Imperial Majesty the Emperor, I have the honour to send replies to these communications. In your murrasilla of 6th Zilhij you sent information that you had nominated your son, Sirdar Abdoolla Khan, as your heir-apparent; I congratulate you on this selection. Such nominations tend to the comfort and tranquillity of the kingdom. I wish perpetual possession of your kingdom by you and your heirs, and hope that after your death Sirdar Abdoolla Khan will follow your example and make himself an ally and a friend of the Emperor. Your Highness is aware of the friendly relations which hitherto existed between the English and Russian Governments, but lately these relations have been confirmed by an alliance between the Rulers of these two kingdoms. The daughter of the Emperor has been married to the second son of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen Victoria. I send this happy information to your Highness on account of the friendship existing between your Highness and the Russian Government, and hope that you will consider this relationship advantageous to our friendship with the English Government, who are favourably disposed to you. May God be your protector under all circumstances and keep you happy.

No. 14.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 15.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, June 10, 1874.

I HAD an interview with M. de Westmann this morning, when I spoke to his Excellency with reference to the reports which had appeared in the newspapers that the Indian Government is sending arms and ammunition to Yarkand.

I thought I could best fulfil your Lordship's instructions by communicating verbally to M. de Westmann some portions of your Lordship's despatch of the 3rd instant, mentioning especially that a telegram received from the Viceroy of India states that there is no foundation for the reports in circulation with regard to sending arms and ammunition to Yarkand.

M. de Westmann was ignorant of the reports in question, and was also unaware of Mr. Shaw's mission to Yarkand.

His Excellency took the opportunity to speak to me with reference to a rumour which had reached him that Mr. Forsyth had been the bearer of a gift of 1,000 muskets to the Ameer of Kashgar. In mentioning the subject his Excellency said he did not wish to make a complaint or speak officially, but if the report was true, it appeared to him a matter for surprise that so large a number of fire-arms should have been selected for a present to the Ameer which might be used against Russia.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WM. DORIA.

No. 15.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Fort William, May 1, 1874.

WE have the honour to acknowledge receipt of the letter from the Secretary in the Political and Secret Department, dated 20th March, 1874, forwarding a translation of the

* Name illegible, something like "General Kulfa Kupski."

Russian letter addressed to the Ameer of Cabul by the officiating Russian Governor-General of Tashkend.

2. A translation into Persian of the English translation has been forwarded to the Punjab Government for transmission to the Ameer under cover of our letter, a copy of which is forwarded for the information of Her Majesty's Government.

3. We invite your Lordship's attention to the allusion made by the Officiating Governor-General to a request* said to have been preferred by the Ameer, and would beg to inquire whether the above expression is a literal translation of the corresponding Russian word. In the previous correspondence between the Ameer and the Russian Governor-General no mention is made of any request preferred by the Ameer, and the reference is therefore not understood.†

4. We desire further to invite your Lordship's attention to the tone adopted by Lieutenant-General Kolpakofski in his present letter to the Ameer.

We have, &c.

(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
B. H. ELLIS.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
JOHN INGLIS.

Inclosure 1 in No. 15.

Lieutenant-General Kolpakofski to His Highness the Ameer of Cabul.

(Translation.) Tashkend, 28th Sheval, 1290 (December $\frac{6}{18}$, 1873).

AFTER expression of the best wishes, the contents of the letter are as follows:—

Your Eminence's letter of the 25th day of Ramazan, of the year 1290, and addressed to the Governor-General, General Aide-de-camp Von Kaufmann, has been duly and opportunely (in a good hour) received by me.

On his return from the glorious Khivan campaign the High Governor-General left for St. Petersburgh in order to report to His Majesty the Emperor on the condition of affairs in this province.

Being charged with the Government of Turkestan during the absence of his Excellency, I consider it my duty to express to you my satisfaction as regards the feelings of friendship and devotion which you set forth in your letter.

In dispatching the same to the High Governor-General for his favourable consideration, I entertain the hope that he will not refuse your request, and that he will represent to His Majesty the Emperor your conscientious mode of action, and your endeavour to become worthy of the grace of my august Master.

I fully share your opinion that peace and tranquillity serve to develop the welfare of a State, and to render durable friendly relations existing between two Powers.

Continue to follow the same straight road along which you have hitherto gone, and you will become convinced that it is the right and advantageous road as regards both yourself and the welfare of your people.

I wish you health, welfare, and good fortune in all your undertakings.

Inclosure 2 in No. 15.

The Under-Secretary to the Government of India to the Secretary to the Government of the Punjab.

Fort William, May 1, 1874.

IN continuation of the letter from this Office, dated 25th February last, I am directed to forward, for delivery to the Ameer through the British Agent at Cabul, a Persian translation of the letter dated $\frac{6}{18}$th December, 1873, to the address of the Ameer of Cabul from the Officiating Governor-General of Tashkend.

2. I am to request that the Agent may be desired, when delivering the Persian translation to the Ameer, to intimate to His Highness that the reference in this letter to a

* An examination by competent translators in London showed that the word was correctly translated as "request." The Foreign Secretary to the Government of India was informed accordingly in a letter dated September 25, 1874.

† See, however, Appendix 2, No. 9.

"request" presumably made by His Highness from the Russian Governor-General is not understood by the Government of India.

3. The Agent may acquaint the Ameer that the Russian Government have given renewed assurances to Her Majesty's Government that they have no desire to interfere with His Highness' territory.

4. A copy of the English translation is inclosed for the information of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

No. 16.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 29.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, June 22, 1874.

BEFORE my departure for England M. de Stremoouchoff mentioned to me that he had read in the Indian newspapers a report that Mr. Shaw had presented the Atalegh Ghazee with 1,000 rifled breechloaders, and that this fact had been boasted of by the Kashgarians who had been sent to arrange the dispute with the Russian Government on the subject of the non-payment of certain merchandize conveyed to Yarkand in a Russian caravan.

I expressed my doubts to M. de Stremoouchoff at the time as to the authenticity of the report in question, and at my interview with him on the 20th instant I was happy to assure him, in accordance with the information of your Lordship's despatch of the 3rd instant to Mr. Doria, that the Viceroy of India had informed the Secretary of State that the reports in question were without foundation.

I likewise took occasion to mention to M. de Stremoouchoff the general nature of the instructions given by the Indian Government to Mr. Shaw, as stated in your Lordship's despatch.

M. de Stremoouchoff thanked me for this communication, and expressed his satisfaction at it.

In referring to the state of affairs in Central Asia in general, his Excellency stated that the relations between the Imperial Commandant, Colonel Ivanow, and the Khan of Khiva were most friendly and satisfactory, and that order and tranquillity, since the last chastisement he had inflicted on the Yomoud tribes, prevailed.

No. 17.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 29.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, June 23, 1874.

AT an interview I had with M. de Stremoouchoff, Director of the Asiatic Department, on the 20th instant, I inquired of his Excellency whether there was any foundation for a current report that the recently appointed Governor of Krasnovodsk had addressed a Circular letter to the Chiefs of the Attrek and Goorgan tribes, informing them that he had been appointed by the Grand Duke Michael their Chief, and giving them advice.

His Excellency stated that General Llamakin, who had been formerly Governor of Mangyshlak district, and had been on amicable terms with the nomad tribes there, had been lately appointed Governor of Krasnovodsk.

On his arrival there he had addressed a letter to the Chief of the Turkoman tribes who inhabited the country between Khiva and the Caspian, as well also as to those who periodically visited the districts south of the Attrek and extended their wanderings even as far north as Krasnovodsk, in which he expressed the wish to be on friendly terms with them, and the hope that they would abstain from acts of disorder or obstruction to the commerce of the steppe. It was, M. de Stremoouchoff said, a mere friendly letter, with a view of inducing these tribes to abstain from plunder and marauding expeditions.

To this letter a very satisfactory answer had been received by General Llamakin in the sense of peace and order.

His Excellency added that he had only received this information from ordinary sources, but that in order to have authentic information, he had addressed a request to the Minister of War to be furnished with an official copy of General Llamakin's letter.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 18.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 29.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, June 24, 1874.

I TOOK occasion yesterday, in conversation with M. de Stremoouchoff, to call his attention to the inclosed telegram which had appeared in the "Times" newspaper of Wednesday last, the 17th instant, and to ask his Excellency whether the account therein given of General Llamakin's communication with the Turkoman tribes was correct.

M. de Stremoouchoff stated that, as far as he was informed, the general statement was true, but that there were several inaccuracies which he was anxious to correct.

First. The General had not visited the Attrek, or met the Chiefs of the tribes between the Attrek and the Goorgan. General Llamakin had received them at Ashurade, where the Russian Government had a naval station.

Secondly. There was no expression of submission of the tribes to the Czar, nor any reference made by the General to their subjection to Russia.

Thirdly. There was no promise exacted or given from the Téké Turkomans of allegiance to Russia.

His Excellency then stated that the object of General Llamakin in meeting these Turkoman Chiefs was solely to establish relations of amity and good understanding with them, and to induce them to abstain from lawless acts of plunder on the caravans crossing the steppes. The assurances they had given were satisfactory, and he trusted that in future there would be peace and a friendly feeling between them.

M. de Stremoouchoff said that a Russian artilleryman had been captured on the right bank of the Amu during the raid of the Yomouds in November last, and was supposed to be a prisoner at Merv. The Chiefs of the Teké tribe were requested by General Llamakin to effect his release, which they promised to do.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 18.

Extract from the "Times" of June 17, 1874.

RUSSIA IN CENTRAL ASIA.

(By Telegraph.)

(From our Prussian Correspondent.)

Berlin, June 16.

COLONEL LLAMAKIN, the Governor of the new military district of the Caspian, has just visited the Attrek. Between the Attrek and Goorgan Rivers he was met by the principal Elders of the Yomoud Turkomans, who declared that their whole tribe considered themselves the subjects of the Czar, and were prepared to carry out his commands. Upon this, Colonel Llamakin desired all the Elders of the tribe to meet him towards the end of June on the Silver Hills.

At Krasnovodsk the Colonel received the Envoys of the Téké Turkoman tribes nomadizing between the Caspian and the Fort of Karis, the latter being half-way to Merv. These asked for protection from the inroads of the Persian Kurds, vowing allegiance in return, and denouncing the Merv Turkomans as hostile to Russia. Colonel Llamakin ordered them to meet him again at Krasnovodsk in a month, expressing a hope that they would profit by the interval to effect the liberation of a Russian soldier kept prisoner at Merv. This soldier belonged to one of the several Russian caravans recently plundered by the Merv Turkomans on the banks of the Amu.

No. 19.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received July 5.)

My Lord, Tehran, May 20, 1874.

THE Mission Agent at Meshed reports that he has been informed by Behbood Khan, Governor of Kelat, who had arrived in Meshed on the 24th April, that no Russian expedition will be dispatched against Merv this year, as a division has taken place among the people of Merv, some of the Chiefs professing obedience to Russia, others to Herat, and again others to the Governor-General of Khorassan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

No. 20.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received August 2.)

My Lord, Tehran, May 28, 1874.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith a translation of a Circular letter addressed by General Llamakin, Governor of Krasnovodsk, to the Turkoman tribes of the Ak and Ata-Baee, informing them that the Grand Duke Michael had, by command of the Emperor of Russia, appointed him to be the supreme authority over the districts of the Attrek and Goorgan.

I am informed on good authority that this Circular has been addressed to the whole of the Turkoman tribes occupying the line of country lying between the Caspian Sea, Merv, and the Oxus at Charjoo, and of the accuracy of this statement indication is found in the letter itself.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 20.

Circular Letter addressed by General Llamakin to the Turkoman Chiefs.

(Translation.)

MAY God keep you in His favour; may the Preserver of the universe increase your rank, so that you may understand, and, understanding, reply hereto. Prince Michael, brother of the Sovereign of Russia, and General-in-chief of the Army of Daghestan and of the whole of the Caucasus, has, by command of the Sovereign . . . . . and has appointed me to be the supreme authority on the Attrek and Goorgan. And he has instructed me to make known to all the Turkoman tribes that the commands of the Great Sovereign are that unity and concord and loyalty should be established, so that there may be tranquillity and comfort in these steppes; there should be security, so that good may be derived from one another. There should be no rebellion; there should be friendship, but no strife. The roads to Khiva should be safe and secure; this is necessary as a Russian army is there. Our traders, our caravans, our couriers, come and go to Khiva through the steppes and desert places. No injury should be done to them. This is our wish. Security, tranquillity, and ease in these plains are a greater boon for yourselves than for us, for tranquillity will increase your wealth and property. You will enjoy ease and become rich. Wherever one or two of you may remove and take up your quarters your traders will travel in safety. Your commerce will then extend; you yourselves will become respectable; your tribes will live at ease; you will be very happy, and your days will pass pleasantly.

O people of the Ak Ata-Baee, you need rectitude and friendliness, so that you may with sincerity have faith in each other. Having at all times been the means of attaining good objects, it is now necessary that, in giving you advice, the orders of the Sovereign of the World should be carried out. Therefore, in order that in these steppes your tribes may with us live in ease and comfort, come now to me. If you cannot yourselves do so, send good, respectable, intelligent men, so that I may give them good advice, and communicate to them the sincere and good wishes of the Great Emperor towards you; and, after having held consultations satisfactory to both parties, we may exchange papers, and by means of such a document our friendship may last for ever.

Now, you see that my first greeting to you recommends unity, concord, comfort, and loyal feelings. Now pay attention to the words I have written. Listen to them and accept them. Come and let us establish unity and friendship. Whatever has hitherto passed, good or bad, has gone by. Let us now act for (the cause of) welfare, security, and friendship. Send immediately some respectable men. (When) they arrive, I hope they will be pleased with me; the tribe will also be pleased with us. I trust that (when) you come our good wishes (and) intention towards the tribe may be communicated to them.

In short . . . . . understand this letter from first to last; having understood it, write me an answer, and send your respectable elders.

Look to yourselves for good or evil.

(Signed) General LLAMAKIN.

Fort Shah Kadem.

No. 21.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received October 30.)

My Lord, India Office, October 29, 1874.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to transmit, for the information and consideration of the Earl of Derby, copy of a despatch from the Government of India, relative to the proceedings of the Russians on the Attrek.

I have, &c.

(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 21.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

(Extract.) Fort William, September 8, 1874.

WE have the honour to draw the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the inclosed communications from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, relative to the proceedings of the Russians on the Attrek.

2. General Llamakin's Circular, of which Mr. Taylour Thomson has forwarded a copy, claims "supreme authority" on the Attrek and Goorgan by command of the Emperor of Russia. The Circular purports to be addressed to the Ak Atabia, a branch of the Yomut tribe of Turkomans, whose habitation is in the neighbourhood of Asterabad; and Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran states that he has been informed on good authority that the Circular has been sent to the whole of the Turkoman tribes occupying the line of country between the Caspian Sea, Merv, and the Oxus at Charjoi.

3. If the copy of General Llamakin's Circular be genuine, and the information furnished to Mr. Taylour Thomson is correct, the Persian territory between the Attrek and the Goorgan is now practically annexed to the Russian dominions, and authority is assumed in respect to the whole Turkoman country to the borders of Afghanistan.

4. We are of opinion that these proceedings cannot fail to excite uneasiness and alarm in the minds of our Persian and Afghan allies, and that they demand the serious attention of Her Majesty's Government.

Inclosure 2 in No. 21.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby, May 28, 1874.

[See No. 20.]

Inclosure 3 in No. 21.

Translation of a Letter from General Llamakin, Governor of Krasnovodsk, to the Turkoman Tribes of the Ak and Ata Baee.

[See Inclosure in No. 20.]

No. 22.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord. Foreign Office, November 6, 1874.

I HAVE to transmit to your Excellency the inclosed copy of a despatch from the Government of India, relating to the proceedings of the Russians on the Attrek, and to instruct your Excellency to call the attention of the Russian Government to that portion of General Llamakin's Circular in which he styles himself Commander over the Turkoman tribes of the Attrek and the Goorgan, and to point out that the territory between the Attrek and Goorgan is unquestionably Persian territory, in which General Llamakin would not be justified in interfering.

Your Excellency will at the same time express the hope of Her Majesty's Government that the Government of the Emperor will impress upon General Llamakin the expediency of abstaining from molesting the tribes who frequent the country to the south of the Attrek.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 23.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received November 22.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, November 17, 1874.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 6th instant, which reached me by post on the evening of the 14th instant.

In that despatch your Lordship instructs me to call the attention of the Russian Government to that portion of General Llamakin's Circular (of which a copy was inclosed in the despatch from the Government of India) wherein he styles himself Commander over the Turkoman tribes of the Attrek and Goorgan, and to point out that the territory between the Attrek and Goorgan is unquestionably Persian territory, in which General Llamakin could not be justified in interfering.

Your Lordship further instructs me to express the hope of Her Majesty's Government that the Government of the Emperor will impress upon General Llamakin the expediency of abstaining from molesting the tribes who frequent the country to the south of the Attrek.

In fulfilment of your Lordship's instructions, I had the honour of an interview yesterday with M. de Westmann, the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, in the absence of Prince Gortchakow, when I read to him your Lordship's despatch, as also the despatch from the Government of India which was inclosed therein.

On terminating their perusal, M. de Westmann stated that the incident of General Llamakin's Circular, to which your Lordship referred, had been a mal entendu which had given rise to a correspondence between the Imperial and Persian Governments, and that the explanations given by the Imperial Government had been perfectly satisfactory to the Persian Government.

His Excellency admitted that General Llamakin, in lieu of naming the tribes to which he referred by their proper appellation, had generalized them in the terms he used, and he observed that the tribes referred to were in the habit of repairing for a portion of the year to Russian territory.

The whole circumstance, his Excellency said, had been misrepresented, consequent on an incorrect translation from the original Tartar text of General Llamakin's Circular, but this misrepresentation had been happily and satisfactorily rectified with the Persian Government.

Having made this statement with regard to the incident referred to, his Excellency then stated that he must express his surprise that an explanation should have been asked by Her Majesty's Government of an incident of so little importance in itself, and which solely concerned Russia and Persia. It was not customary, his Excellency observed, to interfere in the international relations between two independent States, and he could not comprehend in what way the incident referred to could affect Great Britain.

I replied to his Excellency that he must not forget that Great Britain was equally with Russia an Asiatic Power, ruling over an Empire of above 200 millions of people, and that it was the duty of the Government of India to watch over and safeguard the interests of that Empire.

The interests of the neighbouring States were more or less mixed up with those of the Indian Empire, and both Persia and Afghanistan might be considered as limitrophe States to India.

I further observed that the advance of Russia in Central Asia of late years was a subject of watchful interest, although it was not one either of jealousy or fear to the Government of India. There was a large tract of country, inhabited by independent Turkoman tribes, extending along the frontiers of Afghanistan from Khojah Saleh on the Oxus to the Persian frontier, of which Merv was the central point. Any foreign influence seeking to act on these tribes would necessarily attract the attention of the Government of Afghanistan, and his Excellency would therefore see that the Government of India was fully justified in calling attention to a question which so nearly concerned the interests of its ally.

But, furthermore, I would observe to his Excellency that not many years ago the question of Persia formed the subject of diplomatic discussion and of a friendly understanding between our respective Governments, and I referred to the correspondence which had been exchanged between Lord Palmerston and Count Nesselrode in 1835 and 1838, in which both Governments agreed on the necessity of maintaining the integrity of Persia.

I did not, therefore, comprehend the surprise expressed by his Excellency on the communication I had then made.

M. de Westmann replied to these observations that the correspondence to which I had alluded referred to the question of the succession to the Persian throne, on which the two Governments had happily agreed, and he did not doubt that under similar circumstances the same understanding would take place. He instanced the friendly offices in which the two Governments were now engaged in regard to the Turco-Persian frontier question, but in the present instance he repeated that the incident referred to in your Lordship's despatch was a question which solely regarded Persia, in which he could not admit the right of a third Power to interfere.

"Take, for instance," said his Excellency, "the case of Kashgar. It is an independent State, geographically separated from India. Although information of an unsatisfactory nature in regard to the late mission of Mr. Forsyth has reached the Imperial Government, I should not think of asking for an explanation from Her Majesty's Government, for I should expose myself to receive as a natural answer that the relations between the Indian Government and the Ruler of Kashgar did not concern the Imperial Government."

To this observation I replied that between friendly Governments, as between two friends, there should exist no susceptibility of this nature. I would call to his recollection that on being informed by M. de Stremoouchoff that Mr. Forsyth had been reported to him as having presented a considerable amount of arms to the Ameer of Kashgar, Her Majesty's Government had taken the earliest opportunity, and on the authority of the Viceroy of India, to deny this fact. I felt convinced that any explanations requested by the Imperial Government in regard to Kashgar would be given with the most friendly alacrity.

I could only repeat what I had previously communicated to his Excellency, namely, that Mr. Forsyth had strongly counselled the Ameer of Kashgar to maintain friendly relations with Russia, and to avoid any possibility of a collision with Russian interests north of the Fian Shan range.

For my own part, I regretted that there should be any susceptibility on the part of Russia—a susceptibility which I had already experienced in regard to any reference to the affairs of Central Asia. I felt very strongly that, on the contrary, England and Russia, the two Asiatic Powers, would act wisely for their own interests, and profitably for the interests of civilization and humanity, by discarding all jealousy and distrust, and by adopting a frank and sincere exchange of opinions in regard to the affairs of Central Asia.

His Excellency expressed his entire approbation of and participation in the foregoing opinions, on the condition, of course, that there should be perfect reciprocity, as offering the surest means of confirming the happy relations now existing between the two countries.

I have only to add that nothing could exceed the courteous and conciliatory manner of M. de Westmann at this interview.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 24.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, December 16, 1874.

I APPROVE the language which your Excellency used to M. de Westmann with respect to General Llamakin's Circular addressed to the Turkomans inhabiting the territory between the Attrek and the Goorgan, as reported in your despatch of the 17th ultimo.

I observe, however, that on your reminding M. de Westmann of the understanding come to between England and Russia in 1834 and 1838 respecting the maintenance of the integrity of Persia, his Excellency replied that the correspondence to which you alluded had reference to the question of the succession to the Persian throne.

As this statement on the part of M. de Westmann is altogether incorrect, and as I observe that your Excellency did not at the time correct him, I have to instruct you to take an early opportunity of pointing out to his Excellency the error into which he has fallen.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 25.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received December 28.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, December 23, 1874.

IN conformity with your Lordship's instructions, I read to M. de Westmann this day your Lordship's despatch of the 16th instant, in which your Lordship observes on the incorrectness of the observations made by M. de Westmann in my conversation with his Excellency, as reported in my despatch of the 17th November.

I also read to his Excellency an extract, of which I inclose a copy, from Earl Granville's despatch of the 15th July, 1873.

M. de Westmann stated, in reply, that in observing to me at the time that the correspondence to which I had alluded, in 1834 and 1838, had referred to the question of the succession to the Persian throne, it had in no wise been his intention to disavow or discard the understanding which was then come to between the two Governments in respect to the maintenance of the integrity of Persia.

His Excellency fully admitted the existence of that understanding at the periods alluded to, and its validity at the present moment; he maintained, however, that the integrity of the Persian territory had not been menaced by the Circular of General Llamakin, and he further observed that if it had been so menaced, it was Persia who was the party aggrieved, and who was entitled to seek an explanation.

His Excellency then observed (but not in the light of a recrimination) that when the frontier differences between Persia and Afghanistan were lately arranged by Great Britain, and a portion of Seistan awarded to Afghanistan, no communication whatever had been addressed to Russia, although the adjudication in question referred to Persian territory.

I replied to his Excellency that this was simply a question of disputed frontier, the arbitration of which was confided to Great Britain by the parties interested in carrying out this arbitration. It was neither necessary, nor would it have been logically possible to have referred to Russia.

His Excellency stated that although Russia could not have been called upon to participate in the arbitration, yet, according to the understanding to which I had referred, namely, the maintenance of the integrity of Persia, Her Majesty's Government, when the arbitration was finally settled, might have communicated to the Imperial Government the changes which had been agreed upon in regard to Persian territory.

His Excellency begged me to report this observation to your Lordship, but in doing so to state expressly that it was with no intention of "recrimination," but as an exemplification of his interpretation of the understanding existing between the two Governments in regard to the maintenance of the integrity of the Persian territory.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 25.

Earl Granville to Lord A. Loftus.

(Extract.) Foreign Office, July 10, 1873.

I ALSO informed Count Brünnow, as he had broached the subject of the Shah's visit, that the Persians had inquired as to the nature of the engagements which subsisted between Great Britain and Russia as to the integrity of the Persian territory, and that I had told the Grand Vizier that, although no formal Treaty or Agreement existed by which the two countries mutually agreed to respect the integrity of Persia, yet that in the year 1834 an understanding was arrived at between the two Governments on the occasion of the nomination of Mohamed Mirza as successor to the throne of Persia; that that understanding was based on the sincere desire of the two Governments to maintain not only the internal tranquillity, but also the independence and integrity of Persia; that in the year 1838 Count Nesselrode adverted to the agreement entered into by the two Governments as still subsisting in full force, as it was also acknowledged to do by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; and that Her Majesty's Government, as they recognized for themselves the principles which guided the general policy of Great Britain and Russia in favour of the integrity and independence of Persia in the year 1834, had reason to believe, from information which they had received from Lord A. Loftus, Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, that the Russian Government referred with satisfaction to the mutual assurances that were made on this subject in 1834 and 1838, and that Her Majesty's Government considered that the best mode of confirming both Powers in those sentiments was, that Persia, while steadily maintaining her rights as an independent Power, should studiously fulfil in all respects her Treaty engagements with each, and so ensure the continuance of the friendship which both Powers, even for their own interests, should desire to maintain with her.

Count Brünnow expressed satisfaction.

No. 26.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, March 19, 1875.

THE Russian Ambassador called upon me on the 12th instant, being on the point of leaving England for a month, and expressed his wish to ascertain more clearly than he had as yet done the views of Her Majesty's Government on the Central Asian question. He had noticed, as he said, a certain reluctance on my part to discuss that question, and considering its extreme importance to the mutual good relations of the two countries, he was anxious that there should be between us a frank and friendly exchange of opinion.

I told him in reply that I had of late abstained from conversation on the subject of Central Asia, partly because nothing new had occurred, or was occurring, in that quarter to which it seemed necessary to direct the attention of his Government, partly because I was reluctant to seem to indicate distrust or apprehension as to the course which the Russian Government might think fit to pursue, by unnecessarily requesting explanations as to their proceedings. I quite agreed with him, however, as to the expediency of mutual frankness, believing that a great deal of unnecessary suspicion was created on both sides by native intrigue, and by the circulation of exaggerated or unfounded reports, which would be done away by a simple request to know how the truth really stood.

Count Schouvaloff then proceeded to explain at some length what he described as his personal views on the subject of the extension of Russian power in Central Asia, as to which it is sufficient to say that they were unfavourable to fresh annexations. He asked me whether he was right in supposing that there was no inclination on the part of England to advance farther in the direction of the Russian possessions, unless such advance were considered by us necessary for defensive purposes, in order to protect our actual dominions. I said that his view was undoubtedly correct, and that, so far from desiring to annex any part of Afghanistan, we should deprecate such a result as bringing only increased cost and trouble without advantage. We wished to be on good terms with the Afghan Ruler, and to exercise a friendly influence over his policy, but his independence was not likely to be menaced by us. The only case in which I could conceive an advance of British troops westward as probable was in the event of any Russian movement tending to the occupation of Merv.

I reminded Count Schouvaloff that I had warned him some months back of the great importance which the Indian Government attached to Merv, and of the danger to our relations that would ensue if it were meddled with. He said that he remembered what I had told him on that subject, and had communicated it to his Government. He quite saw the danger that might arise if the two Powers were brought face to face in the neighbourhood of Herat. "Was he justified," he asked, "in assuming that our action in this matter would depend on that of Russia, that England would not move if Russia did not?" I said I thought he might feel safe on that point; we only desired the maintenance of the status quo, and certainly should not be the first to take steps that might be considered aggressive. He said his Government would be perfectly satisfied with this expression of intentions from me, hinting that the language of some of our newspapers had created distrust and suspicion in Russia.

He then inquired whether the Persian Government had any reason for supposing that English influence was being used to prevent the relations of Persia with the Chiefs of Beloochistan being friendly. I said I knew nothing in detail of the affairs of Beloochistan, they being under the India Office, but I was perfectly sure that if the Persian Government entertained any such belief, which was new to me, they did so without reason. Our policy was to prevent quarrels in the neighbourhood of our frontiers, so far as we could, not to stir them up.

Count Schouvaloff then requested to be enabled to contradict reports about the close alliance into which it was said the British Government was entering with the Ameer of Kashgar. It was reported that arms had been supplied to him from India in large quantities, military instructors provided, and that the object was to use the Ameer as an ally who might be serviceable in any future quarrel with Russia. I had no trouble in contradicting the story of the arms and the instructors, and explained that the sole objects of the British Government in that region were, first, the exploration of a country which had for many generations been unknown to Europeans, and, next, the opening to trade of countries which had hitherto been kept closed by the jealous exclusiveness of the Chinese authorities.

The above were the most important features of a long and interesting conversation, of which I have not thought it necessary to set down a more detailed record, especially as Count Schouvaloff professed to have no instructions from his Government, and his expressions of opinion were therefore only personal.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 27.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received April 25.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, March 30, 1875.

I HAVE reason to believe that the Russian Government are somewhat disquieted by the newspaper reports of the intention of the Indian Government to occupy Quettah, and that they consider that this move will be the precursor of the occupation of Herat.

No. 28.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received May 4.)

(Extract.) India Office, May 3, 1875.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th ultimo, forwarding copies of despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, relating to the Affairs of Central Asia.

With reference to Lord A. Loftus' despatch of the 30th March, Lord Salisbury would suggest, for Lord Derby's consideration, that it might be as well, without entering into the merits of the question, to remind Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, for his own information, that the right of stationing troops in any part of Khelat territory, which includes Quetta, is secured to the British Government by Article IV* of the Treaty of the 14th May, 1854, with the Khan of Khelat.

The Treaty will be found at length in Aitchison's Collection of Treaties, vol. vii, page 77, but a copy is forwarded herewith, for Lord Derby's convenience.

No. 29.

Prince Gortchacow to Count Schouvaloff.—(Communicated to the Earl of Derby by Count Schouvaloff, May 11.)

M. le Comte, St. Pétersbourg, le 5 Avril, 1875.

JE crois devoir compléter mes précédentes dépêches par un exposé des vues générales du Cabinet Impérial sur l'Asie Centrale.

Il résulte clairement de la notice historique développant la marche de nos pourparlers avec le Cabinet de Londres que les limites de l'influence appartenant aux deux Gouvernements sont nettement tracées par l'accord intervenu entre eux.

Déterminés à maintenir cette limite intacte, nous considérons les deux Gouvernements comme ayant conservé leur pleine liberté d'action dans les contrées qui les avoisinent, et qui se trouvent placées en dehors de cette ligne. Tous deux n'ont à envisager, à cet égard, que leurs propres intérêts et leurs propres nécessités.

Pour ce qui nous concerne, nous avons pris en sérieuse considération les vœux qui nous ont été à plusieurs reprises exprimés par le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, en vue de maintenir dans son esprit, aussi bien que dans sa lettre, l'entente pacifique établie entre nous.

* "Should it be deemed necessary to station British troops in any part of the territory of Khelat, they shall occupy such positions as may be thought advisable by the British authorities."

Sa Majesté l'Empereur a daigné ordonner de réunir pour l'examen de ces questions un Comité auquel vous avez pris part.

Votre Excellence a été à même de recueillir de la bouche même de notre auguste Maître l'expression de sa volonté.

Sa Majesté Impériale n'a aucunement l'intention d'étendre les frontières de la Russie telles qu'elles existent actuellement dans l'Asie Centrale, ni du côté du Boukhara ni du côté de Krasnovodsk et de l'Attrek. Aucun motif ne nous y engage. Au contraire, l'Empereur juge toute extension de nos limites dans ces parages contraire à nos propres intérêts. Nous ferons respecter ces limites, et nous protégerons notre commerce, nous châtierons tout acte de violence et de pillage de manière à en prévenir le renouvellement, nous travaillerons à extirper le brigandage et à établir la sécurité de nos possessions.

La configuration de ces contrées et les mœurs de leurs habitants ne permettent pas de préciser d'avance les mesures qui pourraient être nécessaires afin d'atteindre pratiquement ce but. Il nous est commandé par nos devoirs, nos droits, et nos intérêts. Nous devons le remplir, et nous le remplirons.

Mais rien ne doit être fait au delà de ce qui est indispensable à cet effet.

Les ordres de l'Empereur sont formels à cet égard. Ils ont été notifiés par Sa Majesté Impériale aux autorités militaires appelées à les exécuter.

Vous êtes invité, M. le Comte, à faire connaître ces volontés de notre auguste Maître au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, en citant à Lord Derby les paroles mêmes dont l'Empereur s'est servi en présence de votre Excellence.

Vous ajouterez que Sa Majesté Impériale a la ferme confiance que ces assurances positives faites spontanément en son nom, sans restreindre la liberté d'action qui lui appartient, écarteront toute interprétation erronée des vues du Cabinet Impérial.

Nous ne désirons pas moins que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique voir la sécurité et la stabilité s'établir dans les régions de l'Asie Centrale. Les intérêts des deux Gouvernements, loin d'y être en contradiction, nous semblent solidaires, et leurs rapports devraient à notre avis y être basés, non sur la défiance et l'antagonisme, mais sur une mutuelle confiance, de franches explications, et une certaine coopération en vue de leur but commun.

Nous sommes convaincus que, si en présence de ces résolutions de notre auguste Maître, le Gouvernement des Indes, de son côté, usait de son influence sur l'Emir de Kaboul pour le détourner de toute acte inconsidéré, de nature à exciter ou encourager les Turcomans, quelles que soient les mesures que ces tribus pillardes nous mettent dans la nécessité de prendre pour les contenir ou les châtier, elles ne sauraient porter atteinte ni au statu quo convenu entre l'Angleterre et nous ni aux bonnes relations que nous désirons maintenir entre les deux pays.

Recevez, &c.
(Signé) GORTCHACOW.

(Translation.)

M. le Comte, St. Petersburgh, April 5, 1875.

I THINK it right to complete my preceding despatches by a general statement of the views of the Imperial Cabinet as regards Central Asia.

The historical memorandum detailing the course of our discussions with the Cabinet of London shows clearly that the limits of the influence to be exercised by the two Governments are distinctly defined by the agreement arrived at between them.

While we are resolved strictly to observe the limit thus fixed, we consider that the two Governments have maintained their full liberty of action in the countries adjacent to them and placed outside this line. They have each of them, in this respect, to consider only their own interests and necessities.

In as far as we are concerned, we have taken into serious consideration the wishes which have frequently been expressed by the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, with a view to maintaining, in the spirit as well as in the letter, the pacific understanding established between us.

His Majesty the Emperor was pleased to give orders for the assembly of a Commission, in which you took part, for the examination of these questions.

Your Excellency had the opportunity of hearing from the Emperor's own lips the expression of his will.

His Imperial Majesty has no intention of extending the frontiers of Russia, such as they exist at present in Central Asia, either on the side of Bokhara or on the side of Krasnovodsk and of the Attrek. We have no inducement to do so. On the contrary, the Emperor deems any extension of our frontiers in those parts as being opposed to our own interests. We shall cause those frontiers to be respected, and shall protect our commerce, we shall punish any act of violence and pillage in such manner as to prevent their recurrence, we shall endeavour to extirpate brigandage, and to establish the security of our possessions.

The configuration of these countries and the manners of their inhabitants do not admit of our stating beforehand the precise measures which may be necessary for the practical attainment of this object. It is enjoined on us by our rights, our duties, and our interests. We are bound to fulfil it, and we shall do so.

Nothing, however, should be done beyond what is indispensable for this purpose.

The orders of the Emperor are formal in this respect. They have been notified by His Imperial Majesty to the military authorities, who are charged with their execution.

You are requested, M. le Comte, to make known these decisions of our august Master to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, quoting to Lord Derby the very words of which the Emperor made use in your Excellency's presence.

You will add that His Imperial Majesty is firmly convinced that these positive assurances, made spontaneously in his name, without restricting the liberty of action belonging to him, will remove any erroneous interpretation of the views of the Imperial Cabinet.

It is our desire, no less than that of the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, to see the establishment of security and stability in the regions of Central Asia. The interests of the two Governments, far from being at variance, appear to us to be interdependent, and their relations there should, in our opinion, be based, not on mistrust and antagonism, but on a mutual confidence, on frank explanations, and on a certain co-operation, in view of their common object.

We are convinced that if, in presence of these resolutions of our august Master, the Government of India, on its side, were to exert its influence over the Ameer of Cabul to dissuade him from any inconsiderate act of a kind to excite or encourage the Turkomans, whatever the measures may be which these pillaging tribes may render it necessary for us to take to restrain or to punish them, they can in no way prejudice either the status quo agreed on between England and us, or the good relations which we desire to maintain between the two countries.

Receive, &c.
(Signed) GORTCHAKOW.

Inclosure in No. 29.

Memorandum.

IL y a quelques années la Russie s'est vue obligée de prendre des mesures militaires afin d'établir l'ordre et la tranquillité dans les steppes Kirghises. Ces mesures l'ont placée, par la suite, dans la nécessité de faire des acquisitions territoriales considérables. Depuis lors, le public Anglais nous a attribué des plans de conquête dirigés contre l'Angleterre, et menaçants pour la tranquillité des possessions Britanniques dans l'Inde.

Ces commentaires erronés sur les desseins de notre politique dans l'Asie Centrale pouvaient amener, dans nos relations amicales avec l'Angleterre, des causes de froissement que le Cabinet Impérial avait à cœur d'éviter.

C'est dans ce but qu'il adressa à nos Légations à l'étranger la Circulaire du 31 Novembre, 1864.

Cette pièce portait un caractère purement confidentiel. Elle ne fut publiée qu'en 1865, après que le Gouvernement Britannique en eût pris connaissance par une de ses Légations à l'étranger. Ce fait et le sens précis de nos déclarations excluaient la possibilité de toute interprétation impliquant un engagement contracté par la Russie vis-à-vis de l'Europe ou d'une Puissance quelconque. La pensée du Gouvernement Impérial était nettement exprimée; elle se résumait dans l'exposé des principes qui avaient guidé, jusqu'ici, notre politique en Asie Centrale, et dans la déclaration spontanée quant au but final que les ordres de Sa Majesté l'Empereur avaient tracé à l'action de son Cabinet dans ces contrées.

En constatant les motifs qui nous avaient déterminés à ne pas dépasser la ligne tracée de Tchemkent à Issiz-Koul, la Circulaire signalait, en même temps, comme base de tout le système, la nécessité d'arrêter nos frontières à l'endroit précis où commencent les populations fixes, offrant les éléments d'un organisme social stable, avec lesquelles il nous serait possible d'établir des relations régulières.

Il était nécessaire de créer et de développer ces relations, d'un côté, en civilisant, par la colonisation, les tribus nomades englobées par la nouvelle ligne de nos frontières, et de l'autre, en attirant, par la sécurité des transactions et par des avantages réciproques, les populations du Khokand, avec lesquelles cette nouvelle ligne nous mettait en contact, et d'arriver à l'établissement de rapports commerciaux et pacifiques. Tel était le double but auquel, dès ce moment, ont tendu tous nos efforts.

Malheureusement les difficultés, sans cesse renaissantes, qui résultent du contrat entre une Puissance régulièrement constituée et des voisins à demi-sauvages, nous forcèrent bientôt à dépasser les limites que nous nous étions volontairement tracées.

Obligés de nous défendre contre les agressions continuelles des peuplades limitrophes et de châtier un ennemi que son organisation sociale rendait insaisissable, nous dûmes bientôt nous convaincre que pour consolider nos nouvelles acquisitions territoriales, nous devions établir, avant tout, au delà de nos frontières, la tranquillité indispensable à notre sécurité.

La cause de cette instabilité résidait, d'abord, dans le voisinage de tribus dont les mœurs nomades et turbulentes paralysaient toute colonisation et toute commerce par caravanes ; ensuite, dans les fluctuations perpétuelles de la situation politique de ces contrées, où le Taschkent et le Khokand, tantôt réunis, tantôt séparés, toujours en guerre, soit entre eux, soit avec Boukhara, n'offraient aucune possibilité de relations fixes ni de transactions quelconques.

Le Gouvernement Impérial s'était donc vu placé, malgré lui, dans l'alternative de laisser se perpétuer un état de désordre permanent, qui paralysait toute sécurité et tout progrès, ou de chercher à soumettre par la force des armes les petits Etats indépendants dont les mœurs pillardes et les perpétuelles dissensions ne laissent à leurs voisins ni trève ni repos.

C'est ainsi qu'après avoir franchi le désert qui nous séparait du Turkestan, nos soldats, maîtres de Taschkent, se sont trouvés placés en face de l'armée de l'Emir de Boukhara.

La conduite de ce Chef n'a point tardé à provoquer un conflit, dont les conséquences, en dépassant les prévisions immédiates du Cabinet Impérial, ont conduit nos troupes à Samarkand, qui s'est soumis sans coup férir.

Dès l'origine de cette complication nous avions franchement signalé au Cabinet Anglais le danger auquel l'Emir s'exposerait infailliblement s'il se précipitait dans une lutte que nous n'avions rien fait pour provoquer.

Les explications données par notre Ambassadeur à Londres avaient satisfaites le Comte Clarendon, alors Principal Secrétaire d'Etat,* qui lui avait déclaré que les rapides progrès des troupes Russes n'avaient provoqués ni soupçon ni alarme de la part du Gouvernement Britannique, mais que ce sentiment de sécurité était loin d'être partagé par le public Anglais, ainsi que par celui des Indes ; que pour apaiser ce malaise, qui pourrait mettre en péril la bonne entente existant actuellement entre la Russie et l'Angleterre, il serait à souhaiter qu'entre les possessions Russes et Anglaises il restât un territoire neutre, destiné à éviter le choc que pourrait causer un contact immédiat entre les deux Grandes Puissances se rencontrant au centre de l'Asie.

Ces propositions du Comte Clarendon répondaient trop aux vues du Gouvernement Impérial pour n'être pas accueillies favorablement. En conséquence, ordre fut donné au Baron Brunnow d'entrer en pourparlers confidentiels sur ce sujet avec le Gouvernement Anglais.

Sur ces entrefaites, profitant du séjour du Chancelier de l'Empire à Baden-Baden, Lord Clarendon, qui se trouvait alors à Wiesbaden, lui avait demandé une entrevue, dans le but d'arriver, par un échange d'idées, au meilleur moyen à employer pour maintenir, entre la Russie et l'Angleterre, de bonnes relations, conformes à leurs intérêts mutuels dans l'Asie Centrale. La ville de Heidelberg fut désignée comme point de réunion.

Cette entrevue eut pour résultat un accord basé sus le maintien, entre la Russie et la Grande Bretagne, d'une zone intermédiaire, destinée à séparer leurs possessions en Asie.

Dans cet ordre d'idées il demeurait entendu que l'Afghânistan formerait un Etat indépendant, qui devrait rester en dehors de l'action de la Russie.

Nous avons, en même temps, insisté auprès du Gouvernement Britannique pour que la circonscription territoriale de l'Afghanistan fût déterminée dans les limites des Khanats de Hérat, de Kaboul et de Kandahar, actuellement possédés par l'Emir Shir-Ali-Khan.†

Lord Clarendon chercha plus tard à élargir ces limites dans le but de mieux préciser les confins de l'Afghanistan, jusqu'ici mal déterminés au nord par l'absence de frontières clairement indiquées.

* Dépêche du Comte Clarendon à Sir A. Buchanan, en date du 27 Mars, 1869.

† Lettre du Prince Gortchacow du $\frac{11}{23}$ Avril, 1869.

Afin de suppléer à ce manque de précision, Lord Clarendon avait exprimé le désir de convenir d'une ligne fictive, qui étendrait les frontières de l'Afghanistan jusqu'à la rive gauche de l'Oxus.

Ce tracé géographique ne se contentait pas de la neutralisation des vastes contrées auxquelles nous avions consenti à appliquer ce principe; il s'étendait notamment au delà du territoire de l'Afghanistan proprement dit, et dépassait de beaucoup les limites reconnues par nous.

En conséquence, ordre fut donné à notre Ambassadeur à Londres de décliner le projet proposé par Lord Clarendon.

Le Baron Brunnow eut soin de constater ce refus, en remettant entre les mains du Principal Secrétaire d'Etat un extrait de la lettre du $\frac{14}{26}$ Avril, 1869, par laquelle son Altesse le Prince Gortchacow avait énoncé ce refus.

Cette réponse négative mit fin aux explications confidentielles de notre Ambassadeur avec Lord Clarendon au sujet de la zone neutre.

Après avoir été définitivement close à Londres, cette question fut reprise à St. Pétersbourg en 1869, lors du séjour de Mr. Forsyth, fonctionnaire de l'Administration des Indes, autorisé par le Vice-Roi Lord Mayo à se rendre à St. Pétersbourg, en vue d'un échange d'idées sur les questions intéressant les deux Gouvernements.

Les considérations qui servirent de point de départ aux explications confidentielles de Mr. Forsyth avec le Cabinet Impérial se résument ainsi:—

1. Les deux Gouvernements étaient animés du même désir de prévenir, en tant que cela dépendrait d'eux, tous les sujets de malentendus qui pourraient surgir par suite du défaut d'organisation politique des Etats indépendants, connus dans la géographie sous les dénominations collectives d'Afganistan et de Turkestan libres.

2. Il demeurait entendu que s'il était arrivé jusqu'à ce jour à l'Angleterre et à la Russie d'entreprendre des expéditions militaires dans une ou l'autre partie de l'Asie Centrale, et d'adjoindre à leurs possessions de nouveaux territoires, cette conduite ne leur avait été dictée que par la force des circonstances locales et par une impossibilité absolue d'agir autrement.

3. Dans l'état actuel des choses, les frontières Russes et Anglaises en Asie Centrale ne pouvant pas être considérées comme immuables, un arrangement international sur ce point resterait sans effet; le meilleur expédient pour arriver à un résultat satisfaisant serait donc de se borner à arrêter, autant que faire se pourrait, des bases générales d'équilibre politique pour les pays qui séparent les possessions Russes et Anglaises en Asie.

En suite de quoi il fut convenu:—

1. Que l'on considérait les territoires actuellement en la possession effective de Shir-Ali-Khan comme formant les limites de l'Afghanistan.

2. Que cet Emir ne chercherait à exercer aucune influence ni aucune immixtion au delà de ces limites, et que le Gouvernement Anglais appliquerait tous ses soins à le détourner de toute tentative d'agression.

3. Que, de son côté, le Gouvernement Impérial emploierait toute son influence, afin d'empêcher l'Emir de Boukhara de porter aucune atteinte au territoire Afghan.

Ces principes reçurent la pleine adhésion du Cabinet de Londres et du Gouverneur-Général des Indes.

Au mois de Mai 1870, l'Ambassadeur de Sa Majesté Britannique à St. Pétersbourg remit au Gouvernement Impérial une dépêche de Lord Mayo, qui, se basant sur l'accord intervenu entre les deux Puissances, proposait de fixer, dès à présent, les limites des possessions de Shir-Ali-Khan, en prenant pour base les données recueillies à ce sujet par le Gouvernement des Indes.

La dépêche attribuait, toutefois, à ces données, une interprétation qui ne correspondait point entièrement au sens précis de l'entente survenue comme conséquence de l'échange d'idées entre les Cabinets de Londres et de St. Pétersbourg.

En effet, après avoir constaté que les possessions de Shir-Ali-Khan au nord et au nord-ouest semblaient coïncider à-peu-près exactement avec celles de son père, Lord Mayo arrivait à la conclusion que les limites du Royaume de Dost Mohammet pouvaient être en général adoptées comme les limites destinées à séparer le Royaume de l'Afghanistan des autres Etats de l'Asie Centrale au nord et au nord-ouest.

Or, à l'époque des pourparlers avec Mr. Forsyth en était convenu de s'en tenir aux territoires ayant jadis reconnu l'autorité de Dost Mohammed qui se trouveraient encore aujourd'hui en la possession effective de Shir-Ali-Khan.

Cette nuance importante marquait la différence qui séparait notre point de vue de celui de Lord Mayo.

Toutefois, avant de formuler une opinion définitive, le Gouvernement Impérial crut nécessaire de réunir des données positives à l'égard de ces contrées lointaines et imparfaitement connues.

En conséquence, le Gouverneur-Général du Turkestan fut chargé de recueillir tous les renseignements qui pouvaient éclaircir la question et permettre au Gouvernement Impérial de se former une opinion pratique en pleine connaissance de cause.

La question qu'il s'agissait de résoudre avait deux aspects :—

1. Constater l'état actuel de possession effective de Shir-Ali-Khan.

2. Rechercher, en se basant sur ce statu quo, la meilleure délimitation à tracer afin de répondre au but des pourparlers entre le Gouvernement Impérial et celui de l'Angleterre ; c'est-à-dire d'écarter, dans la mesure du possible, les causes de conflits et d'empiétements mutuels entre les Khanats voisins, et, par conséquent, de garantir entre eux, autant que faire se pouvait, l'état de paix que de part et d'autre les deux Gouvernements devaient désormais s'attacher à faire respecter par tous les moyens d'influence en leur pouvoir.

Dans cet ordre d'idées il résultait des renseignements fournis par le Général Kaufmann :—

1. Qu'au nord l'Amou-Daria constitue en effet la frontière normale de l'Afghanistan, à partir de son confluent avec la Kouktcha, jusqu'au point de Khodja Saléh.

Sous ce rapport nos renseignements étaient d'accord avec l'opinion du Gouvernement Britannique.

2. Au nord-est les données de fait que nous avions recueillies assignaient le confluent de cette rivière avec le Kouktcha comme la limite des territoires sur lesquels Shir-Ali-Khan exerce une souveraineté effective incontestable. Au delà de cette limite et notamment à l'égard du Badakchan et du Vakhan, il avait été impossible de saisir les traces d'une semblable souveraineté ; l'ensemble des informations présentent au contraire de nombreux indices qui devaient faire envisager ces contrées comme indépendantes. Ainsi, dans tout ce pays on ne rencontre aucun des signes qui, en Asie, accompagnent l'exercice de la souveraineté ; c'est-à-dire, la présence d'officiers Afghans et d'employés pour collectionner l'impôt. En outre, les Chefs du Badakchan se sont considérés et ont été en tout temps considérés par leurs voisins comme des Chefs indépendants.

Pour ce qui est du Vakhan, ce pays était resté, du moins jusqu'à ce jour, encore plus en dehors de l'influence directe des Chefs de l'Afghanistan.

4. Quant aux limites à reconnaître à l'Afghanistan, du côté du nord-ouest, à partir de Khodja Saleh, nos informations signalaient également des doutes sur le fait de la possession effective par l'Emir de Caboul des villes d'Aktchi, Séripoul, Meimané, Chibirgan, et Ankhoï, que l'Angleterre proposait de faire entrer dans les limites reconnues de l'Afghanistan.

Cependant, tandis que ces questions étaient encore à l'étude, le Ministère Impérial des Affaires Etrangères reçut communication d'une nouvelle dépêche de Lord Granville qui maintenait l'opinion émise par Lord Mayo sur les points en discussion.

En réponse à cette communication, le Cabinet Impérial s'empressa de transmettre au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique les renseignements fournis par le Gouverneur-Général du Turkestan, avec les conclusions qui lui paraissaient en découler.*

Après avoir précisé les points sur lesquels l'opinion des deux Gouvernements divergeait, le Cabinet Impérial s'attachait principalement à maintenir le Badakchan et le Vakhan comme Etats indépendants et en dehors des frontières assignées à Shir-Ali-Khan.

Il insistait d'autant plus sur ce point, que dans l'état actuel des choses il n'existait pas de conflit entre le Badakchan et ses voisins. Le Boukhara n'avait aucune prétention sur ce pays Les deux Etats étaient d'ailleurs trop faibles, trop absorbés par leurs affaires intérieures pour se chercher querelles. L'Angleterre et la Russie n'auraient donc à s'employer que pour maintenir cet état de paix aussi bien entre ces Khanats qu'entre l'Afghanistan et le Badakchan. Il en serait tout autrement le jour où l'Emir de Caboul étendrait son autorité sur la Badakchan et le Vakhan. Il se trouverait en contact immédiat avec le Kashgar, le Kokand et le Boukhara, dont il était jusqu'ici séparé par ces deux pays ; et il serait dès lors bien plus difficile d'éviter des conflits provenant, soit de son ambition et du sentiment de sa force, soit de la jalousie de ses voisins.

Telles étaient les considérations qui avaient poussé le Gouvernement Impérial à maintenir son point de vue pour ce qui concernait le Vakhan et de Badakchan.

* Dépêche du Prince Gortchacow du 7 Décembre, 1872.

Quant aux limites de l'Afghanistan au nord-ouest, bien qu'il existât des doutes quant au fait de la possession par l'Emir de Caboul des villes d'Aktchi, Séripoul, Meimané, Chibirgan, et Ankhoï, le Cabinet Impérial déclarait qu'il était disposé à admettre leur annexion au territoire Afghan.

Malgré ces concessions importantes le Gouvernement Anglais ne crut pas pouvoir adhérer à la combinaison proposée par nous. Dans cet état de choses, ne voulant pas retarder plus longtemps le réglement de cette question, le Cabinet Impérial, dans sa dépêche du 19 Janvier, 1873, consentit à la réunion du Badakchan et du Vakhan au territoire Afghan et donna ainsi son adhésion pleine et entière à la line de démarcation proposée par la dépêche de Lord Granville en date du 17 Octobre, 1872 (voir Annexes 1 et 2).

Sur ces entrefaites l'expédition de Khiva fut décidée.

Des brigandages continuels, l'imposition de redevances aux Kirghises soumis à notre domination, des excitations à la révolte parmi ces nomades, la capture de nos sujets réduits à l'esclavage ; tels étaient les faits qui depuis bien des années réclamaient l'adoption de mesures décisives contre ce Khanat. Toutefois, on conservait encore l'espoir d'arriver par des voies pacifiques à l'établissement de relations plus régulières avec ces turbulents voisins.

Plus d'une fois nous avions fait parvenir au Khan des réclamations moderées mais elles étaient demeurées sans réponse ou bien elles avaient rencontré de sa part un refus arrogant.

Après l'insuccès de ces efforts réitérés une expédition fut décidée.

Quoique, d'après l'entente survenue entre le Gouvernement Impérial et celui de la Grande Bretagne relativement à l'établissement d'une zone neutre entre les possessions Anglaises et Russes, le Khanat de Khiva rentrât entièrement dans notre sphère d'action, nous crûmes devoir faire acte de courtoisie en n'adoptant aucune mesure décisive contre le Khiva avant d'en avoir informé l'Angleterre.

Le Gouvernement Impérial n'avait en aucune façon l'intention de conquérir et d'annexer aucune partie du territoire de Khiva. Son but était, d'abord, de châtier le Khan pour le passé ; ensuite, de créer un état de choses qui garantît nos sujets contre les incursions et les déprédations des Khiviens et des Turcomans, et rendit possible le développement des relations commerciales.

Des instructions formelles avaient été données en conséquence au Commandant-en-chef de l'expédition.

Ces considérations furent spontanément portées à la connaissance du Gouvernement Britannique par l'organe de M. l'Aide-de-camp Général Comte Schouvaloff, qui s'était rendu à Londres.

Toutefois, lorsque Khiva eut été occupé et qu'on fut à même de connaître les conditions de la vie intérieure du pays, on put se convaincre que, même avec la meilleure volonté de la part du Khan d'entretenir avec nous des relations de bon voisinage, la force à cet effet lui aurait fait défaut, car son influence sur les Turcomans était presque nulle et qu'il arrivait souvent que lui-même, ainsi que ses sujets, avaient à subir l'ascendant de ces brigands des steppes.

Ainsi, après le départ de notre corps expéditionnaire, les mêmes incursions auraient infailliblement recommencé ; le Gouvernement Impérial se serait vu obligé de renouveler une expédition onéreuse afin d'infliger un nouveau châtiment aux Turcomans, et, en pareil cas, il aurait été impossible de conserver l'existence autonome de Khiva.

C'est pourquoi il fut jugé indispensable de construire sur la rive droite de l'Amou-Daria un fort pourvu d'une garnison suffisante afin de protéger nos frontières contre les attaques des Turcomans. En outre, il était nécessaire d'assurer les communications du fort et de sa garnison avec le Turkestan.

Nous nous sommes vus, par conséquent, obligés de réunir à nos possessions le désert aride qui s'étend entre cette province et le fort nouvellement construit. Quelque stérile et onéreuse qu'ait été pour nous une pareille acquisition territoriale, elle était inévitable, vu que le Khan lui-même avait reconnu et déclaré qu'il ne serait en mesure de remplir ses obligations envers nous qu'à la condition absolue d'avoir à proximité un détachement et un corps de troupes Russes. Ses vœux étaient allés plus loin encore ; il avait instamment sollicité le maintien des troupes Russes dans la ville même de Khiva.

Tels ont été les résultats de l'expédition contre le Khiva ; ils nous étaient imposés par un état de choses impossible à prévoir et par des nécessités indépendants de notre volonté.

Nous avions tout lieu d'espérer que les explications franches de notre Ambassadeur à Londres effaceraient à cet égard les dernières appréhensions du Gouvernement de la Grande Bretagne.

Malheureusement nous dûmes bientôt nous convaincre du contraire.

Lors de la publication du Traité de Paix conclu entre le Général Kaufmann et le Khan de Khiva, Lord Granville. par sa dépêche en date du 7 Janvier, 1874, chargea l'Ambassadeur Britannique à St. Pétersbourg d'attirer l'attention du Gouvernement Impérial sur les dangers qui pouvaient résulter des progrès de la Russie dans l'Asie Centrale pour l'équilibre politique que l'entente des deux Gouvernements avait tâché d'établir dans ces contrées.

Après avoir constaté que le Gouvernement Britannique ne trouvait point pratique d'examiner trop minutieusement si les clauses du Traité de Paix conclu avec le Khiva étaient strictement conformes aux assurances que lui avait données le Comte Schouvaloff, Lord Granville signalait au Gouvernement Impérial les appréhensions soulevées dans l'Afghanistan par les rumeurs répandues d'une expédition Russe contre Merv et contre les tribus des Turcomans de ces parages.

Il prévoyait qu'en pareil cas il pourrait facilement advenir que les Turcomans se vissent forcés à se réfugier dans la province de Badaghees en Hérat, et que dès lors il était à craindre que cela ne conduisit les autorités Russes à demander à l'Emir soit d'empêcher les Turcomans de commettre des agressions, soit de permettre aux forces Russes d'entrer sur le territoire Afghan dans le but de punir les tribus hostiles.

En conséquence, il exprimait le ferme espoir que dans cette éventualité le Gouvernement Impérial prendrait en sérieuse considération les dangers qui résulteraient d'une pareille expédition et voudrait bien établir franchement, et une fois pour toutes, que l'indépendance de l'Afghanistan est considérée comme une condition de haute importance pour le bien-être et la sécurité des Indes Anglaises et la tranquillité de l'Asie.

Quel que fut le vif désir du Cabinet Impérial d'aller au devant d'un vœu du Gouvernement Britannique, qui répondait à ses propres intentions, il lui était impossible de déférer entièrement à ces représentations amicales. Elles ne semblaient point s'accorder entièrement avec l'esprit de l'entente établie précédemment entre les deux Cabinets. En effet elles tendaient, d'un côté, à restreindre la sphère d'action que nous concédait le programme tracé d'un commun accord entre les deux Cabinets, puisque Merv se trouve bien au delà des frontières reconnues à l'Afghanistan; et, d'un autre côté, à diminuer la valeur des engagements découlant pour le Gouvernement Anglais du même accord, aux termes duquel l'Angleterrre s'obligeait à user de toute son influence auprès de Shir-Ali-Khan, afin de l'amener à conserver une attitude pacifique.

Dans sa dépêche responsive en date du 21 Janvier, 1874, son Altesse le Prince Gortchacow réitéra l'assurance positive que le Gouvernement Impérial persistait à considérer l'Afghanistan comme entièrement en dehors de sa sphère d'action. Il ajouta que, si de part et d'autre les deux Gouvernements employaient leur ascendant sur les Etats placés dans le rayon de leur influence naturelle afin de les détourner de toute agression, il y avait tout lieu d'espérer qu'aucune collision ne viendrait troubler le repos de l'Asie Centrale. Quant au danger qui, selon l'opinion de Lord Granville, pourrait résulter d'une expédition contre les Turcomans, le Prince Chancelier déclara que nous n'avions aucune intention d'entreprendre des mesures militaires contre ces tribus ; qu'il dépendait entièrement d'elles de vivre en bonne intelligence avec nous, mais que, si elles se livraient à des actes d'agression et de brigandage contre nous, force nous serait de les châtier. Dans ce cas, quoique l'éventualité signalée par Shir-Ali-Khan fût peu probable, l'Emir de Kaboul pourrait contribuer à en éloigner la possibilité, en faisant nettement comprendre d'avance aux Turcomans que s'ils provoquaient des mesures de rigueur par des actes de déprédation contre nous, ils ne devaient compter sur aucune assistance de sa part.

Cette dépêche clôt la série des communications échangées entre les deux Gouvernements sur les affaires de l'Asie Centrale.

Il résulte de la lecture de ces pièces diplomatiques que le malentendu qui semble exister entre le Gouvernement Britannique et nous n'a aucune raison d'être.

Le Cabinet de Londres semble déduire de ce que nous lui avons à plusieurs reprises communiqué spontanément et amicalement nos vues sur l'Asie Centrale, et en particulier notre ferme intention de ne point y poursuivre une politique de conquêtes et d'annexions, la conviction que nous aurions contracté envers lui des engagements précis sous ce rapport.

De ce que les événements nous ont forcés, malgré nous, à nous écarter de ce programme dans une certaine limite, il semble conclure que le Cabinet Impérial aurait manqué à des promesses formelles.

Enfin, des progrès successifs que nous avons dû faire dans ces contrées, il infère que l'Angleterre a le droit et le devoir de prendre de son côté des mesures pour restreindre notre action, paralyser notre influence, et se garantir contre des agressions éventuelles.

Ces conclusions ne semblent pas conformes à la réalité des choses, ainsi qu'à l'esprit et à la lettre des Conventions établies entre les deux Gouvernements.

Il est toujours resté entendu que, de part et d'autre, ils conservaient entièrement leur liberté d'action et d'appréciation quant aux mesures nécéssitées par leur propre sécurité.

Dès l'année 1864, lorsque nous avons donné par notre première circulaire l'assurance de notre ferme intention de ne pas étendre nos possessions en Asie au delà du strict nécessaire, nous avons clairement et loyalement indiqué les éventualités auxquelles l'état précaire de ces contrées pourrait nous mettre dans le cas de pourvoir.

Ces nécessités avaient été si bien appréciées par Lord Clarendon qu'en prenant acte de nos assurances spontanées, il nous répondit que le Cabinet Britannique connaissait par sa propre expérience aux Indes l'impossibilité pour un Gouvernement, appelé à établir sa domination sur des contrées barbares, de fixer les limites auxquelles il pourrait s'arrêter.

Les mêmes principes ont présidé à nos pourparlers avec Mr. Forsyth. Il a été reconnu notamment, que dans l'état actuel des choses, les frontières Russes et Anglaises en Asie Centrale ne pouvant pas être considérées comme immuables, un arrangement international sur ce point resterait sans effet.

Mais, à côté de cette latitude, réservée aux deux Gouverements dans un esprit de sagesse pratique, les points suivants ont été établis d'un commun accord :—

1. Qu'un antagonisme entre eux dans ces contrées serait contraire à leurs intérêts mutuels et à la mission civilisatrice à laquelle ils sont appelés chacun dans la sphère de son influence naturelle ; qu'ils auraient tout avantage à se prêter un mutuel concours afin de maintenir un état de paix entre les Khans de l'Asie Centrale et de ne point permettre que les intrigues de ces Khans mettent en conflit les intérêts de deux grands Empires.

2. Qu'à cet effet il était désirable de conserver entre eux une zone intermédiaire, qui les préservât d'un contact immédiat.

3. Que l'Afghanistan constituerait cette zone intermédiaire, si son indépendance était mise de part et d'autre à l'abri de toute atteinte.

4. Que les limites de cet Etat seraient reconnues d'après le tracé convenu à la suite d'une longue négociation.

5. Que les deux Gouvernements s'emploieraient réciproquement dans leurs sphères d'influence, l'Angleterre sur l'Emir Afghan, la Russie sur les Khans de Boukhara et de Khokand, pour prévenir toute agression de la part de l'un de ces Chefs contre l'indépendance et la sécurité de l'autre.

Telles ont été les bases précises de l'accord établi entre les deux Gouvernements.

Le Gouvernement Impérial n'a pas cessé pour sa part de les avoir en vue et d'y conformer ses actes.

Malgré les termes même de cet accord, qui nous laisse pleine liberté d'action sur toute la portion de territoire située entre nos frontières et celles de l'Afganistan, le Khokand conserve son autonomie et doit un accroissement considérable de sa prospérité aux bonnes relations qu'il entretient avec nous. Il en aurait été de même du Boukhara, si l'Emir ne s'était pas laissé entraîner à des actes agressifs. La nécessité de le contenir et le vœu de la population ont été les principales raisons qui nous ont obligé de garder Samarkand.

Mais nous lui avons restitué la ville de Karchi et le Khanat de Schahrissiabs. Quant au Khiva, après l'avoir châtié et mis fin à ses actes de brigandage, nous lui avons cependant gardé son autonomie. Pour ce qui concerne l'Afghanistan, nous avons employé avec succès notre influence sur l'Emir de Boukhara, afin de le dissuader de toute agression contre le territoire Afghan, et nous avons refusé de donner suite aux desseins d'Abdul Rahman Khan, neveu de l'Emir de l'Afghanistan, contre le repos cette contrée.

L'efficacité de notre action, sous ce rapport, a été reconnue par le Gouvernement Britannique.

Le Cabinet Impérial est persuadé qui si, de part et d'autre, les deux Gouvernements continuent à marcher dans cette voie, le but auquel ils travaillent d'un commun accord sera efficacement atteint ; le repos de l'Asie Centrale sera mis autant que possible à l'abri des vicissitudes que l'état sauvage de ces contrées doit faire appréhendre ; non-seulement tout contact immédiat et tout choc entre eux sera écarté, mais encore la conviction de leur ferme et loyal accord, éloignant de l'esprit des Khans Asiates l'idée d'un antagonisme sur lequel ils puissent spéculer, préviendraient les causes de troubles et de conflits ; ils pourraient aussi, en pleine sécurité, poursuivre chacun dans sa sphère naturelle, leur mission civilisatrice et le développement de leurs mutuels intérêts.

Le Cabinet Impérial sera toujours disposé à y consacrer ses efforts.

(Translation.)

SOME years ago Russia found herself compelled to take military measures in order to establish order and tranquillity in the Kirghese Steppes. These measures eventually entailed upon her the necessity of making considerable territorial acquisitions. From that time forth the English public has attributed to us plans of conquest directed against England, and threatening the tranquillity of the British possessions in India.

These erroneous commentaries on the objects of our policy in Central Asia were capable of producing causes of disturbance in our friendly relations with England, which the Imperial Cabinet were anxious to avoid.

It was with this object that they addressed to our Legations abroad the Circular of the 31st November, 1864.

This document was of a purely confidential character. It was only published in 1865, after the British Government had become acquainted with it through one of their foreign Legations. This fact, and the precise nature of our declarations, excluded the possibility of any interpretation implying an engagement contracted by Russia towards Europe or with any individual Power. The views of the Imperial Government were clearly expressed; they were summed up in a statement of the principles which had hitherto guided our policy in Central Asia, and in a spontaneous declaration of the ultimate object which the orders of His Majesty the Emperor had traced for the action of his Cabinet in those countries.

While stating the motives which had determined us not to overstep the line drawn from Tchemkent to Issiz-Koul, the Circular pointed out, at the same time, as a basis of the whole system, the necessity of definitively fixing our frontiers at the precise spot where the fixed populations begin, those populations affording the elements of a durable social organization with which it would be possible for us to establish regular relations.

It was necessary to create and develop those relations, on the one hand, by civilizing, through the means of colonization, the nomad tribes comprised in the new line of our frontiers, and on the other hand, by attracting, through the security of commercial intercourse and by reciprocal advantages, the populations of Khokand, with which this new line brought us in contact, and to arrive at the establishment of commercial and peaceful relations. Such was the two-fold object to which, from this moment, all our efforts were directed.

Unhappily the continually recurring difficulties, which result from the contact of a regularly constituted Power with semi-savage neighbours, soon compelled us to overstep the limits which we had voluntarily assigned to ourselves.

Forced to defend ourselves against the continual aggressions of these neighbouring hordes, and to chastise an enemy whose social organization placed him beyond our reach, we soon became convinced that, in order to consolidate our new territorial acquisitions, we must, in the first place, establish, beyond our frontiers, the tranquillity which was indispensable to our security.

The cause of this instability lay, firstly, in the neighbourhood of tribes whose nomad and turbulent habits paralyzed all colonization and all commerce by means of caravans; and, secondly, in the perpetual changes in the political condition of these countries, where Tashkend and Khokand, sometimes united, sometimes separated, always at war, either among themselves or with Bokhara, afforded no possibility of fixed relations, nor of any regular intercourse.

The Imperial Government, therefore, found themselves, against their will, placed in the alternative of either allowing a state of permanent disorder to reign, which paralyzed all security and all progress, or of endeavouring to subject by force of arms the small independent States whose predatory disposition and perpetual dissensions allow their neighbours neither respite or repose.

Thus it happened that after traversing the desert which separated us from Turkestan, our troops, in possession of Tashkend, found themselves in face of the army of the Ameer of Bokhara.

The conduct of this Chief soon provoked a conflict, the results of which went beyond the immediate expectations of the Imperial Cabinet, and brought our troops to Samarcand, which submitted without a blow.

At the commencement of this complication we frankly pointed out to the English Cabinet the danger to which the Ameer would infallibly expose himself, if he engaged in a struggle which we had done nothing to provoke.

The explanations furnished by our Ambassador in London satisfied Lord Clarendon, then Principal Secretary of State,* who stated to him that the rapid progress of the Russian troops had neither given rise to suspicion nor alarm on the part of the British Government, but that the English public, as well as that of India, was far from sharing this feeling of security; that, to calm this feeling of uneasiness, which might imperil the good understanding at the time existing between Russia and England, it would be desirable that there should remain a neutral territory between the Russian and English possessions, destined to avert the shock which might be caused by the immediate contact of the two Great Powers meeting in the centre of Asia.

These proposals of Lord Clarendon were in such complete correspondence with the views of the Imperial Government as to insure them a favourable reception. Baron Brunnow received orders in consequence to enter into confidential negotiations on this subject with the English Government.

Meanwhile, Lord Clarendon, who was then at Wiesbaden, took advantage of the residence of the Chancellor of the Empire at Baden-Baden to request an interview, with the object of ascertaining, by an interchange of ideas, the means best adapted for the maintenance, between Russia and England, of good relations, consistent with their mutual interests in Central Asia. The town of Heidelberg was selected for the meeting.

The result of this interview was an agreement based on the maintenance, between Russia and Great Britain, of an intermediate zone, destined to separate their possessions in Asia.

In pursuance of this idea it was agreed that Afghanistan should form an independent State, which should remain outside of the sphere of Russian action.

We, at the same time, maintained, in our negotiations with the British Government, that the territorial extent of Afghanistan should be fixed by the boundaries of the Khanates of Herat, Cabul, and Candahar, at that time in the possession of the Ameer Shere Ali Khan.†

Lord Clarendon endeavoured subsequently to extend those boundaries, with the object of more accurately specifying the borders of Afghanistan, which were up to that time ill-defined on the north owing to the absence of clearly indicated frontiers.

To supplement this want of accuracy, Lord Clarendon expressed a wish to agree on a fictitious line, which should extend the frontiers of Afghanistan up to the left bank of the Oxus.

This geographical line did not admit as sufficient the neutralization of the large tracts to which we had consented to apply that principle; it extended considerably beyond the territory of Afghanistan properly so-called, and much exceeded the limits recognized by us.

Our Ambassador in London consequently received instructions to decline the project proposed by Lord Clarendon.

Baron Brunnow was careful to put this refusal on record, by placing in the hands of the Principal Secretary of State an extract from the letter of the $\frac{14}{26}$th April, 1869, in which such refusal had been notified by his Highness Prince Gortchakow.

His reply in the negative terminated the confidential explanations between our Ambassador and Lord Clarendon on the subject of the neutral zone.

After having been definitively closed in London, this question was reopened at St. Petersburgh in 1869, on the occasion of the visit of Mr. Forsyth, an officer of the Indian Administration, authorized by the Viceroy, Lord Mayo, to proceed to St. Petersburgh, with a view to an interchange of ideas on the questions of mutual interest to the two Governments.

The considerations on which the confidential explanations of Mr. Forsyth with the Imperial Government were based may be thus summed up:—

1. The two Governments were animated by the same desire to prevent, as far as depended on them, all subjects of misunderstanding which might arise in consequence of the absence of political organization in the independent States known in geography under the collective denominations of independent Afghanistan and Turkestan.

2. It was understood that if it had occurred to England or Russia, up to that date, to undertake military expeditions in this or that part of Central Asia, and to annex new territories to their possessions, such conduct had only been imposed on them by the force of local circumstances, and by an absolute impossibility of acting otherwise.

3. As, in the present state of affairs, the Russian and English frontiers in Central Asia could not be regarded as incapable of alteration, an international arrangement on that point would be ineffectual; the best means, therefore, of arriving at a satisfactory result was simply to settle, as far as was possible, the general bases for a balance of power as regards the countries separating the Russian and English possessions in Asia.

* Despatch of the Earl of Clarendon to Sir A. Buchanan, March 27, 1869.

† Letter of Prince Gortchakow of the $\frac{14}{26}$th April, 1869.

It was agreed in consequence:—

1. That the territories at that time in the actual possession of Shere Ali Khan should be considered as forming the limits of Afghanistan.

2. That the Ameer should not endeavour to exercise any influence or any interference beyond those limits, and that the English Government should take every care to dissuade him from any attempt at aggression.

3. That, on their side, the Imperial Government should employ all their influence to prevent the Ameer of Bokhara from making any attack on Afghan territory.

These principles met with the entire concurrence of the Cabinet of London and of the Governor-General of India.

In the month of May 1870, Her Britannic Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh communicated to the Imperial Government a despatch from Lord Mayo, who, in view of the agreement arrived at between the two Powers, proposed to fix from henceforth the limits of the possessions of Shere Ali Khan upon the basis of the information collected on this subject by the Government of India.

The despatch, however, gave an interpretation to this information which did not entirely correspond with the precise sense of the understanding arrived at from the interchange of views between the Cabinets of London and St. Petersburgh.

In fact, after stating that the possessions of Shere Ali Khan on the north and north-west appeared to coincide almost exactly with those of his father, Lord Mayo came to the conclusion that the limits of the Kingdom of Dost Mohammed might be generally taken as the boundary which should divide the Kingdom of Afghanistan from the other States of Central Asia to the north and north-west.

Now, at the date of the negotiations with Mr. Forsyth it was agreed to keep to the territories which, having formerly recognized the authority of Dost Mohammed, were still at that time in the actual possession of Shere Ali Khan.

This important distinction marked the difference between our views and those of Lord Mayo.

Before, however, expressing any definite opinion, the Imperial Government thought it necessary to collect positive information on the subject of these distant and imperfectly-known countries.

The Governor-General of Turkestan was therefore charged to collect all the information calculated to throw light on the matter and to enable the Imperial Government to form a practical opinion with a full knowledge of the subject.

The question which had to be decided had two sides. It was expedient:—

1. To establish the existing state of the actual possessions of Shere Ali Khan.

2. To ascertain, on the basis of this status quo, the frontier best fitted to answer the object of the negotiations between the Imperial Government and that of England; that is to say, to avoid, within the limits of possibility, any causes of conflicts and mutual aggressions between the neighbouring Khanates, and, consequently, to guarantee, so far as was practicable, that state of peace between them, which the two Governments were on either side to endeavour henceforth to cause to be respected by all the means of influence in their power.

In regard to these considerations, the result of the information furnished by General Kaufmann was to the following effect:—

1. On the north the Amou-Daria constitutes really the normal frontier of Afghanistan, starting from its confluence with the Kouktcha, as far as Khodja Saléh.

On this point our information agreed with the opinion of the British Government.

2. On the north-east the information we had collected assigned the confluence of this river with the Kouktcha as the limit of the territories over which Shere Ali Khan exercised an undoubted and actual sovereignty. Beyond that limit, and especially as regards Badakshan and Vakhan, it was impossible to discover the trace of such a sovereignty; on the contrary, the information, taken as a whole, affords numerous indications that these countries should be regarded as independent. For instance, throughout the whole of this country one meets with none of those signs which in Asia accompany the exercise of sovereignty, that is to say, the presence of Afghan officers and functionaries to collect taxes. Further, the Chiefs of Badakshan have both considered themselves and been always regarded by their neighbours as independent Chiefs.

3. As regards Vakhan, this country had remained, at least up to that date, still more beyond the direct influence of the Chiefs of Afghanistan.

4. With respect to the frontier to be assigned to Afghanistan on the north-west, starting from Khodja Saleh, our information suggested similar doubts as to the effectual possession, by the Ameer of Cabul, of the towns of Aktchi, Seripoul, Meimané, Chibirgan, and Ankhoi, which England proposed to include in the recognized limits of Afghanistan.

While these questions, however, were still under consideration, the Imperial Minister for Foreign Affairs received a communication of a fresh despatch from Lord Granville, supporting the opinion put forward by Lord Mayo on the points in dispute.

In reply to this communication, the Imperial Cabinet lost no time in forwarding to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty the information supplied by the Governor-General of Turkestan, together with the conclusions which seemed to them to result therefrom.*

After defining the points upon which the views of the two Governments differed, the Imperial Cabinet laid principal stress upon the maintenance of Badakshan and Vakhan as independent States, outside of the frontiers assigned to Shere Ali Khan.

They pressed this point all the more strongly, inasmuch as in the actual state of affairs at that moment there was no conflict between Badakshan and its neighbours. Bokhara laid no claim to that country. The two States, moreover, were too weak, and too much absorbed in their internal affairs, to pick quarrels with each other. All, therefore, that remained for England and Russia was to endeavour to maintain this state of peace among the Khanates, as well as between Afghanistan and Badakshan. Matters would be entirely changed the moment the Ameer of Cabul extended his authority over Badakshan and Vakhan. He would find himself in immediate contact with Kashgar, Khokand, and Bokhara, from which he had hitherto been separated by those two countries: and thenceforward it would be far more difficult to avoid collisions, arising either from his ambition and the consciousness of his own strength, or from the jealousy of his neighbours.

Such were the considerations which had induced the Imperial Government to maintain its position in regard to Vakhan and Badakshan.

As regards the boundaries of Afghanistan to the north-east, although doubts existed as to the possession by the Ameer of Cabul of the towns of Aktchi, Seripoul, Meimane, Chibirgan, and Ankhoi, the Imperial Cabinet declared that they were disposed to admit their annexation to the Afghan territory.

Notwithstanding these important concessions, the British Government declared themselves unable to consent to the combination suggested by us. Under these circumstances the Imperial Cabinet, anxious not to defer further the settlement of the question, consented, in their despatch of the 19th January, 1873, to the incorporation of Badakshan and Vakhan in the Afghan territory, and thereby gave their full and entire consent to the line of demarcation proposed in Lord Granville's despatch of the 17th October, 1872. (See Annexes 1 and 2.)

Meanwhile the Khiva expedition was decided upon.

Continual acts of brigandage, exactions imposed upon the Khirghese under our dominion, instigations to the nomad tribes to revolt, and the capture and enslavement of our subjects; such were the acts which had for several years called for the adoption of decisive measures against this Khanate. We still hoped, however, to arrive by peaceful means at the establishment of more regular relations with these unruly neighbours.

More than once we had addressed temperate remonstrances to the Khan, but they had either remained unanswered or had been met by a haughty refusal on his part.

After the failure of these repeated efforts an expedition was decided upon.

Although, according to the understanding come to between the Imperial Government and that of Great Britain, relative to the establishment of a neutral zone between the British and Russian possessions, the Khanate of Khiva fell completely within our sphere of action, we thought it right, as a matter of courtesy, to take no decisive step against Khiva without informing the English Government.

The Imperial Government had no intention whatever of conquering and annexing any portion of the territory of Khiva. Their object was, first, to chastise the Khan for the past, and then to establish a state of affairs which would secure our subjects against the incursions and depredations of the Khivans and Turkomans, and render possible the development of commercial relations.

Formal instructions were consequently given to the Commander-in-Chief of the expedition.

These considerations were spontaneously communicated to the British Government by Aide-de-camp General Count Schouvaloff, who had proceeded to London.

After the occupation of Khiva, however, and when we were in a position to understand the internal condition of the country, we were convinced that, even with the best intentions on the Khan's part to maintain with us relations of good neighbourhood, he would not have had the power to do so, since his influence with the Turkomans was almost null, and it not unfrequently happened that he himself, no less than his subjects, had to submit to the ascendancy of these brigands of the steppes.

* Despatch of Prince Gortchakow of the 7th December, 1872.

Thus, after the departure of our expeditionary force, the same incursions would infallibly have been renewed; the Imperial Government would have been obliged to undertake once more an arduous expedition, for the purpose of inflicting fresh chastisement upon the Turkomans, and, in that case, it would have been impossible to preserve the autonomous existence of Khiva.

It was therefore considered indispensable to construct on the right bank of the Amou-Daria a fort provided with a sufficient garrison to protect our frontier against the attacks of the Turkomans. And further, it was necessary to secure the communications of the fort and its garrison with Turkestan.

We found ourselves, in consequence, compelled to annex to our possessions the arid desert stretching between that province and the newly-constructed fort. However barren and onerous such an acquisition of territory was to us, it was quite inevitable, seeing that the Khan himself had recognized and declared his inability to fulfil his engagements towards us, except upon the distinct condition that he should have a detachment and corps of Russian troops in his proximity. His wishes went even further; he had pressed strongly for the maintenance of Russian troops in the town itself of Khiva.

Such were the results of the expedition against Khiva; they were forced upon us by a state of things impossible to foresee, and by necessities independent of our own wishes.

We had every reason to hope that the frank explanations of our Ambassador in London would remove what apprehensions were still entertained by the British Government on this head. Unfortunately, we were soon convinced to the contrary.

On the publication of the Treaty of Peace concluded between General Kaufmann and the Khan of Khiva, Lord Granville, in his despatch dated the 7th January, 1874, instructed the British Ambassador at St. Petersburgh to call the attention of the Imperial Government to the dangers that might result from the progress of Russia in Central Asia to the balance of power which it had been endeavoured to establish in those countries by the understanding between the two Governments.

After stating that the British Government saw no practical advantage in examining too minutely whether the clauses of the Treaty of Peace signed at Khiva were in strict accordance with the assurances given to him by Count Schouvaloff, Lord Granville proceeded to point out to the Imperial Government the apprehensions caused in Afghanistan by the rumours which had been circulated of a Russian expedition against Merv and the Turkoman tribes of those regions.

He foresaw that in such a case it might easily happen that the Turkomans should find themselves obliged to retire into the Province of Badaghees, in Herat, and that there would then be reason to fear that the Russians might be induced thereby to call upon the Ameer, either to prevent the Turkomans from committing aggressions, or to permit the Russian forces to enter the territory of Afghanistan for the purpose of punishing the hostile tribes.

He expressed, in consequence, his earnest hope that, in this eventuality the Imperial Government would take into serious consideration the dangers which would result from such an expedition, and he thought it right to state frankly, once for all, that the independence of Afghanistan was considered a matter of great importance for the welfare and security of British India and the tranquillity of Asia.

However much the Imperial Cabinet might desire to anticipate the wishes of the British Government, which were in accordance with their own intentions, it was impossible to defer entirely to these friendly representations. They did not seem to be in complete harmony with the spirit of the understanding previously come to between the two Cabinets.

In fact, on the one hand they tended to restrict the sphere of action conceded to us by the programme traced conjointly by the two Cabinets, inasmuch as Merv is far beyond the frontiers recognized as belonging to Afghanistan; and, on the other hand, they tended to detract from the value of the engagements on the part of England resulting from the same understanding, whereby she pledged herself to use all her influence with Shere Ali Khan, in order to induce him to observe a pacific attitude.

In his despatch in reply of the 21st January, 1874, his Highness Prince Gortchakow reiterated his positive assurance that the Imperial Government persisted in considering Afghanistan as entirely outside of its sphere of action. He added that if the two Governments employed on either side their ascendancy over the States lying within the sphere of their natural influence, with a view to dissuade them from aggression of any kind, there was every reason to hope that no collision would occur to trouble the repose of Central Asia.

As regarded the danger which, in Lord Granville's opinion, might result from an expedition against the Turkomans, the Prince Chancellor declared that we had no intention of undertaking military measures against these tribes; that it depended entirely upon themselves whether they lived on good terms with us, but that, if they gave way to acts of aggression and brigandage against us, we should be compelled to punish them.

In such a case, although the eventuality suggested by Shere Ali Khan was little probable, the Ameer of Cabul might aid in averting the possibility of its occurrence, by making the Turkomans plainly understand beforehand that if they provoked rigorous measures by acts of depredation committed against us, they could count on no assistance from him.

This despatch closes the series of communications exchanged between the two Governments on the affairs of Central Asia.

It is evident from a perusal of this diplomatic correspondence that the misunderstanding apparently existing between the British Government and ourselves is quite groundless.

The Cabinet of London appears to derive, from the fact of our having on several occasions spontaneously and amicably communicated to them our views with respect to Central Asia, and particularly our firm resolve not to pursue a policy of conquest or annexation, a conviction that we have contracted definite engagements towards them in regard to this matter.

Owing to the fact that events have forced us, against our will, to depart, to a certain extent, from our programme, they seem to conclude that the Imperial Cabinet have failed to observe their formal promises.

Lastly, in view of the successive steps which we have been forced to take in these countries, they infer that it is the right and the duty of England to take on her side measures to restrain our action, to paralyze our influence, and to secure herself against eventual aggression.

These conclusions do not seem to be in accordance with the real state of affairs, nor, indeed, with the spirit or the letter of the Conventions established between the two Governments.

It has always been understood that either party retained entire liberty of action and of judgment with respect to measures necessitated for its own security.

Since the year 1864, when, by our first Circular, we gave the assurance of our firm intention not to extend our Asiatic possessions beyond the limits of strict necessity, we have clearly and loyally pointed out the eventualities for which we might be compelled to provide in view of the precarious condition of those countries.

Those necessities were so well understood by Lord Clarendon that, in taking note of our spontaneous assurances, he replied that the British Cabinet knew by their own experience in India how impossible it was for a Government called upon to establish its Empire over uncivilized countries to fix the limits at which it would be able to stop.

The same principles guided us in our discussions with Mr. Forsyth. It was especially recognized that in the present state of affairs, it being impossible to consider the Russian and English frontiers in Central Asia as incapable of alteration, an international arrangement on that point would be ineffectual. But, side by side with this latitude, reserved to both Governments in a spirit of practical wisdom, the following points have been established by common consent:—

1. That an antagonism between them in these countries would be contrary to their mutual interests, and to the mission of civilization to which they have been called, each in the sphere of its own natural influence; that it would be highly advantageous to afford to each other mutual support, in order to maintain a state of peace between the Khans of Central Asia, and not to permit the intrigues of those Khans to bring the interests of two great Empires into collision.

2. That for this purpose it was desirable to preserve an intermediate zone between them, which should secure them from immediate contact.

3. That Afghanistan should constitute this intermediate zone, if its independence were secured on either side from all encroachment.

4. That the limits of that State should be recognized in accordance with the line agreed upon after a long negotiation.

5. That the two Governments, in their respective spheres of influence, England with the Ameer of Afghanistan, and Russia with the Khans of Bokhara and Khokand, should employ themselves reciprocally in preventing all aggression on the part of any one of these Chiefs against the independence and security of the other.

Such were the definite bases of the understanding established between the two Governments.

The Imperial Government have, for their part, never ceased to keep them in view, and to conform their policy to them.

Notwithstanding the actual terms of this understanding, which leaves us complete liberty of action over the territory situated between our frontiers and those of Afghanistan, Khokand preserves its autonomy, and owes no inconsiderable increase in its prosperity to the good relations it maintains with us. It would have been the same with Bokhara had the Ameer restrained himself from acts of aggression. The necessity of holding him in check, and the wishes of the population, have been the principal reasons which have compelled us to retain Samarcand.

But we have restored to him the town of Karchi, and the Khanate of Schahrissiabs. As to Khiva, after having punished and put an end to its brigandage, we still preserved for it its autonomy. With respect to Afghanistan, we have employed with success our influence over the Ameer of Bokhara, to dissuade him from aggression of any kind against Afghan territory; and we have refused to promote the designs of Abdul Rahman Khan, nephew of the Ameer of Afghanistan, against the tranquillity of that country.

The efficacy of our action in this matter has been acknowledged by the British Government.

The Imperial Cabinet is persuaded that if the two Governments continue respectively to pursue this course of policy, the object for which they are working by joint agreement will be effectually attained; the peace of Central Asia will be secured as far as possible from the vicissitudes which must be apprehended from the uncivilized condition of those countries; not only will all immediate contact and collision between them be avoided, but the conviction of their firm and loyal agreement will dispel from the minds of the Khans of Asia any idea of an antagonism upon which they might speculate, and will thus prevent all causes of trouble and conflict; they may thus, in perfect security, follow up, each in their own natural sphere, their mission of civilization, and the development of their mutual interests.

The Imperial Cabinet will be always ready to devote their efforts towards this object.

No. 30.

Mr. Lister to Sir L. Mallet.

Sir, Foreign Office, May 26, 1875.

I AM directed by the Earl of Derby to transmit to you, to be laid before the Marquis of Salisbury in Council, a copy of a despatch addressed by Prince Gortchakow to the Russian Ambassador in London, and which has been communicated to his Lordship by Count Schouvaloff.*

This despatch incloses a Memorandum drawn up by the Russian Government, reviewing all the correspondence which has passed between the two Governments since the date of the Russian Circular of the 31st November, 1864, and records the determination of the Russian Government not to extend the frontier of their possessions in Central Asia beyond their present limits, either on the side of Bokhara or on that of Krasnovodsk and the Attrek.

Stringent orders are said to have been given by the Emperor of Russia to the military authorities in Central Asia to conform to this decision.

Lord Derby would be glad to be furnished with any observations which Lord Salisbury may have to offer on this Memorandum, and especially on the point whether the boundaries of Afghanistan, as laid down in this Memorandum, are accurately defined; and I am to draw your attention to paragraph 3 in the summary, in which Afghanistan is spoken of as an intermediary zone, whose independence should be respected by both parties, as well as to that passage which follows the summary, stating that full liberty of action remains to Russia over the country intervening between the Russian possessions and Afghanistan.

Lord Derby proposes to instruct Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh to express to the Russian Government the thanks of Her Majesty's Government for the friendly communication of this Memorandum, but to be careful not to compromise Her Majesty's Government to any endorsement of the statements in it. Before doing so, however, his Lordship will await Lord Salisbury's observations.

I am, &c.

(Signed) T. V. LISTER.

---

* No. 29.

No. 31.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received May 31.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, May 20, 1875.

I HAVE the honour to inclose an article, in translation, by Mr. J. Michell, from the "Moscow Gazette" of the $\frac{1st}{13th}$ instant.

This article, after referring to and giving some details of the Khan of Khiva's visit to the Turkoman tribes in the vicinity of his capital, states that General Llamakin had returned on the $\frac{14th}{26th}$ February to Krasnovodsk from a visit to Tiflis, and that, with the approval of the Grand Duke Michael, he was about to undertake a military expedition in the direction of the Attrek, proceeding to the point chosen for a fort at Daz-Ulam ferry, where his detachment will be joined by a battalion of the Daghestan regiment, with six guns, which will be transported from Baku by barges of the Caspian flotilla.

I may here observe to your Lordship that this intelligence dates back as far as February last.

This article further states, on the authority of General Llamakin's Report, that the Ahhal Tékés had sent in their submission to Russia, and had promised to fulfil all Russian demands, having returned ninety of the Yomouds who had been taken prisoners in the attack of a village near Krasnovodsk.

Many of the elders of the Tékés had arrived at Krasnovodsk, and had received presents by order of the Grand Duke Michael.

I have also the honour to annex an article in French translation from the "Invalide Russe," on the impression produced by the last expedition of Colonel Ivanoff on the left bank of the Oxus, and by the visit of the Khan of Khiva to the Turkoman tribes.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure 1 in No. 31.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of May $\frac{1}{13}$, 1875.

ON écrit de la section militaire de l'Amou-Daria à "l'Invalide Russe:—

L'impression produite par la dernière expédition de nos troupes sur la rive guache de l'Amou exerce une influence très-sensible sur la tournée que le Khan de Khiva a entreprise dans les localités occupées par les Turcomans et a produit un changement remarquable dans le caractère des relations des tribus Turcomanes avec leur souverain légitime, Seïd-Mohamed-Rakhim-Khan. Autre fois le Khan n'aurait pas osé paraître au milieu de ses sujets Turcomans en général, et des Iomoudes riverians du canal de Hasavat en particulier. A l'heure qu'il est, le Khan, sans avoir fait aucune concession aux Turcomans, parcourt librement leurs terres, et se voit reçu partout par les populations, dont les anciens et les Chefs se mettent à sa suite; il exerce parmi eux ses droits de grand justicier et les frappe d'impôts dont le chiffre n'a été égalé par aucun de ses prédécesseurs.

"Outre des informations indirectes reçues par le Colonel Ivanow sur le voyage du Khan, il a reçu du Khan lui-même une lettre datée d'Ismamout-Ata (centre des campements des Iomoudes du Hasavat) où Seïd-Mahomed-Rakhim a passé deux jours, dans le but de régler plusiers différends survenus entre les Iomoudes. Le Khan a déclaré aux Turcomans qui prennent l'eau du canal de Hasavat qu'à partir de cette année il les frappe d'un impôt égal à celui payé par les Ouzbeks. Les Turcomans ont entendu avec soumission cette nouvelle, en demandant seulement au Khan de vouloir prendre en considération leur position plus que gênée, qui leur rendra très-difficile le versement d'un impôt trop considérable. Le Khan a fixé l'impôt que doivent payer les Iomoudes du Hasavat à 10,000 tillia (18,000 roubles), dont 2,000 (3, 600 roubles) doivent être payés immédiatment et le reste à l'époque du versement de l'impôt par les Ouzbeks. Au lieu des ouvriers envoyés en corvée pour nettoyer les petits canaux d'irrigation, les Turcomans se sont engagés à payer 2 tillia (3 r. 60 c.) par ouvrier.

"D'Ismamout-Ata, le Khan se disposait à se rendre à Zmoukscher. D'après les informations que le colonel Ivanow a reçues par une autre voie, tous les Turcomans restent tranquillement chez eux et font d'excellentes réceptions au Khan. Deux chefs Turcomans sont venus à sa rencontre à Hasavat et l'accompagnent depuis dans sa tournée. Deux Chefs Ata-Vakil et Tiouria-Bokschi, qui s'étaient rendus les plus coupables de résistance à nos troupes et au Khan, marchent à pied devant son cheval, en signe de soumission. A Ismamout-Ata les Turcomans avaient préparé des fourrages pour les cheveaux de la suite du Khan. Le Khan a voulu leur payer ces fourrages, mais ils ont refusé d'accepter de l'argent. Le Khan a fait arrêter cinq des Iomoudes les plus coupables de résistance et il en a fait fusiller un.

" L'Envoyé du Khan qui a apporté au Colonel Ivanow la lettre datée d'Ismamout-Ata montre la plus grande satisfaction. Il est visible que les Ouzbeks sont étonnés de la soumission des Turcomans. Dans sa réponse au Khan, le Colonel Ivanow a cru devoir insister encore une fois sur la nécessité d'allier la clémence et la douceur à la sévérité."

Inclosure 2 in No. 31.

Extract from the "Moscow Gazette" of May $\frac{1}{13}$, 1875.

(Translation.)

ACCORDING to the last letter addressed on the $\frac{11th}{23rd}$ March last to Colonel Ivanoff by the Khan of Khiva from Kunia Urgentch, it has been ascertained that the Khan started on that day from the latter place to the camping grounds of the Kulchar Turkmen by way of Hadjeili, intending to reach Porsu next day, and to return to Khiva likewise by way of the same camping grounds.

During the Khan's stay at Kunia Urgentch, he imposed on the Jomuds, who lived in the neighbourhood of that town, a yearly tax of 2,400 tillas. The Chandor Turkmen were mulcted in an annual tribute of 600 tillas. The amount of the tax is fixed in proportion to the quantity of ground occupied by the tribes, and by the number of men supplied for the Khan's service. The Khan directed particular attention on the Jomuds of Kunia Urgentch, whom he compelled to liberate twenty Persian slaves; fifteen more of them, consisting of women and children, were rescued from a body of Kul Jomuds who had decamped in the direction of Sary Kamysh.

Quiet prevails throughout the Khanate. The Turkmen are stationary in their encampments, and fulfil all the demands of the Khan.

Palvan-Divan, the Khan's Mirza-Bashi, reports that only ten executions took place throughout the whole expedition of the Khan, and that the subjects of this severity were those whom the Turkmen themselves denounced as the worst and most dangerous men of the tribe.

The Khan also despatched 200 horsemen from Hadjeili to the northern parts of the Khanate, under the command of Hakim-Atalyk, whom he has appointed Governor of Kungrad. This measure was determined on in consequence of the disorders and robberies that prevailed in the neighbourhood of that town.

The following is the position of affairs in the trans-Caspian region:—

General Llamakin reported on the 18th and 22nd February from Krasnovodsk to the Commander of the Amu-Daria district, that he returned from Tiflis on the 1st February, and that he had received the approval of His Imperial Highness the Viceroy of the Caucasus of the following military plans:—

On the arrival at Mangyshlak from Krasnovodsk of 400 to 500 Government camels, the General is to proceed from Krasnovodsk with a battalion of Shirvan infantry, a sotnia of cavalry, a division of artillery, and a rocket company, by land to Chata, by way of Lakes Shandry and Bugdaily, past the ruins of Memad and Mestodovran, along the old bed of the Attrek, through the summer camping grounds of the Djaffar-Bais and Ag-ata-Bais; from Chata the detachment will proceed down the course of the Attrek to the point chosen for a fortification at Duz-Ulam ferry; at this place the detachment will be joined by a battalion of the Daghestan regiment with six guns, which will be transported from Baku to Hadji-Mykhtum by barges of the Caspian flotilla.

General Llamakin reports a satisfactory state of things in the trans-Caspian military district.

The Akhal Téké have sent assurances of submission, and promised to fulfil all Russian demands.

Out of the number of Jomuds seized at the attack and pillage of the Au near Krasnovodsk, ninety have been returned by the Téké; thirty, however, still remain in bondage! Sofi Khan, with twenty elders of the Téké, arrived at Krasnovodsk on the 19th February; they were also accompanied by Karadja Khan and three relatives of Kurban Murad Khan, the most respected and influential spiritual personage among the Téké. The son of the Bemis Khan was also among the number of the visitors. By order of His Imperial Highness rich robes of honour were distributed among them. Sofi Khan also received a gold medal.

General Llamakin also reports that Colonel Glukhovski's agent contemplates proceeding to Akhal Téké with a caravan of goods, in order to establish commercial relations in that quarter; special permission for this purpose has been applied for to the Lieutenant of the Caucasus. It is intended to establish a fair at Krasnovodsk in May.

No. 32.

Lord G. Hamilton to Lord Tenterden.—(Received June 24.)

My Lord, India Office, June 22, 1875.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Lister's letter of the 26th May, transmitting copy of a despatch addressed by Prince Gortchakow to the Russian Ambassador in London, recording the determination of the Emperor of Russia not to extend the frontiers of his possessions in Central Asia beyond their present limits, either on the side of Bokhara or that of Krasnovodsk and the Attrek, together with a Memorandum drawn up by the Russian Government, reviewing the correspondence which has passed on the subject of Central Asia.

In reply I am directed to state, that whilst Lord Salisbury has read with satisfaction the assurances conveyed in Prince Gortchakow's despatch of the 5th April, they are, in his opinion, somewhat weakened by the qualifications contained in the concluding paragraphs of his Excellency's letter, and the general tenour of the Memorandum which accompanies it.

Lord Salisbury is far from wishing to underrate the friendliness of feeling which has dictated the language of both these documents; and in pointing out some inaccuracies of statement which give an incorrect impression of the objects and results of past negotiations in regard to Central Asia, he only desires to prevent the revival of discussions which it is the object of both Governments to avoid.

Lord Salisbury will, for the sake of brevity, confine his observations to a few points to which he more particularly desires to draw Lord Derby's attention. The points primarily affect:—

1. The general question of the neutral zone.
2. The course of negotiations which led to the definition of the limits of Afghanistan.

In regard to the first point, the Memorandum assumes that the question of the "neutral zone," after being temporarily laid aside in the early part of 1869, was taken up again at St. Petersburgh during the Mission of Mr. Forsyth, and that as a result of the general agreement between the Russian and English Governments, Afghanistan now occupies that position.

This deduction from the course of past negotiations must be made under some misapprehension, since, in April 1869, Lord Clarendon, after reference to this Office, distinctly informed Baron Brünnow that Afghanistan would not fulfil the desired conditions, and substituted for his original suggestion, in regard to a neutral zone, a proposal that the Upper Oxus should form the boundary line which neither Power should permit their forces to cross.* This was followed by a protest from Lord Mayo's Government against the proposal of a neutral zone, the idea of which was thenceforward, so far as the English Government was concerned, definitively abandoned. Although the subject was subsequently touched upon in the course of explanations between the Russian Ministers and Mr. Forsyth during that gentleman's visit to St. Petersburgh, its discussion was not, and was not intended to be, one of the objects of his Mission.

In regard to the second point, viz., the course of negotiations, which led to the definition of the limits of Afghanistan, Lord Salisbury considered that there are no grounds for the laboured inference drawn in the Memorandum, that the limits agreed upon in 1869 as being in the effective possession of Shere Ali did not include Badakshan and Wakhan, and that the Russian Government finally conceded the point as an act of courtesy.

The matter was one of plain historical fact.

On the death of Dost Mahomed in 1863, Shere Ali Khan inherited his father's Kingdom, which included within its boundaries Badakshan, Wakhan, and the districts known as Afghan-Turkestan. Although subsequent internal rebellion caused the Chiefs of these outlying territories to waver in their allegiance from one member of the Afghan

* Lord Clarendon to Mr. Rumbold, the 17th April, 1869:—

"It was, therefore, thought advisable to propose that the Upper Oxus, which was south of Bokhara, should be the boundary line which neither Power should permit their forces to cross. This, I said, would leave a large tract of country, apparently desert, and marked in the map before us (Weller's map) as belonging to the Khan of Khiva, between Afghanistan and the territory already acquired by Russia, and if agreed to would, it might be hoped, remove all fear of future dissension."

Royal Family to another, they, at no period, attempted to make themselves independent of Afghanistan, or to offer their allegiance to Bokhara or other foreign Power. When Shere Ali regained supreme power in 1869-70 the whole of these Chiefs, including the Meer of Badakshan, renewed their personal allegiance to him, in the most full and entire manner; and when, in December 1869, the Russian Government agreed to recognize as Afghanistan the territory then under Shere Ali's effective control, he had been for nearly a year in complete possession of Cabul, Herat, Candahar, Afghan-Turkestan, Badakshan, and Wakhan. The inquiries made at the time by the Government of India left no doubt whatever as to these material facts, and their conclusions were in no way shaken by those in a different sense formed by General Kaufmann.

Lord Salisbury cannot imagine, therefore, that the final agreement of the Russian Cabinet to the line of demarcation proposed in Lord Granville's despatch of the 17th October, 1872, was, or ever will be, looked upon by the English Cabinet otherwise than as a recognition of a fact which had never really admitted of question.

It only remains to notice the conclusion expressed in the final portion of the Memorandum, to the effect that the agreement arrived at between the two Powers has left to Russia full liberty of action upon every portion of territory situated between the Russian frontiers and Afghanistan, without any apparent right of remonstrance on the part of the English Government.

By this assumption His Imperial Majesty's present declarations, of the sincerity of which there can he no doubt, are qualified to a grave extent. It must not be forgotten in the consideration of this important question that declarations, as specific and as sincere, have been followed on former occasions by acts inconsistent with their tenour; indeed, the Memorandum itself dwells on a justification of this course of policy, under the plea of necessity. Lord Salisbury neither desires to raise bygone questions touching that necessity, nor to enter into any examination of the policy to which it may have given rise; he merely wishes to express his fear that if the present claim be allowed to pass unchallenged, it may, sooner or later, lead to complications affecting Indian interests, in regard to Merv, which may seriously embarrass Her Majesty's Government. It must be borne in mind that the establishment of Russian supremacy in Khiva and on the south-east coast of the Caspian has taken place since the course of negotiations described in the general body of the Memorandum; whilst the occupation of the Attrek districts by Russian troops may, at any time, materially affect our relations with Persia. On these and other considerations it is inexpedient, if not impossible, in Lord Salisbury's opinion, for Her Majesty's Government to accept the position of inaction which Prince Gortchacow's letter apparently wishes to force upon it, whatever may be the character of future operations by Russia against the Turkomans.

It will be gathered from the foregoing observations that Lord Salisbury is disposed to doubt the sufficiency of the instructions proposed to be conveyed by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, and to apprehend that even a tacit acquiescence in the statements and conclusions of the Memorandum by the Russian Government may lead to future inconvenience.

He would, therefore, suggest, for Lord Derby's consideration, whether, without casting any doubts on the past or present declarations of the Russian Cabinet, the inability of Her Majesty's Government to accept the version now put forward of the negotiations of late years might not be clearly intimated, and a liberty of action in all contingencies, and in all quarters, reserved to the British Government as full as that claimed by the Government of Russia.

I am directed to add that a copy of Mr. Lister's letter, under reply, with its inclosure, will be forwarded to the Government of India for any observations which the Viceroy in Council may have to make thereon, with special reference to the responsibility sought to be imposed upon that Government in regard to the actions of the Ameer of Afghanistan, as indicated in the concluding paragraph of Prince Gortchakow's despatch.

I have, &c.

(Signed) GEORGE HAMILTON.

No. 33.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 28.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, June 23, 1875.

THE reply which was given in the House of Commons by the Hon. R. Bourke to Sir C. Dilke's question relative to the Russian expedition to Hissar having been published in the "St. Petersburgh Journal" of this morning, I took the opportunity to mention the subject to Baron Jomini, who replied that the expedition was of a scientific character, which was always the first step towards commercial advancement in an uncivilized country, and that the more the inhabitants were brought into contact with civilization, there existed a greater hope of forcing upon them the conviction that it was for their own interests and benefit to cultivate commercial relations whereby they would be enriched, than to seek by plunder and assassination an uncertain gain.

His Excellency then enlarged upon the subject of the relations between England and Russia in reference to the latter's position in Central Asia, and he argued that he saw no reason for mutual jealousy; that, on the contrary, should the two Governments act more together in the interests of general progress and civilization, it might be a means of strengthening both in their respective Eastern dominions, where a powerful antagonistic element existed in the Mussulman population, a menace to both Governments, and should at any time a leader of daring character endowed with military genius arise, much was to be feared by such an event.

Nor does his Excellency regard the possibility of the two dominions eventually becoming limitrophe, should the eventuality arise, as a reason for indulging in vague fears of hostility; that, if Russia lived at peace with her frontier reaching to Austria and Germany, why should the fact of her territory touching the borders of the British Empire in India be a reason for warfare, which no reasonable mind could accept the possibility of her being able to conquer?

No. 34.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received July 26.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, July 13, 1875.

I YESTERDAY had occasion to call upon Baron Jomini, who during our conversation adverted to the debate which had taken place in the House of Commons at Westminster on the motion of Mr. Baillie Cochrane relative to the progress of Russia in Central Asia.

His Excellency began by expressing an entire participation and accordance in the opinions and views of Her Majesty's Government as announced to the House by the Honourable R. Bourke, I might almost say approval of the speech of Her Majesty's Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

His Excellency said to me that at first a neutral zone had been talked of and proposed as a limit to the advance of both Empires, but, he added, a neutral zone is an impossibility in a territory of barbarians. Belgium, he said, can be considered a neutral country, because civilized and in a position to respect certain acknowledged international rights which are frequently entirely disregarded by the various turbulent tribes of Central Asia; that to enforce upon them a respect for the maintenance of peace often entailed on Russia a necessity of direct interference, doing away with the professions of the existence of a neutral zone, which could only be maintained in a moral sense.

But the main point of his Excellency's conversation went to show the fixed idea existing in his mind that the British and Russian Empires must eventually become limitrophe. His Excellency repeated the opinion I had the honour to recount to your Lordship in my despatch of the 23rd ultimo, that if the Empires of Russia and Austria or Germany, having a common frontier, can exist on terms of peace, why not England and Russia? And, his Excellency said, if England found it to her interests to annex Afghanistan to her Indian Empire, the Russian Government would not regard it as a menace to them, nor would they endeavour to prevent it, and that, therefore, they cannot comprehend why the future absorption of Bokhara and Khokand should raise such excitement and alarm in the minds of Englishmen.

I think that Baron Jomini viewed with satisfaction the statement that the correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and that of Russia had not led to any agreement as to the limits of a neutral zone.

I have arrived at this conviction, that many Russians, and amongst them men of political position and in Government service, entertain the full persuasion that the maintenance for any number of years of a great neutral territory between the two Empires of Russia and India is an impossibility, and that the notion must be abandoned.

I have, &c.

(Signed) W. DORIA.

No. 35.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received August 6.)

My Lord, India Office, August 5, 1875.

WITH reference to Sir Louis Mallet's letter of the 3rd May last, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, in duplicate, to be laid before the Earl of Derby, copy of a letter from the Government of India, intimating the opinion of that Government that it would be well to make known to the Russian Government the position held by them in respect to the right of stationing British troops in Khelat.

I have, &c.

(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure in No. 35.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

(Extract.) Simla, June 14, 1875.

WE have the honour to acknowledge receipt of the despatch from the Secretary in the Political and Secret Department dated 7th ultimo, on the subject of Russian advances in Central Asia.

We observe that your Lordship has suggested to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs that the right, which the British Government possesses under Treaty, of stationing troops in any part of the territory of Khelat, should be explained to Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh for his own information. We are of opinion that to prevent the possibility of future misunderstanding on this point, it would be well to make known to the Russian Government also the position which we hold in respect to the right of stationing troops in Khelat.

No. 36.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received August 9.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 3, 1875.

I ALLUDED in conversation with Baron Jomini this morning to the subject of the supposed expedition against Merv, stating that a report to that effect had reached me.

Baron Jomini's reply has led me to believe that there is no foundation whatever for the report. His Excellency spoke without reluctance or hesitation, and stated that there was no cause for, or advantage to be gained by, such an expedition. If there was, then, although they would be sorry to be disagreeable to England, "Every one for himself, and God for all;" but if they took Merv they would find themselves, on account of the marauding tribes, necessitated to make a further advance in order to curb and restrain them, and where was it to end? Moreover, he referred to the orders given by His Majesty the Emperor against any such attack on Merv. In the face of this appeal to the Emperor's command, and his Excellency's own assertions, I cannot hesitate to accept them as loyal and sincere, at all events as far as his Excellency's own faith and knowledge is pledged.

Baron Jomini further stated that the improved state of submission of the Turkoman tribes renders an attack on Merv less requisite, and he alluded to a "reconnaissance" of General Llamakin which had been satisfactory in this respect, finding a marked improvement in the submissive behaviour of the Turkomans.

I have, &c.

(Signed) W. DORIA.

No. 37.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received August 21.)

My Lord, India Office, August 21, 1875.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward, in duplicate, for the information of the Earl of Derby, copy of a letter from the Government of India, dated the 28th June last, with inclosed Report by Captain the Honourable G. C. Napier.

It will be observed that the Téké Turkomans are stated to have a Russian captive at Merv, whom they have refused to deliver up. In order, if possible, to remove all cause of collision between the Russians and those tribes, the Government of India have informed the Ameer of Cabul that it would be well for him, if he is in a position to do so, to advise the Tékés to release the Russian prisoner, and adopt a peaceful attitude towards merchants and others passing through or near their territories.

Lord Salisbury thinks that a favourable opportunity might with advantage be taken by Her Majesty's Minister at St. Petersburgh of mentioning to Prince Gortchakow this friendly act on the part of the Government of India.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 37.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Simla, June 28, 1875.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of a Memorandum drawn up by Captain the Honourable G. C. Napier, on special duty in Persia.

It will be observed that the Tékés are stated to have a Russian captive at Merv, whom they have refused to deliver up. In order, if possible, to remove all cause of collision between the Russians and the Turkomans, we have informed the Ameer of Cabul that it would be well for him, if he is in a position to do so, to advise the Tékés to release the Russian prisoner and adopt a peaceful attitude towards merchants and others passing through or near their territories. A copy of the instructions issued to the Government of the Punjab on the subject is appended for your Lordship's information.

We have, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
W. MUIR.
A. EDEN.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 37.

Captain Napier to Mr. Aitchison.

(Extract.) February 22, 1875.

LAST year a caravan proceeding (according to the Russian papers) from Khala-Ata to Petrovsk Alexandrovsk was attacked and plundered by a large body of Tékés, and a Russian soldier carried off captive to Merv, where he is still detained for ransom. Some attempts were made by the Persians to procure his release, but the matter was allowed to drop. That the Governor of Khorassan had made an offer to ransom the prisoner, I ascertained beyond a doubt from Turkomans, but the sum named was not accepted, and the attempt was not renewed. For some time, also, the Chief of Merv was in communication with Ivanoff, the Russian Commander in the Amoo Darya district, but refused to surrender the prisoner as demanded without the payment of a ransom. A threat of hostilities was met by defiance.

According to the last news I received before leaving the border, Colonel Ivanoff had renewed negotiations regarding the prisoner, and two of the Téké Aksakals, Adna Geldy Khan and Walad Khan, are at his head-quarters. The result of this will probably be the release of the prisoner.

Inclosure 3 in No. 37.

Mr. Aitchison to Mr. Thornton.

Simla, June 14, 1875.

IT will be in the recollection of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor that two years ago, when the Russian columns were concentrating on Khiva, the possibility of a collision between the Russian forces and the Turkoman tribes excited considerable anxiety in Afghanistan. A reference having been made to the subject by Syud Noor Mahomed Shah, who was then at Simla, His Excellency the Viceroy advised the Ameer in no way to countenance any opposition on the part of the Turkomans to the march of Russian troops upon Khiva.

2. Immediately after the capture of Khiva the Russian commanders inflicted severe loss upon the Khivan branch of the Yomuds. To the best of the information which the Government of India has received, there is no reason to believe that the Russians contemplate an advance on Merv or to attack the Turkoman tribes on the frontier of Afghanistan, provided the Turkomans in that neighbourhood abstain from molesting Russian subjects and committing depredations on Russian commerce.

3. The immunity of the Turkomans from attack will therefore probably depend mainly on their own conduct. If they continue to commit acts of hostility towards the Russians and to plunder peaceful and unoffending merchants, they cannot expect long to escape chastisement. It is therefore highly desirable that all proper influences should be brought to bear on them with a view to induce them to abandon the lawless and predatory habits which many among them still retain, although there appears to be some disposition on the part of a portion of the tribes to abandon those practices.

4. The Turkoman tribe against whom the loudest complaints have been made are the Tékés inhabiting Merv and the skirt of the Koppet Dagh mountains. The Government of India has learned from various sources of information that the Tékés up to a recent date had a Russian soldier in captivity at Merv. These reports have been confirmed by Captain Napier, who has lately visited the north-eastern frontier of Persia, and who was told that the Russian soldier had been carried off by a large body of Tékés in 1874, that unsuccessful efforts had been made by the Persian authorities to procure his release, and that the Turkomans when menaced by Colonel Ivanoff had paid back threats with defiance.

5. It is manifest that this circumstance may at any time afford the Russians a just cause of quarrel with the Turkomans. And as it is to the interest of the Ameer of Cabul that a contest between the Russians and the Turkoman tribes on his border should be averted, it would be well for His Highness, if he is in a position to do so, to advise the Tékés to release the Russian prisoner if he is still in their hands, and to exercise all legitimate influence to restrain the lawless and predatory habits of the Turkomans, and thereby remove any reasonable grounds for a collision between them and the Russians.

6. I am therefore to request that the British Agent at Cabul may be instructed to explain to the Ameer in general terms the present aspect of the Turkoman question. And it should be added that if His Highness can induce the Tékés to surrender their captive and to adopt a peaceful attitude towards merchants and others passing through or near their territories, it is the opinion of the Viceroy that His Highness would act wisely in using his efforts to bring about that result.

No. 38.

The Earl of Derby to Mr. Doria.

Sir, Foreign Office, August 30, 1875.

I HAVE been informed by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, that in order to avoid all cause of collision between the Russians and the Téké Turkoman tribes of Merv, the Viceroy of India has stated to the Ameer of Afghanistan that it would be well for him, if he is in a position to do so, to advise the Téké tribe to release the Russian prisoner who is said to be in their hands, and to adopt a peaceful attitude towards merchants and others passing through or near their territories.

You will take an early opportunity of mentioning to the Russian Government this friendly act on the part of the Government of India.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 39.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received September 2.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 28, 1875.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship a translation, by Mr. Michell, of an extract from the "Invalide Russe" of yesterday, reporting that Russian territory has been invaded by the insurgents of Khokand, and that a detachment of Russian troops has been sent against them.

I have, &c.
(In the absence of Mr. Doria),
(Signed) CHARLES S. SCOTT.

Inclosure in No. 39.

Substance of Statement in the "Invalide Russe" of August $\frac{15}{27}$, 1875.

THE "Invalide Russe" of the $\frac{15}{27}$th instant states that "according to telegrams of the $\frac{7}{19}$th and $\frac{9\text{th}}{21\text{st}}$ instant, General Kaufmann reports that his endeavours towards a pacific solution of the Khokand difficulty have not met with success. The Khokandians invaded our territory at several points, at Telian, Hadjent, &c. A detachment of troops was immediately dispatched against the enemy under General Golovocheff."

No. 40.

Mr. Scott to the Earl of Derby.—(Received September 6.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, August 26, 1875.

BARON JOMINI confirmed yesterday the news which appeared in the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of the 23rd instant, in regard to the insurrection in the Khanate of Khokand.

His Excellency said that although the cruel and arbitrary acts of the Khan had long since rendered such an event highly probable, the Imperial Government were much disappointed by the occurrence; they had indulged the hope that by establishing themselves in limitary neighbourhood to these small Khanates, they might have produced a salutary effect on the Khans, and carried on their civilizing efforts on the basis of a good understanding with these countries, without being obliged to disturb the existing Governments in them.

No. 41.

Mr. Scott to the Earl of Derby.—(Received September 6.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 1, 1875.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith, in French translation from the "Invalide Russe," the despatch of the Governor-General of Turkestan announcing his intention of invading Khokand, and his reasons for doing so.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CHARLES S. SCOTT.

Inclosure in No. 41.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of August 20 / September 1, 1875.

"L'INVALIDE RUSSE" publie aujourd'hui la dépêche suivante de M. l'Aide-de-camp Général Kaufmann, Gouverneur-Général du Turkestan :—

"Notre situation s'est éclaircie. Les insurgés Khokands ont envahi à plusieurs endroits le district de Kouramine, dans le but de soulever les indigènes. Leur entreprise a échoué. Leur bande principale, forte de 5,000 hommes, a été battue ; une autre bande forte de 800 hommes, est entièrement détruite ; les autres bandes ont échappé à travers les montagnes, en repassant la frontière du Khanat de Khokand.

"Les principaux efforts des insurgés étaient dirigés contre la ville de Khodjent. Ils ont attaqué, en grandes masses et de différents côtés à la fois, la ville et les jardins qui l'entourent. La garnison de Khodjent, renforcée par trois compagnies arrivées d'Oura-Tubé, a repoussé l'attaque sur tous les points et, prenant l'offensive, a poursuivi l'ennemi jusqu'à la frontière.

"On est encore sans informations sur les résultats de l'attaque des insurgés contre Oura-Tubé.

"Dans toutes nos rencontres avec l'ennemi nous n'avons eu pour ainsi dire aucune perte à déplorer.

"En ce moment je me trouve avec un détachement, en route pour Khodjent. Dans deux jours je serai dans cette ville et je me dirigerai de là sur Khokand."

No. 42.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received September 11.)

(Extract.) India Office, September 11, 1875.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, for the information of the Earl of Derby, copy of a letter from the Government of India, with inclosures having reference to the affairs of Afghanistan.

Lord Derby will observe that the Government of India are of opinion that it might be advisable to communicate to the Russian Government the intentions of the Ameer in regard to Maimena.

Inclosure 1 in No. 42.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Simla, July 26, 1875.

IN continuation of our despatch of the 5th instant, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, further papers having reference to the affairs of Afghanistan.

2. Your Lordship will observe that the intentions of the Ameer with regard to Maimena are now assuming definite form, and that measures are being adopted for the consolidation of His Highness' authority in that district.

3. As Maimena is within the Afghan boundary, as recognized by Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Russia, we see no reason to interfere with the action of His Highness.

4. We think that it might be advisable to communicate the intentions of the Ameer to the Russian Government should Her Majesty's Government see no objections to such a course.

We have, &c.

(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
W. MUIR.
A. EDEN.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 42.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Aitchison.

July 1, 1875.

SUBMITS, for information of the Supreme Government, translation of Cabul Diary from the 22nd to the 24th June, 1875, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 22nd to the 24th June, 1875, inclusive.

OWING to the persistence ("israr") of the Sadr-i-Azem at present, it has been agreed upon between His Highness the Ameer and Sadr-i-Azem, that whereas the Meer of Maimena has always maintained a correspondence with the King of Bokhara and Sirdar Abdool Rahman Khan,* both of whom are enemies of the Cabul Government, and the Meer writing in terms of disaffection enables the Sirdar to represent to the Russian Government his influence in Balkh and Turkestan (by showing the Meer's letters to his address or referring to them) and to push his interests with the Russians, these matters are a cause of serious apprehensions. For although while (or so long as) a good understanding exists between the Russian and English Governments, and so long as Russia has no grievance to urge against Afghanistan, she (Russia) has no opening for attending to, or acting on the representation of, the Meer of Maimena, or of Sirdar Abdool Rahman Khan; yet in the event, owing to accidental circumstances, of any misunderstanding arising between the Russian and Afghan Governments, then, from all points of view, the Meer of Maimena would become a very powerful agent for inflicting very heavy loss ("zarar rasani khari") on Afghanistan, and the preservation of such a thorn on one's side ("khar-i-baghul") was contrary to the dictates of wisdom.

For the extraction of this thorn a good opportunity now existed in the presence of forces at Turkestan, Herat, and Cabul, without any trouble or disturbance to occupy them.

For the present troops should be sent from Herat and Turkestan to Maimena in view to its subjugation ("taskhir"). Accordingly, secret letters have been sent to the Governors of Turkestan and Herat, with stringent orders to hold their troops in readiness and await further instructions, and the son of the Meer of Maimena, who arrived in Cabul with the son of Mama Rahim Khan, the chief notable of Maimena, will be detained with his companion for the present.

No. 43.

The Earl of Derby to Mr. Doria.

Sir, Foreign Office, September 15, 1875.

WITH reference to Lord A. Loftus' despatch of the 30th March last, I transmit to you a copy of a despatch from the Indian Government,† expressing an opinion that it is desirable that no doubt should rest with the Russian Government as to the right of the British Government to station troops in any part of the territory of the Khan of Khelat.

I inclose, for your information, a copy of the Treaty between the British Government and the Chief of Khelat, securing this right to England, and I have to instruct you to take an opportunity of mentioning this matter to the Russian Government; but you will not fail to accompany your statement by an explanation that Her Majesty's Government have no intention of using their right unless a necessity for it arises.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

* Son of Mahomed Afzul Khan, and residing at Samarcand.

† No. 35.

Inclosure in No. 43.

Extract from Treaty of May 14, 1854.

Treaty between the British Government and Nusseer Khan, Chief of Khelat, concluded on the part of the British Government by Major John Jacob, C.B., in virtue of full powers granted by the Most Noble the Marquis of Dalhousie, K.T. &c., Governor-General of India, and by Meer Nusseer Khan, Chief of Khelat.

ARTICLE IV.

SHOULD it be deemed necessary to station British troops in any part of the territory of Khelat, they shall occupy such positions as may be thought advisable by the British authorities.

No. 44.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received September 20.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 7, 1875.

THIS morning's edition of the "St. Petersburgh Journal" publishes a letter taken from the "Moscow Gazette" with reference to the scientific and military expedition to explore the ancient bed of the Amu-Daria, and it describes the submission of the Akhal Téké tribe, the chiefs of which sent a deputation to General Llamakin announcing their submission and the surrender of the Russian Yomoud prisoners.

The most complete resignation to Russian authority appears to be established.

I have the honour to inclose a copy of the extract for your Lordship's information.

I have, &c.

(Signed) W. DORIA.

Inclosure in No. 44.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of $\frac{\text{August } 26}{\text{September } 7}$, 1875.

ON sait que l'expédition scientifique et militaire envoyée pour explorer l'ancien lit de l'Amou-Daria, connu sous le nom d'Onzboï, avait eu pour résultat indirect l'établissement de relations amicales avec la tribu guerrière d'Akhal-Téké. Une lettre que publie la "Gazette de Moscou" donne les détails suivants sur cet épisode, qui n'est pas dénué d'une certaine importance.

L'approche de la colonne du Général Llamakin produisit une vive émotion sur la tribu d'Akhal-Téké. Les Chefs se réunirent pour délibérer à Hok-Tépé, résidence des quatre Khans qui gouvernent la tribu. La délibération aboutit à l'envoi de députés au Général Llamakin pour lui annoncer la soumission complète des Tékiens et pour rendre les Yemoudes Russes faits prisonniers par l'Akhal-Téké. On décida encore d'interdire sous peine de mort le pillage des caravanes Russes et en général les hostilités contre les sujets Russes, et de choisir 100 ferrosches chargés de veiller à l'exécution de ce qui venait d'être résolu.

Peu de temps après les Khans et les Chefs d'Akhal-Téké arrivèrent au camp du Général Llamakin et l'un d'eux adressa au Général la locution suivante:—

"Nous sommes entourés par les Merwiens, les Khiviens, les Afghans, les Persans. Tous ont cherché à nous soumettre à leur pouvoir. Notre indépendance ne saurait durer. Sans attendre notre asservissement par la voie des armes, nous avons résolu volontairement notre soumission au plus puissant de nos voisins, qui saura garantir notre sécurité. Depuis ce jour nous sommes les serviteurs de l'Ak Padischah (Tsar Blanc) et nous sommes prêts à remplir tous vos désirs. Nous sommes familiarisés avec la guerre. Dites un mot et nous mettrons à votre service 5,000 cavaliers. En échange nous vous prions de soumettre à l'Ak-Padischah l'humble prière de notre peuple de bien vouloir lui confirmer la jouissance des libertés et immunités reconnues par les diplômes de Tamerlan et de Nadir-Schah."

Depuis lors, ajoute le correspondant de la "Gazette de Moscou," ont commencé nos relations commerciales avec les Tékiens, et le calme le plus complet règne dans les steppes des parages qu'ils occupent.

No. 45.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received September 20.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 9, 1875.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship, extracted from the "Invalide Russe," the following transcript of a telegram from General Kaufmann, addressed to His Majesty the Emperor on the 25th ultimo, which appeared in the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" this morning.

The telegram narrates the events of the battle of Mahram, in which the enemy were entirely defeated, consisting of 30,000 men of the Khokand bands.

General Kaufmann states that he awaits the arrival of troops dispatched from Khodjent, and will then march against the town of Khokand.

I have, &c.
(Signed) W. DORIA.

Inclosure in No. 45.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of August 27 and 28 / September 8 and 9, 1875.

LE Commandant-en-chef des troupes de la circonscription militaire du Turkestan, M. l'Aide-de-camp Général Kaufmann, annonce ce qui suit, dit "l'Invalide Russe," par un télégramme adressé à Sa Majesté l'Empereur, sous la date du 25 Août:—

"A notre seconde étape de Khodjent, notre détachement a fait la rencontre de la cavalerie ennemie, au nombre de 7,000 hommes, avec des coulevrines. Les Cosaques commandés par le Colonel Skobélew, Aide-de-camp de votre Majesté, et forts de huit sotnias avec quatre pièces d'artillerie à cheval et une batterie de fuséens, ont tenu tête à l'ennemi pendant toute la journée, sans pertes de notre côté.

"Le 22 Août Dieu a accordé sa bénédiction à nos armes. Les troupes, que je commandais en personne, ont remporté une victoire complète et décisive sur les bandes Khokandes, fortes de 30,000 hommes. L'ennemi occupait une position fortifiée ayant pour point d'appui la forteresse de Mahram. La position était entourée d'un fossé rempli d'eau et soutenue par de l'artillerie. L'attaque de la position a été conduite par le Lieutenant-Général Golovatchew, à la tête de l'artillerie et d'une partie de l'infanterie. La position a été emportée à l'arme blanche. Le Commandant de la cavalerie, Colonel Skobélew, Aide-de-camp de votre Majesté, a achevé la déroute des bandes Khokandes en poursuivant vivement l'ennemi sur une distance de quinze verstes. Il l'a acculé à la Rivière Daria, où un grand nombre de Khokands ont été noyés ou taillés en pièces.

"Le Général-Major Trotsky, de la suite de votre Majesté, a été mon principal adjoint dans notre brillante campagne et dans la bataille d'hier.

"Nos trophées se composent de trente-neuf pièces d'artillerie, d'une multitude de coulevrines et autres armes, du munitions de guerre et de vivres.

"Nos pertes sont les suivantes: un officier supérieur, cinq soldats et un djighite tués; un officier supérieur et sept soldats blessés.

"Une défaite complète a été infligée à l'ennemi. L'impression produite dans le Khanat par ce combat est immense, mais on ne saurait encore apprécier toutes les conséquences de la bataille de Mahram. J'attendrai les transports envoyés de Khodjent et quand ils seront arrivés je marcherai sur la ville de Khokand.

"Les troupes de votre Majesté se sont conduites avec vaillance, d'une manière brillante, et l'affaire a été menée lestement."

No. 46.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received September 20.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 15, 1875.

THE inclosed extract which I have the honour to forward to your Lordship appeared in the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg," this morning.

It is taken from the official "Gazette" of Turkestan, and gives information as to events at Khokand. The article speaks of the advance of Russian troops against Khokand bands, and of the arrival of the deposed ruler, Khodajar Khan, at Tashkend.

I have, &c.
(Signed) W. DORIA.

Inclosure in No. 46.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of September $\frac{3}{15}$, 1875.

NOUS trouvons dans le dernier numéro de la Gazette (officielle) du Turkestan les renseignements suivants sur les événements du Khokand :—

"Les bandes Khokandes ont passé notre frontière et leur présence a été signalée dans la partie est du district de Kouramine, limitrophe du Khanat de Khokand. Dans la nuit du 7 Août le Maire d'Ablyk fit savoir qu'une bande nombreuse s'était approchée du kischlak (village) d'Ablyk, et que l'on avait aperçu dans les montagnes une autre bande de cavaliers venant du Khokand. A la réception de cette nouvelle, venue à 5 heures du matin, le Lieutenant-Général Golovatchew se dirigea de Taschkent sur Tilaou avec quatre sotnias de Cosaques et un détachement d'artillerie. A 8 heures du matin le 2e Bataillon de Chasseurs se mettait aussi en marche, suivi à 4 heures du soir par le 1er Bataillon de Chasseurs. Le 2e bataillon opéra sa jonction avec les troupes du Lieutenant-Général Golovatchew au kischlak de Kandjigaly (à 15 verstes de Tilaou). Les bandes qui avaient passé notre frontière s'étaient divisées en quatre détachements.

"Les forces ennemies se réunissent dans les possessions Khokandes, non loin de nos frontières, à Mahram et sur le Bisch-Aryk, et l'on fortifie la ville de Khokand.

"Le Khan déposé, Khoudoïar, arriva avec toute sa suite à Taschkent le 8 Août et fit le même jour une visite au Gouverneur-Général, qui la lui rendit le lendemain.

"Le 11 Août on reçut à Taschkent un rapport du Lieutenant-Général Golovatchew annonçant que nos troupes ont battu une bande Khokande forte de 5,000 hommes et qui avait envahi nos frontières en descendant des montagnes dans la vallée d'Angren. L'ennemi avait pris la fuite et repassé la frontière. Il était poursuivi par les Cosaques. Nous n'avons point eu de pertes dans cet engagement."

No. 47.

The Earl of Derby to Mr. Doria.

(Extract.) Foreign Office, September 20, 1875.

I TRANSMIT to you, for your information, a copy of a letter from the Indian Government,* from which you will perceive that the Ameer of Afghanistan contemplates sending a force for the subjugation of Maimena, a province which lies within his dominions; and I have to instruct you to communicate this information to the Russian Government.

No. 48.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 4.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 18, 1875.

AS instructed by your Lordship in your despatch of the 30th ultimo, I took the opportunity to mention to Baron Jomini that the Viceroy of India had counselled the Ameer of Afghanistan to proffer to the Téké tribe the advice to release the Russian prisoner who is said to be in their hands.

Baron Jomini evinced a lively satisfaction at the communication, and asked if I could favour him with a copy of your Lordship's despatch, as he wished to send it to-morrow to the Emperor, who has left St. Petersburgh for the Crimea. "His Imperial Majesty," his Excellency added, "will be gratified at the friendly act, and if he were present I should not ask for a copy of the despatch."

Baron Jomini remarked upon the word "prisoner" being in the singular, stating there were several. I replied it was perhaps by inadvertence that an "s" had been omitted.

I hope under these circumstances that your Lordship will not disapprove my having complied with his Excellency's request.

I have, &c.
(Signed) W. DORIA.

---

* Inclosure in No. 42.

No. 49.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 4.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 24, 1875.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship an extract from the "Petersburgh Journal" of the 17th instant, giving details of events after the battle of Mahram.

Khan Yadé Nassereddin Beg, the new Ruler of Khokand, had gone to meet General Kaufmann, giving assurances of "his devotion and submission" to the Emperor Alexander.

I have, &c.
(Signed) W. DORIA.

Inclosure in No. 49.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of September $\frac{5}{17}$, 1875.

"L'INVALIDE RUSSE" publie aujourd'hui, 4 Septembre, la communication suivante :—

"Des télégrammes du Commandant-en-chef de la circonscription militaire du Turkestan, datés du 2 et 3 Septembre, annoncent qu'après la bataille de Mahram nos relations avec le Khokand ont pris une tournure pacifique. Au mouvement en avant de nos troupes le nouveau Khan du Khokand, Khan-Zadé, est venu à la rencontre de l'Aide-de-camp Général Kaufmann, en faisant des protestations de soumission et de dévouement à Sa Majesté l'Empereur, et en protestant de sa complète innocence quant à l'invasion des bandes Khokandes dans les possessions Russes.

"Les habitants de la ville de Khokand ont aussi fait leur soumission et leur exemple a été immédiatement suivi par le Sultan Mourad-Bek et les habitants de la ville de Margolan.

"Arrivées sous les murs de Khokand, nos troupes y ont établi un camp, où elles se trouvaient à la date des dernières nouvelles. L'état sanitaire des troupes est bon.

"Le 31 Août le Commandant-en-chef de nos troupes a reçu d'Abdourahman-Avtobatchi une lettre déclarant qu'après la victoire remportée par les Russes sur les Musulmans, l'auteur de la lettre et les Représentants de toutes les tribus nomades du Khokand demandent qu'on leur accorde la sécurité dont jouissent les habitants de la ville de Khokand et de tout le territoire traversé par les troupes Russes depuis Mahram jusqu'à la ville de Khokand. A cette lettre sont apposés soixante-dix sceaux, tenant lieu des signatures."

No. 50.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 4.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 27, 1875.

I TOOK the opportunity this evening to communicate to Baron Jomini the substance of your Lordship's despatch of the 20th instant, relative to the intention of the Ameer of Afghanistan to send a force to subjugate Maimena. In carrying out your Lordship's instructions, I took care to mark that your Lordship desired it to be understood that the communication was made solely to denote a friendly transmission of intelligence.

Baron Jomini acknowledged it as such, and replied that the British Government were in no wise called upon to convey this information, but that he appreciated the communication which prevented also the intelligence being received and giving rise to suspicion or surmise. His Excellency further remarked that Russia had ceded her pretensions to Maimena in behalf of the Ameer of Afghanistan at England's instance, that it bordered close on Turkestan, but no objection could be made so long as the Ameer loyally kept his action to enforcing the tranquillity of Maimena.

I have, &c.
(Signed) W. DORIA.

No. 51.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 18.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 6, 1875.

BARON JOMINI read to me a paragraph from a despatch from Krasnovodsk, in which it was stated that the Ameer of Afghanistan was said to be intriguing and exciting ill-feeling among the Turkoman tribes near Merv, which, his Excellency added, is very desirous should be avoided; and he reverted to the communication which, in pursuance of an instruction from your Lordship I had recently made to his Excellency, of the friendly advice proffered by the Government of India to the Ameer of Afghanistan; the despatch was written from Krasnovodsk on the 24th July last, to which Baron Jomini made reference.

I promised to acquaint your Lordship without delay with the circumstance as reported.

I have, &c.
(Signed) W. DORIA.

No. 52.

Mr. Doria to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 18.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 13, 1875.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship a copy of General Kaufmann's Proclamation issued to the people of Khokand, published in the "St. Petersburgh Journal" this morning. The Proclamation calls upon the people to remain peaceably occupying themselves in business, then they will have nothing to fear from Russia. The concluding paragraph states that the ex-Khan, Khodaijir Khan, has been sent to St. Petersburgh, and will not return to be their Ruler.

I have, &c.
(Signed) W. DORIA.

P.S.—Baron Jomini has informed me that Khodaijir Khan, the deposed Ruler of Khokand, is by the Emperor's command to remain at Orenburg, and not to be brought to St. Petersburgh.

W. D.

Inclosure in No. 52.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of October $\frac{1}{13}$, 1875.

DANS une correspondance du camp Russe devant la forteresse Khokande de Mahram, datée du 25 Août, et insérée dans la "Voix," nous trouvons le texte suivant de la Proclamation de son Excellence l'Aide-de-camp Général Kaufmann aux populations du Khanat de Khokand :—

"Peuple Khokand, Sartes, Kiptchaks, Kara-Kirghizes, et tous les ci-devant sujets de Khoudoïar Khan!

"Quelques ambitieux dont je tairai les noms vous ont provoqués à une guerre religeuse ('hazivat') contre les Russes. Ce 'hazivat' n'a pas de sens. Une guerre contre le Tsar Blanc, dispensateur de la paix et de la prospérité de tous les peuples soumis à son pouvoir, est une iniquité, et Dieu sera toujours contre ceux qui prennent les armes contre les Russes. Demandez aux Sartes, aux Kirghizes, sujets du grand Tsar Blanc, s'ils se sentent tranquilles et heureux sous l'égide de sa gracieuse protection. Demandez-leur si on les empêche de prier selon la loi d'Islam. Moi, qui suis revêtu des pleins-pouvoirs du Tsar Blanc, et qui gouverne par son ordre les populations du Turkestan, je puis vous affirmer que nos Sartes et nos Khirghizes prospèrent, s'enrichissent et jouissent d'une paix et d'une sécurité complètes. Le grand Tsar Blanc ne viole jamais le schariat, son Gouvernement est basé sur la justice et la loi.

"Quant à vos ambitieux, qui vous ont poussés à une guerre contre les Russes, ils l'ont fait, non pour votre bien, mais uniquement pour se saisir du pouvoir. Pour le mal qu'ils vous ont fait, vous devez vous saisir de leurs personnes et me les livrer. Je suis venu chez vous avec mes troupes pour punir ceux qui vous ont excités à une guerre contre les Russes. Les armées Russes ne font pas de mal aux gens désarmés, mais ceux qui seront trouvés les armes à la main seront punis par mes ordres. Déposez donc les armes, retournez dans vos foyers pour vous occuper de vos affaires, et alors aucun Russe ne vous fera de mal, ne touchera à votre bien ; pour tout ce qui sera nécessaires aux troupes et ce qu'elles vous prendront, vous serez payés en argent. Telle est notre loi à nous, Russes ; les armées du grand Tsar Blanc n'en agissent jamais autrement.

"Votre ancien Khan a été envoyé, par mes ordres, de Taschkent à Pétersbourg; il ne redeviendra plus votre Souverain, car il m'est connu que Khoudoïar Khan n'avait pas l'affection du peuple Khokand.

"Le Gouverneur-Général et Commandant-en-chef des Troupes,
"Aide-de-camp Général, (Signé) "KAUFMANN.

"Bivouac de Mahram, le 22 Août, 1875."

No. 53.

The Earl of Derby to Mr. Doria.

Sir,, Foreign Office, October 20, 1875.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 18th September, I have to state to you that I approve of your having furnished Baron Jomini with a copy of my despatch of the 30th August, in which I directed you to take an opportunity of acquainting the Russian Government with the nature of the advice which the Viceroy of India had counselled the Ameer of Afghanistan to proffer to the Téké Turkoman tribe as regards the Russian prisoner in their hands, and their attitude towards travellers through their territories.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 54.

The Earl of Derby to Mr. Doria.

Sir, Foreign Office, October 25, 1875.

I TRANSMIT to you herewith a copy of a despatch from Prince Gortchakow,* which has been communicated to me by the Russian Ambassador, declaring the intention of the Emperor of Russia not to extend the frontiers of Russia beyond their present limits in Central Asia, either on the side of Bokhara or on that of Krasnovodsk and the Attrek, and inclosing a Memorandum reviewing the correspondence which has passed on the subject of Central Asia between the British and Russian Governments.

Her Majesty's Government highly appreciate the friendly sentiments which have dictated the language used in Prince Gorkchakow's despatch and in the Memorandum, and they feel that they cannot better reply to them than by a frank explanation of certain of the more important portions of the correspondence adverted to upon which it would appear that the views and intentions of Her Majesty's Government have been imperfectly appreciated.

With this object I inclose a Memorandum, which I have to instruct you to communicate to the Russian Government, in the same friendly manner in which the Memorandum forwarded by Prince Gortchakow was communicated to Her Majesty's Government, and to explain, in doing so, that the remarks contained in it are not offered in any spirit of controversy, but in the cordial desire to meet the evident wish of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia that no cause for misapprehension should exist in regard to the policy and intentions of the two Governments.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

---

* No. 29.

Inclosure in No. 54.

Memorandum.

HER Majesty's Government have given their careful consideration to the Memorandum on Russian policy in Central Asia, which formed the inclosure to Prince Gortchakow's despatch to Count Schouvaloff of the 11th May last.

In thus presenting for examination an historical review of the communications which have passed between the Governments of Russia and England, and in reviewing a statement of their sentiments and policy on this important question, Her Majesty's Government gladly recognize the desire of the Imperial Government to avert cause of future misunderstanding by a friendly interchange of views.

Her Majesty's Government feel that they will best respond to the wishes of the Imperial Government in addressing to them this communication, by calling attention to certain statements and passages in the Memorandum which appear to Her Majesty's Government not to correspond with their appreciation of past transactions, or with the understanding which it is alike the interest of both Governments to keep in view.

In these observations Her Majesty's Government desire to avoid all reference to points of minor importance, and will confine themselves to those questions upon which it is obviously necessary that no obscurity or misapprehension should be allowed to exist on either side.

The Memorandum refers to an agreement of opinion between the Chancellor of the Empire and Lord Clarendon, on the occasion of their interview at Heidelberg in 1869, "founded on the maintenance by Russia and England of an intermediary zone," destined to separate their Asiatic possessions; adding that in "this order of ideas it was understood that Afghanistan should form an independent State which should remain outside the sphere of Russian action.

The interview in question took place after confidential communications between Lord Clarendon and Baron Brunnow, at that time Russian Ambassador in London, on the same subject.

It apears from the correspondence which took place at this period, that the "intermediary" zone, then under consideration, was intended on both sides to be at the same time a "neutral" zone; and from this point of view, Lord Clarendon distinctly informed Baron Brunnow, in April 1869, while thanking the Russian Government for the friendly feelings which had dictated the communication, that, in the opinion of the Secretary of State for India, "Afghanistan would not fulfil those conditions of a neutral territory which it was the object of the two Governments to establish, as the frontiers were ill-defined; and if the Russian forces advanced to those frontiers, disputes with the Chiefs on the border would sooner or later, but infallibly, ensue, and Russia might be compelled, however unwillingly, to disregard the arrangement she had entered into; and it was, therefore, thought advisable to propose that the Upper Oxus, which was south of Bokhara, should be the boundary line, which neither Power should permit their forces to cross. This would leave a large tract of country apparently desert, and marked on the map as belonging to the Khan of Khiva, between Afghanistan and the territory already acquired by Russia, and, if agreed to, would, it might be hoped, remove all fear of future dissension.

This proposal, as is correctly stated in the Memorandum, was declined by the Imperial Government, on the ground that it gave an extension to the frontiers of Afghanistan, which they could not admit; and this negative answer put an end to the confidential communications between the Russian Ambassador and Lord Clarendon, on the question of a "neutral zone."

But the Memorandum goes on to say that, after being definitively closed in London, this question was reopened at St. Petersburgh by Mr. Forsyth, on the occasion of his visit in 1869, and that, as a result of the exchange of views between that functionary and the Imperial Cabinet, it was "agreed:"—

1. That the territories in the actual possession of Shere Ali should be considered as forming the limits of Afghanistan.

2. That the Ameer should not seek to exercise any influence or any interference beyond those limits, and that the English Government should use every means to restrain him from any aggressive attempt.

3. That on its side the Imperial Government would employ all its influence to restrain the Ameer of Bokhara from making any attack on Afghan territory.

On this statement Her Majesty's Government think it desirable to remark that whatever may have been the nature of the personal communications between Mr. Forsyth and the Imperial Cabinet, it formed no part of his instructions to reopen the question of a "neutral zone," nor does it appear that in the general agreement of opinion under the three heads cited above was this question in any way involved.

So far as Her Majesty's Government are concerned, the idea of a "neutral zone" was definitively abandoned at the time of Lord Clarendon's communication in April 1869, as one which, upon close examination, had been found to be wholly incompatible with the object which both Governments alike had in view throughout these discussions.

The discussions which took place in the succeeding years as to the delimitation of the frontiers of Afghanistan happily terminated by the "full and entire" adhesion of the Imperial Cabinet in their despatch of the 19th January, 1873, to the line of demarcation proposed by Lord Granville in his despatch of October 1872, had exclusive reference to the recognition of Afghanistan as an independent State which should remain external to the action of Russia.

Her Majesty's Government insisted on including Badakshan and Wakhan within the limits of Afghanistan, because such delimitation was, in their view, strictly in accordance with historical facts, and, therefore, necessary, in order to satisfy the legitimate claims of the Ameer.

Her Majesty's Government have always cordially acknowledged the friendly and conciliatory course taken by the Imperial Cabinet in accepting the views thus set forth by Great Britain, and in thus removing, it is hoped, the only remaining obstacle to a complete understanding between the two Governments with respect to the position of Afghanistan. But it is apparent from the résumé of the agreement given at the close of the Memorandum, and the paragraphs which follow, that the Imperial Cabinet is of opinion that in arriving at an understanding with respect to Afghanistan, the common policy of the two Governments has been completely fulfilled, and that it is a part of such understanding that entire liberty of action is left to Russia in all the territories lying between her own frontier and that of Afghanistan.

It is with reference to this opinion that it is essential that the views of Her Majesty's Government should be clearly explained.

The point of departure of the two Governments in exchanging their views was the mutual desire to arrive at some common understanding as to the best means of preventing the contact of their respective possessions in Central Asia.

Various combinations were proposed and discussed with this object,—the creation of a neutral zone, the delimitation of frontiers, the recognition of the Oxus as a line which neither Power should permit their forces to cross, the maintenance of Afghanistan and Bokhara as independent States, the former under British, and the latter under Russian influence.

This last combination, as represented in the Memorandum under consideration, appears to be the only form of an arrangement with regard to which any definite understanding has been found practicable, and Her Majesty's Government have always fully appreciated the conciliatory spirit in which this question has been approached by the Russian Government.

But it is obvious that the settlement made with respect to Afghanistan can only partially effect the object which the two Governments desired to attain, namely, that of averting possible causes of future collision between them.

Her Majesty's Government fully accept the assurances of the Imperial Cabinet as to the extension of the southern frontiers of Russian territory; but they equally admit the force of the arguments which have been advanced to explain the repeated annexations which, in spite of these assurances, have taken place.

However sincere, therefore, the desire of the Russian Government to avoid future extension of territorial responsibilities, Her Majesty's Government cannot regard the present line of Russian frontier as fixed and immovable. The recurrence of similar causes may lead to similar results, and Her Majesty's Government could not regard with indifference, and as a matter with which they have no concern, further occupation and absorption by Russia of the regions which still separate Afghanistan from the Russian territory.

The grounds of the apprehensions entertained by Her Majesty's Government on this subject have been so fully stated on former occasions, that it is only necessary now to refer to previous communications, and particularly to Lord Granville's despatch to Lord A. Loftus of the 7th January, 1874, which discusses them at length.

Whatever may be the ultimate destiny of Russia in the course of its civilizing mission in Central Asia, it is impossible not to see that, in view of the present conditions of the Turkoman tribes, of the relations in which they stand to the Ruler of Afghanistan on the one hand, and those between that Ruler and the Government of India on the other, that each successive advance of the Russian frontier towards Afghanistan may involve complications which it is equally the interest of both England and Russia to avoid, and may raise up the most serious obstacles to the continued pursuance of the policy which has hitherto guided both Powers alike to maintain intact the integrity of Afghan territory.

This is an object to which Her Majesty's Government attach the highest importance, and they must reserve to themselves the most complete liberty of action under all future contingencies as to the measures which may, in their opinion, be necessary to secure it. They cannot but feel that such an event, for instance, as the occupation of Merv, which would bring the line of Russian territory into direct contact with Afghan territory, would arouse the susceptibilities of the Ameer to the highest degree, and possibly involve him in a common course of defensive action with the Turkoman tribes upon his borders. Under such circumstances it is unnecessary to observe how difficult it might be for the Imperial Government to maintain a policy of strict abstention in accordance with its present assurances, or how impossible it might be for Her Majesty's Government to exert any effectual control over the actions of the Ameer, without undertaking responsibilities which they would most reluctantly assume, and which would virtually involve the very result which both Governments desire to avert, viz., the contact of the two Powers in Central Asia.

Whatever may be the desire of both Governments to act in concert in bringing the agencies of civilization to bear upon the wild and predatory races of the regions which separate their dominions, the time has not arrived when such a co-operation could be made intelligible to the rulers and people of the Khanates.

The presence of two centres of European power and influence in their midst would wear in their eyes an aspect of mutual menace and rivalry, and encourage hopes and speculations unfavourable to the growth of the relations between England and Russia which are an important condition of success in the task on which both are engaged, each in their separate sphere, of maintaining order and promoting civilization in their Asiatic possessions.

Nor can it be denied that the atmosphere of suspicion, intrigue, and discord which would surround the military authorities of both Powers, might at any time provoke an attitude of reciprocal distrust which might frustrate the wishes, and defeat the deliberate policy, of their respective Governments, and react perniciously on the public opinion of Russia on the one hand, and of England and India on the other.

It is for these reasons that Her Majesty's Government have always deprecated the further extension of Russian territory towards the Afghan borders, and that they have now received with the most sincere satisfaction the assurances conveyed in Prince Gortchakow's despatch as to the enlightened conviction of His Imperial Majesty that such extension, either on the side of Bokhara, of Krasnovodsk, or of the Attrek, is contrary to Russian interests, and that formal orders have been given that all future action in those regions is to be strictly confined to the defence of existing limits and the protection of property and commerce from pillage and brigandage.

No. 55.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received November 1.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 27, 1875.

BARON JOMINI informed me yesterday that the Government had received intelligence of the deposition by his subjects of Nasr Eddin, the Khan of Khokand, lately installed by the Russian Governor-General of Turkestan, and that he had fled with a few followers to Chodjent.

Baron Jomini added that the previous Khan had carried off with him a large amount of treasure, but that Nasr Eddin had reached Chodjent without property of any kind.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 56.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received November 15.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, November 9, 1875.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt, on the 1st instant, of your Lordship's despatch of the 25th ultimo, transmitting copy of a despatch from Prince Gortchakow, accompanied by a Memorandum, reviewing the correspondence which has passed on the subject of Central Asia between the British and Russian Governments, which had been communicated to your Lordship by the Russian Ambassador.

On the following day I waited on Baron Jomini, when I read to him your Lordship's despatch, and placed in his hands, in conformity with your Lordship's instructions, a copy of the Memorandum in reply to the Memorandum communicated to your Lordship by Count Schouvaloff. In doing so I fully explained to his Excellency that Her Majesty's Government highly appreciated the friendly sentiments expressed in Prince Gortchakow's despatch and in the Russian Memorandum, and that the remarks in the Memorandum which I placed in his hands were not offered in any spirit of controversy, but with a cordial desire to meet the wish of His Imperial Majesty, that no cause for misapprehensions should exist in regard to the policy and intentions of the two Governments.

Baron Jomini expressed his appreciation of the conciliatory and courteous sentiments contained in your Lordship's despatch, and observed that by this frank and friendly exchange of opinions the interests of both countries could best be served.

In order that his Excellency might accurately convey to the Emperor the sentiments expressed in your Lordship's despatch I left that despatch in his hands.

Baron Jomini informed me yesterday that, on reading the Memorandum I had placed in his hands, he was happy to observe that all points which might give rise to sterile discussion had been omitted, and he again expressed his great satisfaction at the friendly tone and the conciliatory spirit in which the sentiments of Her Majesty's Government had been conveyed.

Baron Jomini stated that he had forwarded a copy of your Lordship's despatch, and of the Memorandum, to the Emperor at Livadia, and awaited His Majesty's orders in regard to the reply, which will be communicated to your Lordship by Count Schouvaloff, and the draft of which he had submitted to His Majesty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 57.

Lord G. Hamilton to Lord Tenterden.—(Received November 19.)

My Lord, India Office, November 18, 1875.

IN continuation of this Office letter of the 21st August last, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, for the information of the Earl of Derby, copy of a letter from the Government of India, having reference to the relations between the Ameer of Afghanistan and the Téké Turkomans, and to efforts made by the Ameer to procure the release of a Russian captive at Merv.

I have, &c.
(Signed) GEORGE HAMILTON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 57.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Simla, September 30, 1875.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of the papers containing the sentiments of the Cabul Government on the Turkoman question, and an expression of their intention to offer, as far as may be practicable, advice to the Téké tribe to abstain from depredations.

2. We also inclose an extract from the Cabul Diary of the $\frac{10th}{13th}$ September, from which it will be seen that an effort has been made by the Ameer to procure the release of the Russian captive at Merv through the mediation of Jewish emissaries from Herat.

We have, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
W. MUIR.
A. EDEN.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 57.

Mr. Thornton to Mr. Aitchison.

Lahore, July 17, 1875.

IN continuation of my letter dated 9th July, I am desired to forward, for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, translation of a letter received from the British Agent at Cabul, who had communicated to his Highness the Ameer the purport of the despatch addressed to the Agent on the Turkoman question.

Inclosure 3 in No. 57.

The Agent at Cabul to the Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawur Division.

(Translation.) July 5, 1875.

I COMMUNICATED to the Ameer in presence of the Sadr-i-Azem, the abstract of your letter dated 22nd June, 1875, to me, and his Highness observed that he would give a reply after deliberation. He, however, remarked that "in reality the Turkomans are bad characters and a tribe wanting in faith. When the son of Kousheed Khan (Chief of Merv, Shahjehan) waited on me, I exhorted and advised him not to stand against the Russians." A reply in this matter will follow as soon as it is obtained.

Inclosure 4 in No. 57.

The Agent at Cabul to the Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawur Division.

(Translation.) July 29, 1875.

WITH reference to your letter dated 22nd June, 1875, to my address, in the matter of the Turkoman tribe, the Sadr-i-Azem observed to-day, by order of the Ameer, as follows:—

"The lawless character and depredations of the Turkomans of Merv, Shahjehan, &c., are as evident as daylight; consequently, with regard to the consequences of the short-sightedness of these people, the Governor of Herat has permanently deputed about 500 or 600 sowars to Ghorian to guard travellers, &c. Now also, through respect to the friendship existing between the British and the Cabul Governments, the Cabul authorities will advise and exhort them, as far as possible (to desist from misbehaviour)."

I submit this letter in the Persian language, after perusal by the Ameer and the Sadr-i-Azem.

Inclosure 5 in No. 57.

Extract from Cabul Diary, dated September 10–13, 1875.

AS the British Government desired the Cabul Durbar to take steps for the release of a Russian officer imprisoned in Merv, Shahjehan, the Mustowfee (at Herat) has, under orders, sent some Jews to that place to make arrangements for the above object. None but Jews can go to that country through fear of being sold into slavery.*

No. 58.

Lord G. Hamilton to Lord Tenterden.—(Received November 22.)

My Lord, India Office, November 20, 1875.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to forward, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copy of a despatch from the Government of India, dated the 14th October, 1875, with inclosed Cabul Diaries.

I have, &c.

(Signed) GEORGE HAMILTON.

---

* This paragraph refers to paragraph 5 of No. 1728 P., dated 14th June, 1875, from Foreign Office to Secretary to Government, Punjab. Instead of "a Russian officer" "a Russian soldier" should be understood.
(Signed) F. R. POLLOCK, Commissioner.

Inclosure 1 in No. 58.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Simla, October 14, 1875.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, further papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We have, &c.

(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
W. MUIR.
A. EDEN.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 58.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Aitchison.

September 1, 1875.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 24th to the 26th August, 1875, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 24th to the 26th August, 1875, inclusive.

The day before yesterday the Ameer summoned the Agent to the private serai (Seracha-khas, meaning a private apartment) and observed that Naib Mahomed Alum Khan had written to His Highness that a Mahommedan, by name Aishan Khwaja, Samarcandi, had, as a Russian Envoy, crossed the Oxus with a murrasila from the Russians to His Highness, and had, before obtaining permission, proceeded to Balkh, with a view to coming to Cabul. Also that His Highness wrote to the Naib that should the above Mahommedan Envoy have already arrived (at Balkh) with the murrasila above-mentioned, he should be sent to Cabul; that the Envoy will probably arrive at Mazar-i-Sharif in a day or two, and that the Naib has camped at Aibak to receive him suitably and to take accounts from Afghan officials at that place.

Inclosure 3 in No. 58.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Aitchison.

September 6, 1875.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 27th to the 30th August, 1875, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 27th to the 30th August, 1875, inclusive.

Yesterday the Ameer received a letter from Aibak from Naib Mahomed Alum Khan to the following effect:—

"Aishan Khwaja, Buzurg Samarcandi,* the Russian Envoy, has arrived at Mazar-i-Shareef with three or four servants, and by the grace of God will reach Aibak in two or three days. As directed by you, I will send him to Cabul in an honourable manner. The object of his deputation has not yet become known to me, but a messenger sent by me to obtain news in Samarcand has returned, and states that it was rumoured at that place that this Envoy had been appointed to recover a fugitive of Samarcand. I do not think this statement correct. However, when the Envoy waits on you, his object will become known to your Highness."

---

* Lit., an elder in Samarcand.

Inclosure 4 in No. 58.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Aitchison.

September 8, 1875.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 31st August to the 2nd September, 1875, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 31*st August to the* 2*nd September*, 1875, inclusive.

The day before yesterday the Ameer received a letter, dated the 26th August, 1875, from Aibak, from Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, to the effect that on the 4th August, 1875, the Russian Envoy, Aishan Khwaja, Buzurg Samarcandi, reached Aibak, and after halting one day with the Naib, left on the morning of the 26th idem for Cabul; that the Naib has appointed an Agent to escort and entertain him as far as the Balkh border, and that His Highness should kindly arrange for his being escorted thence to Cabul. In compliance with this request the Ameer deputed Mahomed Aslum Khan, late Kotwal of Cabul, to bring the Envoy. The latter will reach Cabul in two or three days.

Inclosure 5 in No. 58.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Aitchison.

September 13, 1875.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 3rd to the 6th September, 1875, inclusive

---

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 3*rd to the* 6*th September*, 1875, inclusive.

Yesterday Aishan Khwaja, Buzurg Samarcandi, the Russian Envoy, arrived at Cabul with four or five servants.

A house in the Bagh-i-Shahi has been assigned for his residence, and cooked food is given him from the Ameer's own kitchen. Mahomed Aslum Khan, who was sent to bring him, is deputed to entertain him. No official was sent to meet him (meaning on his near approach, no "istiqbal"). Yesterday in the afternoon he was summoned by the Sadr-i-Azem, and he went and delivered the murrasila of the Russian Governor (at Tashkend) to address of the Ameer. He stopped only four or five minutes with the Sadr-i-Azem and then returned. The Sadr-i-Azem took the murrasila to the Ameer, and His Highness gave it to the (English) Agent for perusal. Its contents are as follows:—

"I (the Governor-General) remained for about one and a-half years at St. Petersburgh to settle some matters. Two letters were received from your Highness at that place. In one you announced the appointment of Sirdar Abdoola Khan as your heir apparent, and we were highly gratified. The friendship existing between Russia and Afghanistan will increase and become firm owing to the recent alliance between England and Russia, and I hope that the countries under the protection of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor and Her Majesty the Queen will enjoy peace and comfort."

The Envoy has not yet waited on the Ameer, probably he will do so to-morrow or the day after. An account of his interview, together with a copy of the murrasila, will follow.

Inclosure 6 in No. 58.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Aitchison.

September 15, 1875.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 7th to the 9th instant, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 7*th to the* 9*th September*, 1875, inclusive.

Yesterday Aishan Khwaja, Buzurg Samarcandi, the Russian Envoy, waited on the Ameer in the private small serai for about ten minutes only. It is reported that no conversation except formal inquiry after the health of the heads of the two Governments (viz., Afghanistan and Russia) took place. The Envoy then returned (to the Bagh-i-Shahi). The British Agent obtained in Durbar a copy (herewith inclosed) of the murrasila made in his presence (meaning that he can vouch for its literal and exact correctness) which the Envoy has brought for the Ameer in reply to His Highness' two murrasilas dated the 6th Zilhij, 1290, copies of which were forwarded with Diary of the 29th January, 1874. As regards the paragraph of this murrasila commencing with "Murawidah-i-dosti fimaben," and ending with "Khush guzran Mekunand,"* the Cabul authorities observe privately as follows:—

"This time the Russian Government has made itself partner in the protection of Afghanistan. This paragraph is of a new tone. God knows what State secrets are concealed in it."

Translation of the Murrasila from General von Kaufmann,† Governor-General and Commander-in-chief of Turkestan, to the Ameer, dated 8th Jamadi-ul-Sani (July 12, 1875.)

(After titles, compliments, &c.)

By order of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor, I stopped for about one half-year at St. Petersburgh to settle some matters of this country (viz., Russian Turkestan). Now by command of him (the Emperor) I have returned to Tashkend, and consider it advisable (lit. a friendly trouble) to inform your Highness of my arrival. During my sojourn at St. Petersburgh I was gratified with the receipt of two friendly communications from you. In one of these murrasilas you mentioned the appointment of one of your sons, Sirdar Abdoolla Khan, as your heir-apparent. I hope that the [A] chain of friendship existing between Russia and Afghanistan will in future increase and become firm, owing to the recent alliance between the Emperor of Russia and the Queen of England. This (alliance) has tended to the fulfilment of the best wishes of the two families, and I doubt not that this alliance of the two Powers will be an omen (lit., a mark or sign) for those countries (the people of) which under the protection of the Emperor of Russia and the Queen of England live in great peace and comfort. [B] May God save you for the sake of your dignity and the comfort of (your) people! And may you live long and enjoy happiness!

Inclosure 7 in No. 58.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Aitchison.

September 20, 1875.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 10th to the 13th September, 1875, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 10th to the 13th September, 1875, inclusive.

Aishan Khwaja, Buzurg Samarcandi, requested the Durbar authorities to permit him to return without delay to Tashkend. The Ameer, therefore, directed the Sadr-i-Azem to prepare the draft of a friendly murrasila in reply to the one received from the Governor-General at Tashkend, so that the above Envoy may be allowed to go back as soon as possible. The Sadr-i-Azem submitted a draft to-day, but His Highness ordered him to think over its tone, &c., for one or two days, and then write a fair copy and make it over to the Envoy. In reply to a query by the Ameer in the first interview, the Envoy said that it was given out in Tashkend that 40,000 troops had been deputed from Russia to Russian Turkestan.

No. 59.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, November 29, 1875.

I TRANSMIT to your Lordship a copy of a letter from the Government of India having reference to the relations between the Ameer of Afghanistan and the Téké Turko-

* In translation I have marked this paragraph between A. and B.—(Signed) F. R. POLLOCK, Commissioner.

† The actual title used, "adio tant," is not understood here.—(Signed) F. R. POLLOCK, Commissioner.

mans;* and I have to instruct your Excellency to communicate to the Russian Government that portion of the letter which reports the efforts made by the Ameer to procure the release of the Russian captive at Merv.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 60.

Lord G. Hamilton to Lord Tenterden.—(Received January 7.)

My Lord, India Office, January 6, 1876.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, for the information of the Earl of Derby, copy of a letter from the Government of India, with inclosures, relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) GEORGE HAMILTON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 60.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Fort William, November 19, 1875.

IN continuation of our despatch dated 14th October, 1875, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We have, &c.
(Signed) H. W. NORMAN.
ARTHUR HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.

Inclosure 2 in No. 60.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Aitchison.

September 27, 1875.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 17th to the 20th September, 1875, inclusive.

Extracts from Cabul Diary from the 17th to the 20th September, 1875, inclusive.

A copy of the murrasila which the Ameer has given to the Russian Envoy to address of the Governor-General at Tashkend is herewith submitted. The Envoy received the following khillut, and having obtained the Ameer's permission, left to-day for his destination in presence of the British Agent:—

The Envoy—
1. One Umritsur abra choga.
2. One Cashmere shawl.
3. One Yurgha horse.
4. Cash, 500 rupees.

His four servants—
1. Four broad-cloth chogas.
2. Four Peshawuree embroidered lungis.

Mahomed Aslum Khan (mentioned in diary of 2nd instant) has accompanied him to escort him as far as Balkh. From Balkh to Bokhara, Naib Mahomed Alum Khan will depute an agent for escort. In reply to inquiry, the Envoy said at the time of his departure (from Cabul), that when he left Tashkend, a Russian officer left with some troops for

* Inclosure in No. 57.

Ghulcha (Kuldja), with a view to attacking Kashgar and Yarkand for the purpose of annexing them to Russian territory. Also that the majority of the 40,000 persons given out as coming (or about to come) from Russia to Tashkend are Russian subjects desiring to dwell in Russian Turkestan, and others are Russian troops.

The Ameer to General von Kaufmann.

(Abstract Translation.) September 19, 1875.

I received your friendly letter of 8th Jamadi-ul-Sani, in reply to my two murasilas by hand of your Envoy Aishan Khwaja Bazurg, and was highly gratified with its contents, from which it appeared that you had returned from St. Petersburgh to Tashkend, and in which you gave happy news of the confirmation of the friendship existing between Afghanistan and Russia. By the grace of God nothing contrary to the said friendship shall take place on my part, and the dispatch of friendly communications should be considered one of the principles of our friendship. I am gratified with the news contained in the last paragraph of your letter regarding the confirmation of the alliance of the (two) Great Powers (viz., Russia and England), as this alliance will increase the comfort and security of the creatures of God "Khalk-ula." Continue to afford me happiness by giving information as to your health, &c.

No. 61.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received February 7.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, February 2, 1876.

I HAVE the honour to inclose an article from the "Invalide Russe," giving an account of the late operations of the Russian army in Khokand under the command of General Skobeleff.

Since the publication of this information, telegraphic intelligence has been received that Andijan has been taken by General Skobeleff.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 61.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of January $\frac{12}{24}$, 1876.

"L'INVALIDE RUSSE" publie les renseignements suivants sur les opérations de notre détachement de Namangan (Asie Centrale) :—

"Le Commandant-en-chef du corps d'opérations au Khanat de Khokand, en laissant un corps détaché dans la section de Namangan, nouvellement annexée à l'Empire, prévoyait que l'ordre ne pourrait être définitivement et solidement rétabli dans notre nouvelle province frontière que quand les forces des Kiptchaks, qui forment l'élément prédominant de la population du Khanat, seraient brisées, vu que les Kiptchaks, malgré toute une série de défaites qui leur avaient été infligés pendant la dernière expédition au Khokand, continuaient à terroriser le reste de la population et à l'exciter à une guerre religieuse ('hazavat') contre nous.

"En présence de ces faits, l'Aide-de-camp Général de Kaufmann, en quittant la section militaire de Namangan, avait laissé au Général-Major Skobélew, Commandant de détachement de Namangan, des instructions lui prescrivant de se mettre en marche vers la fin de Décembre, avec une partie de son détachement, vers la contrée d'Eki-Sou-Arassy, située entre les rivières Naryn et Kara-Daria, centre de la population Kiptchake, afin d'infliger à ces nomades une sévère punition, et cela à une époque de l'année où ils sont forcés de rester avec leurs biens et leurs familles dans leurs campements d'hiver, ne pouvant pas alors se réfugier dans les montagnes, couverts de neiges profondes. Après cette opération, notre détachement devait tomber sur Andidjan ou tout autre centre des forces ennemies, détruire celles-ci ou les disperser, et fournir ainsi au reste de la population la possibilité de rentrer dans le calme dont on l'avait fait sortir par la violence.

"D'après des télégrammes qu'on vient de recevoir, la première partie de ce programme a été remplie avec un grand succès. Le 25 Décembre, le Général-Major Skobélew quitta Namangan à la tête de 2,800 hommes, et traversant le Naryn, arriva le 27 sur la Kara-

Daria. De ce point il envoya la colonne du Baron Meller Zokomelsky reconnaître la rive gauche. Pendant cette reconnaissance, il éclata une fusillade dans l'un des villages. Les nouvelles arrivées au détachement indiquaient que l'ennemi s'était concentré en masses très-considérables à Marghelan et Andidjan. Le 28 le détachement du Général-Major Skobélew continua sa marche, en remontant la Kara-Daria, et rasa les villages abandonnés par les habitants. Des bandes de l'avant-garde ennemie commencèrent bientôt à se montrer aux environs de la rivière et sur nos lignes de communications, et à mesure que nos troupes avançaient les Kiptchaks se repliaient sur Andidjan, où venait aussi se concentrer les rassemblements de Marghelan.

"Les trois derniers jours du mois de Décembre, il faisait des froids de 15 degrés R., mais nos troupes continuaient vaillamment leur marche, n'ayant en tout que cinq malades. Les tentes de feutre dont on s'était muni ont considérablement contribué à ce résultat favorable. En route, on rasait toutes les habitations qu'on rencontrait. Païtok, centre principal de la population Kiptchake, fut détruite de fond en comble. De ce point, on détacha une forte colonne dans les villages des montagnes.

"Se voyant menacée d'une ruine complète, une partie de la population Kiptchake commença à envoyer des députations pour demander grâce. Le Général-Major Skobélew promit d'épargner les Kiptchaks si, pour prouver leur entière et sincère soumission, ils lui livraient les instigateurs du 'hazavat.'

"Le 31 Décembre et le 1er Janvier notre cavalerie atteignit une bande de Kiptchaks en retraite, la mit en déroute et poursuivit les fuyards, qui perdirent beaucoup de monde, jusqu'au village de Yanghi-Sabaka. Après avoir nettoyé la rive droite de la Kara-Daria, le Général-Major Skobélew passa le fleuve à gué le 2 Janvier, à la hauteur de Sarhab, et s'établit dans un camp fortifié sur la rive gauche, en ordonnant de jeter un pont sur le canal ('aryk') de Moussoulman-Koul. Pendant la reconnaissance qui suivit, l'ennemi reçut nos troupes à coups de fusil. Dans cet engagement, l'Enseigne de Cosaques, Boïalsky, fut blessé à la poitrine. Tous les villages qui ont fait leur soumission et ont commencé à payer la contribution dont on les a frappés ont été épargnés par nos troupes.

"A Andidjan, où vient de se rendre Abdourahman-Avtobatchi, qui excite à la resistance toute la population des alentours, se trouvent concentrées des forces très-considérables, montant, d'après des renseignements dignes de foi, à 10,000 cavaliers, 5,000 sarbazes, et 15,000 habitants armés de fusils, Le Général-Major Skobélew, pensant que repasser le Naryn sans avoir dispersé ces rassemblements et infligé une punition exemplaire à la ville d'Andidjan serait un acte de nature à ébranler notre prestige et à compromettre les résultats déjà acquis, a décidé, si ses Proclamations n'avaient pas d'effet, de prendre la ville d'Andidjan de vive force. Il se proposait de commencer le bombardement le 3 Janvier.

"La santé et l'esprit des troupes sont excellents."

No. 62.

Prince Gortchakow to Count Schouvaloff.—(Communicated to the Earl of Derby by Count Schouvaloff, February 25.)

St. Pétersbourg, le $\frac{3}{15}$ Février, 1876.

SA Majesté l'Empereur a pris connaissance avec un vif intérêt du Mémorandum accompagnant une dépêche de Lord Derby, dont Lord A. Loftus a donné lecture en mon absence au Gérant du Ministère Impérial.

Je joins ci-près copie de cette pièce qui sert de réponse à la notice que votre Excellence avait été chargé de communiquer au Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique en date du 11 Mai, 1875, concernant les relations des deux Gouvernements dans l'Asie Centrale.

Notre auguste Maître y a relevé avec satisfaction le désir amical de prévenir par de franches explications toute cause de malentendu entre les deux Cabinets. Sa Majesté apprécie également la largeur de vues avec laquelle Lord Derby écarte les discussions de détail et les restrictions que ne comportent point l'état mal défini des contrées sur lesquelles les deux Gouvernements ont à exercer leur influence.

Veuillez dire à son Excellence, d'ordre de notre auguste Maître, que nous adhérons entièrement aux conclusions d'après lesquelles, en maintenant de part et d'autre, l'arrangement convenu, quant aux limites de l'Afghanistan qui demeurerait en dehors de la sphère d'action de la Russie, les deux Cabinets considéreraient comme closes les discussions reconnues peu pratiques relativement à la zone intermédiaire, tout en conservant leur pleine liberté d'actions, ils se régleraient d'après le désir mutuel de tenir un juste compte de leurs intérêts et de leurs nécessités respectives, en évitant dans la mesure du possible un contact immédiat entre eux ainsi que des collisions entre les Etats Asiates placés dans le rayon de leur influence.

Nous avons la conviction qu'en se maintenant sur ce terrain et en s'inspirant d'un esprit d'équité et de bon vouloir réciproque, les deux Cabinets réussiront à consolider entre eux les relations amicales si heureusement établies au profit de la paix générale en Europe et en Asie.

Votre Excellence peut réitérer à Lord Derby l'assurance qu'il peut compter dans ce but sur notre franche coopération.

Agréez, &c.

(Translation.)

St. Petersburgh, February $\frac{3}{15}$, 1876.

HIS Majesty the Emperor has learned with much interest the contents of the Memorandum accompanying a despatch from Lord Derby, which Lord A. Loftus read, in my absence, to the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs.

I inclose herewith a copy of this document, which is a reply to the Memorandum dated the 11th May, 1875, which your Excellency was instructed to communicate to the Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty regarding the relations of the two Governments in Central Asia.

Our august Master has learnt with satisfaction the friendly desire, therein expressed, to prevent, by frank explanations, any cause of misunderstanding between the two Cabinets. His Majesty appreciates likewise the breadth of view with which Lord Derby puts on one side discussions of detail and restrictions which are inapplicable in view of the ill-defined condition of the countries over which the two Governments have to exercise their influence.

Have the goodness to inform his Excellency, by order of our august Master, that we entirely agree in the conclusion that, while maintaining, on either side, the arrangement come to as regards the limits of Afghanistan, which is to remain outside the sphere of Russian action, the two Cabinets should regard as terminated the discussions relative to the intermediate zone, which have been recognized as unpractical; that, while retaining entire freedom of action, they should be guided by a mutual desire to pay due regard to their respective interests and necessities, by avoiding, as far as possible, any immediate contact with each other, and any collisions between the Asiatic States placed within the circle of their influence.

We are convinced that by keeping to this principle, and cultivating feelings of equity and reciprocal goodwill, the two Cabinets will succeed in consolidating the friendly relations so happily established between them, for the advantage of the general peace in Europe and Asia.

Your Excellency can renew to Lord Derby the assurance that he may reckon on our frank co-operation for this purpose.

Accept, &c.

No. 63.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

(Extract.) Foreign Office, February 29, 1876.

THE Russian Ambassador called upon me on the 25th instant, and alluded to a report, to which I understood from him that General Kaufmann had given credence, to the effect that the British authorities in India had furnished the Ameer of Kashgar with military instructors, had aided him in drilling and disciplining a considerable force, and had also supplied him with large amounts of arms and ammunition.

A few hours after this interview I met Lord Salisbury, and I learned from him, what had already been my own impression, that the report in question was entirely unfounded, that no military instructors had been sent to Kashgar from India, nor had any arms been supplied at any time, except a few armes de luxe sent as a present for the personal use of the Chief.

I lost no time in forwarding this information to Count Schouvaloff, and I pointed out that it illustrated the way in which reports are spread about by the natives in those countries either with the view of making mischief or from mere idle love of gossip.

No. 64.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received March 20.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, March 15, 1876.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship a notification published in the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" from the "Official Gazette," stating that on the report of the Commander-in-chief of the military district of Turkestan, His Majesty the Emperor had decreed that the territory recently occupied by the Russian troops, and forming, up to the year 1875, the Khanate of Khokand, shall be incorporated in the Russian Empire, and converted into the Province of Fergan.

The Governor-General of Turkestan is charged to organize the administration of this province, by means of a provisional arrangements as was introduced in the section, of Zeravschansk and the Amou-Daria.

This arrangement will be later submitted to the supreme sanction of the Emperor.

Inclosure in No. 64.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of March $\frac{2}{14}$, 1876.

LE 19 Février, sur un rapport du Commandant-en-chef des troupes de la circonscription militaire du Turkestan, Sa Majesté l'Empereur a daigné ordonner les dispositions suivantes :—

Le territoire récemment occupé par les troupes Russes et formant jusqu'à l'année 1875 le Khanat de Khokand sera incorporé dans l'Empire et converti en Province de Fergan.

Le Gouverneur-Général du Turkestan est chargé d'en organiser l'administration, en tenant compte des conditions locales, au moyen d'un règlement provisoire à l'instar de celui introduit dans les sections de Zeravschansk et d'Amou-Daria. Ce règlement sera soumis en son temps à la sanction suprême. Les dépenses de cette nouvelle province seront couvertes par les recettes qu'on percevra des populations, et comptabitité en sera réglée sur les mêmes bases que dans les sections d'Amou-Daria, Kouldja et Zeravschansk.

No. 65.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received April 3.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, March 27, 1876.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 15th instant, I have now the honour to inclose to your Lordship a copy of the Imperial Ukase addressed to the Senate, as published by the "Official Gazette," annexing the Khanate of Khokand to the Imperial Dominions under the title of the Province of Ferghanah.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 65.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of March $\frac{6}{18}$, 1876.

UKASE DE SA MAJESTÉ L'EMPEREUR AU SÉNAT DIRIGEANT.—En vue d'assurer la sécurité de la frontière sud-est du Turkestan, nous avons jugé opportun d'incorporer à l'Empire le territoire récemment occupé par nos troupes et constituant jusqu'à l'année 1875 le Khanat du Khokand. Nous ordonnons de le réorganiser en Province de Ferganah, qui fera partie du Gouvernement général et de la circonscription militaire du Turkestan. En conséquence la haute administration de cette nouvelle province sera confié au Gouverneur-Général du Turkestan et l'administration locale à un Gouverneur militaire, qui sera en même temps investi du commandement des troupes cantonnées dans cette province.

Le Gouverneur-Général du Turkestan est chargé d'organiser l'administration spéciale de cette province en tenant compte des circonstances du moment et des conditions locales, au moyen d'un règlement provisoire qui sera sanctionné dans les voies ordinaires.

No. 66.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received April 27.)

My Lord, India Office, April 27, 1876.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, for the information of the Earl of Derby, copy of a letter from the Government of India, with inclosures, relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 66.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Fort William, March 10, 1876.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We have, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
W. MUIR.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.

Inclosure 2 in No. 66.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Thornton.

February 7, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 28th to the 31st January, 1876, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 28th to the 31st January, 1876, inclusive.

A messenger of the King of Bokhara lately brought a murrasila from the Russian Governor-General (in Central Asia) in reply to one forwarded by the Ameer on 19th September, 1875 (see Cabul Diary of 20th September, 1875), and a copy of the same is inclosed.

Abstract Translation of Murrasila, dated 27th October, 1875, from General von Kaufmann, Governor-General of Russian Turkestan and Commander-in-chief, to the Ameer.

Your friendly murrasila of 19th September, 1875, reached me at Khojend. You must have heard that three months before its arrival I had been deputed by the Emperor with troops to quell the disturbances raised in Khokand. These disturbances took place on 1st Rajab (3rd August, 1875), and Khudayar Khan, the Ruler, having fled (from Khokand) took refuge in Russian Turkestan. I was obliged to proceed against Khokand with troops. I defeated Kipchak, Kirghiz, and Khokand rebels near the Fort of Makhram, and took possession of the Khokand city (where no fighting took place), and appointed the eldest son of Khudayar Khan, viz., Nasrudin Beg, to the Chiefship. His Chiefship was previously accepted by Moollas and other people, but they subsequently forced him to become an enemy of the Russian Government. Having entered into negotiations with him, I returned to Namangan viâ the right bank of the Sir, and to avoid future difficulties posted some troops there. After a few days I was informed that disturbances had again been raised in Khokand, and that the young Chief had taken flight to our territory. Now

I have posted troops at Namangan and other frontier cities of Khokand, and have quelled the disturbances and afforded comfort to the people.

Through real friendship I have given you an account of the Khokand expedition. I hope that the chain of friendship existing between Russia and Afghanistan will daily increase and remain always firm. I desire your health and safety. May your success increase in all your affairs and actions.

Inclosure 3 in No. 66.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Thornton.

February 25, 1876.

FORWARDS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 18th to the 21st instant, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 18th to the 21st February, 1876, inclusive.

The day before yesterday the Ameer received a letter from Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, stating that formerly he was informed that an Agent of the Russian Government was on his way to wait on His Highness, but that he went back from the Oxus. Also that one Mirza Karim, Samarcandi, has now reached Mazar-i-Sharif with two sowars as a Russian Envoy, and that the Naib has written to Abdool Rashid Khan (Mustowfee of Turkestan) to detain him honourably at the above place. The Ameer has written to the Naib that should the Envoy have reached Mazar-i-Sharif, he should be forwarded to Cabul in an honourable and hospitable manner.

In continuation of the above, the Ameer received another letter to-day from the Naib to the following effect:—

"The particulars of my previous letter are as follows:—A man forwarded by the Russians arrived as far as the Oxus, but without my permission our people prevented him from coming to us. He went back; as soon as I received information I deputed an Agent to bring him, but though he went as far as Samarcand, he did not meet him. The Governor of Samarcand sent one Mirza Karim with a letter to my address to effect that a friendly murrasila (referred to in Diary of 31st January, 1876) was forwarded by the Russian Governor-General to your Highness, but that the bearer, who appeared a stupid man, returned with it from the Oxus, and that it was then transmitted through a messenger of the King of Bokhara. Also that as my above Agent had reached Samarcand, the Governor had been pleased to depute the Mirza to me with a complimentary murrasila. I have summoned the Mirza to Maimena."

The Ameer directed the Naib to send the Mirza back with a complimentary letter on his own side, and to grant him a khillut, and that he should not be sent to Cabul as had been ordered before.

No. 67.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received April 29.)

India Office, April 29, 1876.

THE Under-Secretary of State for India presents his compliments to the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and forwards herewith, for Lord Derby's information, two copies of a letter from the Government of India relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

Inclosure 1 in No. 67.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Fort William, April 7, 1876.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We have, &c.

(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
W. MUIR.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 67.

Mr. Griffin to Mr. Thornton.

Lahore, March 20, 1876.

IN compliance with your letter dated 2nd instant, I am desired to forward copy of the murrasila addressed by the Ameer of Cabul to the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan.

2. An English translation of the murrasila is also forwarded.

Inclosure 3 in No. 67.

The Ameer of Cabul to General Kaufmann.

(Translation.) 6th Mohurram 1293 Hijree (February 3, 1876.)

YOUR friendly letter of the 27th October, 1875, corresponding with the 9th Shawal 1292 Hijree, giving an account of subjugation of Khokand, reached me in good time on the 28th Zi Hij, 1292 Hijree (26th January, 1876), and I have noted its contents, which tend to promote friendship. The narrative given by you of the mustering of Kipchak and Kirghiz tribes and Khokandis, of the appointment of Nasar-ud-din, son of Khudayar Khan (Chief) of Khokand, of his falling into difficulties and taking refuge under the mighty power of Russia, and of your deputing an army towards Namangan and the frontier of Khokand, and thereby restoring peace among the Russian subjects, &c., has impressed my heart. I strongly hope that if God pleases, nothing will interfere with the progress of friendship between Russia and Afghanistan.

The favour of your continuing to write to me about your good health is requested.

No 68.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received May 17.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, May 12, 1876.

I AM happy to report to your Lordship that the speech of the Prime Minister on Mr. Baillie Cochrane's motion in the House of Commons has given great satisfaction here, not only in the official circles, but also generally among all classes.

I have the honour to inclose to your Lordship an article published in this morning's "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" from the "Moscow Gazette" (the organ of the Russian press which has hitherto been the least favourably disposed towards England in regard to the affairs of Central Asia), in which, after stating that the frank and firm reply of Mr. Disraeli places the two countries in the position conformable to their dignity, their greatness, and to their mutual interests, it hails with satisfaction the statement that the good understanding between the two Governments had never been more complete than at the present moment.

It further continues to observe that the mutual concord and confidence of the Great Powers had never been more decisive for the peace of Europe, and it terminates by stating that, in the midst of the general concord, the mutual confidence between England and Russia was an element of decisive value.

I met General Kaufmann yesterday at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, and he expressed to me the pleasure with which he had read Mr. Disraeli's speech, and he expressed a hope that England and Russia would act cordially together in Central Asia for their mutual welfare, and for the advancement of civilization.

General Kaufmann informed me that he was on the eve of returning to Tashkend, to resume the duties of Governor-General of Turkestan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 68.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of $\frac{\text{April 30}}{\text{May 12}}$, 1876.

Les Journaux Russes.—Dans son numéro de Dimanche, 25 Avril, la "Gazette de Moscow" consacre quelques réflexions à l'interpellation de M. Cochrane sur les affaires de l'Asie Centrale et aux explications données à ce sujet par le Premier Ministre Britannique.

Depuis deux ans, dit notre confrère, cette question de l'Asie Centrale, qui était jadis pour les antagonistes de la Russie l'éternel objet d'alarmes et de suspicions, a bien changé d'aspect. Le public Anglais a acquis la conviction que les démarches diplomatiques auxquelles le Gouvernement Britannique se voyait amené antérieurement, sous la pression des alarmistes et des Russophobes, ne servaient au fond qu'à tenir en éveil l'opinion publique contre des dangers imaginaires et à entretenir les suspicions mutuelles. Mais depuis un certain temps les publicistes Anglais ont pris à tâche de prouver que l'Angleterre est trop Puissante aux Indes pour avoir à redouter quelque chose du côté de la Russie et que si sur le territoire Britannique il existe des points insuffisamment protégés, la défense doit en être renforcée militairement et non garantie par voie de Traités.

De là aux explications données par M. Disraeli il n'y avait qu'un pas; maintenant on peut considérer les contestations diplomatiques au sujet de l'Asie Centrale comme ayant définitivement pris fin, et il convient de dire à l'honneur de l'Angleterre que c'est à son libre vouloir et à sa sage modération que nous devons ce résultat. La réponse franche et ferme de M. Disraeli replace de nouveau les deux pays dans la situation mutuelle la plus conforme à leur dignité, à leur grandeur, et aux intérêts de chacun d'eux. Le Chef du Cabinet Britannique dit qu'il ne craint pas la Russie, laquelle, elle non plus, n'avait pas interprété dans le sens d'une menace les explications données au Parlement à l'occasion des débats sur le titre de la Reine. (Nos lecteurs se souviendront, dit à ce sujet la "Gazette de Moscou," que nous ne nous étions pas mépris en son temps sur la portée des explications de M. Disraeli.) Le Ministre a dit ensuite que la Russie connaît la ferme intention de l'Angleterre de maintenir sa domination aux Indes et son influence en Orient et que la Russie ne considérait pas cette politique comme étant incompatible avec une bonne entente entre les deux Etats; ce qui nous paraît le plus remarquable dans le discours du Ministre, ce sont les paroles suivantes:—

"Loin de m'alarmer des progrès de la puissance Russe dans l'Asie Centrale, je ne vois pas de raison pour que la Russie ne conquière point la Tartarie quand l'Angleterre a conquis les Indes. Je désire seulement que le peuple de la Tartarie retire autant d'avantages de la conquête Russe que le peuple Hindou en a retirés de la conquête Anglaise."

Ces paroles ne sont rien d'autre que la vérité; il y a longtemps que nous avions dit la même chose et beaucoup de feuilles Anglaises s'étaient ralliées à notre appréciation. Mais du moment que le Gouvernement Anglais s'associe franchement à cette manière de voir, toutes les objections disparaissent comme d'elles-mêmes.

Les explications données par le Premier Ministre Britannique sont d'une grande portée à un autre point de vue encore. Dans les derniers temps d'aucuns laissaient entendre que, s'il n'existait pas une cause directe qui pût motiver un conflit entre l'Angleterre et la Russie en Asie, ce conflit pourrait naître par suite de dissentiment des Gouvernements des deux pays par rapport aux affaires d'Europe. Nous n'examinerons pas si cette opinion peut être fondée; nous en doutons, mais en l'admettant même comme telle, nous avons tout lieu de tirer des paroles de M. Disraeli la conclusion qu'aucun désaccord ne règne à cette heure entre la Russie et l'Angleterre au sujet des questions politiques qui préoccupent l'Europe.

M. Disraeli nous apprend en effet que "la bonne entente entre les deux Gouverne-ments n'a jamais été aussi complète qu'en ce moment." Nous saluons cette déclaration avec d'autant plus de joie que ces jours-ci encore il circulait des rumeurs alarmantes au sujet de la tournure que prenaient les événements d'Orient et que les antagonistes de la Russie s'en prévalaient pour élever de nouvelles accusations contre la politique Russe. . . . Jamais la concorde et la confiance mutuelle entre les Grandes Puissances n'ont été aussi décisives pour la paix de l'Europe qu'elles le sont aujourd'hui. La révolte dans les provinces Turques est loin d'être calmée; le sang ne cesse de couler dans l'Herzégovine; à Belgrade comme à Bucharest il se produit simultanément des changements de Ministère dont la signification ne saurait être préjugée. Mais il n'y a pas de raison sérieuse de douter que toutes ces graves difficultés ne s'aplanissent sans conflagration tant que se maintiendront les liens de confiance qui unissent les Grandes Puissances, et, au milieu de la concorde générale, la confiance mutuelle entre la Russie et l'Angleterre est un élément d'une valeur décisive.

No. 69.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received August 25.)

My Lord, India Office, August 25, 1876.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to forward, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copy of a letter from the Government of India, with inclosed Cabul Diaries from the 23rd May to the 22nd June, inclusive.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 69.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Simla, July 17, 1876.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We have, &c.
(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
W. MUIR.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 69.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Thornton.

June 6, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from 30th May to 1st June, 1876, inclusive.

Extracts from Cabul Diary from 30th May to 1st June, 1876, inclusive.

The day before yesterday a letter was received from Naib Mahomed Alam Khan stating that a communication had reached him from Mirza Abdul Karim, a servant of the Governor of Samarcand, from Daulatabad, the other side of the Oxus, to the effect that he (the Mirza) is in possession of a murrasila from the Russian Governor-General in Turkestan to address of the Ameer, that he wishes to proceed to Cabul, but that the Superintendent at the ferry prevents him from doing so. The Naib has sent Colonel Ahmed Khan from Akcha to bring the Mirza to him. Yesterday the Ameer received another letter from the Naib, dated Sar-bagh, the 26th May, 1876, reporting the arrival of the Mirza with the murrasila above alluded to, and stating that he (the Naib) is bringing him to Cabul, and that the letter of the Governor of Samarcand to the Naib has been submitted in original to His Highness.

The Ameer at once deputed the Naib's agent, the Wakiludaula, to tell him (the Naib) that he should bring the Mirza with suitable honour as far as Kharzar, and that thence an agent of the Mir Munshi will escort him to Cabul. The Mir Munshi's agent has left for Kharzar. The Ameer summoned the British Agent and showed him the letter of the Governor of Samarcand to the Naib. Its purport is that the Russian Government with regard to Afghanistan aims at nothing but friendship; that Mirza Abdul Karim has left with a murrasila from the Russian Governor-General to the Ameer, and that the Naib should appoint an agent to escort him (the Mirza) to Cabul.

Inclosure 3 in No. 69.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Thornton.

June 19, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 9th to 12th instant, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from 9th to 12th June, 1876, inclusive.

On the 9th instant Mirza Abdul Karim, the bearer of the murrasila of the Russian Governor-General, arrived at Cabul with the agent of the Mir Munshi, who, as reported in Diary of 1st instant, was sent to bring him. He has put up in the house of Sardar Mahomed Yusaf Khan. The Darbar appointed no official, &c., to meet him on the road. He receives cooked food from the Ameer's kitchen. To-day he waited on the Ameer through Sardar Mahomed Yusaf Khan and delivered the murrasila to His Highness, and after a formal interview of about half an hour returned to the Sardar's house. The British Agent has not yet read the murrasila, but it is reported that it is merely a complimentary one conveying information of the fall of Khokand. God willing, a copy of it will be submitted by next post.

Inclosure 4 in No. 69.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Thornton.

June 22, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from 13th to 15th June, 1876, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from 13th to 15th June, 1876, inclusive.

A copy of the murrasila of the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan received by the Ameer by hand of Mirza Abdul Karim Khan has been obtained from the Darbar, and is herewith inclosed.*

Inclosure 5 in No. 69.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Thornton.

(Confidential.) Abbottabad, June 26, 1876.

I HAVE the honour to submit herewith in original copy received from the Cabul Agent of the letter without date, except as to month, addressed by the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan to His Highness the Ameer of Afghanistan, and referred to in the last submitted Cabul Diary from the 13th to the 15th instant.

2. A translation accompanies the letter and gives, I believe, fairly the meaning of the writer, but the sentences were so involved that I found unusual difficulty in translating them.

* Translation will follow; it is lengthy; requires very careful translation. A copy of it shall be sent as well as translation. It relates entirely to Khokand. (Signed) F. R. POLLOCK.

3. A copy of the letter and of the translation is being submitted by this post to Secretary to Government, Punjab.

Inclosure 6 in No. 69.

General Kaufmann to Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

(Translation.)

YOUR Highness may have heard that some time ago (lit. in these days) some evil-disposed persons persuaded (lit. commanded) the people of Khokand with a view to gaining their (own) object, and considered it advantageous to endeavour to promote the same (object), and that consequently in the territory of Khokand several sad and dangerous (mohlik) occurrences took place.

My Lord (lit. Oh exalted Dignity !) I have considered it useless to give a full detailed account of these (occurrences) in this despatch, but it is most important to communicate them (to you), otherwise it would be contrary to the friendship existing between Russia and Afghanistan (lit. also the contents of this letter would have been somewhat repugnant). Consequently I have deemed it incumbent on me to give in this murrasila, in continuation of previous murrasilas, a brief account of the occurrences in Khokand and of the manner in which they terminated.

Last year in the month of "Ayeeul," corresponding with Jamadiul Sani, the people of Kipchak and Kirghiz tribes instigated and persuaded the people of Khokand to revolt, and their Sardars (headmen) Isa Aulia, Abdul Rahman Aftabchi, and other conceited persons, adopted measures against their (Khokandis) lawful Khan and expelled him from his country towards our dominions to seek shelter. At that time our agents armed with good offices had gone to the people of Khokand, and the Khan took refuge and came with them (the agents) to our territory.

As soon as Khuda Yah Khan reached here, an agent of the head of the rebels arrived at Tashkend from Khokand with all speed with a letter to the Governor-General (meaning General von Kaufmann), stating that all the people (in Khokand) had rebelled against Khuda Yar Khan in consequence of his oppression and deviation from the (Mahommedan) law, and had driven him from their country, and that they had desired Nasiruddin Khan, the legitimate heir to the Chiefship, to become their Khan. * * * General von Kaufmann most kindly accorded his consent (to their proposal) and sent a letter to the new Khan, Nasiruddin Khan, to effect that His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia was prepared to agree to his Khanship ; but his agreement depended on the fulfilment of certain engagements of the people of Khokand, though it was understood that those engagements did not differ from the (contents of the) Treaty with Khuda Yar Khan.

The Russian Government felt anxiety as to whether the Sardars of the rebels would accept (i.e., obey) the new ruler (Nasiruddin) and would exercise no oppression over the people, show ability and excellence in administration, and make endeavours towards peace and comfort, and after acknowledging the authority of their great neighbours, the Russians, abstain (lit. forget) from seeking their own interest and gains, i.e., from deposing the Khan accepted by the Russian, and would thus gain the good-will of von Kaufmann. The next occurrence proved that the deputation of the above agent to Tashkend was only a stratagem and to gain time, they disregarded the kindness of General von Kaufmann, and their coming as representatives into the Russian possessions was a mere stratagem. When their agents were in Tashkend, they gave trouble to the people of Khokand in coming to our dominions, so much so that they told them that the Russians exercise great oppression over the Mahommedans. Having become enemies of the Rusians they endeavour to kindle fire (of insurrection) in our subjects of * (?) therefore they sent invitations and letters to the Mahommedans of Khojend, Tashkend, and other border territories to join in disturbances. Before their agents had left our territory (lit. whether they had left or not), crowds of people of Khokand and Khojend, Karma, and Arp-tazan collected in Khojend Naloo and "Kari-ablik." We repulsed these people at once, still they succeeded in killing in a most brutal manner some of the residents of Alsatna, i.e., Rahats and two Karkhanas and some cartmen, and in taking prisoner some travellers and Russians.

The Russian authorities lost no time (lit. were not negligent) in defence ; the Governor-General collected troops at once in Killa Mahram and repulsed the Khokand rebels, and this victory was so successful that it became impossible for them to regather. Nasiruddin

* "Ahal-i-hawas," meaning not understood.

Khan acknowledged that it was vain and puerile on his part to oppose the Russians, and having expressed repentance declared himself an ally (lit. his submission) of the Governor-General, and in company with the rebels hastened to meet him, and solicited him to restore his Khanship to him permanently. He (the Governor-General) considered the offence of the Khan and the people of Khokand somewhat light, and thought that the people of Khokand were innocent and the Sardars evil wishers; then the people of Khokand and the Sardars came and were made to think over and understand their interests (lit. discriminate between gain and loss). Then the Governor-General of Turkestan, i. e., von Kaufmann, made over management of the territories of the Khan to him (the Khan), and reinstated him in the Chiefship permanently, and forgave the faults of the Sardars and rebels. * * * * As punishment to the Khan and his officers, the territory of Namangan lying between the right bank of the River Sir and the point where the River Narin falls into the River Sir, was annexed to Russian possessions. As soon as, according to our new Treaty with Nasiruddin Khan, our troops vacated Khokand, disturbances took place in Khokand, at the instigation of Abdul Rahman Aftabchi. Like his father, Khuda Yar, Nasiruddin fled from Khokand and was obliged to seek refuge under us; then the people of Khokand made Faulad Khan, a man of low family (lit. of unknown birth) their Khan, but he could not govern them owing to his being destitute of common sense, sound judgment, and ability, and talent. He, in the commencement of his rule, caused brutal executions in Khokand, and killed a large number of good men, as well as all the survivors of Khuda Yar Khan, such as his sons, grandsons, &c. He attempted to try his fortune in opposing us, and to recover Namangan, and even to drive us out from Tashkend. For this purpose, with the aid and at the instigation of Abdul Rahman Aftabchi, he collected a great number of people in Andejan to attack Namangan. The Governor-General sent General Tor Daski (?) from Namangan and he got possession of Andejan, and Faulad Khan and Abdul Rahman took to flight. The General Tor Daski considered the punishment sufficient, and by order of the Governor he abstained from ordering a general slaughter in Andejan and returned to Namangan; had Faulad Khan, Abdul Rahman, and their advisers and councillors been sensible and experienced persons, the above punishment would have been sufficient for them, and instead of adopting lengthy operations and risking their lives, they would have tendered apology and allegiance, but as they did not possess such sense they again raised disturbances in Namangan. As God has given us strength, and as He helps all true and just undertakings, General Skobeleff, after quelling the disturbances raised in Namangan and punishing his subjects, suitably attacked Faulad Khan and Abdul Rahman Aftabchi several times, demolished several large buildings (perhaps forts or entrenchments are meant) and took possession of Andejan; then severe fighting took place in Aska, and Faulad Beg was forced to fly towards Karatagin. Abdul Rahman recovered his senses (lit. his eyes were opened) and confessed that it was most difficult and impossible (for him) to succeed in his hostilities with the Russians, and tendered voluntary submission and begged pardon. He was followed by the head Sardar of Khokand rebels, who came into Major-General Skobeleff and repented his actions, and begged for forgiveness. After more than six months the people of Khokand, who were in a very distressed condition, felt inclined to make Nasiruddin Khan their Khan. He was at the time in Killa Mahram, and finding his people in straits he left for Khokand; before he had arrived at that place the Kipchaks and Kirghiz collected a large body of people and severely opposed him (several of his followers were taken prisoners), and those who escaped returned to Killa Mahram. Dissension exists amongst the people of Khokand, and in consequence of this ill-feeling some desired to appoint Nasiruddin, some Faulad Khan, and others some dissolute person (or worthless fellow), Aubash, as their Khan. The majority of the people, however, expressed their wish for assistance from the Russians; with this view the people of Khokand, Marghinan, Osh, and Isfara, and the agents of other provinces, waited on Major General Skobeleff and intimated their repentance at their enmity towards the Russians, and their inability to oppose them (the Russians), and expressed their wish for an amicable settlement of matters. They acknowledged their weakness, and begged for peace for their countrymen. They also made confessions of allegiance and submission, and brought letters from their countrymen to effect "we have submitted ourselves to the Emperor, their submission may be accepted."

* * * * * * *

This petition was accepted. The Emperor could adopt no other mode to restore peace and comfort to the people (of Khokand), because Nasiruddin was twice appointed Khan of his hereditary country, but he was expelled on both occasions towards Russian Turkestan (by his people). His Imperial Majesty considered it safer to keep these people under his own control with regard to their circumstances, and he therefore on this (last) occasion approved of their submission. Their territory (lit. lands) was annexed to Russian possessions, the provinces included in the Khanship of Khokand were denominated Ublus Farghana. I intimate these events and the policy of the Emperor to your Highness, and also state that the Emperor ordered me to take possession of (lit. make submit) all the territories under the (late) Khan of Khokand. On receipt of this order I left with all speed next day, and reached the Ublus of Farghana; then I made over (the management of) Ublus-nai on the Sir (Darya) to Governor-General of Turkestan and Lieutenant-General Golovachef. I beg to add as a supplement to this letter, that the Russian Government is bound (lit. entrusted) to deal with friendship and peace in all affairs with their neighbours who govern and rule countries in the East independently (lit. permanently), and for this reason Russia abstains (lit. silent) from taking possession of them (countries), though on the present occasion we have been constrained to annex Khokand to Russian possessions; in reality this annexation has not been effected for the interests of Russia, but at the request of the people of Khokand merely to afford them tranquillity. As on account of these evil habits and intentions old-standing dissension existed amongst these people, as appears from the history of their country, and they could never attain to tranquillity under a Native Government, or till they accepted a powerful ruler and Government, such a ruler as the Emperor of Russia. I indulge in the hope that my unchanging friendship and regard may be accepted by your Highness.

Written at Tashkend in the month of Moharram 1293 Hijri, mahth of Febral (February). Written in Russian by General Gubernater, Turkestan, Adjutant von Kaufmann, Lieutenant-General Kolpakovski (?)

No. 70.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, September 6, 1876.

I TRANSMIT, for your Excellency's information, copy of a despatch inclosing Cabul Diaries.*

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 71.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received September 22.)

My Lord, India Office, September 22, 1876.

WITH reference to my letter of the 25th August last, transmitting copy of letter from the Government of India, with inclosures, relative to the affairs of Afghanistan, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, for Lord Derby's information, copy of a telegram which his Lordship has received from the Viceroy of India on the subject of the letter addressed in February last, by the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan, to the Ameer of Afghanistan, of which a translation will be found in the papers above referred to.

Lord Salisbury concurs in the views expressed by the Viceroy, and is of opinion that, as suggested by his Excellency, a remonstrance against General Kaufmann's proceedings should be addressed to the Russian Government without delay.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure in No. 71.

The Viceroy of India to the Marquis of Salisbury.

(Telegraphic.) Simla, September 16, 1876.

WE send you a despatch by this next mail, expressing decided opinion on necessity of Her Majesty's Government remonstrating with Russia on Kaufmann's repeated correspondence with Ameer by hand of Russian agents, two of whom are now in Cabul.

* No. 69.

Although hitherto the Government of India have not asked Her Majesty's Government to formally remonstrate on this open breach of repeated pledges, we now deem it necessary to request you to do so, as the correspondence is creating much sensation at Cabul and forms basis of intrigue which may seriously impair our relations with Ameer.

We will on our part take earliest favourable opportunity of co-operating with any action you may deem expedient to impress on Ameer risk he runs and necessity for his stopping reception of these intriguing agents.

If without waiting receipt of despatch you can act at once on this information, result of such action communicated to me by telegraph may favourably affect negotiation mentioned in my accompanying telegram.

No. 72.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, October 2, 1876.

IN my despatch to your Excellency of the 6th ultimo, I inclosed a copy of the Cabul Diaries received from the Indian Government.

You will find at page 10 of those Diaries a letter addressed by General Kaufmann to the Ameer of Cabul which appears to have been conveyed to its destination by an Asiatic agent, who still remains at Cabul, and it is reported from other sources that his instructions are to induce Shere Ali to sign an offensive and defensive alliance with the Russian Government as well as a Commercial Treaty.

Although the tone and insinuation of General Kaufmann's letter appear to Her Majesty's Government to be undesirable, the letter itself does not contain any statement of a distinctly objectionable character. Your Excellency will address a note to the Russian Government, reminding them of their repeated assurances that "Afghanistan is completely outside the sphere within which Russia may be called upon to exercise her influence," and you will endeavour, if possible, to obtain from the Russian Government a written disclaimer of any intention on their part to negotiate Treaties with Shere Ali without the consent of Her Majesty's Government.

I am, &c.

(Signed) DERBY.

No. 73.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, October 10, 1876.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 2nd instant, I have to inform your Excellency that I took an opportunity of speaking to Count Schouvaloff to-day respecting the Agents sent by General Kaufmann to Cabul. I reminded his Excellency that the Russian Government had on several occasions answered Her Majesty's Government that Afghanistan was completely outside the sphere within which Russia may be called upon to exercise her influence, and pointed out to him that the despatch of Russian Agents to Cabul with a letter to the Ameer from General Kaufmann was contrary to this under standing, and might give rise to some uneasiness in India.

His Excellency replied that he had no knowledge of the matter, but would communicate with his Government upon it.

I am, &c.

(Signed) DERBY.

No. 74.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, October 12, 1876.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 10th October, I have to state to your Excellency that Count Schouvaloff read to me to-day a telegram received by him from Prince Gortchakow in the following words :—

"Démentez catégoriquement que Kaufmann agit à Cabul, soit par un Agent ou soit d'une autre manière."

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 75.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received October 14.)

My Lord, India Office, October 14, 1876.

WITH reference to this Office letter of the 18th November, 1875, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, for Lord Derby's information, copy of a letter from the Government of India, inclosing an extract from the Diary of the British Agent at Cabul, relative to the efforts made by the Ameer of Afghanistan to obtain the release of the Russian prisoner at Merv.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 75.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Simla, August 28, 1876.

WITH reference to paragraph 2 of our despatch dated 30th September, 1875, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, an extract from the Cabul Diary of the 28th to 31st July, 1876, on the subject of the efforts made by the Cabul Government to obtain the release of the Russian captive at Merv.

We have, &c.
(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
W. MUIR.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 75.

Extract from the Cabul Diary of the 28th to 31st July, 1876.

ON the 28th instant the Ameer questioned the Mustaufi as to what measures he had taken for the release of the Russian who had been imprisoned by Turkomans, and about whom the British Government wrote (to the Ameer). The Mustaufi replied that he had agreed to pay 15,000 rupees to the Turkomans through the Jew traders who go to that territory for the release of the prisoner, but that the Turkomans did not accept that amount, and have considered it very advantageous for themselves to continue to keep him in prison. Also that it is difficult to obtain his release through traders; that the Persian Government also made great efforts, and that probably the prisoner is a Russian officer.

No. 76.

Lord Tenterden to Sir L. Mallet.

Sir, Foreign Office, October 14, 1876.

WITH reference to my letter of the 4th instant, I am directed by the Earl of Derby to transmit to you, to be laid before the Marquis of Salisbury, the accompanying copy of a despatch to Lord A. Loftus, from which Lord Salisbury will see that the Russian Ambassador has been instructed to deny categorically that General Kaufmann has taken any action at Cabul by an Agent, or in any other manner;* and I am to request that you will move his Lordship to cause Lord Derby to be informed whether there is any objection to communicating to the Russian Government the letter addressed by General Kaufmann to the Ameer of Afghanistan, of which a copy was inclosed in your letter of the 25th August.

I am, &c.
(Signed) TENTERDEN.

No. 77.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 18.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 13, 1876.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship herewith copy of a note which, in conformity with the instructions of your Lordship's despatch of the 2nd instant, I have addressed to M. de Giers, calling the attention of the Imperial Government to the reported Mission of an Agent by General Kaufmann to Cabul, with instructions to induce Shere Ali to sign an offensive and defensive alliance with the Russian Government, as well as a Commercial Treaty, and reminding them of their repeated assurances that Afghanistan is completely outside the sphere within which Russia may be called upon to exercise her influence.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 77.

Lord A. Loftus to M. de Giers.

M. le Sénateur, St. Petersburgh, September 30 / October 12, 1876.

REPORTS have reached Her Majesty's Government from a reliable source that an Agent was charged by his Excellency General von Kaufmann, Governor-General of Turkestan, in February last, to deliver a letter from him to His Highness the Ameer of Afghanistan, and that this Agent is still at Cabul for the object, as is stated, of endeavouring, in conformity with his instructions, to induce Shere Ali to sign an offensive and defensive alliance with the Russian Government, as well as a Treaty of Commerce.

Her Majesty's Government are convinced that a frank and unreserved exchange of friendly communication between the two Governments on all matters relating to Central Asia will best conduce to the maintenance of that perfect understanding which now so happily exists between them, and acting in this spirit they deem it desirable to bring the reports they have received under the notice of the Imperial Government.

In doing so, I am instructed at the same time by the Earl of Derby, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to remind the Imperial Government of the repeated assurances given by them that Afghanistan is completely outside the sphere within which Russia may be called upon to exercise her influence.

I entertain no doubt that on being informed of the sending by General von Kaufmann of an Agent to Cabul, and of the object which has detained him there, the Imperial Government will at once instruct General von Kaufmann to conform strictly to the assurances given by Prince Gortchakow with regard to Afghanistan, the spirit of which would be infringed by the negotiation of Treaties with Shere Ali such as those to which I have referred.

I avail, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 78.

Sir T. Seccombe to Lord Tenterden.—(Received October 18.)

My Lord, India Office, October 17, 1876.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, relative to the correspondence between the Governor-General of

* No. 74.

Russian Turkestan and the Ameer of Cabul, and to acquaint you in reply that his Lordship sees no objection to the communication to the Russian Government of the text of General Kaufmann's letter of February last, as set forth in the Cabul Diaries inclosed in this Office letter of the 25th August.

I am at the same time directed to forward herewith, for Lord Derby's information, copy of a despatch just received from the Government of India, in which the views of that Government on the subject are expressed at length. Amongst the inclosures to this despatch will be found extracts from recent diaries submitted by the British Agent at that place, from which Lord Derby will observe that, on or about the 21st August, another Russian Agent arrived at Cabul with a further letter from General Kaufmann to the Ameer. The communication to the Russian Government should, in Lord Salisbury's judgment, be confined to the text of General Kaufmann's letter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SECCOMBE.

Inclosure 1 in No. 78.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Simla, September 18, 1876.

THE despatches noted in the margin have communicated to us the positive assurances given, from time to time, by the Russian Government that His Imperial Majesty considers Afghanistan as "entirely beyond the sphere of Russian influence." With reference to these assurances, we have the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information, the inclosed papers, and to call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the subject of the official correspondence which has taken place, and is taking place, between the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan and His Highness the Ameer of Cabul.

The most recent of these communications is the letter of General von Kaufmann, dated —— February, 1876, of which a translation accompanies the Commissioner of Peshawur's letter dated 26th June.

This document, it will be perceived, contains a somewhat lengthy narrative of the late events in Khokand, an announcement of its annexation to the Russian Empire, and a declaration of the motives which have animated the Russian Government; it is stated to be in continuation of previous communications, and its transmission to be due to "the friendship subsisting between Russia and Afghanistan."

The letter is, in fact, one of a series of communications which have passed, from time to time, between the Russian General, von Kaufmann (or, his locum tenens, General Kolpakovsky) and his Highness the Ameer, during a period extending from the year 1870 to the present time; these communications are not merely complimentary expressions of friendly sentiment, but have reference to matters of importance, affecting, not only the foreign interests, but even the internal affairs of Afghanistan; they tend to increase in frequency; and latterly they have, on more than one occasion, been transmitted by a special agent, though it appears from the postscript to Sir A. Buchanan's letter to Lord Clarendon, dated the 2nd November, 1869, that Prince Gortchakow then agreed with Lord Mayo that Russian Agents should not visit Cabul.

The Ameer, though at first regarding the communications with distrust, and seeking the advice of the British Government as to the tenor of his reply, now acknowledges their receipt in cordial terms, and without consulting the Government of India. It will be perceived, from the appended extracts from the Diaries of the 11th and 14th August, that another Russian Agent has, within the last few weeks, arrived in Afghan territory, and left Balkh on the 7th August en route for Cabul, bearing a further letter from the Russian General. We may add that, notwithstanding the arrival of this second Agent, his precursor still lingers at Cabul; and that we have received, from an unofficial source, information, which we are of course unable to verify, that secret nightly conferences are taking place between him and the Ameer.

Up to the present time, the Government of India has not deemed it necessary to request Her Majesty's Government to make a formal objection to these proceedings of the Russian Generals; but the correspondence has been regarded by the Government with some anxiety; and on one occasion, in a despatch dated 1st May, 1874, the attention of Her Majesty's Government was drawn to the tone of General Kolpakovsky's letter.

We now desire to submit, for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, that the time has arrived when it is expedient that the attention of the Russian Government should be seriously called to the fact of this correspondence, and that steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government to prevent a continuance of proceedings which we cannot but regard as altogether inconsistent with the assurances given by Prince Gortchakow to Lord Clarendon, in 1869, and, since then, frequently renewed by the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh, that Afghanistan is regarded as "entirely beyond the sphere of Russian influence."

In venturing to suggest this course for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, we would represent that the issue more or less involved in the continuance, or discontinuance, of the correspondence between the Russian officers and the Ameer of Cabul, is one not of merely local or Indian, but of Imperial interest, affecting as it does the important question whether the influence of England is to be superseded and replaced by that of Russia at the Court of the Ameer. The assurances of non-interference in Afghanistan given and reiterated by the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh to the Government of Her Majesty, have been, from time to time, communicated, with every expression of confidence in their sincerity, by the Government of India to the Ameer of Cabul. As the communications with His Highness, now systematically carried on by the Russian military authorities in Central Asia, are plainly irreconcileable with the above-mentioned assurances, it is obvious that the Ameer can only attribute their increasing frequency, and prolonged toleration, either to the acquiescence of the British Government, or to its inability to resent so open a disregard of those pledges on which its reliance has been publicly and repeatedly recorded. In either case, the result cannot fail to be destructive of all confidence and security in our relations with Afghanistan. The action open to the Government of India, for the control of those relations, is necessarily limited to the exercise of pressure upon the Ameer of Cabul; but we shall, on our part, lose no opportunity of co-operating with such steps as Her Majesty's Government may be pleased to take in this matter, by our endeavours to convince the Ameer of the imprudence, as well as the impropriety, of the present correspondence between His Highness and the Russian Generals.

We have, &c.
(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
W. MUIR.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 78.

Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock to Mr. Thornton.

Abbottabad, June 26, 1876.

I HAVE the honour to submit herewith, in original, copy received from the Cabul Agent of the letter without date, except as to month, addressed by the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan to His Highness the Ameer of Afghanistan, and referred to in the last submitted Cabul Diary from the 13th to the 15th instant.

2. A translation accompanies the letter, and gives, I believe, fairly the meaning of the writer, but the sentences were so involved that I found unusual difficulty in translating them.

3. A copy of the letter and of the translation is being submitted by this post to Secretary to Government, Punjab.

Inclosure 3 in No. 78.

General von Kaufmann to Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

[See Inclosure 6 in No. 69.]

Inclosure 4 in No. 78.

Extract from Cabul Diary from 8th to 10th August, 1876.

IT is reported that another Russian Agent has arrived in Turkestan, and that, in reply to a letter submitted by the new Naib, the Ameer has written to him (the Naib) to inform His Highness as to whether the said Agent had come to visit the deceased Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, or desires to come to Cabul, and whether he is a Russian or a Mahommedan. Further information will follow after inquiry.

Inclosure 5 in No. 78.

Extract from Cabul Diary from 4th to 14th August, 1876.

THE report alluded to in the last Diary regarding the arrival of another Russian Envoy in Turkestan has now been ascertained to have been submitted by Colonel Mirza Ahmed Khan, brother of the Dabirul-Mulk, left at Balkh by Naib Mahomed Alum Khan to govern that country in his absence. It was forwarded to the Ameer by the new Naib, and His Highness inquired whether the Envoy had come merely to visit the deceased Naib, or desired to go to Cabul, and whether he is a Mahommedan or a Russian. Yesterday His Highness received another letter from the above Colonel through the new Naib, stating that Mirza Mahomed Yusaf, Mervi Samarcandi, the Russian Envoy, arrived at Balkh with six sowars, with a view to proceeding to Cabul, and was in possession of a murrasila from the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan to the Ameer, and that as information of his arrival was sent previously to His Highness, and he desired to proceed to Cabul, and news of the death of Naib Mahomed Alum Khan had been received, the Envoy was sent to Cabul on the 7th instant, in company with an agent of the Colonel who is acquainted with the Turki language.

Inclosure 6 in No. 78.

Extract from Cabul Diary from 15th to 17th August, 1876.

TO-DAY the Ameer received a letter from the new Naib of Turkestan stating that from Kurram and Sarbagh he left the ordinary road, which was longer, and adopted a short cut, and reached Tashkurghan on the 11th August, 1876; that he would be on the 12th at Naubahar, two kos from Mazar-i-Sharif, and on the 13th idem at Takhtapul, the head-quarters of Turkestan; also that Turkestan continues tranquil; and that when he was on his way to Tashkurghan, viâ the short route, Mirza Mahomed Yusaf, the Russian Envoy, passed to Cabul from Hazrut-Sultan on the 9th August, 1876, and consequently could not meet him.

Inclosure 7 in No. 78.

Extract from Cabul Diary from 22nd to 24th August, 1876.

YESTERDAY Mirza Mahomed Yusaf Khan, Mervi, the Russian Envoy, put up, by desire of the Durbar, in the house of Sardar Mahomed Yusaf Khan, with Mirza Abdul Karim Khan, the first Envoy, and they both received cooked food from the Darbar. To-day at 10 A.M. he waited on the Ameer, in company with Sardar Mahomed Yusaf Khan, and after communicating the compliments of the Governor-General in Russian Turkestan, submitted a murrasila from the latter in the Russian and Turki languages. His Highness, after formal inquiry (as to health, &c.), in twenty minutes allowed him to return to the Sardar's house, and got the murrasila translated from the Turki language. It appears that the Governor-General has sent this murrasila merely to inform His Highness of his return to Tashkend from St. Petersburgh. He writes that the Emperor of Russia summoned him to St. Petersburgh to discuss about some important affairs of (Russian) Turkestan, that he returned to Tashkend in six months, that he is glad to say that the friendship existing between His Highness and the Russians has now become firm, and that the Ameer's rectitude will keep the subjects of both Governments happy. A copy of the murrasila will be submitted as soon as it is obtained.

No. 79.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, October 21. 1876.

HER Majesty's Government approve the note which you addressed to M. Giers respecting the interference of General Kaufmann in the affairs of Afghanistan, a copy of which is inclosed in your Excellency's despatch of the 13th ultimo.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 80.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, October 24, 1876.

WITH reference to your Excellency's despatch of the 13th instant, Count Schouvaloff communicated to me a telegram from his Government denying categorically that General Kaufmann is acting at Cabul either through an Agent or in any other manner.

It is my intention to place in Count Schouvaloff's hands a copy of General Kaufmann's letter of February last, and to point out to him that his Government would seem to have been kept in ignorance of the General's proceedings.

I take this opportunity of sending your Excellency a copy of a further letter from the India Office, inclosing copies of despatches from India, in which it is shown that General Kaufmann for many years past has been in the habit of keeping up a correspondence with the Ameer, a proceeding which, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, is opposed to the understanding between England and Russia, which stipulates that Russia shall not interfere in any way in the affairs of Afghanistan.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 81.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 30.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 19, 1876.

ON the occasion of my conversation with M. de Giers, on the reported presence of a Russian Agent at Cabul, and of the objects of his mission, his Excellency told me that he had learnt, through the Russian Agent at Meshed, that great preparations were making at Herat for an expedition against Merv.

I told his Excellency that I thought this very unlikely, as the Ameer of Afghanistan had no connection with Merv. It would be different if the Persian Government were to undertake such an expedition, for they had an undoubted legal claim to that country; but I was not aware, nor did I think it at all likely, that the Persian Government meditated any such enterprise.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 82.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 30.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 19, 1876.

I HAD an interview with M. de Giers on the 14th instant, when his Excellency, referring to the note I had addressed to him (as reported in my despatch of the 13th instant) on the presence of a Russian Agent at Cabul, stated that he had no knowledge of any such Agent having been sent by General Kaufmann to the Ameer of Afghanistan, nor after inquiry at the Ministry of War could he ascertain that there was any information of any letter having been addressed or sent to Shere Ali by General Kaufmann in February last.

His Excellency further observed that at that time General Kaufmann was at St. Petersburgh.

His Excellency expressed a wish to see a copy of the letter in question, as he must suppose that it was apocryphal.

I did not consider that I was authorized to conform to this wish without your Lordship's authorization.

His Excellency stated that he had written to General Kaufmann for information, and that on his receiving his reply he would, in conformity with my request, give me a written answer to my note.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 83.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received November 4.)

My Lord, India Office, November 4, 1876.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, for Lord Derby's information, copy of a letter received from the Government of India, inclosing the Diary of the British Agent at Cabul from the 29th to 31st August, 1876, together with the correspondence between the Ameer and General von Kaufmann therein referred to.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 83.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Simla, September 28, 1876.

WE have the honour to forward copy of a letter from the Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawur, dated 9th instant, inclosing a translation of the Cabul Diary from 29th to 31st August last, and of the further correspondence between General von Kaufmann and the Ameer of Cabul, to which reference is made in the Diary.

We have, &c.
(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
W. MUIR.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 83.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Thornton.

September 9, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from 29th to 31st August, 1876, inclusive, together with original copies received from the Agent of the two murrasilas referred to in the Diary.

Extract from Cabul Diary from 29th to 31st August, 1876, inclusive.

COPY of murrasila from the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan brought by Mahomed Yusaf Khan Mervi, mentioned in Diary of 24th August, 1876, is inclosed.

Copy of the murrasila which the Cabul Government has made over to Mirza Abdul Karim Khan is herewith submitted. The Mirza has received the following khilat:—

For himself: 1 Amritsar abrah chogha, 1 khalil khani, and 500 rupees cash for expenses.

For his four servants: 4 broadcloth choghas, and 4 embroidered lungis.

In the contents of this murrasila, which has been sent to the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan in reply to that received from him, the Cabul Government has reserved for it itself a discretionary position, as a matter of precaution; so that should it happen that the Russians trouble them in any affair, and they (the Cabul Government), considering that application adverse to their interests, decline to act on it, and the Russians become annoyed, they may be able to say that they (the Cabul Government) have not entered into any engagements with the Russians, and that their border is not joined with the Russian border in such a manner that the terms "neighbourhood" and "propinquity" could be applied to them. Also that they (the Cabul Government) may remain permanently free from anxiety (lit. enjoy liberty), as the Russians possess no written agreement (lit. an explicit note of hand) from them.

Abstract Translation of Murrasila, dated 7th Shaaban (August 27, 1876), from the Ameer to the Russian Governor-General.

YOUR murrasila, dated Mohurram (February) anent Khokand matters, which you sent from Tashkend by hand of Mirza Abdul Karim Khan, reached me at Cabul in Jamadi-ul-awal (June), and I have mastered its contents. If those persons who are in the neighbourhood or propinquity of great and powerful States, and for whom it is easy and feasible to undertake certain affairs in their country or city according to their capabilities and the customs and usages of that country or city, maintain (friendly) relations with (those) States, undoubtedly it is not politic or advisable that they should deviate from such relations. But as the Government of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor is great and powerful, and as it is customary for its neighbours and the people in its adjacent territories to expect kindness and rectitude from it, if such great and noted Government shows kindness and mercy to the people in its neighbouring or adjoining territories, certainly it will tend to the encouragement (lit. hopes) of neighbours and the comfort of the people of God. Continue to afford me happiness by informing me of your health, &c.

Abstract Translation of Murrasila, dated 13th Jamadi-ul-Sani (July 6, 1876), from the Russian Governor-General to the Ameer.

TO discuss about some important Turkestan matters I was summoned by the Emperor, and after remaining about six months at St. Petersburgh, returned to Tashkend. I have considered it advisable to send this information to you. The friendship existing between you and the Russian Government and between you and me has been promoted. I pray God for your (long) life. Your rectitude will tend to the comfort and happiness of the subjects (of the Government of Russia and Afghanistan).

No. 84.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, November 7, 1876.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 19th ultimo, I have to inform your Excellency that I gave Count Schouvaloff, on the 26th ultimo, a copy of General Kaufmann's letter to the Ameer of Afghanistan.

His Excellency observed that it did not seem to contain much of importance, but he said that he would take it away for more careful perusal, and would offer any observations he might have to make on it later.

Count Schouvaloff returned the copy on the 31st ultimo without further remarks.

I have to add that your Excellency is at liberty to give a copy to M. de Giers, as suggested in your despatch of the 19th ultimo.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 85.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, November 15, 1876.

I INCLOSE, for your Excellency's information, copy of a despatch upon the subject of Afghanistan.*

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 86.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received November 21.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, November 15, 1876.

AT my interview to-day with Prince Gortchakow I profited of the opportunity to mention the report of a projected Russian expedition to Merv.

His Highness denied at once that any such intention existed, and authorized me to inform your Lordship that there was no question of an expedition against Merv, nor any idea of occupying Merv.

Prince Gortchakow said that some of the Téké Turkomans had plundered some "Aouls" of another Turkoman tribe under Russian protectorate, and that a detachment of troops had been sent to their protection as also to keep open the communication between Krasnovodsk and Khiva.

His Highness observed that there were indications of the Afghans undertaking an expedition against the Téké Turkomans and Merv, but his Highness did not appear to be acquainted with any details on the subject.

I further mentioned to his Highness the communications which General Kaufmann was carrying on directly with the Ameer of Afghanistan through a secret Agent who had arrived some time ago at Cabul, and was still residing there; and I observed to him that these communications were not in conformity with the engagement taken by Russia, as recorded by his Highness himself, when he declared that Russia considered Afghanistan to be beyond the sphere of her political action.

Prince Gortchakow replied that there was no Russian Agent at Cabul as far as he knew, and that General Kaufmann had merely forwarded a complimentary letter to the Ameer, as he was in the habit of doing on returning to his post.

"But," added his Highness, "quand nous avons en main une baleine, je ne puis pas m'occuper des petits poissons."

His Highness, however, charged me to inform your Lordship that the reported expedition against Merv was without any foundation.

Before reverting to the subject of General Kaufmann's communication with the Ameer of Afghanistan and the presence of a Russian Agent at Cabul, I shall request M. de Giers to give me an answer in writing to the note which I addressed to his Excellency on that subject on the 12th October, a copy of which was inclosed in my despatch of the 13th October.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 87.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received November 21.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, November 17, 1876.

I HAD an interview to-day with M. de Giers, who is the Director of the Asiatic Department in the Imperial Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

I requested his Excellency to give me a written reply to my note in regard to the communication of General Kaufmann with the Ameer of Afghanistan and the prolonged presence at Cabul of a Russian Agent.

His Excellency demurred somewhat in giving a written answer, but I maintained my request for a reply in writing, which his Excellency promised that I should receive.

* No. 83.

M. de Giers then stated that there was no question of General Kaufmann entering into political communication with the Ameer of Afganistan, nor was there the remotest idea of any Treaty engagements. The Agent was simply charged to deliver a letter of courtesy from General Kaufmann to the Ameer, which was an usual custom on his resuming the duties of his post, and as the Governor-General of a neighbouring State.

To this I replied that he was not the Governor of a neighbouring State, inasmuch as the Khanat of Bokhara was still to be regarded as an independent State, and that I therefore considered it necessary that General Kaufmann should receive express orders from the Imperial Government to desist in future from sending Agents to Cabul and from entertaining political communication with the Ameer of Afghanistan.

M. de Giers then informed me that the Imperial Government had received information both from General Kaufmann, and through the Imperial Minister at Tehran, that the Afghan Government were making great military preparations. He stated that 10,000 men were assembled at Herat, with 1,600 cavalry, all well armed and equipped; that they were being constantly drilled and exercised, and that a cannon foundry was established at Herat capable of producing one cannon per day. From the information the Imperial Government had received, this armament was destined for an expedition against the Turkomans and against Merv.

It would appear, from the report of General Kaufmann, that he was somewhat disturbed in mind by this reported expedition.

General Kaufmann in his report referred also to certain incursions beyond their frontier which the Afghan troops were undertaking in the direction of Zaraffshan and Karateguin, and he referred to them as likely to produce a disturbance of the relations between Bokhara and Afghanistan.

On my inquiry, his Excellency further informed me that in consequence of a disagreement between the Turkomans and the Khan of Khiva, the latter had expressed a wish to renounce his rights of government in favour of Russia, but that General Kaufmann had opposed this wish, and was now acting as the arbitrator between the Khan and his subjects.

His Excellency stated that the Imperial Government desired anxiously that no change in the status quo should take place, and that peace and order should reign in Central Asia.

In giving me this communication, his Excellency referred to the original correspondence of General Kaufmann, and I suggested to him that he should forward that correspondence to Count Schouvaloff for communication to your Lordship.

No. 88.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, November 22, 1876.

I HAVE to instruct your Excellency to communicate to the Russian Government the text of the correspondence between the Ameer of Cabul and General Kaufmann, as printed in the Cabul Diary, a copy of which was inclosed in my despatch of the 15th instant.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 89.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received December 4.)

My Lord, India Office, December 2, 1876.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, for Lord Derby's information, copy of a letter from the Government of India, inclosing Diaries of the British Agent at Cabul from the 18th August to the 11th September last.

Lord Derby will observe from the concluding paragraph of the Diary of 25th to 28th August, 1876, that a requisition for the surrender of a criminal is alleged to have been addressed by the Governor of Samarcand to the Governor of Afghan Turkestan, at the instance of the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 89.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Simla, October 16, 1876.

IN continuation of our despatch dated 11th ultimo, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

2. The attention of Her Majesty's Government is especially invited to the concluding paragraph of the Diary of 25th to 28th August, 1876, from which it appears that a requisition for the surrender of a criminal is alleged to have been addressed by the Governor of Samarcand to the Governor of Afghan Turkestan at the instance of the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan.

We have, &c.
(Signed) LYTTON.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
W. MUIR.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 89.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Thornton.

September 6, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from 25th to 28th August, 1876, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from 25th to 28th August, 1876, inclusive.

THE Cabul Government has made over a murrasila to the Russian Envoy, Mirza Abdul Karim Khan, in reply to one brought by him from his Governor-General, and has allowed him to return (to Russian Turkestan). Mahommed Aslam Khan, late Kotwal of Cabul, has been deputed to-day with him to escort him as far as Takhtapul, whence Naib Sherdil Khan will make arrangements to escort him as far as the Oxus. A copy of the murrasila will be forwarded as soon as it is obtained.

The Governor of Samarcand sent a letter to the address of Naib Mohamed Alam Khan, at the instance of the Governor-General at Tashkend, to the effect that a man took 100 gold ashrafis from a trader in Makria Bazar, in the Russian Kingdom, and fled to Persia, and has now gone to Cabul, and that he should be apprehended and forwarded with the ashrafis to Samarcand. Naib Sherdil Khan submitted this letter in original to the Ameer, and His Highness has directed him to write to the Governor on his own part: "On receipt of your letter, I made inquiry from my son in the Cabul Durbar about the said fugitive, and have ascertained that no such person has gone to Cabul. It is not customary with the Cabul Government to demand fugitives, or to restore them to its neighbours, and consequently it is strongly presumed that, had any fugitive arrived in Cabul, he would not have kept himself secret, as he would have known that he would not be molested. It therefore appears that he has not arrived in any province of the Cabul Government." In proposing to make the Naib use the words, "the custom with its neighbours," on his own part, the Cabul Durbar means to warn the Russian authorities not to trouble them (the Durbar) in future in similar matters.

No. 90.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received December 12.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, November 28, 1876.

IN obedience to the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 22nd instant, I have communicated to the Russian Government the text of the correspondence between the Ameer of Cabul and General Kaufmann, as printed in the Cabul Diary, of which I received a copy in your Lordship's despatch of the 15th instant, and I have the honour to annex a copy of my note to M. de Giers on this subject inclosing a copy of the exact text which I communicated to his Excellency.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure 1 in No. 90.

Lord A. Loftus to M. de Giers.

M. le Sénateur, St. Petersburgh, November 28, 1876.

IN conformity with the instructions of the Earl of Derby, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, I have the honour to inclose to your Excellency, for the information of the Imperial Government, the text of the correspondence between the Ameer of Cabul and General Kaufmann.

I profit of this opportunity to request your Excellency to favour me with a reply to the note which I had the honour to address to you on the 30th September / 12th October last, and to renew, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure 2 in No. 90.

Copies of Correspondence between Ameer of Cabul and General Kaufmann, sent to Russian Government with Lord A. Loftus' Note of November 28, 1876.

[See Inclosure 2 in No. 83.]

No. 91.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received December 12.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, December 6, 1876.

I CALLED M. de Giers' attention to-day to the inclosed article from the "Agence Russe," stating that the Russian papers announce that the Indian papers "Rassul" and "Bombay Gazette" have received a telegram from Lahore, stating that the Ameer of Cabul had evinced the intention of receiving the Envoy of Russia with all the honours prescribed by Oriental etiquette. In view of which the English Ambassador at Cabul, Mahomed Khan, had declared that his Government would view such an act as an offence. The Ameer, having persisted in his decision, the English Ambassador had asked for his passports and left Cabul.

M. de Giers said that he knew nothing of this report, and had not even seen it in the Russian press. He considered it as utterly unfounded and of pure invention.

Admitting that the intelligence in question might be greatly exaggerated, I observed to his Highness that I had certain information of General Kaufmann having sent two, if not three, Agents to Cabul, and his Excellency would therefore see how necessary it was, with a view to maintain the engagements with Her Majesty's Government, that General Kaufmann should be instructed to abstain from sending Agents to Cabul, and from entering into official communications with the Ameer of Afghanistan.

His Excellency replied that he could answer for General Kaufmann not having entered into any political negotiations with the Ameer of Afghanistan. He was daily expecting the answer from the General to the question he had addressed to him on the subject of my previous communication, and, on its receipt, would inform me of it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 91.

Extract from the "Agence Russe."

LES journaux Russes disent qu'on télégraphie de Lahore aux journaux Indous le "Rassul" et la "Bombay Gazette," que l'Emir de Caboul a manifesté l'intention de recevoir l'Envoyé de Russie avec tous les honneurs prescrits par l'étiquette Orientale. Ce que voyant, Mahomed Khan, Ambassadeur d'Angleterre à la Cour de l'Emir, aurait déclaré que son Gouvernement considérerait cet acte comme une offense. L'Emir ayant persisté dans sa décision, l'Ambassadeur d'Angleterre aurait demandé ses passeports et quitté Caboul.

No. 92.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received December 12.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, December 6, 1876.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship copy of a note which I have received from M. de Giers in reply to the note which I addressed to his Excellency on the 12th October last, on the subject of the correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer of Afghanistan, copy of which was inclosed in my despatch of the 13th October.

His Excellency states that the Imperial Government have no knowledge of this correspondence, and have referred to General Kaufmann for information. He denies, however, the existence of any political negotiations between the Imperial authorities of Turkestan and those of Cabul.

His Excellency then refers to information which has reached the Imperial Government from Tashkend, reporting a simultaneous movement of the troops of the Indian army on the one hand into the State of Ahmoud Saib, Ruler of Swat, and on the other hand of Afghan detachments into Darvaez, a small independent State beyond the frontier of Badakshan, and adjoining Karateguine, both being vassal provinces of the Emir of Bokhara.

The Imperial Government have further learnt that considerable armaments are being made at Herat, in view of an expedition against Merv.

His Excellency adds that if these facts should be confirmed, they would constitute an infraction of the understanding of 1872, by which Great Britain engaged to dissuade the Ameer of Afghanistan from any undertaking beyond his frontier, and they entertain no doubts that Her Majesty's Government will use their efforts to prevent any encroachment of such a nature.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 92.

M. de Giers to Lord A. Loftus.

M. l'Ambassadeur, St. Pétersbourg, le $\frac{19 \text{ Novembre}}{1 \text{ Décembre,}}$ 1876.

J'AI eu l'honneur de recevoir la note en date du $\frac{30 \text{ Septembre}}{12 \text{ Octobre}}$ de cette année, par laquelle votre Excellence signalait le prétendu envoi d'un Agent Russe à Caboul, muni d'une lettre du Général Kaufmann et soi-disant chargé de négocier avec l'Émir une allisnce offensive et défensive ainsi qu'un Traité de Commerce.

Le Chancelier de l'Empire a déjà répondu à une question adressée a ce sujet à notre Ambassadeur à Londres par le Principal Secrétaire de Sa Majesté Britannique, en niant catégoriquement l'exactitude de la rumeur susmentionnée.

Votre Excellence m'a fait parvenir depuis par une nouvelle note en date du $\frac{16}{28}$ de ce mois traduction d'une lettre du General Kaufmann à l'Emir de Caboul et d'une réponse de celui-ci.

Le Ministère Impérial n'a aucune connaissance de cette correspondance. Il s'est empressé toutefois de demander à son sujet des renseignements au Général Kaufmann, en le priant d'éclaircir, s'il le peut, les faits qui ont pu donner lieu aux bruits parvenus au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique. Votre Excellence à dû se convaincre, en attendant, elle-même, que la lettre du Général Kaufmann mentionnée dans sa dernière note ne contenait rien qu'un message de courtoisie, et ne justifiait d'aucune façon l'existence d'une négociation politique quelconque entre nos autorités du Turkestan et celles de Caboul.

Le soin que le Cabinet de Londres apporte à veiller à la stricte observation de l'entente établie entre lui et la Russie en 1872 relativement à l'Afghanistan, engage le Minisètre Impérial de son côté à mentionner certaines informations qui lui sont parvenues de Taschkend et qui ont trait à un mouvement de troupés simultane de l'armée des Indes.

d'une part, dans les Etats d'Ahmoud Sahib, maître de Souat, et de détachments Afghans de l'autre, dans le Darvaz, petit Etat indépendant en dehors des limites de Badakchan et du Vakhan, et limitrophe au nord-est du Karatcheguine, provinces toutes les deux vassales de l'Emir de Boukhara.

Nous apprenons en même temps que des armements considérables se font à Hérat en vue d'une expédition contre les Turcomans de Merv.

Si ces faits venaient à se confirmer ils constitueraient une infraction directe à l'entente de 1872, par laquelle la Grande Bretagne s'est engagée à détourner l'Emir de tout empiétement au delà de la zone reconnue comme se trouvant sous la domination Afghane.

Le Ministère Impérial ne doute pas que le Gouvernement Britannique n'exerce toute son influence à Caboul pour empêcher des empiétements de cette nature.

Veuillez, &c.
(Signé) GIERS.

(Translation.)

M. l'Ambassadeur, St. Petersburgh, $\frac{\text{November 19}}{\text{December 1}}$, 1876.

I HAVE had the honour to receive the note dated the $\frac{\text{30th September}}{\text{12th October}}$ of this year, in which your Excellency drew attention to the supposed dispatch of a Russian Agent to Cabul, furnished with a letter from General Kaufmann, and said to be charged to negotiate with the Ameer an offensive and defensive alliance, and also a Treaty of Commerce.

The Chancellor of the Empire has already replied to a question on this subject, addressed to our Ambassador in London by the Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty, and has categorically denied the accuracy of the above-mentioned report.

Your Excellency has since transmitted to me in a fresh note, dated the $\frac{\text{16th}}{\text{28th}}$ of this month, the translation of a letter from General Kaufmann to the Ameer of Cabul, and of a reply of the latter.

The Imperial Ministry have no knowledge of this correspondence. They have, however, at once asked General Kaufmann for information on the subject, requesting him to explain, if he can do so, the facts which may have given rise to the rumours which have reached Her Britannic Majesty's Government. Your Excellency, meanwhile, has no doubt convinced yourself that the letter of General Kaufmann mentioned in your last note contained nothing beyond a message of courtesy, and did not give evidence in any way of the existence of any political negotiation whatsoever between our authorities in Turkestan and those of Cabul.

The care which the Cabinet of London devote to watching over the strict observance of the understanding established between them and Russia in 1872 relative to Afghanistan induces the Imperial Ministry, on their side, to mention some information which has reached them from Tashkend, having reference to a simultaneous movement of troops of the Indian army, on the one hand, into the States of Ahmoud Sahib, Ruler of Swat, and of Afghan detachments, on the other hand, into Darvaz, a small independent State beyond the frontiers of Badakshan and Vakhan, and bordering on the north-east on Karategin, both provinces being vassals of the Ameer of Bokhara.

We learn at the same time that considerable armaments are taking place at Herat, in view of an expedition against the Turkomans of Merv.

If these facts received any confirmation, they would constitute a direct infraction of the understanding of 1872, by which Great Britain engaged to dissuade the Ameer from any aggression beyond the zone recognized as being under Afghan dominion.

The Imperial Ministry do not doubt that the British Government will employ all its influence at Cabul to prevent encroachments of this nature.

I have, &c.
(Signed) GIERS.

No. 93.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received December 21.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, December 16, 1876.

WITH reference to previous correspondence, I have now the honour to inclose to your Lordship copy of a note which I have received from M. de Giers, transmitting a Report in translation from General Kaufmann, in which the Governor-General of Turkestan denies energetically that he has sent any Agent or Agents to Cabul, and affirms that his relations with the Ameer of Afghanistan have been strictly confined to an exchange of civilities.

General Kaufmann further states that his letters to the Ameer once or twice a year have always been forwarded from Samarcand, through the Ameer of Bokhara, to the Governor of Balkh, by whom they were transmitted to Shere Ali Khan, and that these letters bore no other character but that of mere courtesy.

General Kaufmann protests formally against the reports which were referred to in my note to M. de Giers of the $\frac{\text{30th September}}{\text{12th October}}$ last, as being entirely without foundation.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure 1 in No. 93.

M. de Giers to Lord A. Loftus.

M. l'Ambassadeur, St. Pétersbourg, le $\frac{3}{15}$ Décembre, 1876.

A LA suite des deux notes de votre Excellence, en date du $\frac{\text{30 Septembre}}{\text{12 Octobre}}$ et $\frac{16}{28}$ Novembre, relativement aux renseignements parvenus au Gouvernement Britannique quant à l'envoi d'un prétendu Agent Russe à Caboul pour conclure un Traité d'Alliance et de Commerce avec l'Emir, j'ai déjà eu l'honneur de vous informer par ma note responsive en date du 19 Novembre, que j'ai demandé des renseignements à cet égard au General Kaufmann.

Je me fais un devoir aujourd'hui de joindre ci-près une traduction exacte de cette réponse qui vient de parvenir au Ministère Impérial.

Votre Excellence voudra bien y remarquer l'étonnement qu'inspirent au Général Kaufmann les renseignements dont le Gouvernement Britannique semble s'être ému, et dont l'exactitude est entièrement récusée par l'administration du Turkestan.

Veuillez, &c.
(Signé) GIERS.

(Translation.)

M. l'Ambassadeur, St. Petersburgh, December $\frac{3}{15}$, 1876.

WITH reference to your Excellency's two notes, dated the $\frac{\text{30th September}}{\text{12th October}}$ and the $\frac{16}{28}$th November, relative to the information which had reached the British Government respecting the despatch of a supposed Russian Agent to Cabul to conclude a Treaty of Alliance and Commerce with the Ameer, I have already had the honour to inform you, by my note in reply, dated the 19th November, that I had requested information on this subject from General Kaufmann.

I now have the honour to inclose herewith an exact translation of this reply, which has just reached the Imperial Government.

Your Excellency will notice the astonishment of General Kaufmann at the information which seems to have disturbed the British Government, and the accuracy of which is entirely denied by the Administration of Turkestan.

Accept, &c.
(Signed) GIERS.

Inclosure 2 in No. 93.

General Kaufmann to M. de Giers.

(Traduction.) Le 9 Novembre, 1876.

VOTRE Excellence a bien voulu me transmettre par sa lettre du 8 Octobre dernier traduction d'une note de l'Ambassadeur d'Angleterre près la Cour Impériale relativement à un prétendu Agent que j'aurais expedié, selon les renseignements du Gouvernement Britannique, à Caboul, pour conclure un Traité d'Alliance, offensive et défensive, ainsi qu'un Traité de Commerce.

Je crois de mon devoir d'informer votre Excellence que depuis mon entrée en fonctions de Gouverneur-Général de Turkestan, mes relations avec Shere Ali Khan se sont bornées à des échanges de politesses, et que je n'ai jamais envoyé à Caboul ni Agents ni même un seul Djiguitte.

Mes lettres ont été toujours expédiées, une ou deux fois annuellement, par l'Emir de Bokhara, qui les faisait parvenir à Caboul ou par un djiguitte de Samarcande à l'adresse du Chef de Balkh, qui les envoyait à l'Emir Afghan.

Ces communications ne portaient jamais d'autre caractère que celui de pure courtoisie, comme votre Excellence peut s'en persuader par les copies déposées au Département Asiatique.

Je m'empresse de constater à cette occasion que ma manière d'agir envers les Khanats, limitrophes ou autres, n'a jamais été un mystère pour le Ministère des Affaires Etrangères, et qu'elle a constamment répondu aux ordres suprêmes dont Sa Majesté l'Empereur a daigné me munir lors de ma nomination à mon poste.

Mes convictions personnelles n'admettent la nécessité d'aucune ruse ni d'aucun subterfuge pour l'expédition satisfaisante des affaires, et j'ose espérer qu'une longue série d'années a convaincu le Ministère Impérial de l'absence de toute intrigue politique dans mes rapports avec les Khanats Asiatiques, intrigues contraires à mon caractère personnel, aussi opposé au mensonge dans la vie politique que dans la vie privée.

Son Altesse le Chancelier de l'Empire a entièrement approuvé cette manière d'envisager nos affaires de l'Asie Centrale.

En consequence, j'ai l'honneur de prier votre Excellence de vouloir bien formellement protester contre les assertions, dénuées de toute exactitude, consignées dans la note de l'Ambassadeur de Grande Bretagne.

Je récuse tout caractère d'authenticité de la source à laquelle ces renseignements tout-à-fait erronés ont pu avoir été puisés.

Veuillez, &c.

(Translation.)

(Translation.) November 9, 1876.

YOUR Excellency was good enough to transmit to me, in your letter of the 8th October last, the translation of a note of the English Ambassador at the Imperial Court relative to a supposed Agent whom I was said to have dispatched to Cabul, according to information received by the British Government, in order to conclude a Treaty of Alliance, offensive and defensive, and also a Treaty of Commerce.

I consider it my duty to inform your Excellency that, since entering on my duties as Governor-General of Turkestan, my relations with Shere Ali Khan have been limited to interchanges of civility, and that I have never sent to Cabul either Agents or even a single Djiguitte.

My letters have always been sent, once or twice a-year, through the Ameer of Bokhara, who forwarded them to Cabul, or by a Djiguitte of Samarcand addressed to the Chief of Balkh, who sent them on to the Ameer of Afghanistan.

These communications had never any other character than one of pure courtesy, as your Excellency can convince yourself from the copies kept in the Asiatic Department.

I avail myself of this opportunity to affirm that my conduct towards the neighbouring Khanates and others has never been a mystery to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and that it has always been in accordance with the supreme orders which His Majesty the Emperor has been pleased to give me since my nomination to my post.

My personal convictions do not admit the necessity of any strategem or subterfuge for the satisfactory transaction of affairs, and I venture to hope that a long series of years has convinced the Imperial Government of the absence of any political intrigues in my relations with the Asiatic Khanates, intrigues contrary to my personal character, which is as much opposed to deception in political as in private life.

His Highness the Chancellor of the Empire has entirely approved this view of our affairs in Central Asia.

I have the honour, therefore, to beg your Excellency to be so good as to protest formally against the assertions contained in the note of the British Ambassador, which are completely without foundation.

I deny that the source from which this entirely erroneous information may have been derived can have any authentic character.

I have, &c.

No. 94.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, December 27, 1876.

HER Majesty's Government approve the language which your Excellency held to M. de Giers respecting the necessity of instructing General Kaufmann to abstain from sending agents to Cabul and from entering into official communication with the Ameer of Afghanistan, as reported in your despatch of the 6th instant.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 95.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received January 15.)

My Lord, India Office, January 13, 1877.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to forward herewith, to be laid before Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copy of a letter from the Government of India, with inclosed Diaries of the British Agent at Cabul from the 17th October to the 16th November last.

In transmitting these papers I am directed to request that Lord Derby's particular attention may be invited to those passages in the Diaries of the 20th and 27th October and 7th November, which relate to the treatment of Mirza Mahomed Yusaf Khan, Mervi, the Russian Envoy at Cabul, and the arrival in Afghanistan of the bearer of a further letter from General Kaufmann to the Ameer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 95.

The Government of India to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Fort William, December 8, 1876.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, urther papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

The attention of Her Majesty's Government is invited to the 4th paragraph of the Diary of the 20th to the 23rd October, 1876, regarding the bestowal of a khillat upon the Russian Envoy at Cabul.

We have, &c.
(Signed) H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.

Inclosure 2 in No. 95.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Thornton.

October 28, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 20th to the 23rd October, 1876, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 20th to the 23rd October, 1876, inclusive.

On the 19th instant, at 7 P.M., when the new moon was seen, the Durbar had a salute of eleven guns fired in celebration of the "Id-ul-fitar," and with the permission of the Ameer the following khillats were sent to the Agency Office:—

For the British Agent—
One Cashmeri abrah.
" " shawl.
" " abrah kamarbund.

For Munshi Bakhtiar Khan—
One Cashmeri abrah.
" " shawl.

For one servant of the British Agent—
One embroidered broadcloth chogha.
" " lungi.

The following khillats have been granted on this occasion to the Russian Envoy, Mirza Mahomed Yusaf Khan, Mervi, and to the two Bokhara Envoys:—

To the Russian Envoy—
One Cashmeri abrah chogha.
„ „ shawl.
„ „ abrah kamarbund.

To each Bokhara Envoy—
One Cashmeri abrah chogha.
„ „ shawl.
„ „ abrah kamarbund.
Four dresses for four servants.

Inclosure 3 in No. 95.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Thornton.

October 31, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 24th to the 26th October, 1876, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 24th to the 26th October, 1876, inclusive.

The day before yesterday Moonshee Bakhtiar Khan waited on the Ameer in his private apartment to ask after his health, and His Highness observed that it appeared from letters received from Bokhara that probably the Russians had commenced to collect supplies in Charjoi with a view to undertaking an expedition against Merv-i-Shahjehan; that they had indented for about 4,000 camels, ponies, and carts on Tashkend and Urganj, and intended to attack Merv-i-Shahjehan in the coming winter. Also that the Turkomans make preparations for defence.

Inclosure 4 in No. 95.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Thornton.

November 4, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 27th to the 30th October, 1876, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 27th to the 30th October, 1876, inclusive.

Mirza Mahomed Yusaf Khan, Mervi, the Russian Envoy, receives cooked food twice a day for himself and grass and grain for his horses from the Durbar, but lately 500 rupees has been sent to him for fruit and other expenses. It is reported that he sends several news-letters secretly to Bokhara through traders, and thence his letters are forwarded to Samarcand and Tashkend, and that he is more able and efficient than the former Russian Envoy, Mirza Abdool Karim Khan.

Inclosure 5 in No. 95.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Thornton.

November 14, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 7th to the 9th November, 1876, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 7th to the 9th November, 1876, inclusive.

It appeared that the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan had deputed his Peshkhidmat, Mulla Saifulla, with a murrasilla to the Ameer that the Governor of amarcand had forwarded the Mulla with a letter from his own part to the Naib of urkestan (Balkh); that he (the Mulla) had arrived at Mazar-i-Sharif, and Naib Sherdil han had sent orders from Sar-i-pul to the Governor of Balkh to send him with a trusted fficial to Cabul. The Naib has submitted the letter of the Governor of Samarcand to the meer.

Inclosure 6 in No. 95.

The President in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

Calcutta, December 1, 1876.

CABUL Diary of 9th reports deputation by General Kaufmann of another Agent with letter to Ameer.

Inclosure 7 in No. 95.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Thornton.

November 17, 1876.

SUBMITS copy of translation of Cabul Diary from the 10th to the 13th November, 1876, inclusive.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 10th to the 13th November, 1876, inclusive.

It is reported that the Governor of Turkestan has written (to the Ameer) on the authority of a rumour that the Russians are collecting supplies in Charjoi with a view to making an attack on Merv-i-Shahjehan; that a guard of 3,000 troops has been summoned from Samarcand to Charjoi; that they (the Russians) intimated their wish to the Mir of Kirki to visit his territory to ascertain the depth of the Oxus, but the Mir expressed regret that his people would be opposed to their coming, and that consequently they have abandoned their intention of visiting Kirki. This report requires confirmation; inquiries will be made and result communicated.

No. 96.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, January 19, 1877.

I TRANSMIT herewith a copy of a letter from the Government of India,* inclosing Diaries of the British Agent at Cabul from the 17th October to the 16th November last; and I have to instruct your Excellency to call the attention of the Russian Government to those passages in the Diaries of the 20th and 27th October and the 7th November which relate to the treatment of Mirza Mahomed Yusuf Khan, Mervi, the Russian Envoy at Cabul, and the arrival in Afghanistan of the bearer of a further letter from General Kaufmann to the Ameer.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 97.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received January 31.)

My Lord, India Office, January 27, 1877.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 22nd and 26th December last, forwarding two despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, inclosing respectively the formal reply of the Russian Foreign Office to Lord A. Loftus' note of the 12th October, relative to the correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer of Cabul, and the explanation which General Kaufmann has furnished to his Government on the same subject.

* No. 95.

Lord Salisbury observes from these papers that the statement that Russian agents have been sent to Cabul with the object of negotiating a Treaty with the Ameer is denied both by the Russian Government and General Kaufmann, and that it is asserted that the General's communications have been merely letters of courtesy sent through the Ameer of Bokhara.

Lord Salisbury has received the assurance given on the first point with satisfaction, but he cannot accept as correct the general view of the correspondence taken by the Russian Government without referring to earlier communications; it is impossible to regard as a mere letter of courtesy General Kaufmann's letter of February last, which contained a detailed account of the Russian conquest of Khokand with justificatory remarks of a suggestive character; while as regards the allegation that the bearers of the different letters have not been Russian agents, but messengers employed by the Ameer of Bokhara, it is enough to observe that they have been viewed at Cabul in the former light, and treated accordingly. The fact that the character, both of the letters and of their bearers, is open to such misconstruction is, in Lord Salisbury's opinion, a sufficient reason for the issue by the Russian Government to General Kaufmann of orders to altogether discontinue his communications to the Ameer.

In his note of the 1st December M. de Giers, after dealing with the immediate subject under discussion, mentions certain statements which have been reported to the Imperial Government from Tashkend, and which he considers of a nature to justify that Government in calling for explanation in its turn from the Government of Her Majesty. These statements are that a simultaneous movement of British troops into the territory of the Ruler of Swat, and of Afghan detachments into Darwaz, a State vassal to Bokhara, either has been, or is about to be, made; and that Afghan armaments are preparing at Herat, in view to an expedition against the Turkomans of Merv.

Lord Salisbury considers that some explanation should be obtained from Prince Gortchakoff of the reference to the alleged British expedition against Swat, which is a valley in the immediate vicinity of Peshawur, on the southern side of the Hindu-Kush, inhabited by tribes whom the Indian Government has often been compelled to punish, but with whom at present it is not on bad terms. In any case his Lordship is at a loss to understand how such a movement, even were it contemplated, could be regarded as a breach of the Agreement of 1872, between the Russian and British Governments, which had reference solely to the relations of the former Government with Afghanistan, and the general obligation which the British Government accepted to use its influence with the Ameer to deter him from aggressive movements beyond his recognized borders. The influence of the Government of India has been consistently exercised to that end. No information has reached this Office, nor is there any reason to believe, either that the Ameer contemplates aggression on Darwaz, or that the preparations which have been for some time past in progress at Herat are in any way directed against the Turkomans of Merv. On this subject, however, the Government of India has been asked for information.

Lord Salisbury would suggest, for Lord Derby's consideration, that Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh should be instructed to reply to M. Giers' notes in the sense of the foregoing remarks.

I am directed to add that the previous correspondence on this subject, as well as your letters under reply, with their inclosures, have been forwarded for the information of the Government of India.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

No. 98.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received February 3, 1877.)

My Lord, Tehran, December 19, 1876.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship translation of a letter which I have received from the Mission Agent at Asterabad, in which he reports that General Llamakin had returned from Khiva and was encamped at a spot about thirty-two miles from Kizil Arvad, the most westerly station of the Téké tribes of Akhal.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 98.

The Asterabad Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) November 21, 1876

ON the 11th October Mahomed Koolee Khan, Chief of the Jaafer Baee Turkomans, addressed a petition to the Prince Governor, saying that the Yar Ali tribe represent that their object in being hostile was that Suleiman Khan, the former Governor of Asterabad, should be dismissed, and now that he is no longer Governor they are ready to tender their allegiance and submission and pay 11 tomans for each family. The Prince Governor has apparently agreed to this arrangement, but the other local authorities say that they ought to pay 25 tomans per family on account of the losses sustained by the people of Asterabad.

The Prince Governor has appointed Hassan Ali Meerza Acting Governor of Asterabad. Suleiman Khan, the ex-Governor, will leave for Tehran in a day or two, and it has been arranged that his creditors are to accompany him and get their money there.

On the 10th instant Mahomed Hoossein Khan, Chief of the Goklan tribe of Turkomans, with 100 of the Elders, arrived at Asterabad and proceeded to the Prince Governor's camp to arrange about paying the annual revenue, bringing the horses for the Prince Governor. His Royal Highness has fixed the revenue at 6,000 tomans per annum, and appointed Meerza Ali Nehher Khan, Serteep of Tindinsh, to be the Daraogha* of the said tribe on the part of the Government, and having presented each of the Elders with a dress of honour, he dismissed them to their homes.

The native merchants who have recently returned from Moscow and Nijni Novgorod state that a considerable quantity of ammunition had been brought to Bakou for transmission to Tiflis, and there was a rumour that Russia intends going to war with Turkey.

General Llamakin has recently returned from Khiva, and is at present encamped eight farsakhs distant from Kizil Arvad. The Russians have covered in a large vessel at Ashoorada, so that, in case of any storm or inundation, those who reside at Ashoorada may take refuge in it.

The exports to Russia from Gez and Meshedi Sur were 5,000,000 roubles last year, but this year they have decreased, and the person who has farmed the Custom-house complains that he has lost about 10,000 tomans on this and other accounts.

No. 99.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, February 7, 1877.

WITH reference to your despatches of the 6th and of the 16th December, 1876, inclosing respectively the formal reply of the Russian Government relative to the correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer of Cabul, and the explanation which General Kaufmann has furnished to his Government on the same subject, Her Majesty's Government observe that the statement that Russian Agents have been sent to Cabul with the object of negotiating a Treaty with the Ameer is denied both by the Russian Government and General Kaufmann, and that it is asserted that the General's communications have been merely letters of courtesy sent through the Ameer of Bokhara.

Her Majesty's Government have received the assurance on the first point with satisfaction, but they cannot accept as correct the general view of the correspondence taken by the Russian Government. Without referring to earlier communications, it is impossible to regard as a mere letter of courtesy General Kaufmann's letter of February last, which contained a detailed account of the Russian conquest of Khokand, with justificatory remarks of a suggestive character, while, as regards the allegation that the bearers of the different letters have not been Russian Agents but messengers employed by the Ameer of Bokhara, it is enough to observe that they have been viewed at Cabul in the former light, and treated accordingly.

The fact that the character both of the letters and of their bearers is open to such misconstruction is a sufficient reason for the issue by the Russian Government to General Kaufmann of orders to altogether discontinue his communications to the Ameer.

In his note of the 1st December M. Giers, after dealing with the immediate subject under discussion, mentions certain statements which have been reported to the Imperia Government from Tashkend, and which he considers of a nature to justify that Government in calling for explanation in its turn from the Government of Her Majesty.

* Agent.

108677

These statements are that a simultaneous movement of British troops into the territory of the Ruler of Swat, and of Afghan detachments into Darwaz, a State vassal to Bokhara, either has been or is about to be made; and that Afghan armaments are preparing at Herat in view to an expedition against the Turkomans of Merv.

Her Majesty's Government consider that some explanations should be obtained from Prince Gortchakow of the reference to the alleged British expedition against Swat, which is a valley in the immediate vicinity of Peshawur, on the southern side of the Hindoo Kush, inhabited by tribes whom the Indian Government has often been compelled to punish, but with whom at present it is not on bad terms.

In any case, Her Majesty's Government are at a loss to understand how such a movement, even were it contemplated, could be regarded as a breach of the Agreement of 1872, between the Russian and British Governments, which had reference solely to the relations of the former Government with Afghanistan, and the general obligation which the British Government accepted to use its influence with the Ameer to deter him from aggressive movements beyond his recognized borders. The influence of the Government of India has been consistently exercised to that end. No information has reached Her Majesty's Government, nor is there any reason to believe either that the Ameer contemplates aggression on Darwaz, or that the preparations which have been for some time past in progress at Herat are in any way directed against the Turkomans of Merv. On this subject, however, the Government of India has been asked for information.

I have to instruct your Excellency to reply to M. Giers' notes in the sense of the foregoing remarks.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 100.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received February 19.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, February 14, 1877.

ON the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 19th ultimo, and in conformity with its instructions, I took an early opportunity to speak to M. de Giers on the subject of the continued presence of a Russian Envoy at Cabul, of his receiving presents from the Ameer, and of the announcement of the expected arrival of the bearer of a further letter from General Kaufmann. I left in his Excellency's hands the inclosed copy of the extracts from the Cabul Diaries relating to this subject as an aide-memoire, and his Excellency promised me to inquire into the matter.

M. de Giers called on me yesterday and, in reply to my inquiry, stated that the name given in the Cabul Diaries of the reputed Russian Agent was the same as that mentioned by General Kaufmann, but his Excellency said that he was not personally employed by General Kaufmann, nor was he personally known to him. The letter of which he was the bearer had been sent by General Kaufmann to the Ameer of Bokhara for transmission to Balkh, from thence it was forwarded to the Ameer at Cabul.

The agent in question was the mere bearer of a letter, was neither selected by, nor personally known to General Kaufmann, and consequently was in no way authorized to assume the character of a Russian Agent or Envoy at Cabul.

M. de Giers stated that he had sent a copy of the extracts from the Cabul Diaries which I had given him to General Kaufmann, and had observed to him that the assumed character at Cabul of a Russian Envoy by this messenger was incorrect, liable to misconception, and consequently to be guarded against for the future.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 100.

Extract from "Cabul Diary" of October 20, 1876.

THE following khillats were granted on this occasion (October 19th) to the Russian Envoy, Mirza Mohamed Yusaf Khan, Mervi, and to the two Bokhara Envoys :—

The Russian Envoy—
1 Cashmeri abrah choga.
1 „ shawl.
1 „ abrah kamarbund.

To each Bokhara Envoy—
1 Cashmere abrah choga.
1 „ shawl.
1 „ abrah kamarbund.
4 dresses for four servants.

Extract from "Cabul Diary" of October 27, 1876.

Mirza Mohamed Yusaf Khan, Mervi, the Russian Envoy, receives cooked food twice a day for himself, and grass and grain for his horses from the Durbar, but lately 500 rupees has been sent to him for fruit and other expenses. It is reported that he sends several news-letters secretly to Bokhara through traders, and thence his letters are forwarded to Samarcand and Tashkend, and that he is more able and efficient than the former Russian Envoy, Mirza Abdool Karim Khan.

Extract from "Cabul Diary" of November 7, 1876.

It appeared that the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan had deputed his Peshkidmat, Mulla Saifulla, with a murrasila to the Ameer, that the Government of Samarcand had forwarded the Mulla with a letter from his own part to the Naib of Turkestan (Balkh), that he (the Mulla) had arrived at Mazar-a-Sharaff, and Naib Sherdil Khan had sent orders from Sar-i-pul to the Governor of Balkh to send him with a trusted official to Cabul. The Naib has submitted the letter of the Governor of Samarcand to the Ameer.

No. 101.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received March 5.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, February 22, 1877.

IN conformity with the instructions of your Lordship's despatch of the 7th instant, I have addressed a note to M. de Giers on the subject of the correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer of Afghanistan, in which I have embodied the substance of your Lordship's despatch, and of which I have the honour to annex a copy.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 101.

Lord A. Loftus to M. de Giers.

M. le Conseiller Privé, St. Petersburgh, February 22, 1877.

I HAVE not failed to transmit to the Earl of Derby, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copies of your Excellency's notes of the $\frac{19\text{th November}}{1\text{st December}}$ and $\frac{3\text{rd}}{15\text{th}}$ December, 1876, relating to the correspondence between General Kaufmann, Governor-General of Turkestan, and the Ameer of Afghanistan, as also a copy of the explanation which General Kaufmann has furnished to the Imperial Government on the same subject.

Her Majesty's Government observe that the statement that Russian Agents have been sent to Cabul with the object of negotiating a Treaty with the Ameer is denied by the Russian Government and General Kaufmann, and that it is asserted that the General's communications have been merely letters of courtesy sent through the Ameer of Bokhara.

Her Majesty's Government have received the assurance on the first point with satisfaction, but they cannot accept as correct the general view of the correspondence taken by the Russian Government, without referring to earlier communications.

It is impossible to regard as a mere letter of courtesy General Kaufmann's letter of February last to the Ameer of Afghanistan, which contained a detailed account of the Russian conquest of Khokand, with justificatory remarks of a suggestive character, while, as regards the allegation that the bearers of the different letters have not been Russian Agents, but messengers employed by the Ameer of Bokhara, it is enough to observe that they have been viewed at Cabul in the former light, and treated accordingly.

Your Excellency will no doubt agree in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, that the fact that the character both of the letters and their bearers is open to such misconstruction, is a sufficient reason for the discontinuance of such communications to the Ameer, and that, with a view in future to prevent any such misconstructions, General Kaufmann should be instructed to avoid giving rise to it.

After treating the question of the correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer of Cabul, your Excellency mentions certain statements which have been reported to the Imperial Government from Tashkend, and which your Excellency considers are of a nature to justify the Imperial Government in calling for explanations, in its turn, from the Government of Her Majesty.

These statements are, that a simultaneous movement of British troops into the territory of the Ruler of Swat, and of Afghan detachments into Darwaez, a State vassal to Bokhara, either has been, or is about to be made, and that Afghan armaments are preparing at Herat in view to an expedition against the Turkomans of Merv.

Her Majesty's Government are desirous of obtaining from the Imperial Government some explanations with reference to the alleged expedition against Swat (alluded to in your Excellency's note), which is a valley in the immediate vicinity of Peshawur on the southern side of the Hindu Kush, inhabited by tribes whom the Indian Government has been often compelled to punish, but with whom at present it is not on bad terms.

In any case, Her Majesty's Government are at a loss to understand how such a movement, even were it contemplated, could be regarded as a breach of the Agreement of 1872, between the British and Russian Governments, which has reference solely to the relations of the latter Government with Afghanistan, and the general obligation which the British Government accepted to use its influence with the Ameer to deter him from aggressive movements beyond his recognized borders.

The influence of the Government of India has been consistently exercised to that end.

No information has reached Her Majesty's Government, nor is there any reason to believe, either that the Ameer contemplates aggression on Darwaez, or that the preparations which have been for some time past in progress at Herat are in any way directed against the Turkomans of Merv. On this subject, however, the Government of India has been asked for information.

Her Majesty's Government are convinced that a frank and cordial exchange of opinions between the two Governments on all questions relating to Central Asia will best contribute to their mutual interests, and to the maintenance of those friendly relations so happily subsisting between them.

I avail, &c.
(Signed) A. LOFTUS.

No. 102.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, March 7, 1877.

HER Majesty's Government approve your Excellency's note to M. de Giers on the subject of the correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer of Afghanistan, a copy of which is inclosed in your despatch of the 22nd ultimo.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 103.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received March 20.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, March 15, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship herewith copy of a note which I have received from M. de Giers, Assistant Minister for Foreign Affairs, in reply to the note which I had addressed to his Excellency on the $\frac{10\text{th}}{22\text{nd}}$ February, in conformity with the instructions of your Lordship's despatch of the 7th ultimo.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 103.

M. de Giers to Lord A. Loftus.

M. l'Ambassadeur, St. Pétersbourg, le $\frac{21\text{ Février}}{5\text{ Mars}}$, 1877.

J'AI eu l'honneur de recevoir la note que votre Excellence a bien voulu m'adresser en date du $\frac{10}{22}$ Fevrier.

Le Ministère Impérial partage entièrement l'avis du Gouvernement Britannique qu'un échange d'opinions franc et cordial dans les questions de l'Asie Centrale ne saurait que contribuer au maintien des bonnes et amicales relations actuellement établies entre la Russie et l'Angleterre.

C'est dans cet ordre d'idées qu'il a cru pouvoir donner dans les notes du $\frac{19\text{ Novembre}}{1\text{ Décembre}}$ et du $\frac{3}{15}$ Décembre, auxquelles votre Excellence se réfère, l'assurance que la Russie n'avait essayé de conclure aucun arrangement commercial ou politique avec l'Emir de Caboul, et que les rares relations de nos autorités de l'Asie Centrale avec ce dernier n'avaient jamais eu qu'un caractère de pure courtoisie, conforme aux usages locaux en Orient. En renouvelant aujourd'hui ces assurances, le Ministère Impérial espère que le Gouvernement Britannique voudra bien reconnaître que nous ne nous en sommes pas écartés en pratique, quelque soit, d'ailleurs, l'interprétation erronnée que les communications du Général Kaufmann aient pu recevoir de la part des Gouvernements indigènes Asiatiques et la fausse importance qu'on ait prêtée aux modes de transmission dont il a fait usage. Des malentendus à cet égard étaient presque inévitables vu le caractère peu sûr des populations indigènes de l'Asie Centrale et leur penchant invétéré pour l'intrigue; la seule manière efficace de combattre ce danger réside, selon nous, dans la bonne foi et la loyauté qui, nous aimons à le croire, ne manqueront jamais de présider de part et d'autre à tout échange d'idées entre nous et le Cabinet Britannique.

En réponse au désir exprimé par Lord Derby de connaître à quelle source avait été puisée la nouvelle de quelques mouvements de troupes Indo-Anglaises contre Souat, le Ministère Impérial s'empresse d'informer votre Excellence que ce renseignement ne reposait que sur des bruits parvenus à nos autorités de l'Asie Centrale et auxquels nous avons été loin d'accorder une valeur exaggérée. Le Ministère Impérial accueille, d'autre part, avec une vive satisfaction les assertions contenues dans la note de votre Excellence qu'aucun mouvement militaire dans ces parages ne saurait être dirigé de manière à constituer une infraction à l'entente de 1872 entre la Russie et l'Angleterre, et que le Gouvernement Britannique continue à exercer son influence sur l'Emir de Caboul dans le but de le détourner, conformément à l'entente susmentionnée, de toute tentative en dehors de la région assignée à son action légitime.

Nous nous faisons un devoir de reconnaître, en même temps, avec reconnaissance l'empressement du Gouvernement Britannique à demander au Gouvernement des Indes des informations relativement à des entreprises quelconques médités par l'Emir Afghan dans le Derwaz, ou contre les Turcomans de Merv, entreprises au sujet desquelles aucun indice propre à nous inspirer des craintes ne semble jusqu'ici être parvenu au Cabinet de Londres.

Veuillez, &c.

(Signé) GIERS.

(Translation.)

M. l'Ambassadeur, St. Petersburgh, $\frac{\text{February } 21}{\text{March } 5}$, 1877.

I HAVE had the honour to receive the note which your Excellency was good enough to address to me, dated the $\frac{10\text{th}}{22\text{nd}}$ February.

The Imperial Government entirely share the opinion of the British Government that a frank and cordial interchange of opinions on the question of Central Asia cannot do otherwise than contribute to the maintenance of the good and friendly relations at present established between Russia and England.

With this view they felt ready to give, in the notes of the $\frac{19\text{th November}}{1\text{st December}}$ and the $\frac{3\text{rd}}{15\text{th}}$ December, to which your Excellency refers, the assurance that Russia had not endeavoured to conclude any arrangement, commercial or political, with the Ameer of Cabul, and that the rare relations of our authorities in Central Asia with the latter had never borne any other character than one of pure courtesy, in conformity with local usages in the East. While now renewing these assurances, the Imperial Government hope the British Government will recognize that practically we have never swerved from them, whatever may have been the erroneous interpretations placed by the native Asiatic Governments on the communications of General Kaufmann, and whatever false importance may have been attributed to the method of transmission adopted by him. Misunderstandings on this subject were nearly inevitable, considering the uncertain character of the native populations of Central Asia, and their inveterate inclination to intrigue; the only effective way, in our opinion, of meeting this danger, lies in the good faith and loyalty which, we are glad to think, will never cease to influence, on either side, any interchange of views between us and the British Cabinet.

In reply to the desire expressed by Lord Derby to know from what source we derived the information of some movements of Anglo-Indian troops against Swat, the Imperial Government loses no time in informing your Excellency that this information was only based on rumours which reached our authorities in Central Asia, and to which we were far from giving an exaggerated value. The Imperial Government has received, on the other hand, with sincere satisfaction, the assertions contained in your Excellency's note, that no military movement in these countries could be conducted in such a manner as to constitute an infraction of the understanding of 1872 between Russia and England, and that the British Government continue to use their influence with the Ameer of Cabul, with the view of dissuading him, in accordance with the above-mentioned understanding, from any attempt outside of the region assigned to his legitimate action.

We beg at the same time to recognize, with thanks, the promptitude shown by the British Government in requesting information from the Indian Government respecting any undertakings meditated by the Ameer of Afghanistan in Darvaz, or against the Turkomans of Merv, undertakings with regard to which no indication of a nature to alarm us seems to have reached the Cabinet of London.

Accept, &c.
(Signed) GIERS.

No. 104.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received April 8.)

My Lord, Tehran, February 19, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith translation of a letter addressed to me by the Mission Agent at Asterabad, in which he reports the return to Krasnovodsk of General Llamakin from Organj, and states that the object of his recent expedition was said to have been to ascertain the practicability of turning the River Oxus into its ancient bed, and thereby opening up direct water communication from the Caspian.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 104.

The Asterabad Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) January 21, 1877.

THE weather is very mild, and there are no signs of winter. Provisions are rather high in price, but that is on account of the Moharrem and the presence of the camp.

The Prince Governor is at present encamped at Shoogal Teppeh, and engaged in recovering the revenue from the Turkomans of the Kejek Tantaur and Kaun Yookmaz, who have never been paid a farthing of revenue up till now. They have agreed to pay 4 tomans a family to the Prince Governor.

The fact is this, that till the present day no Governor has been so successful in recovering the revenue in this manner from the Turkoman families.

On the 29th December intelligence was received, both from the sea and the Turkoman plains, that General Llamakin and his suite have returned to Krasnovodsk. This time he went as far as Organj, and his object was to inspect and ascertain whether it would be possible to turn the Geihoon River into its former bed, so that its waters may flow into the Caspian at Krasnovodsk. For should the said river be turned into its former bed it will become navigable as far as four stations from Bokhara.

On the 30th December the Russian Commodore sent thirty Persian captives, released from Khiva, to the Acting Governor of Asterabad. On the 1st instant it was telegraphed from Tehran that the Russian Consul had been made Grand Officer of the Order of the Lion and Sun, and that the Vice-Consul had also received the Fourth Class of the same Order.

The Russian Consul has informed the local authorities that, from the beginning of the Russian new year, all duties at the Custom-house will be levied in gold currency, and not in any other money. It is also reported that the Russian railway has been constructed in Turkestan as far as Orum, which is near Bokhara.

No. 105.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received April 25.)

My Lord, Tehran, March 16, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to transmit translation of a further news letter from the Mission Agent at Meshed.

Nothing appears to be known here by the Persian Government respecting the communications said by the Agent's correspondents at Boojnoord to have passed between certain Chiefs of the Akhal tribes and the Russian authorities.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 105.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) March 1, 1877.

ABOUT the middle of February, about 1,000 Turkomans of Merv, horse and foot, set out with the intention of making a raid on Deragez. The Elders of Merv, on hearing this, followed and dissuaded them, on the grounds that a number of their Chiefs and Elders were yet at Meshed. They all returned, with the exception of 100 horsemen who would not obey. These made a raid on the Zangat Loo tribe of Deragez, and carried off a considerable number of sheep, with ten or twelve captives.

Allahyar Khan, the Governor, on hearing of the raid, sent a number of horsemen to overtake the marauders. These horsemen came up to the Turkomans near Tezen, and a severe conflict took place. Thirteen of the robbers were killed, and twelve captured, with twenty horses, the sheep and Persian captives also being rescued.

A correspondent at Boojnoord wrote to me on the 30th January that Sirdar Eivez Tookhma, accompanied by several other of the Akhal Chiefs, recently proceeded on a mission to the Russians. They were well received, and khelats were given to all of them, and they tendered their submission.

According to later accounts, the ten or twelve Téké forts which lie between Kizzil Arvad and Kara Kan and Darvan, have submitted to the Russians and agreed to obey whenever the Russians send their Agent.

Hajji Shah Mohammed Khan arrived here yesterday with about twenty of the Akhal Elders.

Sirdar Eyub Khan is at Meshed. Some days ago Peer Mohammed Khan, his Agent at Tehran, wrote to him that the Sefet Salar had told him that a coolness exists between England and Afghanistan.

No. 106.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received April 25.)

(Extract.) Tehran, March 22, 1877.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 16th instant, I have the honour to report that information has reached me from a trustworthy source of the submission to Russia of several of the Chiefs of the Akhal Turkomans, and the proposed despatch of a military expedition by General Llamakin, with the intention of occupying Kizil Arvad and Bameh Boormeh, and constructing forts there.

No. 107.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received May 25.)

My Lord, Tehran, April 17, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith, for your Lordship's information, translation of a Proclamation issued by General Llamakin to the Yemoot Turkoman Chiefs.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 107.

Proclamation in Turkish issued by the Russian General Llamakin to the Jaafer Baee Turkomans, and translated into English from the Persian Version.

IT is made known to all the families, Elders, Ketkhodas, Chiefs, and old and young of the Charvas, that is to say, the Yemoot tribe of the Jaafer Baees, who every year and at all times come and reside on the banks of the Attrek within the dominions of the Emperor of Russia; first to Yar Ali Kazee, Aranz Ali Beg, Andeenah Vatee Moolla, Yagaun Mohammed, Allahverdee Moolla, Vatee Mohammed Chakaun, Sattar Maust, Tokkan Karrauveel, Andeenah Aranz Moolla, Siyoon, Mohammed Andeenah Bai, Hajji Bai, Omar, Teecheh, Siyoon Akh, Jooja Kootee, Sheidai Beg, Boorchak Khan, Feizee Bai, Mohammed Kootee Kalta, Saltan, Valee Bai, Daz Nafass Ousta, Andeenah Mohammed, Kooshtee Bai, Ata Mohammed, Ata Khan, Kooljee Bai, Penah Ousta, Beg Jan, Vatee, Dadak, Nefess, Mohammed Andeenah, Karacheh, Autau Bai, Daz Nazar Bai, Koorban Mohammed Bai, Tekka Kizzil, Andeenah Mohammed Kizil, Koofak Bai, Jooja Bauba Moolla, Barkalee Man, Aranz Doodee Shahoo, that as you are aware, the Téké tribes are always plundering and robbing the Yemoots who reside in our neighbourhood, also the Yemoots of Khiva, and they are always killing the members of these tribes, and making captives of your children, and carrying off your camels and sheep. They are constantly engaged in plundering on the routes which we have newly opened between Khiva and Shah Kadam (Krasnovodsk).

Up till now we have endeavoured to impress upon the Téké tribes that they must not annoy those Turkomans who reside in the lands of the Emperor of Russia. We have done our utmost in this respect, for we will never allow that any Turkoman tribes who are living under the protection of the Emperor of Russia should be ill-treated by the others. We are striving that they may be free from all ill-usage on the part of the Téké tribes, and that no one should dare to interfere with our caravans which are travelling to and fro.

Notwithstanding this, those tribes did not listen to us, nor did they accept our advice, and as they have again taken to plundering and annoying you and my other neighbours just as they did at first, this time I have received orders from the Emperor to march upon the Téké tribes with troops, and to erect a fort at Kizil Ervad, and to keep a permanent garrison there. I have therefore sent this paper amongst you, and have given orders to my special servants, the Khans and the Ketkhodas, who will apprize you of the same. I require of you, my good servants, the Khans and the Ketkhodas, that for this expedition against the Tékés, you, who are the Jaafer (Baee) tribe, will give 500 camels and receive their hire. I also require 500 camels from the Ak Atabais. The hire of each camel, you know, is half a rouble per diem, and the pay of a camel driver also half a rouble per diem, each camel driver will have six camels to keep, and to each horseman I will allow ten roubles per mensem.

I have to express my greatest satisfaction to those who formerly supplied camels for the expedition to Khiva. For this expedition, also, I am in great hopes that you will provide 500 camels for myself and troops. These camels must be ready in a month and a half from this time. If those who provided camels on former occasions lost some of their beasts, yet they also profited by the transaction, and can therefore replace the camels they then lost out of the money they received for hire. Whoever assists me in this expedition, and gives camels, I will reckon him amongst my friends. Those who assisted us request that they may be taken into our Emperor's service, and they will be honoured with favours and kindness on part of the Emperor, and will always (be allowed) to reside in the Emperor's territory. Should these people not assist the Emperor and myself in the present undertaking, and refuse to provide camels; they must not expect any honours and favours from the Emperor, and I will never permit them to reside on the banks of the Attrek within the Emperor's dominions. Therefore, when I have finished the (building of the) Fort of Kizzil Ervad, I will return and strenuously endeavour to drive them from the banks of the Attrek. We have no confidence in such people who will give us no assistance in this matter, that we should allow them to remain in the Emperor's dominions. Our Agents will each separately notify the above to your people.

16 Sefer, 1294 (February 16, 1877.)

(Signed) GERASNADERINSKY.

No. 108.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 1.)

My Lord, Tehran, April 28, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to inclose, for your Lordship's information, translation of a report from the Meshed Agent, in which he gives further details of the Russian movement at Kizzil Arvad.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 108.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) April 17, 1877.

A CORRESPONDENT at Boojnoord writes that the Russian (General) who is at Krasnovodsk has summoned the (Turkoman) Elders of Kizzil Arvad. They went to him, and after much discussion it was arranged that the people of Kizzil Arvad should become Russian subjects, which they did, and that they should give 5,000 camels as a result of their allegiance. The Russian General will leave Krasnovodsk on the 5th April for Kizzil Arvad. His troops are not more than 5,000 or 6,000 men, and he intends building a fort at Kizzil Arvad.

No. 109.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 5.)

My Lord, Tehran, May 12, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to inclose translation of a letter from the Meshed Agent, reporting that the son of Kousheed Khan, the Chief of the Merv Téké Turkomans, when returning from Herat with his followers, where he had apparently been to offer the allegiance of his tribe to the Afghan Government, had been attacked and captured by the Saryk Turkomans.

He also states that the Akhals of Bam, Boormeh, and Kizzil Ervad had submitted to the Russians.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 109.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) April 30, 1877.

RECENTLY several people came in from Herat and Candahar, but they brought no news except that of the coolness existing between the British authorities and Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

Behbood Khan, the Governor of Khelat, has reported to the Prince Governor that, whilst the son of Kousheed Khan was returning with about eighty of the Elders from Herat, where he had gone on a mission to offer his allegiance, and that of his tribe, to Ameer Shere Ali Khan, and to make arrangements on the same subject, he was attacked by 300 of the Saryk tribe, who had laid in wait for him and his party. After fighting and losing five or six lives on both sides, Kousheed Khan's son and party were obliged to surrender to the Saryks, who took them as captives to their encampments.

He and his followers had been very well received at Herat, and they were returning in high spirits, having received presents and dresses of honour, when they were attacked and carried off by the Saryk Turkomans.

I hear from Boojnoord that the Russians were to have come to Kizzil Ervad on the 5th instant from Krasnovodsk, at which date they did not arrive; but it now appears that they will do so on the 24th instant. The Téké Turkomans residing at Bam, Boormeh, and Kizzil Ervad, have submitted to the Russians, as they had no means of resisting.

No. 110.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 9.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, June 4, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith the official Bulletins from the seat of war, published since the date of my despatch of the 1st instant.

In the Bulletin from the Caucasus, of yesterday's date, the Commander-in-chief reports having received intelligence from General Llamakin that he had been attacked at Kizil Arvat by 6,000 Tékés; that the combat lasted four hours, when the Tékés fled, having sustained great losses, the Russians losing one man killed and eleven wounded.

After the fight General Llamakin reports that the Khans and Elders tendered their submission, and that since the 27th May all was going on favourably.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 110.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of $\frac{\text{May } 23}{\text{June } 4}$, 1877.

Télégramme de Son Altesse Impériale Mgr. le Grand Duc Commandant-en-chef de l'Armée du Caucase, en date du $\frac{22 \text{ Mai}}{3 \text{ Juin}}$, 1877.

LE Général Llamakin écrit que son détachement a été attaqué le 12 Mai à Kizyl-Arvat par une troupe de .6,000 Tékés. Le combat a duré quatre heures et les Tékés se sont enfuis après avoir essuyé de très-grandes pertes. Nous avons eu un homme tué et onze blessés. Après cet engagement les khans et les anciens sont venus faire leur soumission et depuis le 15 Mai tout va bien dans le détachement.

No. 111.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received June 12.)

(Extract.) India Office, June 12, 1877.

WITH reference to this Office letter of the 27th January last, on the subject of the correspondence between General Kaufmann and the Ameer of Cabul, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, for Lord Derby's information, copy of a letter from the Government of India in reply to a reference made to that Government in regard to an alleged movement of Afghan troops against Darwaz, to which allusion was made by M. de Giers in the note addressed by him to Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh on the 1st December, 1876.

Lord Derby will observe that the Government of India have heard of no such movement, and that the Mirakhor Amad Khan, a high official of the Cabul Government, lately at Peshawur, had likewise heard of none.

Inclosure in No. 111.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

(Extract.) Simla, May 3, 1877.

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch dated 31st January last, transmitting copy of further correspondence with the Foreign Office on the subject of General Kaufmann's relations with the Ameer of Cabul, and desiring to be furnished, at an early date, with any information which we may be able to obtain regarding alleged Afghan movements against Darwaz.

There can be no doubt that the communications between General Kaufmann and Shere Ali Khan exceed the requirements of mere exchanges of courtesy; and are regarded as something much more than complimentary by the person to whom they are addressed. The messages from General Kaufmann to the Ameer have not been dispatched, as stated by the General (in his letter of the 9th November, 1876, to the Russian Foreign Office), only "once or twice a year." During the past year they have been incessant. The bearers of them are regarded and treated by the Ameer as Agents of the Russian Government, and on one pretext or another some person recognized by the Afghan Government as a Russian Agent is now almost constantly at Cabul.

We desire to submit to your Lordship's consideration whether our own conduct would be viewed with indifference by the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh, were the Government of India to open similarly friendly relations with the Khans of Khiva and Bokhara; and if without actually making to them overtures of alliance, we addressed to those Princes frequent letters containing assurances of friendship, coupled with explanations of the policy we deem it desirable to pursue toward the States upon our own frontier.

With regard to Darwaz we have heard of no movement of Afghan troops against, or in the direction of, that Principality, and the high official of the Cabul Government, now present at Peshawur, the Mirakhor Amad Khan, has likewise heard of none, but a reference has been made to His Highness the Ameer upon the subject, the result of which will be communicated in due course.

No. 112.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, June 13, 1877.

INTIMATION has lately been received by Her Majesty's Government of fresh military movements on the part of the Russians along the Turkoman steppe and in the direction of the valley of the Attrek. A force under General Llamakin is already to the east of Kizzil Arvad, and as it is the proclaimed intention of that officer to punish the Téké Turkomans, it seems not impossible that the pending operations may ultimately end in the occupation of Merv unless positive instructions to the contrary are at once issued by th Russian Government.

Her Majesty's Government have upon more than one occasion impressed upon the Government of Russia the evil consequences which must follow from such a step.

In his despatch to your Lordship dated the 7th January, 1874, which your Excellency communicated to Prince Gortchakow, Lord Granville called attention to the fears expressed by the Ameer of Afghanistan as to the complications in which he might become involved with Russia, were the result of a Russian expedition against Merv to be to drive the Turkomans to take refuge in the Province of Badghees, in Herat. His Lordship thought it right to state candidly and at once that the independence of Afghanistan was regarded by Her Majesty's Government as a matter of great importance to the welfare and security of British India, and to the tranquillity of Asia. He pointed out that should the Turkoman tribes, then or at any future time, be driven into the neighbourhood of Herat, in consequence of military operations effected by Russian power, the Ameer might labour under a double hardship, first, in the disturbance of his dominions; secondly, if he were held responsible for controlling tribes of that wild race, and restraining them from incursions upon the country from which Russia had expelled them; and his Lordship added:—

"On the one hand, it does not appear how he (the Ameer) could justly be held responsible in such circumstances, and, if he were so held, he would have a strong claim to consideration on the part of all such as rightly appreciate his position. On the other hand, questions might thus be raised which it was the object of the engagement entered into between Great Britain and Russia to obviate, and which it cannot be the interest of either country to revive."

Again, more recently, in the Memorandum which Mr. Doria, in my despatch dated the 28th October, 1875, was instructed to communicate to the Russian Government, and which was drawn up in reply to a Memorandum inclosed in a despatch from Prince Gortchakow, dated the $\frac{5}{17}$th April, 1875, repudiating any intention on the part of His Majesty the Emperor of extending the frontiers of Russia as they then existed, either in Central Asia or in the direction of Bokhara, or on the side of Krasnovodsk and the Attrek, the views of Her Majesty's Government were explicitly stated as follows:—

"Whatever may be the ultimate destiny of Russia in the course of its civilizing mission in Central Asia, it is impossible not to see that, in view of the present conditions of the Turkoman tribes, of the relations in which they stand to the Ruler of Afghanistan on the one hand, and those between the Ruler and the Government of India on the other, that each successive advance of the Russian frontier towards Afghanistan may involve complications which it is equally the interest of both England and Russia to avoid, and may raise up the most serious obstacles to the continued pursuance of the policy which has hitherto guided both Powers alike to maintain intact the integrity of Afghan territory.

"This is an object to which Her Majesty's Government attach the highest importance, and they must reserve to themselves the most complete liberty of action under all future contingencies as to the measures which may, in their opinion, be necessary to secure it. They cannot but feel that such an event, for instance, as the occupation of Merv, which would bring the line of Russian territory into direct contact with Afghan territory, would arouse the susceptibilities of the Ameer to the highest degree, and possibly involve him in a common course of defensive action with the Turkoman tribes upon his borders.

"Under such circumstances it is unnecessary to observe how difficult it might be for the Imperial Government to maintain a policy of strict abstention in accordance with its present assurances, or how impossible it might be for Her Majesty's Government to exert any effectual control over the actions of the Ameer without undertaking responsibilities which they would most reluctantly assume, and which would virtually involve the very result which both Governments desire to avert, viz., the contact of the two Powers in Central Asia."

On the 15th November last, when your Excellency mentioned to Prince Gortchakow the report then current of a projected Russian expedition to Merv, his Highness authorized you to inform Her Majesty's Government that there was no question of such an expedition, nor any idea of occupying Merv.

I have now to instruct your Excellency to make a renewed representation to the Government of Russia on the subject of the movements of Russian troops now taking place on the Turkoman steppe, recalling the above observations to their recollection, and clearly, though courteously, pointing out that the occupation of Merv would be held by the general opinion of the inhabitants of the neighbouring regions of Asia to announce a design on the part of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia to extend his influence, if not his dominion, into territories with which Her Majesty's Government have understood from the Government of His Imperial Majesty that it is not His Majesty's intention to interfere.

Such an impression would impose upon Her Majesty's Government the necessity of making a corresponding advance in order to allay apprehension and to remove misconception from the minds of the people of those countries. They could not, however, look upon so close an approximation of the outposts of the two Empires as in itself desirable, or likely to facilitate the discharge of the difficult duties with which the administrations of each Government are charged.

Her Majesty's Government therefore hope that His Majesty the Emperor of Russia will issue to his officers in those countries the strictest injunctions to abstain, in the course any operations which the misconduct of the Turkomans may render necessary, from advancing into the neighbourhood of Merv.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 113.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, June 19, 1877.

ON the receipt of your Excellency's despatch of the 6th December last a reference was made to the Government of India in regard to the alleged movement of Afghan troops against Darwaz, to which allusion was made by M. de Giers in his note to you of the 1st December.

I have now to instruct your Excellency to inform the Russian Government that inquiry has been made in India, and that nothing has been heard of any such movement either by the Indian Government or by Mirakhor Amad Khan, a high official of the Cabul Government who was lately at Peshawur. You may add that a reference has been made to the Ameer of Afghanistan on the subject, the result of which will be communicated in due course.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 114.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 27.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, June 22, 1877.

IN obedience to the instructions of your Lordship's despatch of the 13th instant I have addressed a note to M. de Giers, of which I have the honour to annex a copy, calling the attention of the Imperial Government to the evil consequences which may arise from the movement of Russian troops now taking place on the Turkoman steppe, should those movements lead to an occupation of Merv, and expressing the hope of Her Majesty's Government that His Majesty the Emperor of Russia will issue to his military commanders in those parts the strictest injunctions to abstain, in the course of any operations which the misconduct of the Turkomans may render necessary, from advancing into the neighbourhood of Merv.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 114.

Lord A. Loftus to M. de Giers.

M. le Conseiller Privé, St. Petersburgh, June $\frac{9}{21}$, 1877.

HER Majesty's Government have lately received information of fresh military movements on the part of the Russian Commander of the forces at Krasnovodsk along the Turkoman steppe and in the direction ot the valley of the Attrek.

A force under General Llamakin is already to the East of Kizil-Arward; and, as it is the proclaimed intention of that officer to punish the Téké Turkomans, it seems not impossible that the pending operations may ultimately end in the occupation of Merv, unless positive instructions to the contrary are at once issued by the Imperial Government.

Her Majesty's Government have, on more than one occasion, impressed upon the Government of Russia the evil consequences which must follow from such a step.

In the despatch dated the 7th January, 1874, which Earl Granville addressed to me, and which I communicated to Prince Gortchakow, his Lordship called attention to the fears expressed by the Ameer of Afghanistan as to the complications in which he might become involved with Russia were a Russian expedition against Merv to result in driving the Turkomans to take refuge in the province of Badghees, in Herat. Earl Granville thought it right to state candidly, and at once, that the independence of Afghanistan was regarded by Her Majesty's Government as a matter of great importance to the welfare and security of British India, and to the tranquillity of Asia. He pointed out that, should the Turkoman tribes, then, or at any future time, be driven into the neighbourhood of Herat, in consequence of military operations effected by Russian power, the Ameer might labour under a double hardship: first, in the disturbance of his dominions; secondly, if he were held responsible for controlling tribes of that wild race, and restraining them from incursions upon the country from which Russia had expelled them; and his Lordship then added, "On the one hand it does not appear how he (the Ameer) could justly be held responsible in such circumstances, and, if he were so held, he would have a strong claim to consideration on the part of all such as rightly appreciate his position. On the other hand, questions might thus be raised which it was the object of the engagement entered into between Great Britain and Russia to obviate, and which it cannot be the interest of either country to revive."

Again, more recently, in the Memorandum which in October 1875 Mr. Doria was instructed by the Earl of Derby to communicate to the Russian Government, and which was drawn up in reply to a Memorandum inclosed in a despatch from Prince Gortchakow, dated the $\frac{5}{17}$th April, 1875, repudiating any intention on the part of His Majesty the Emperor of extending the frontiers of Russia, as they then existed, either in Central Asia or in the direction of Bokhara, or on the side of Krasnovodsk and the Attrek, the views of Her Majesty's Government were explicitly stated as follows:—

"Whatever may be the ultimate destiny of Russia in the course of its civilizing mission in Central Asia, it is impossible, in view of the present conditions of the Turkoman tribes, of the relations in which they stand to the Ruler of Afghanistan, on the one hand, and those between that Ruler and the Government of India on the other, not to see that each successive advance of the Russian frontier towards Afghanistan may involve complications which it is equally the interest both of England and of Russia to avoid, and may raise up the most serious obstacles to the continued pursuance of the policy, which has hitherto guided both Powers alike to maintain intact the integrity of Afghan territory.

"This is an object to which Her Majesty's Government attach the highest importance and they must reserve to themselves the most complete liberty of action under all future contingencies as to the measures which may, in their opinion, be necessary to secure it. They cannot but feel that such an event, for instance, as the occupation of Merv, which would bring the line of Russian territory into direct contact with Afghan territory, would arouse the susceptibilities of the Ameer to the highest degree, and probably involve him in a common course of defensive action with the Turkoman tribes upon his border.

"Under such circumstances it is unnecessary to observe how difficult it might be for the Imperial Government to maintain a policy of abstention in accordance with its present assurances, or how impossible it might be for Her Majesty's Government to exert any effectual control over the actions of the Ameer without undertaking responsibilities which they would most reluctantly assume, and which would virtually involve the very result which both Governments desire to avert, viz., the contact of the two Powers in Central Asia."

I may further observe to your Excellency that when, on the 15th of November last, I mentioned to Prince Gortchakow a report then current of a projected Russian expedition to Merv, I was authorized by his Highness to inform Her Majesty's Government that there was no question of such an expedition, nor any idea of occupying Merv.

I am instructed by the Earl of Derby, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, again to invite the serious attention of the Imperial Government to the evil consequences which may arise from the movement of Russian troops now taking place on the Turkoman steppe, and to point out that the occupation of Merv by a Russian force will be held by the general opinion of the inhabitants of the neighbouring regions of Asia as announcing a design on the part of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia to extend his influence,—if not his dominions,—into territories with which Her Majesty's Government have understood from the Government of His Imperial Majesty that it is not His Majesty's intention to interfere.

Such an impression would impose on Her Majesty's Government the necessity of making a corresponding advance, in order to allay apprehension and remove misconception from the minds of the people of those countries.

They could not, however, look upon so close an approximation of the outposts of the two Empires as in itself desirable or likely to facilitate the discharge of the difficult duties with which the Administrations of each country are charged.

With a view to the reciprocal interests of both countries, and to the maintenance of the good understanding now existing between them in regard to the affairs of Central Asia, I am instructed to state that Her Majesty's Government entertain a confident hope that His Majesty the Emperor of Russia will issue to his military commanders in those parts the strictest injunctions to abstain, in the course of any operations which the misconduct of the Turkomans may render necessary, from advancing into the neighbourhood of Merv.

I avail, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 115.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received July 9.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, June 30, 1877.

IN conformity with the instructions of your Lordship's despatch of the 19th instant, I have addressed to M. de Giers a note, copy of which I have the honour to annex, stating, in regard to an allusion made by his Excellency in his note of the 1st December, 1876, that an inquiry has been made in India and that no information has been received of the alleged movement of Afghan troops against Derwaz, either by the Indian Government or by Mirakhor Amad Khan, a high official of the Cabul Government, who was lately at Peshawur.

I added further that a reference had been made to the Ameer of Afghanistan on the subject, the result of which would be communicated.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 115.

Lord A. Loftus to M. de Giers.

M. le Conseiller Privé, St. Petersburgh, June 28, 1877.

IN your note of the 19th November / 1st December of last year, your Excellency referred to information which had reached the Imperial Government from Tashkend reporting a movement of Afghan detachments against Darwaz, a small vassal State of Bokhara, on the confines of Karateguin.

Her Majesty's Government, on the receipt of your Excellency's note, communicated this information to the Government of India.

I am now instructed by the Earl of Derby, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to inform the Imperial Government that inquiry has been made in India, and that nothing has been heard of any such movement either by the Indian Government or by Mirakhor Amad Khan, a high official of the Cabul Government, who was lately at Peshawur.

A further reference has been made to the Ameer of Afghanistan on the subject, the result of which, when received, will be communicated to the Imperial Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 116.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received July 18.)

(Extract.) Tehran, June 16, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith translations of two letters from the Meshed Agent, reporting the occupation of Kizzil Ervad by the Russians. The Agent also mentions that 800 Turkomans who had made an attack on the Russians had fallen into their hands, and had been put to death, and he refers to a movement on the Oxus at Chehar Yao, which was causing disquietude to the Tékés of Merv.

A report came a few days ago from Sabzawar that a successful night attack had been made on the Russians at Kizzil Ervad by the Turkomans, but the authority of this information may be doubted.

Inclosure 1 in No. 116.

Meerza Abbass Khan to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) June 2, 1877.

FROM Boojnoord I am informed that a number of Russian troops arrived at Shah Kadam from Khiva, that they had 1,500 camels, which they got from Kornak, for carrying their commissariat, &c., that they were joined by two other Russian regiments at Shah Kadam, and marched in the direction of Kizzil Arvad; that the whole force now consists of four regiments and 500 horse, and that they hired 1,000 camels more from the Ata Bai and Jaafer Bai Turkomans.

The Shooja-ud-Dowleh is glad that the Téké Turkomans have not become subject to Persian rule.

Inclosure 2 in No. 116.

Meerza Abbass Khan to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) June 8, 1877.

SEVERAL Russian officers recently came to Chehar Joob to make their preparations, and remained there a short time.

The Téké Turkomans are in great alarm on account of the Russians having appeared at Chehar Joob, and the arrival of their troops at Akhal.

A correspondent at Boojnoord writes that the Russians have arrived at Kizzil Arvad. Their baggage first arrived, and afterwards their troops. Intelligence has also been received that 800 of the Téké Turkomans attacked them and were all cut up. The present troops are two regiments, but they will be reinforced. They have 1,000 camels for bringing water, and they intend erecting buildings at Kizzil Arvad. The Governor of Deragez reported to the Prince Governor that the Russians took possession of Kizzil Arvad, that the Téké Turkomans attacked them, and from 5,000 to 6,000 of the Turkomans were killed; that a number of them have applied for permission to come and reside in Persian territory. His Royal Highness has referred their request to Tehran.

By what it appears the Shah does not wish to accommodate the Téké Turkomans, and in secret is favourably disposed towards the Russian designs against Merv and Akhal.

The Merv Turkomans who had come here to negotiate about their allegiance to Persia, feel greatly alarmed since they have learnt the Russian movements, and come to me for advice. I told them I had no instructions on the subject.

No 117.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, July 19, 1877.

HER Majesty's Government approve the note, of which a copy is inclosed in your Excellency's despatch of the 22nd ultimo, which you addressed to M. de Giers in regard to the reported movement of Russian troops towards Merv on the 21st June.

I am, &c.

(Signed) DERBY.

No. 118.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received August 8.)

My Lord, Tehran, June 20, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that the following information has reached me by telegraph from the Mission Agent at Meshed. Proposals have been made on the part of the Russians to the inhabitants of Karee Kala and Kokhor that they should make a declaration of their allegiance to the Russian Government.

The inhabitants of both districts have been referred to the Boojnoord authorities, who have sought advice from those of Khorassan, while the latter have referred the matter to the capital, and requested to be informed by telegraph as to the course which they should pursue. The Agent states that he has visited Kokhor, and that there is no doubt as to its belonging to Boojnoord.

With regard to the position of Karee Kala I may add that it lies upon the southern slope of the Akhal range, and is in the possession of a branch of the Goklan tribe from Khiva. The possession of this place by the Russians will open up to them the whole valley of the Upper Attrek as far as Boojnoord and Kaschan.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

No. 119.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received August 8.)

My Lord, Tehran, June 30, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that the Government of the Shah have received information confirmatory of the report which had previously reached them of the withdrawal of the Russians from Kizil Arvad.

I have acquainted his Excellency the Viceroy with this information.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

No. 120.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received August 8.)

My Lord, Tehran, July 5, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith translations of two letters which I have received from the Mission Agent at Meshed, giving in detail the intelligence which has reached him of the proceedings of the Russians at Kizil Arvad and Karee Kala.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 120.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) June 16, 1877.

ON the 12th instant the Shuja-ed-dowleh, Governor of Koochan, reported to the Prince Governor that about 5,000 or 6,000 of the Akhal tribe having assembled at Kizil Arvad, fought the Russians, but were defeated with a loss of 700 men.

I hear from Boojnoord as follows:—

"The Russian force which is at Kizil Arvad is said to be 10,000 men, but about 5,000 is the real number. About 5,000 or 6,000 of the Turkomans attacked them, but were obliged to retreat, losing from 800 to 900 men, killed, wounded, and prisoners. Afterwards the Russians took the arms and horses from all those who had become captives and then set them free. They have given the Turkomans ten days, during which they are either to tender allegiance to Russia or to leave that part of the country. The Turkomans of Kizil Arvad, Bam, Birmeh, and Arjoomanee have fled away. The elders of Karee Kala have come to Boojnoord, and have applied for land and quarters. The Russians are engaged in laying out a city at Kizil Arvad. There is only one regiment of infantry at Krasnovodsk."

Now that the Akhal Turkomans are in trouble on account of the Russians, the inhabitants of Merv are greatly alarmed, for they feel certain that they will be also visited by the Russians.

Inclosure 2 in No. 120.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.)
(Extract.) June 23, 1877.

ON the 20th instant the Governor of Deragez reported to the Prince Governor that the Turkomans had announced to him that the Russian force, which amounted to 10,000 men, had returned to Krasnovodsk, and that the provisions they had collected in their camp at Kizil Arvad had been seized by the people of Akhal, Kizil Arvad, Bam, and Birmeh. The people of Khorassan are surprised at this movement on the part of the Russians. I have also learnt that a number of Russians who had come to Charjouy had immediately returned.

There is a rumour that the Governor of Deragez lately telegraphed to the Persian Minister that the Merv Turkomans intend going to the assistance of the Akhals, and that in order to do so they would have to pass through the Deragez district, and asking what course he was to take. The Shah replied by telegraph that they ought to be prevented and repelled, and if he wanted any aid he was to apply to the Prince Governor for it.

No. 121.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received September 12.)

My Lord, Tehran, August 7, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith translation of a letter which I have received from the Mission Agent at Asterabad, reporting the withdrawal of the Russian troops from Kizil Arvad. He states that one-half of the force had gone to Hajee Bayat, and that the rest had returned to Krasnovodsk.

The Russian Minister, here, however, has informed the Persian Government that the entire force has been withdrawn to Krasnovodsk, and that General Llamakin had been recalled to Tiflis.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 121.

The Asterabad Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.)
(Extract.) July 29, 1877.

ON the 3rd instant intelligence was received that the Russian General, having a friend amongst the Téké Turkomans of Kizil Arvad, named Tookhmeh Sirdar, had sent word to the General that a large body of Turkoman horse had assembled, and they intended to make an attack and carry off his (the General's) camels, so that he might not have the means of returning. The General on learning this, and being short of provisions, attacked the Turkomans, and succeeded in reaching Bayat Hajee, where he encamped. From what is stated the General intends keeping the Turkomans in check so that no disturbances may occur in Turkestan. The above-mentioned Turkomans on seeing that the Russian General retreated from Kizil Arvad, crossed into Khorassan and attacked Nardeen. Afrasiab Khan, on learning this, took his horsemen to attack them after he had telegraphed that the pilgrims to Meshed should be stopped at Sharood. Before he encountered the Turkomans they had captured 900 oxen, 2,000 sheep, and 31 men. Afrasiab Khan managed to take 11 of the Turkomans, and 34 of their horses, the remainder escaped with their plunder and captives. The 2,000 sheep they gave on their way to the Turkomans of Karee Kala, as that was the shortest route for them to make good their escape. It is reported that this raid on Nardeen was made at the instigation of the Elkhanee of the Shadloo tribe, Yar Mohammed Khan, the Governor of Boojnoord, so that he may be allowed to return from Tehran sooner.

On the 21st instant news was received from the Turkoman plains that the Russian General had presented 100 gold Imperials to Tookhmeh Sirdar for his recent services; that he has sent half of his troops to Krasnovodsk, and the other half he has kept at Bayat Hajee; he has also retained the camels he had hired.

On the 22nd instant further intelligence was received that the Russian General has left Bayat Hajee for Balkhan. He has given out that he will return and attack the Turkomans with due force.

Should the Téké Turkomans be encouraged by Yar Mohammed Khan, the Eelkhanee of Boojnoord, and Abul Hassan Khan, the son of Ameer Hussein Khan of Koochan, who, according to intelligence now received, have been permitted to leave Tehran, they will make a stand and fight the Russians, for should the Russian General, accompanied by a proper force and commissariat, even advance as far as Merv, he can never feel sure that the country is safe, and that others can march and join him.

Whenever these wild and savage tribes see an opportunity they will be sure to rise and do whatever they can.

No. 122.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received September 12.)

My Lord, Tehran, August 7, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith translations of two letters which I have received from the Mission Agent at Meshed.

His correspondent at Boojnoord appears to be still under the impression that the Russian force has not withdrawn from Kizil Arvad, but from the information given by the Russian Minister here to the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs, there seems to be no doubt of the fact.

The Akhal Turkomans, who had assembled with the object of attacking the Russians at Kizil Arvad, finding that they had left, made a raid on the Persian district of Nardeen, and carried off a considerable amount of booty.

The Meshed Agent describes the result of the negotiations which have recently taken place between the Persian authorities and the Turkomans of Merv, and states that an engagement has been come to for the Persian flag to be hoisted at Merv, and for the cessation of raids from that place upon the Persian territory. I gather from conversations with the Persian Minister that the Persian Government are of opinion that as the Turkomans who have taken a part in this negotiation are not the principal Chiefs of the tribe there is no reliance to be placed upon their word or engagements, and that in all probability their real object is to obtain money and gifts from the Persian Government and then set the arrangement aside.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 122.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) July 7, 1877.

ACCORDING to the Reports of the local authorities at Deragez, Koochan, and Boojnoord the Russian force has returned to Krasnovodsk from the Akhal plains, but I have received no letter from the Agent at Boojnoord confirming the same. As there are so many conflicting reports respecting the movement of the Russians, I presume that the news-writer is trying to obtain accurate information as to their movements and then report the same.

The Akhals, having given up all hope of support from the Persian Government, have begun making raids upon the country.

Nasoullah Khan, the Persian Agent sent to Merv, returned here on the 6th instant. He is accompanied by about fifty or sixty of the Turkoman Chiefs, Elders, &c., but they have brought none of the guns they promised to give up. I will ascertain and report the motives of these Turkomans, but, as already reported, the Shah is not disposed to treat either with the Turkomans of Merv or Akhal; in fact, in my opinion, he would prefer their being beaten and overcome by the Russians.

On the 5th instant news was received from Jam and Baukhez that a body of 500 Saryk Turkomans, horse and foot, made a raid upon Kareez, in Herat territory, and carried off a number of cattle and sheep from that place, also killing one person. From there, 200 of their picked men have gone in the direction of Kain, but the result is yet unknown.

Intelligence has also been received from Boojnoord that a body of more than 1,000 Turkoman horsemen advanced and took the village of Husseinabad, near Nardeen, by force. Half of the inhabitants fled to the adjacent mountains, but the other half fell into the hands of the marauders, with all their cattle and flocks. Afrasiab Khan, of Nardeen, on hearing of the occurrence, took his horsemen and followed the Turkomans. He succeeded in recovering part of the captives and plunder after a severe fight, in which several lives were lost on both sides.

Inclosure 2 in No. 122.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.) July 28, 1877.

RECENTLY no Cossid* has come in from Afghanistan, but a caravan is on the road.

The Turkomans who arrived here and tendered their allegiance to the Persian Government, on their own part and that of their tribes, have had it accepted on the following conditions:—

That they should take a Persian flag to Merv and hoist it there; fifty of the younger Chiefs are to enter the Persian service and keep the low and mischievous Turkomans of their tribe from making any raids. Thirty of the Katta Khans of Merv are to reside at Meshed; these and the young Chiefs are to be paid by Persia; their salary will come to about 4,000 tomans a-year. If the local authorities of Khorassan put aside their personal enmity with these tribes, the Turkomans will, out of fear of Russia, become Persian subjects.

Two days ago one of my friends came in from Furrah. He reports that the Government of Candahar has been conferred on Ameer Afzul Khan, the (maternal) grandfather of Ameer Shere Ali Khan's heir apparent, and he, having received orders to proceed to Peshany and have cantonments built there, did so, and returned to Candahar. He has also summoned 1,000 horsemen from Furrah. Twelve regiments from Cabul and four from Herat have been ordered to proceed to Candahar.

Five days ago the Hishmet-ul-Mulk, Governor of Seistan, sent a telegram by his own man to the Shah that British troops will advance upon Candahar. He has also notified the same in writing to the Prince Governor.

Several days ago Sirdar Eyoub Khan, at the instigation of some of his party, addressed a letter to his father, Shere Ali Khan, and another to the mother of the heir apparent, acknowledging his faults, and soliciting a free pardon, and requesting the Ameer to send some persons to take him to Cabul. After writing the letters he despatched them by a trustworthy man; but the General and two or three of his party, on hearing this, went to the Sirdar and began reproaching him, and at last made him send a horseman after the bearer of the letters and brought him back from a stage distant from Meshed. The letters on being received were torn up by the General, and at present great disorder exists between Sirdar Eyoub Khan and his suite.

I hear from Boojnoord as follows:—

"There are conflicting reports respecting the Russian movements. Some say that the Russian General has left. After much inquiry I have ascertained that he has not left. What occurred is this: that a fight took place between the Russians and Téké-Turkomans, in which about 500 or 600 Turkomans were killed. After this a courier arrived in the Russian camp announcing that five regiments of infantry were coming to Kizil Arvad, and when they made their appearance the force who were at Kizil Arvad went out to meet them; the Turkomans, therefore, thought that they were retreating. The Turkomans then left and made a raid on Nardeen, in the direction of Kal Poosh, where there is a pasture ground, and as it is summer all the flocks were out grazing. The Turkomans carried off twenty-five captives, 100 mares, some cattle, and a number of sheep, part of the latter belonging to the people of Karee Kala. The Tékés, therefore, gave up all the sheep to the people of Karee Kala, and left for their plains by another route. Afrasiab Khan, on hearing this, took his horsemen and attacked the people of Karee Kala. He took back the sheep and killed some of the inhabitants of that place, also taking some of them prisoners. The Russians are at present within one stage of Kizil Arvad, but they have abandoned the intention of building a town there. They intend, however, building a town at Karee Kala, as there is an abundance of water there, and none at Kizil Arvad. It is now a month that no one has come from the Téké Turkomans. This intelligence was brought by two captives who had escaped from the Turkoman plains. A person has, however, gone to bring authentic news."

---

* Foot messenger.

No. 123.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received September 17.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 12, 1877.

IN the course of conversation to-day, M. de Giers informed me that the Imperial Government had received information of the mission of an Envoy from the Sultan to the Ameer of Afghanistan, and of his passage through India.

His Excellency stated that the object of the Envoy's mission was to preach a religious crusade amongst the Mussulman population of Central Asia, and, through the Ameer of Afghanistan, to induce the Ameer of Bokhara to excite the populations of Central Asia to revolt against Russia.

The Ameer of Bokhara, his Excellency observed, had proved a faithful ally to Russia, and the Imperial Government placed full confidence in him. But difficulties might arise in consequence of religious agitation between Bokhara and Afghanistan which might compromise the friendly relations between those Rulers. It was, therefore, of importance that seasonable advice should be given to the Ameer of Afghanistan to abstain from any action which could endanger the peaceful relations of the two States.

M. de Giers added that General Kaufmann had been instructed to be guided by the arrangements entered into between Great Britain and Russia in regard to Afghanistan, and to remain strictly within the limits of those arrangements.

I stated to M. de Giers that I should report to your Lordship the observations he had addressed to me.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 124.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 4.)

My Lord, Tehran, August 31, 1877.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 7th instant, in which I reported the negotiation which had recently taken place between the Khorassan authorities and the Turkomans of Merv, with a view to their declaring their allegiance to Persia, I have the honour to state that, during a recent conversation which I had with the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs, his Highness informed me that the arrangement therein referred to had completely fallen through, but that the Prince Governor of Khorassan had been instructed to send from three to five, but not more, of the principal Téké Turkoman Chiefs who are still at Meshed to Tehran, in order that a fresh negotiation may be opened here.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

No. 125.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 4.)

(Extract.) Tehran, September 5, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to inclose translations of two letters from the Mission Agent in Meshed.

The Agent states the nature of the negotiations which, for some time, have been going on between the Khorassan authorities and the Merv Turkomans, but which have now been set aside, as reported in my despatch of the 31st ultimo, pending further discussion of the matter between the Persian Government here and some of the Turkoman Chiefs who are being sent to Tehran.

Inclosure 1 in No. 125.

Meerza Abbass Khan to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.)
(Extract.) August 4, 1877.

THE Turkomans who came from Merv with Nussullah Khan are still here. By last courier I reported some of the conditions agreed upon between the Saïd Mervees and the Persian authorities; since then other conditions have been proposed, such as the following:—

A Governor on the part of Persia is to be always at Merv, and the Perisan flag is to be constantly hoisted in that town. One hundred ferrashes are to be engaged at a salary of 20 tomans per annum. These are to act as a kind of police, and prevent any raids from taking place. Should the Persian Government in future require horsemen from Merv, a body of from 2,000 to 3,000 men is to be provided, their salary being 20 tomans, like the pay received by the horsemen of Khorassan. Fifty of the Merv Chiefs and Sirdars are also to enter Persian service on a salary of 50 tomans a year, with subsistence allowance and forage for their horses. Twenty-five of these Sirdars will also reside at Meshed, and be relieved by the other twenty-five after the lapse of several months.

The Persian Ministers have accepted these terms, and the Mervees are ready to carry them out, should no further hesitation take place on the part of the Persian Government and the local authorities in Khorassan.

At the present moment it is very easy to induce the Turkomans of Merv to submit to Persian rule.

Inclosure 2 in No. 125.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. Taylour Thomson.

(Translation.)
(Extract.) August 25, 1877.

ON the 16th instant about fifty horsemen came to Meshed at the instance of those Chiefs and Elders of Merv who have been here for some time; the local authorities have granted each horseman a kran per diem.

On the 22nd instant the Persian Ministers ordered the Prince Governor to hold a Council to discuss the advisability of retaining the Merv Turkomans under Persian rule or not. A Council was accordingly called, at which all the local authorities, high and low, were present.

The Mervees were then questioned as to their ideas. They replied that they looked to the Shah to keep and support them, to allow them pay for 1,000 horsemen at the same rate as that received by the Khorassan horsemen, and they would then prevent any Turkoman raids being made upon Turkish territory; they also agreed to let half or a third of these horsemen do duty in other parts of Persia, and to change them when necessary. They agreed to leave about fifty of their Chiefs at Meshed as hostages, on a salary of 50 tomans each per annum. They added, that if these conditions were accepted, they would submit to Persian rule, hoist the flag of Persia at Merv, and coin money in the Shah's name. They were then asked what assurance they would give to show that they were in earnest, for if their conditions were to be accepted 30,000 tomans would be added to the expenditure of the State.

They replied that they could give no assurance, but that they told the truth, and that in future they would also abstain from holding any intercourse with the Russians; that as regards the increase of 30,000 tomans, that sum would be saved through the peace and tranquillity which would ensue through the increase in trade caused by friendly intercourse and also by the increase of the Custom-house revenues collected.

No. 126.

The Earl of Derby to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, October 17, 1877.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 12th September, reporting a conversation which you had had with M. de Giers on the subject of the recent Turkish Mission to Afghanistan, and the passage of the Envoy through India, I have to state to your Excellency that, at the request of the Porte, a Turkish Envoy to Afghanistan was allowed to pass through Indian territory, but that Her Majesty's Government have no reason to suppose that the object of his mission was to preach a crusade in Central Asia.

Her Majesty's Government will continue, as they have hitherto done, to use such influence as they possess with the Ameer of Afghanistan to induce him to maintain peace with Bokhara.

I am, &c.
(Signed) DERBY.

No. 127.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 29.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 23, 1877.

BEFORE communicating to M. de Giers your Lordship's despatch of the 17th instant, I read his Excellency the report of his remarks on the subject of the Turkish Mission to Afghanistan, as given in my despatch of the 12th September.

His Excellency thanked me for the communication of your Lordship's despatch, and observed that since the date when he mentioned the subject to me no further reports had been received from General Kaufmann relating to the Turkish Mission to Afghanistan.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 128.

Lord A. Loftus to the Earl of Derby.—(Received October 29.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October. 23, 1877.

I INQUIRED the other day of M. de Giers whether any answer had been given to Her Majesty's Government, through Count Schouvaloff, to the note which I had addressed to his Excellency on the $\frac{9th}{21st}$ June, 1877, in conformity with the instructions of your Lordship's despatch of the 13th June, on the military movements of the Russian troops under General Llamakin in the direction of the valley of the Attrek. His Excellency replied that he had addressed a despatch to Count Schouvaloff in reply to my note with instructions to communicate it to your Lordship, but no acknowledgment of it had been received from his Excellency; at my request M. de Giers has been good enough to give me a copy of the despatch referred to, dated the $\frac{18}{30}$th July, which I have the honour to annex.*

M. de Giers further informed me that a second despatch had been subsequently addressed to Count Schouvaloff informing him that General Llamakin had returned to Krasnovodsk.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 128.

M. de Giers to Count Schouvaloff.

St. Pétersbourg, le 18 Juillet, 1877.

J'AI l'honneur de transmettre ci-jointe à votre Excellence copie d'une note adressée par Lord Augustus Loftus au Ministère Impérial, en date du $\frac{9}{21}$ de ce mois.

Elle concerne notre colonne expéditionnaire sur Kizil Arvat.

L'Ambassadeur d'Angleterre, d'ordre de son Gouvernement, demande que cette colonne ne s'avance par trop près de Merv.

Je me suis empressé de communiquer la pièce sus-mentionnée au Ministère de la Guerre.

Les renseignements qu'il m'a fait parvenir sont de nature à rassurer entièrement le Cabinet de Londres. L'unique but de notre expédition sur Kizil Arvat est celui de châtier les peuplades Turcomanes qui infestent depuis quelque temps la route de Krasnovodsk à Khiva et menacent nos caravanes.

Ces peuplades appartiennent à une branche de Turcomans entièrement distincte de celle des Tékés de Merv—point distant de 1,000 verstes de Krasnovodsk.

Le mouvement sur Kizil Arvat n'est d'ailleurs qu'une simple expédition militaire comme nos troupes du Caucase en entreprennent tous les ans pour le maintien de la tranquillité sur nos frontières. Les ordres les plus formels ont été donnés au Commandant de la colonne de ne pas dépasser ses instructions dans ce sens.

Les inquiétudes relatives à Merv tombent d'elles-memes en présence de ces franches explications.

Veuillez bien, M. l'Ambassadeur, les porter à la connaissance de Lord Derby, en réponse à la note de Lord Augustus Loftus, et agréez, &c.

* This despatch was subsequently communicated by Count Schouvaloff.

(Translation.)

St. Petersburgh, July 18, 1877.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to your Excellency a copy of a note addressed by Lord A. Loftus to the Imperial Government, dated the $\frac{9th}{21st}$ of this month.

It has reference to our expeditionary column directed on Kizil Arvad.

The English Ambassador, by order of his Government, demands that this column should not advance too close to Merv.

I at once communicated the above-mentioned note to the War Department.

The information with which it has furnished me is calculated entirely to reassure the Cabinet of London. The sole object of our expedition to Kizil Arvad is to punish the Turkoman hordes who have for some time past infested the route from Krasnovodsk to Khiva, and threaten our caravans.

These tribes belong to a branch of Turkomans quite distinct from that of the Tékés of Merv, a point 1,000 versts distant from Krasnovodsk.

The movement on Kizil Arvad is nothing more than a simple military expedition, such as our troops in the Caucasus undertake every year, to keep order on our frontiers. The most formal orders have been given to the Commandant of the column not to exceed his instructions in this sense.

Any anxiety respecting Merv falls to the ground in presence of these frank explanations.

Have the goodness, M. l'Ambassadeur, to acquaint Lord Derby with them, as a reply to the note of Lord A. Loftus, and accept, &c.

No. 129.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received February 22.)

My Lord, Tehran, January 3, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose, for your Lordship's information, copy of a Memorandum containing information which has been derived from one of the Merv Chiefs belonging to the Turkoman deputation now here, respecting the compact now being concluded between the Persian Government and the Téké Turkomans of Merv.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 129.

Memorandum.

FROM information derived from one of the Merv Chiefs, it appears that the Téké Turkoman deputation have now come to terms with the Persian Government, and that they are to leave Tehran in two or three days for Meshed, in charge of Nasrullah Khan, the Persian Agent sent last summer to Merv, who has accompanied them to the capital.

The arrangement arrived at, which the Téké Chiefs consider on the whole to be satisfactory, is as follows:—

1. The Merv Turkomans declare their allegiance to Persia.
2. They engage that raids by them on this country shall entirely cease.
3. That the Persian flag is to be hoisted at Merv.
4. That a Persian Agent shall reside at Merv on the part of the Shah.
5. That 100 hostages (men of position from the four divisions of the tribe) shall reside at Meshed, but without their families.
6. That a body of 1,000 horsemen shall be sent to Meshed (about 250 from each division of the tribe) to be employed in the service of the Persian Government. These horsemen are to provide their own horses and arms, and to be under the command of their own Chiefs, but they are to be paid by the Persian Government, and they may be employed in any part of Persia where their services are required.

The Persian Government state their readiness to agree to the following points:—

1. They recognize the Merv Turkomans as Persian subjects, and promise them protection and favourable treatment.
2. They agree to defray the expenses of the hostages sent to Meshed, which may be estimated at about 6,000 tomans a-year.

3. They undertake to pay the horsemen furnished by the Turkomans for service in Persia at the same rate as that allowed by the Government to the Khorassan irregular horse, which will amount to over 30,000 tomans annually.

4. They grant permission for 1,000 families of Merv Téké Turkomans to occupy Old Serekhs, and the lands adjacent on the Tejjen.

The Shah has given a Firman to the Chiefs stating in general terms that the Téké Turkomans of Merv have always been, and now are, subjects of Persia; that all disloyal acts committed by them in past years are forgiven; and that in consideration of their now engaging to act as obedient and faithful subjects, His Majesty assures them of his protection and favour.

Four of the Chiefs have received shawl khelats, and the rest cloth dresses of honour, and subsistence allowance, at the rate of two kerans a day for each person, has been paid for the three months during which they have been engaged on their mission to Tehran.

The Prince Hissames Sultaneh, formerly Governor-General of Khorassan, has recommended that Abdul Hassan Khan, the son of the Chief of Koochan, should be sent to Merv on the part of the Shah. The Turkomans would have preferred Nasrullah Khan, had he been a wealthier man, as he has their confidence; but Abdul Hassan Khan has had a good many dealings with the Akhal portion of the Téké tribe, by whom he is esteemed, and they do not object to him, especially as he belongs to a Khorassan family of considerable wealth and position.

The Prince Governor at Meshed is instructed to decide who shall be sent, and to arrange some other matters of detail which have not been settled at Tehran. If these are arranged speedily at Meshed, the Téké families will be sent to Serekhs and the horsemen and hostages to Meshed this spring.

The Chiefs forming the deputation now leaving Tehran are as follows:—

Kooller Serdar, of the Vekeel tribe; Saree Batyr, of the Bakhshee tribe; Anner Doordee, of the Beg tribe; Khellee Vatyr, of the Seechmez tribe—principal Chiefs; Oraz Morad and Merad Alee, of the Bakhshee tribe; Ata Morad, Moollah, and Abeh, of the Vekeel tribe; Niaz Morad, Taj Serdar, Essen, and Koorban, of the Seechmez tribe; Moottee, Dowlet Morad, and Amreh Yellee, of the Beg tribe.

The Merv Chiefs believe that the Akhal portion of their tribe will eventually withdraw from the Akhal country and join them at Merv. They consider that it would be a gain for the whole tribe were they to do so, because the encampments they occupy at present along the line of the Attrek are straggling, and some of them ill supplied with water, and they are divided from each other by tracts of desert, which prevents them from rallying in time to support any portion of the tribe that may be suddenly attacked; whereas, at Merv each camp has the advantage of an equally abundant supply of water with all the others, and an ample extent of fertile land, and all the tribes occupy a compact position on the Moorghab, which is very favourable for defence.

Their lands at Merv are fully sufficient to accommodate more than double the number of those now occupying them. Three branches of the Akhal Tékés, namely, the Beg and Seechmez at Bam and Boormeh, and the Vekeel at Anow, have announced their intention of quitting the Akhal country and removing eastwards to the Tejjen or Merv in the event of their being again attacked by the Russians.

(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

Tehran, December 31, 1877.

No. 130.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received March 8.)

My Lord, India Office, March 8, 1878.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to forward herewith, to be laid before the Earl of Derby, copy of a letter from the Government of India, with accompanying news-reports relating to Afghanistan and adjoining countries.

I have, &c.

(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 130.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Fort William, February 1, 1878.

IN continuation of our despatch dated the 11th ultimo, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of news-reports received through the Government of the Punjab.

We have, &c.

(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
E. C. BAYLEY.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
JOHN STRACHEY.
E. B. JOHNSON.
W. STOKES.

Inclosure 2 in No. 130.

Extract from Confidential News-letter from a Correspondent at Jellalabad, dated December 19, 1877.

THE Russian Envoy, who had been at Cabul for some time, has returned to his country, and was escorted to Turkestan by Muhammad Aslam Khan, the Kotwal of the town of Cabul. On this road the party met another Ambassador from Russia, who belongs to a very high and rich family of Samarcand. The two Envoys passed a night at one place, and the next morning they proceeded on to their respective destinations The new Envoy has arrived at Cabul, and is lodged in a large building belonging to Sirdar Muhammad Yusaf Khan, and is treated with much consideration.

Inclosure 3 in No. 130.

Extract from Confidential News-letter from a Correspondent at Peshawur.

A MAN who has just come from Bokhara states that the Ameer of that territory has not yet returned to Shahr-i-Sabz from Karshi, where he went to serve the interests of the Russian Government. It is said that His Highness persuades the people residing on the Russian frontier to submit to the authority of the Czar. The Russians show much kindness and consideration to the Ameer in these days; and His Highness, being carried away by their apparent goodness of purpose, has sent both of his sons to Tashkend to learn the Russian language and politics, and the Governor of Tashkend looks after the comforts of the Princes.

No. 131.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received April 5.)

My Lord, India Office, April 5, 1878.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to forward, for the information of the Marquis of Salisbury, copy of a Secret letter from the Government of India, in the Foreign Department, dated 1st March, 1878, with inclosed copy of news Reports received through the Government of the Punjab.

I have, &c.

(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 131.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Marquis of Salisbury.

My Lord, Fort William, March 1, 1878.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of news Reports received through the Government of the Punjab.

We have, &c.

(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
E. C. BAYLEY.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.
JOHN STRACHEY.
E. B. JOHNSON.
W. STOKES.

Inclosure 2 in No. 131.

Extract from News-letter from Peshawur, received through a Correspondent in Lahore, with his Letter, dated January 28, 1878.

A MAN who has recently come from Cabul states that when the Ameer was questioned as to his intentions about jehad, or the waging of a religious war, and his relations with the English and the Russian Governments, His Highness remarked that a Russian Envoy was staying at Cabul, and one from his Government at the Court of the Russian Governor of Samarcand, both waiting for replies to communications delivered, that the settlement of affairs depended on Turkey's reply, which he expected by Nauroz (21st March), to a communication sent by him some time back; and that if that reply was not favourable to his interests he would then, having well prepared himself in the meantime, engage himself in jehad operations.

No. 132.

Mr. Taylour Thomson to the Earl of Derby.—(Received April 12.)

My Lord, Tehran, February 14, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith translation of the Firman addressed by the Shah to the Turkoman Chiefs at Merv, referred to in my despatch of the 3rd January, in which I reported the conditions agreed upon between the Persian Government and the Merv Chiefs on their tendering their allegiance to this country.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. TAYLOUR THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 132.

The Shah's Firman to the Elders of the Téké Turkomans.

(Translation.)

HONOUR to the high in rank, Baba Khan and the other Elders of the Téké tribe residing at Merv; and be it known to them that the Téké tribe has been from time of old amongst the special tribes of this everlasting Government, and it has at all times been treated with respect, honour, and kindness. If latterly they found themselves deprived of the Royal favour and respect, it has been through the evil doings and treason of which the mischievous and corrupt characters of the said tribe have been guilty in their ingratitude and thanklessness. But as the said tribe has again appealed for pardon and forgiveness, and the doors of Royal favour and clemency are open, their guilt and misdemeanours have been forgiven and pardoned, and we have deigned to show our Royal favour and generosity to them. Tajdar Sirdar, Kooler Sirdar, Saree Bahadur, and Androee Bai, who appeared at the Royal Court on the part of the Elders of the aforesaid tribe, have been graciously received and have been duly honoured with Royal dresses of honour. Other dresses of honour have been also given for yourself (Baba Khan) and all the other Elders. His Royal Highness, our dear brother, Mahomed Takki Mirza, the Ruku-ud-dowleh and Governor-General of Khorassan, having also guaranteed your services to the Royal Court, we have duly informed him of favour which we intend showing towards you and your tribe for the future.

By virtue of this Royal Firman we command and ordain that, as the said tribe has admitted its guilt and engaged to be loyal in the future, it is to be confident in the Royal favour. The Elders thereof are to ornament their persons with the dresses of honour which have been granted to them, and they are to render their services and submission in a suitable manner—in accordance with the text: "Oh, that we were given to understand that we have been pardoned by the Almighty and will be received with favour and grace." Let the said tribe also be engaged in true service and make known all their wishes and representations to our dear brother the Governor-General of Khorassan, to whom the necessary instructions have been issued respecting the duties required of you the Elders and the whole of the Téké tribe. You are all to make known your requests and wants to His Royal Highness, who will duly attend to them.

In expectation of manifold favours and honours from this everlasting Government you will all obey this Royal Firman.

Given in the month of Zeekaadeh 1294 (November 1877).

No. 133.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 27.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, May 22, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship a Memorandum by Mr. Michell containing military intelligence.

I beg to draw your Lordship's attention to the order of the Minister of War of the $\frac{3rd}{15th}$ May, 1878, prescribing the formation of eight battalions of infantry reserves for the reinforcement of the Turkestan military district.

Inclosure in No. 133.

Memorandum.

(Extract.)

BY another Order of the Minister of War, dated the $\frac{3rd}{15th}$ May, 1878, eight battalions of infantry reserves are to be formed for the reinforcement of the Russian troops of the Turkestan military district. These reserve battalions are to be numbered respectively 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8. The men are drawn from Western Siberia and the Province of Turkestan.

Out of the hitherto existing Bashkir division of cavalry, consisting of two squadrons, by order of the Minister of War a regiment of Bashkir cavalry is to be formed which will consist of a complement of four squadrons for active service and one reserve squadron. The head-quarters of this cavalry force are at Orenburg.

St. Petersburgh, May 21, 1878.

No. 134.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 10.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, June 5, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship herewith, in translation, from the "Russki Mir," a remarkable article in regard to Persia, and its relative position to Russia and England.

In this article it is suggested that, with a view to counteract an exclusive influence being established over Persia by England, Russia must occupy Merv and Herat, neither of which should be surrendered to Persia, who would be amply compensated by the security thus afforded to her frontier against Turkoman raids.

An immediate advance of Russia in those directions is not advocated, but it is hinted that advantage should be taken of doing so in the event of a war with England.

Inclosure in No. 134.

Extract from the "Russki Mir" of May $\frac{17}{29}$, 1878.

(Translation.)

THE SIGNIFICATION OF PERSIA.—The Russian press has frequently called attention to the fact that the centre of gravity in the settlement of the Eastern Question, so far as British interests are concerned, is not to be sought so much in Turkey as in the newly-created Indian Empire. It is natural that, as England derives such vast advantages from that Empire, she should extend her views to the neighbouring countries of Afghanistan, Beloochistan, and Persia. England has long made the latter country her special object of attention, and this without much disguise.

Since 1870 her plans with respect to Persia have become specially plain and unmistakable. The despatch of English officers to Persia and the projection of English railway schemes through that country to India render it very plain that England entertains the idea of establishing an exclusive influence over Persia, and of reducing it to the condition of a province of the Indian Empire. Should England even partly succeed in realizing these projects, she will be able to exercise an influence still more prejudicial to our interests in the East than at present.

In order to counteract these schemes, it is necessary to take advantage of the solidarity of our interests with those of Persia in Asia in respect to the protection of the frontier lines against Turkoman invasions. Not long ago the Turkomans defeated some Persian troops sent to repress a Turkoman robber band, and on this occasion five Persian battalions and ten regiments of cavalry, with a battery of artillery, were utterly routed by a Turkoman force of equal strength. On the strength of this victory the Turkomans began to threaten our frontier along the Attrek. A Russian detachment, which was sent from Krasnovodsk to occupy a fortified position at Kyzyl Arvat, with a view to protecting our trade route between Khiva and Krasnovodsk, was attacked by a body of Téké Turkomans numbering from 6,000 to 8,000 men. The attack was repulsed, but it showed of what unruly elements the Turkoman population is composed.

It is thus evident that Persia and Russia are equally interested in subduing the Turkomans. Our problem consists in rendering our frontier secure against the raids of these roaming tribes. This can only be effected by the occupation of Merv, which is the central point of their camping ground. In orders also to produce a counterpoise against the growing influence of England in Beloochistan, it is necessary that we should occupy Herat.

Both these measures can be more successfully carried out by marching on these two points through Persia. The route from Asterabad to Meshed has been carefully surveyed by the Russian traveller, Ogovodnikoff. The distance between Asterabad and Shahrud is reckoned at 120 versts. The road runs at first through a level and cultivated country; uninterrupted forest then follows, in which an abundant supply of water is to be found. The road then enters a narrow valley extending between two well-wooded mountain ridges; intersects several mountain streams and hollows, and winds up to the Kuzhik heights. This zig-zag ascent was some years ago prepared by some European engineer for the passage of artillery. The road beyond to Shahrud passes alternately through a well-cultivated country, irrigated by mountain rivulets, and through localities poor in vegetation.

Shahrud, however, is situated in a valley surrounded by cultivated fields and gardens. This town serves as a point of gathering for the Shüte pilgrims proceeding to Meshed. The road from Shahrud to Sebsevar, a distance of 285 versts, runs through a country in many respects similar to that which occurs between Asterabad and Shahrud. Nishapur is situated at a distance of 130 versts from Sebsevar, and the road to it runs through rich districts—caravanserais, villages, water, and pastures occurring here with greater frequency. Nishapur is situated in a broad and fertile valley. The distance from it to Meshed is 130 versts. At Meshed a bifurcation on the road occurs, one road running in a north-easterly direction to Merv, and the other south-east to Herat. The road from Meshed to Herat runs through the province of Horassan, so celebrated for its fertility.

The nearest route to Afghanistan is undoubtedly through Persia, and at the same time it is the most convenient one, though the adoption of it need not preclude military demonstrations from the north, that is, from our Turkistan frontier. As a preliminary measure the occupation and retention of Herat will not be difficult of fulfilment. General Khruleff in the Memorandum which has lately been published bears witness to the feasibility of this plan.

Many are opposed to the advance against Herat through Persia, on the ground that we shall excite the hostility of the Afghans by furthering the interests of the Persians. This view, however, is erroneous. Whether we march on Herat through Persia or by another route, our relations to Afghanistan will be the same. After taking Herat we must not, however, surrender it to the Persians as compensation for their co-operation. Persia will already be amply rewarded when her frontier, together with our own, shall have been rendered secure against Turkoman raids. In demonstrating the possibility and facility of a march on Herat and Merv through Persia, we do not, of course, advocate an immediate advance in those directions; we should, however, take advantage of the possibility indicated in the event of a war with England.

No. 135.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 19.)

My Lord, Tehran, April 29, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith translation of a letter from the correspondent at Boojnoord, from which your Lordship will perceive that, although the Russians at Krasnovodsk have not as yet made any movement against the Turkomans, they are said to have notified to the Tékés that they intend to march upon them at the beginning of next month.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 135.

Letter received from Boojnoord.

(Translation.) April 15, 1878.

THE Russians at Krasnovodsk have not stirred yet, or made any movements lately. The Tékés and Goklans are, however, in communication with them.

The Russians have notified to the Tékés that they are going to march upon them in the beginning of May, and want to know what they have to say for themselves. There is great scarcity amongst the Tékés, wheat being 6 tomans the kharwar.

Several Elders of the Yemoot tribe recently came here from Khiva, and requested the Governor to grant land and quarters for 1,000 families. The Governor asked the reason of their emigration, to which they replied that the Russians at Khiva were taking a census, and that they were alarmed at this proceeding. The quarters were assigned them.

By last post I wrote that the Governor had started against the Yemoot Turkomans, but it appears that they fled on his approach. The Governor then went to the Goorgan, stopping there for twenty-five days, during which he collected the taxes due by the Goklans, and returned to town.

No. 136.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received June 24.)

My Lord, India Office, June 24, 1878.

I AM directed by Viscount Cranbrook to forward, for the information of the Marquis of Salisbury, copy of a telegram from the Viceroy of India, dated the 7th June, 1878, in regard to the alleged approaching visit to Cabul of an Ambassador from the Russian Emperor.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure in No. 136.

The Viceroy of India to Viscount Cranbrook.

(Telegraphic.) June 7, 1878.

NEWS letters from Cabul and Peshawur have been received to effect that Ameer has been informed by Russian Agent and by Tashkend Governor-General's letter that Envoy sent by Russian Emperor will shortly visit Cabul as Ambassador.

These reports require verification.

No. 137.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 26.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, June 18, 1878.

BEYOND the reinforcements of the Russian army in Turkestan, as reported in my despatch of the 22nd May, I have not learnt of any fresh military movements in Central Asia.

The military forces under General Llamakin at Krasnovodsk were considerably reduced during the Turkish war in order to strengthen the Russian forces in Armenia, but I cannot state whether these forces have been yet replaced.

I am inclined to believe that since affairs in Europe have taken a pacific turn the military projects which had been under consideration in regard to Central Asia have been suspended, and General Tchernaieff, who was designated for special service in those parts, has been recalled and is at present residing here.

No. 138.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, June 26, 1878.

I TRANSMIT to your Excellency herewith a copy of a letter from the India Office having reference to the alleged approaching visit of a Russian Ambassador to Cabul,* and I have to request that you will endeavour to ascertain whether there is any truth in this report.

I am, &c.
(Signed) SALISBURY.

No. 139.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 5.)

My Lord, Tehran, May 20, 1878.

FROM a despatch which I have received from Captain Napier, it would appear that a rumour of the advance of Russian troops upon the Akhal country had reached him from a correspondent at Boojnoord, who is in communication with the Mission Agent at Meshed. The rumour was first mentioned in a letter from that person, which was transmitted to your Lordship as an inclosure to my despatch of the 29th ultimo, and it is now repeated in a further communication from Boojnoord to our Agent, dated the 22nd April, of which I have the honour to inclose a translation.

No confirmation of this intelligence has been received here, and the Asterabad Agent, in his letter of the 14th instant, states that General Llamakin was reported to be at Krasnovodsk with only a small force of 500 men. The Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs has also informed me that not only has his Government received no news of any movement of troops having taken place from Krasnovodsk, but that the Russian Minister here had positively denied that there was any truth in the rumour.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 139.

Letter addressed to Abbas Khan, Mission Agent at Meshed, by a Correspondent at Boojnoord.

(Translation.) Rabbee-es-Sanee 18 (April 22, 1878).

THE news respecting the Europeans is as follows:—The Russians at Shah Kedem (Krasnovodsk) are intending to advance again upon the Tékés, who are in great disquietude.

Grain is very scarce amongst them. It costs 100 krans for 650 lbs. weight. They have sent 500 camels to this place to purchase provisions. The extreme cold of the 4th January destroyed their grain crops, as it did those of the districts of Khiva. The people of the Attrek are in great distress, and some of them have come over to this side.

* No. 136.

The Goklans I referred to in a previous letter as being about to go to the Goorgan have not gone yet, but I will let you know when they do so.

The people here are somewhat alarmed at an order which has been issued by the Persian Government to have a census of the population, old and young, taken.

I do not know if you received my letter of March last, in which I told you that five or six regiments of Russian soldiers had moved out from Krasnovodsk, but I now mention it to you again.

No. 140.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 11.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, July 3, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 26th ultimo, inclosing a copy of a letter from the India Office, with reference to an alleged approaching visit of a Russian Ambassador to Cabul.

At an interview I had yesterday with M. de Giers, I inquired of his Excellency whether any Russian Representative was instructed, either by the Imperial Government at St. Petersburgh or by the Governor-General of Turkestan, to proceed to Cabul.

M. de Giers replied that no such Mission had been, or was intended to be, sent to Cabul, either by the Imperial Government or by General Kaufmann.

I observed to his Excellency that, for some time past, a Russian Agent had resided at Cabul, and that intrigues had been apparently carrying on with a view to create dissensions between the Ameer of Afghanistan and the Indian Government. I stated that this course was not in conformity with the arrangement entered into between the Governments of England and Russia, and that if it continued it must inevitably produce results prejudicial to the good relations between the two Governments.

M. de Giers replied that there had been a moment when war appeared to be almost imminent, and that, under those circumstances, no doubt the military Commanders conceived it to be their duty to take such measures as might be necessary and serviceable to their country. He denied, however, as far as he was aware, that there had been any intrigues with the Ameer of Cabul of the nature to which I had alluded. He admitted that he had sent M. Bakouline, the Russian Consul at Asterabad, to Meshed to watch the movements of Captains Butler and Napier, who were reported to be inciting the Turkoman tribes to hostilities against Russia. This was the only diplomatic measure he had taken.

I stated to M. de Giers that Captain Butler was a mere traveller, on his own account, and no agent of Her Majesty's Government, and that urgent orders had been sent to him by the Commander-in-chief in India to return forthwith to his military duties.

M. de Giers, who appeared to be well informed both in regard to Captain Butler and Captain Napier, stated that he was aware that Captain Butler had been recalled, but that, nevertheless, he had refused to obey the orders he had received, and was persisting in his intention to visit the Akhal tribes. He referred even to the letter which Captain Butler had addressed to certain Turkoman Chiefs, of which his Excellency had evidently received copies.

I inquired from M. de Giers whether any expedition was intended, or was now being undertaken by General Llamakin against the Turkomans.

His Excellency professed ignorance as to any such intention, observing that it was frequently necessary to repel the attacks of those tribes, or to punish them for raids committed on Russian commerce.

I finally observed to his Excellency that, at a moment when Europe was sitting in Congress for the purpose of maintaining peace, it was advisable to avoid anything which could disturb the harmony and good understanding between England and Russia (the two Asiatic Powers), in other regions where their mutual good-fellowship and co-operation could render such valuable service to the cause of humanity and civilization.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

No. 141.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 16.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, July 10, 1878.

THE "Turkestan Gazette" publishes the following "orders of the day" for the formation of corps of operation, which are called "advanced expeditionary detachments," dated Tashkend, the $\frac{14}{26}$th May, 1878.

I have the honour to inclose to your Lordship herewith a translation of these orders from the Russian by Mr. Michell, as also a translation in French, which appeared in this morning's "Journal de St. Pétersbourg."

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure 1 in No. 141.

Substance of Article from the "Turkestan Gazette."

(Translation.)

FORMATION OF RUSSIAN EXPEDITIONARY DETACHMENTS IN CENTRAL ASIA.—The "Turkestan Gazette" contains an official order for the formation of the following detachments, which are called "advanced expeditionary detachments."

"Tashkend, May $\frac{14}{26}$, 1878.

"In accordance with the orders of His Imperial Majesty conveyed to me by the Minister of War in his despatch of the $\frac{13}{25}$th April, Sub-No. 10, three active detachments are to be preliminarily formed out of the troops under my command; the head detachment at Samarcand, that of Ferghanah at Marghelan, and that of the Amu-Darya at Petro-Alexandrovsk.

"The chief detachment, under the command of Major-General Trotski, is to be composed of the 3rd, 5th, 6th, 9th, and compound Turkestan and 3rd West Siberian line battalions, and of two companies of the 17th Turkestan line battalion; of the whole Turkestan Rifle Brigade and Sapper company; of the 4th compound Orenburg-Ural regiment of Cossacks; of four sotnias of the 2nd Orenburg, and of two sotnias of the 5th compound Orenburg regiment of Cossacks; of the 1st and 3rd battery and half-battery of the 2nd battery of the 1st Turkestan Brigade of Artillery; of the Mobile exercising battery; the 1st and 5th Orenburg H batteries, and one rocket battery.

"The Ferghanah detachment, under the command of Major-General Abramoff, is to be composed of six companies of rifles, two sotnias of the 5th compound regiment of Cossacks, six pieces of the Turkestan hill battery, and a division of rocket battery.

"The Amu-Darya detachment, under the command of Colonel Grotenhelm, is to be composed of six companies, two sotnias, and four guns, to be selected by the Commander of the Amu-Darya district.

"The first detachment is to be concentrated at Samarcand, and to march from thence en échelons to Djam, and further according to instructions.

"The second detachment is to be organized at Marghelan, to march through Vuadil to the valley of the Ryzylsu, and further according to instructions.

"The third detachment is to be formed at Petro-Alexandrovsk, and to march along the Amu-Darya to Chardjyi, from whence it will advance according to instructions.

"The time of formation and advance of these detachments will be determined according to exigencies, and will be fixed by special supplementary orders.

(Signed) "KAUFMANN."

Inclosure 2 in No. 141.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of $\frac{\text{June } 28}{\text{July } 10}$, 1878.

LA "Gazette du Turkestan" publie les ordres du jour suivants, qui ont été portés à la connaissance des troupes de la circonscription militaire:—

"Tachkend, le 14 Mai, 1878.

"Aux termes de l'ordre de Sa Majesté l'Empereur, qui m'a été communiqué par le Ministre de la Guerre le 13 Avril de cette année, les troupes de la circonscription militaire qui se trouve sous mes ordres seront formées en trois corps d'opérations: le principal à Samarcande, celui du Ferganah à Marguélane, et celui de l'Amou-Daria à Pétro-Alexandrovsk.

"Le corps principal, qui sera commandé par le Général-Major Troïtsky, de la suite de Sa Majesté l'Empereur, sera formé des 3e, 5e, 6e, 9e bataillons du Turkestan, du bataillon mixte (composé de quatre compagnies provenant des bataillons de ligne du territoire de Ferganah) du 8e bataillon de ligne de la Sibérie Orientale, de deux compagnies du 17e bataillon de ligne du Turkestan, de toute la brigade de Chasseurs du Turkestan, d'une compagnie de Chasseurs du 4e Régiment mixte des Cosaques d'Orenbourg-Oural, de quatre sotnias du 2e Cosaques d'Orenbourg, de quatre sotnias du 3e Cosaques d'Orenbourg, de quatre sotnias du 1er Cosaques de Sibérie, de deux sotnias du 5e Cosaques mixte, des 1re et 3e batteries et de la moitié de la 2e Batterie de la 1re Brigade d'artillerie du Turkestan, de la batterie mobile d'instruction, des 1re et 5e Batteries à cheval des Cosaques d'Orenbourg, et d'une batterie à fusées.

"Le corps du Ferganah, qui sera commandé par le Général-Major Abramow, comprendra: six compagnies de Chasseurs, deux sotnias du 5e Cosaques mixte (qui seront nommées à cet effet par le Commandant des troupes du territoire de Ferganah), de six canons de montagne de l'artillerie du Turkestan, et d'une demi batterie à fusées.

"Le corps de l'Amou-Daria, commandé par le Colonel Grotenhelm, comprendra six compagnies, deux sotnias, et quatre canons (qui seront nommés à cet effet par le Commandant du territoire de l'Amou-Daria).

"Le premier corps se concentre à Samarcande et se dirige par échelons sur Djam pour poursuivre ensuite sa route selon les ordres qui lui sont donnés.

"Le second se forme a Manguélane, traverse Vouadil pour se rendre dans la vallée du Kyzyl-Sou et plus loin selon les ordres reçus.

"Le troisième corps, enfin, se réunit à Pétro-Alexandrovsk, suit le cours de l'Amou-Daria en le remontant jusqu'à Tchardjouï et prend ensuite la direction qui lui est indiquée.

"Toutes les troupes destinées à entrer en campagne prennent leurs uniformes les plus neufs, leurs manteaux, deux paires de bottes de rechange, &c. . . .

"Le personnel du quartier-général et le nombre des équipages qui devront suivre les troupes, ainsi que celui des bagages d'officiers seront portés plus tard à la connaissance générale.

"Un ordre supplémentaire sera rendu pour fixer l'époque de la formation et de l'entrée en campagne de ces corps, ainsi que des autres détachements de troupes qui pourront être nécessaires.

"Tachkend, le 16 Mai, 1878.

"En vue des soins à donner aux malades et aux blessés des corps précités, je propose de former dès à présent trois ambulances de campagne: l'une pour 160 malades, destineé au corps principale et deux pour 50 malades, destinées aux corps du Ferganah et de l'Amou-Daria.

"L'Inspecteur Médical, l'Intendant de la Circonscription Militaire, et les Commandants des troupes des territoires du Ferganah et de l'Amou-Daria, fourniront aux ambulances tout le nécessaire et prendront des mesures pour qu'elles soient pourvues du personnel médical et sanitaire voulu," &c. . . . .

No. 142.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, July 17, 1878.

WITH reference to my previous despatch of 10th instant, reporting the formation of three additional detachments for the Turkestan army, I have now the honour to inclose to your Lordship an article in translation by Mr. Michell from the "Moscow Gazette," reporting intelligence received from its correspondent at Tashkend, dated 30th May 11th June, and giving further details in regard to the expeditionary forces said to be destined against India.

It would further appear from the statement of the correspondent that the Ameer of Bokhara not only sympathized with the advance of the Russian troops through his territory, but had declared his readiness, if required, to afford the Russian authorities every assistance in his power.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

P.S.—I also inclose translation of an article by Mr. Stephen from the "Turkestan Gazette," giving the names of the officers appointed on General Kaufmann's Staff.

A. L.

Inclosure 1 in No. 142.

Substance of Article in the "Moscow Gazette" of $\frac{\text{June } 27}{\text{July } 9}$, 1878.

(Translation.)

THE "Moscow Gazette" of the $\frac{\text{27th June}}{\text{9th July}}$ contains a letter dated $\frac{\text{30th May}}{\text{11th June}}$, from its correspondent at Tashkend, who gives the following particulars in regard to the formation in Turkestan of three marching detachments destined as an Expeditionary Corps against India:—

"The official order so impatiently expected by the local troops for the formation of an Expeditionary Corps has at length been issued by the Commander-in-chief of the Turkestan military district. The arrival of General Stoletoff from St. Petersburgh has in a manner hastened matters. A meeting was held by the Turkestan Town Council on the $\frac{\text{22nd May}}{\text{3rd June}}$, on the subject of hiring the necessary number of native carts for transporting military stores. The orders were also issued for the appointment of members of the field commissariat, and for increasing the soldiers' rations in view of their impending departure. An artillery park, divided into sections, left Tashkend a few days since. The Engineer park will take its departure on the $\frac{\text{30th May}}{\text{1st June}}$, and an échelon of troops will march on the $\frac{\text{1st}}{\text{13th}}$ June. The Head-quarters will take the field on the $\frac{\text{11th}}{\text{23rd}}$ June. The proposed march route is along the Amu-Darya to Sharabat. The military chest, it is reported, is expected from Petersburgh in charge of members of the Ministry of Finance. The town of Tashkend has latterly assumed a very lively aspect. Generals and Chiefs of divisions are continuously arriving from the different military districts. On the $\frac{\text{30th May}}{\text{2nd June}}$, after a religious service had been held, a parade of all the troops took place. On the conclusion of the review the Commander-in-chief congratulated the soldiers on the expedition they were about to proceed on.

"The correspondent further states that according to prevalent rumours the Ameer of Bokhara, in consequence of negotiations carried on by the Russian Government, not only sympathizes with the advance of Russian troops through his territory, if the necessity presents itself, but has declared his willingness to afford the Russian authorities every assistance in his power."

Inclosure 2 in No. 142.

Extract from the "Turkestan Gazette."

THE "Turkestan Gazette" announces that General Kaufmann has appointed as his active field staff the following officers:—

Colonel Grodekoff, General of the Staff, to be Chief of the Staff.

Colonel Polubinski, commanding the 1st Brigade of Turkestan Artillery, to the command of the artillery of the active army.

Bogarffski, to the command of the Engineers.

Major-General Bardofski, commanding a Brigade of Turkestan Rifles, to the command of the Infantry.

Colonel Nicolaieff, to be commandant of the military train.

Privy-Councillor Souvoroff to be Chief Sanitary Inspector, and

Colonel Kurillo to the command of the cavalry.

In addition to these the Staff includes twenty-two other superior officers and a chaplain.

No. 143.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received July 26.)

My Lord, India Office, July 26, 1878.

I AM directed by Viscount Cranbrook to forward, for the information of the Marquis of Salisbury, copy of a letter from the Government of India, dated 17th June, 1878, with inclosed news Reports received through the Government of the Punjab.

I have, &c.

(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 143.

The Governor-General of India in Council to Viscount Cranbrook.

My Lord, Simla, June 17, 1878.

IN continuation of our despatch dated the 3rd instant, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of news Reports received through the Government of the Punjab.

We have, &c.
(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.
J. STRACHEY.
E. B. JOHNSON.
W. STOKES.
A. R. THOMPSON.

Inclosure 2 in No. 143.

Extract from Confidential News-letter from the Government Agent at Peshawur, dated April 24, 1878.

KHUDAYAR KHAN, late Khan of Khokand, who, after the overthrow of his principality, was removed to, and for some time detained at, Orenburgh by the Russians, and who then fled from that place and was not heard of for months, reached Mizar-i-Shrif, in the Balkh Division of the Cabul State, having crossed the river Hamun (Oxus) by the assistance of Turkomans of the Saruk clan. The Ameer has now written to his officers in Turkestan to keep the Chief under surveillance, and has applied to the Russian Governor of Tashkend for instructions as to his disposal.

A Toksabah officer and thirty troopers of the Ameer of Bokhara have come to Cabul to receive Abdul Mulk, Torah, the son of their master, on his arrival there, and to conduct him to Bokhara.

Inclosure 3 in No. 143.

Extract from Confidential News-letter from a Correspondent at Peshawur, received through an Agent in Lahore under cover of a Letter, dated April 30, 1878.

IT is reported that a new Envoy from Russia arrived at Cabul a short time ago, and that the Ameer has more than once allowed him long interviews. The only courtiers of the Cabul Durbars present at these interviews were Sirdar Shere Ali Khan, Khandari, General Daud Shah, and the Mustaufi. It is said that the Envoy has brought letters from his Government to the address of the Ameer, and that he has given many assurances and promises to His Highness. The Ameer is reported to have been affected by the cunning discourse of the Envoy, and to have proposed to depute an Agent to Russia to go with the Russian emissary, who had been putting up at Cabul for some time before the arrival of the new Envoy. His Highness intends to send his replies to messages from Russia by this Agent.

The Ameer is again active in making warlike preparations, and His Highness often personally inspects the gun and musket manufactories:

Inclosure 4 in No. 143.

Confidential News-letter from the Government Agent at Peshawur, dated May 13, 1878.

THE following news has been received from ———, who obtained the information from ———:—

Shahghassi Sherdil Khan, the Nazim of Turkestan, wrote a letter to the Ameer and communicated the following particulars to him:—

"As it seemed advisable, I have postponed my visit to Cabul to some other time, and forwarded my son, Khusdil Khan, to wait upon yonr Highness with presents. Mirza Salahuddin, whom I deputed towards Samarcand and Tashkend to collect news from those directions, has returned and made a statement to the effect that the Russians intend to induce Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan to submit to them a petition setting forth that he has been putting up there under the protection of the Russian Government for a long time; that he has often petitioned them to help him in securing the restitution of his ancestral territory from the Ameer of Cabul, but his prayer has not been acceded to; and that he has now heard that the Russians are preparing to fight against the British Government; that they have sent Envoys to wait upon the Ameer, to request him to allow passage through his country to the Russian troops going to India and returning therefrom, should a necessity arise for such a passage; and that such being the case, he offered his services, in case His Highness refuses to grant the request of the Russian Government, to capture Balkh with a small assistance from the Czar, and then to subdue the whole of Afghanistan, which is not a difficult task. The Russian officer Ibramoff asserts, that should the Ameer refuse to comply with the requests of the Russian Government, the petition of the Sirdar will be forwarded to His Highness to terrify him. This communication from the Shahghassi frightened the Ameer. This official has also informed His Highness that a number of the adherents of Muhammad Yakub Khan, the late ruler of Kashgar, deserted the localities of Yarkand and Kashgar through the oppression of the Chinese, and arrived in the districts of Badakhshan and Balkh, where they were disarmed, and that they seemed to be desirous of proceeding towards Bokhara and Khokand."

The Russian Envoy who recently arrived at Cabul mentioned to Sirdar Muhammad Ibrahim Khan, the eldest son of the Ameer, that it was the desire of the Russian Government that his father should conclude a new Treaty with them, whereby the differences which have arisen between him and the Shah of Persia might be removed.

Some person having sent a letter to the Ameer from Peshawur, His Highness, immediately after the perusal of the communication, desired Mirza Abdul Wali, his Mir Munshi, and Mustaufi Habibullah, to prepare a statement of the despatches received by him from the British Government, but to which he gave no replies.

At the same sitting, the Ameer remarked that it appeared advisable to send for all such members of his family whom he had committed to the custody of the British Government. With reference to this remark, General Daud Shah stated that this question had been under the consideration of His Highness for a long time, and that as differences arise between him and the British authorities, it was not desirable that the men should be allowed to continue in their custody.

The Ameer having been informed by some one at Peshawur, or in Cashmere, that the Maharaja of Jammu desired Sirdars Muhammad Sarwar Khan and Muhammad Zahya Khan to raise a troop of Afghans for him, uttered abusive language against the Chief, and remarked that, "Please God, Cashmere too will be included in the Cabul dominions."

No. 144.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received August 2.)

My Lord, India Office, August 2, 1878.

I AM directed by Viscount Cranbrook to forward herewith, to be laid before the Marquis of Salisbury, copy of a letter from the Government of India, with inclosed diaries relating to rumours of preparations by the Russians in Central Asia for political and military movements towards Afghanistan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 144.

The Governor-General of India in Council to Viscount Cranbrook.

(Extract.) Simla, June 24, 1878.

ON the 7th and 19th of this month we telegraphed to your Lordship that rumours had reached us from various sources of preparations by the Russians in Turkestan for movements, political and military, towards Afghanistan. We now transmit the more important diaries and letters which conveyed these Reports.

The information which we have thus obtained is necessarily incapable of precise verification. But it has been received from persons well placed for collecting public news from across our north-west frontier; and, as the different rumours corroborate each other, they produce, taken together, the impression that they have some authentic foundation in fact. We have, therefore, resolved that we should forward these papers to your Lordship, in order that the intelligence, quantum valeat, may be used in any way that Her Majesty's Government may think desirable.

Inclosure 2 in No. 144.

Extract from Peshawur Diary by Major Cavagnari, Deputy Commissioner of Peshawur, dated June 7, 1878.

A LETTER was received from Turkestan by the Ameer to the effect that the brother of the Khan of Khiva had visited the Governor-General at Tashkend. He was directed to take 800 horsemen and arrange for the protection of the Khivan frontier. He also was directed to hold himself in readiness to accompany a Russian Envoy, who is about to visit Cabul, with full power to discuss every matter with the Ameer.

Between the 21st and 24th May the Ameer dispatched three letters addressed to the Governor of Samarcand, through Shahghassi Sherdil Khan. An Agent has also, it is rumoured, been sent on the part of the Ameer.

Kazi Abdul Kadir has returned to Cabul from Balkh. It is supposed that he went to Samarcand on a secret mission from the Ameer to the Russian authorities.

Up to the present, the Bajaur Chiefs have not left for Cabul. Invitations to attend at Cabul have been received by some of the Afreedees of the Adamkhel.

On the 29th May a kafila of the Shinwaris was seized at Ali Musjid by Faiz Muhammad Khan, and a tax of 4 rupees per mule was demanded; and they were informed that this would be levied until the grain plundered by the Zakakhel Afreedees was paid for.

The Mir Akhor has told the Afreedees of the Khyber not to leave for Tira, as it is likely that the Ameer may require their attendance at Cabul.

The Mir Akhor has been suddenly summoned to Cabul. He has taken with him ome of the Sangu Khel elders.

The Ameer is said to be contemplating summoning all the Chiefs and leading men, to consult with them as to which of the two great European Powers he should ally himself to.

———, ——— has received a letter from Cabul, informing him that the Shahghassi has reported that the Russians have commenced road-making between Badkoya (believed to be somewhere near Khiva) and the banks of the Oxus, and thence to Akcha, and that the brother of the Khan of Khiva, with 800 horsemen, has been directed to protect the working parties; and he is to accompany the Russian Envoy who is about to visit Cabul. The Russian Agent at present at Cabul also informed the Ameer that an Envoy, with equal power to the Governor-General at Tashkend, will shortly reach Cabul. The Ameer was annoyed at hearing this, and wrote to Shahghassi Sherdil to inform the Governor-General at Tashkend that it was not advisable to send a European Agent, as the Afghans are an uncivilized and ignorant race, and might do the European some injury; but before he dispatched this, he received a letter from the Governor-General, informing him that the Envoy was being sent by the orders of the Emperor, and cannot now be detained, and will soon leave for Cabul. An Afghan Agent is required to be located at Samarcand, or at Tashkend if the Emperor wishes it. On this the Ameer got very angry, and, in a petulant manner, exclaimed that it was useless for him to depute an Afghan Agent, nor could he do anything to prevent the Envoy's coming to Cabul. He wrote to the Shahghassi to keep him informed of all the Russian movements. Sayid Mahmud, of Kunar, and the Mir Akhor were summoned to Cabul to consult with the other Chiefs, and advise the Cabul Durbar as to whether the Ameer should ally himself with the English or the Russians. Mir Afzal Khan, of Candahar, has also been summoned, if he can conveniently leave his post. It is considered unlikely that he will attend.

Inclosure 3 in No. 144.

Extract from Peshawur Diary by Major Cavagnari, Deputy Commissioner of Peshawur, dated June 16, 1878.

SHAHGHASSI SHERDIL KHAN has reported to the Ameer that, in accordance with his commands, he deputed an agent to Tashkend and Bokhara to ascertain what was going on in those parts, and that the following information has been received:—

The Russians are pushing on the road-making between Khiva and the banks of the Oxus, towards Charjui and Karki, with great activity.

In Tashkend it is rumoured that a force of 80,000 men is being mobilized, and that a portion of it will move viâ Khiva, and the remainder viâ Tashkend, to Charjui and Karki, the two lines of route above mentioned being used in order to facilitate the procuring of supplies.

The Russians have ascertained throughout Bokhara and Khiva the probable amount of supplies and carriage that can be procured.

The full-powered Minister ("Wuzir Mukhtar") who has been appointed by the Russians to proceed to Cabul, will first go to Tashkend, and, after consultation with Governor-General Kaufmann, will proceed to Cabul.

In Tashkend it was openly stated that the Russians say that, if the Ameer of Cabul does not do what they want, they will nevertheless, on a suitable opportunity occurring, proceed with their arrangements for approaching India, and that they are not dependent on the Ameer at all.

The Russian officials are very attentive to Sirdar Abdur Rahman Khan in these days.

The Russians state that, as the Ameer of Yarkand was of no advantage to them, it is a good thing that the Chinese have captured that country.

In order to settle what reply shall be given to the Russian proposals, great efforts are being made by the Cabul Durbar to collect an assembly of all the Chiefs, Khans, and chosen men of the kingdom and its neighbourhood, which will probably take place next month. (The Mahommedan month Rajab will commence on the 28th June.) The Ameer desires that Afghanistan may remain independent, and that there should be no Envoys of a different religion to Mahommedanism in his kingdom.

The Ameer, in alluding on one occasion to the proposals of the Russians, stated that these proposals were adverse to the interests of the British Government, and that it remained to be seen how the British authorities, when they heard of them, would act in their own interests with regard to the Indian Empire. That he adhered to his original determination, and did not want to make enemies of either of the Great Powers; but that, if any one tried to injure him, he would do what he could to withstand them, and that "elevation or destruction is in the hands of the Almighty." Whatever Government approached him in a friendly manner he would make similar advances (meaning, no doubt, if it was entirely on his own terms).

The Ameer alluded on one occasion to the fearless and unceremonious behaviour of the Russian Agent at Cabul, and also to the repeatedly occurring news of the approaching arrival at Cabul of an empowered Agent of the Russians. The Mustaufi stated that he had before this represented to the Ameer that, on account of the excessive strength and shamelessness of the Russians, they would never get on with the Afghan Government, whereas "the moderation and exhibition of moderate power of the English," were such that the Ameer and his successors could get on with them; and he begged the Ameer to think well regarding the future. The Ameer turned to Sirdar Wali Muhammad Khan for his views on the subject, and he replied that the Mustaufi had well spoken. The Ameer was silent, and turned the conversation into another channel.

Inclosure 4 in No. 144.

Unofficial Communication dated Peshawur, June 5, 1878.

I HAVE just telegraphed a report which has reached me, and which strongly confirms the information communicated in your Lordship's telegram sent me last month, regarding the mission of Tchernaieff to Krasnovodsk. It is to the effect that the Russian Agent now at Cabul has informed the Ameer that a European Russian Envoy, with full powers, and equal in rank to the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan, will shortly visit Cabul to discuss and arrange the different matters between the two Governments. The Ameer's first impulse was to send a special message to the Governor-General at Tashkend, saying that it would be inconvenient for a European officer to come to Cabul; but, before the Ameer did anything a letter was received by him from Kaufmann, corroborating the Agent's statement, and adding that the Envoy must be received by the Ameer at Cabul, as he had been sent by the express commands of the Emperor. Shahghassi Sherdil Khan has also written to the Ameer that a road is about to be commenced from some place near Khiva to Charjui, and thence to Akcha on the road to Maimeneh; and that a son or brother of the Khan of Khiva has been told off with 800 horsemen to protect the workmen, and that he is to accompany the Russian Envoy to Cabul. I don't quite understand how Tchernaieff can get across the Kara Kum desert from Krasnovodsk to Khiva, judging from the result of Markosoff's disastrous atempt to use that route during the Khivan expedition; but possibly a comparatively small party may be able to do what was impracticable for an army. I should have thought that, if it was necessary for Tchernaieff to go viâ Khiva, he would have adopted the route taken by one of the Orenburg columns along the west shores of the Sea of Aral. However, by whatever route he intends to come, there seems every likelihood that he is the officer of high rank that is spoken of as about to visit Cabul as an Envoy from the Russians.

Inclosure 5 in No. 144.

Confidential Communication dated Peshawur, June 11, 1878.

I INCLOSE a copy of an intercepted letter intended for Sirdar ——— ———. The latter portion of it tends to confirm the news I reported in my telegram of the 5th instant, as it speaks of a selected Russian officer of great experience in Turkestan about to be sent as Envoy to Afghanistan; and the description given makes it highly probable that General Tchernaieff, regarding whose mission to Central Asia your Lordship telegraphed to me, may be referred to.

If there is any truth in the rumour (and I strongly believe that there is some foundation for it), I imagine that it principally depends on whether there is war between us and Russia whether the Russian authorities will really carry out this intention to send a European Envoy to Cabul or to other parts of Afghanistan; and that, if war does not break out, they will hold back their hand for the present, and deny (if asked) that they ever contemplated such interference in Afghanistan, which has already been declared to be beyond the sphere of their legitimate action.

Inclosure 6 in No. 144.

Confidential Communication dated Peshawur, June 13, 1878.

——— ——— has just sent me a report that the Shahghassi has written to the Ameer to say that the road-making between Khiva and Karki, viâ Charjui, is being carried on with great activity, and that a rumour has come from Tashkend that the Russians are mobilizing a force of 80,000 men, part of which will proceed viâ Khiva and part by Tashkend, to be concentrated at Charjui. He also adds that the Russian Envoy will proceed to Tashkend, and, after consultation with Kaufmann, will be sent to Cabul.

No. 145.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 5.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, July 31, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose an extremely interesting account, translated by Mr. Michell, from the "Moscow Gazette." of the mission to the Ameer of Bokhara of M. Weinberg, the Diplomatic Agent attached to General Kaufmann.

Your Lordship will not fail to notice that, while requesting the co-operation of the Ameer, M. Weinberg is reported to have stated that Russia had no ill-feeling towards Afghanistan, and intended dispatching an Envoy to Shere Ali Khan.

The observations which the "Moscow Gazette" makes on this subject reflect very fairly the average Russian view of the advantages which may be gained by a further advance in Central Asia.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

Inclosure in No. 145.

Substance of Article in the "Moscow Gazette" of July $\frac{6}{18}$, 1878.

(Translation.)

THE "Moscow Gazette" of the $\frac{6}{18}$th July publishes the following extract from the "Turkestan Vedomist":—

"The following is an account of the mission undertaken by M. Weinberg, the Diplomatic Agent attached to General Kaufmann, who was furnished with special instructions to negotiate with the Ameer of Bokhara in regard to the passage of Russian troops along the upper course of the Amu-Darya (Oxus).

"M. Weinberg, accompanied by Captain Shlikter, arrived at Karsh on the 21st May, and on the following day was presented to the Ameer, and handed to him the letter sent by the Governor-General of Turkestan, stating that his Excellency, in view of the present state of affairs and the probable advance of Russian troops along the Amu-Darya, relied on the same friendly disposition on the part of the Ameer which he had shown during the Khivan expedition, as also on the co-operation of the Bokharian authorities in the matter of obtaining supplies for the Russian detachments from the inhabitants of the districts through which they would pass. The Ameer, who at the commencement of the interview had seemed somewhat agitated, heard M. Weinberg in silence, and replied that he was perfectly willing to carry out the wishes of the Governor-General, and that he would endeavour, as far as lay in his power, to assist our troops, trusting by these means to strengthen the amicable relations at present existing between Bokhara and Russia.

"In answer to the Ameer's question in what way we intended arranging our affairs with Cabul, M. Weinberg considered it necessary to answer candidly that the Turkestan Governor-General nourished no ill-feeling against Afghanistan, and meditated dispatching an embassy to Shere Ali Khan, by which means our relations with the latter would in all probability become defined one way or the other, either in an amicable or hostile sense; everything would depend on the straightforwardness and good sense displayed by the Ameer. 'We,' added M. Weinberg, 'entertain no ulterior views in respect to him.'

"On the termination of this interview, the Ameer desired to see M. Weinberg on the following day, for the purpose of further discussion.

"The purchase of supplies in Bokhara for our Amu-Darya detachment has been sanctioned by the Ameer."

The "Moscow Gazette" of the $\frac{7}{19}$th July, in a leading article on this subject, says:—

"The time has arrived for Russia to establish her influence over the whole of Central Asia, and this is all the more easy as the Ruler of Afghanistan is not on good terms with England—our foe in Central Asia. The concentration of our influence on the frontiers of the territory of the Empress of India would be only a natural answer to the English seizure of Cyprus and all the approaches to Asia. Such may be the unobtrusive, even peaceable, object of the military operations undertaken by the troops of the Turkestan military circuit. As our correspondent at Berlin truly remarked the other day—'In Asia there are two political Powers confronting each other, and they must inevitably come into collision.' England wishes to be Russia's nearest neighbour in Asia Minor, and it is only natural, therefore, that Russia, in her turn, should desire to approach somewhat nearer to the English frontiers in India.

. . . . . "England was always jealous of our successes in Central Asia; she understood that every fresh step we made—every success, military or political, in Central Asia—hastened the moment when Russia would possess the possibility of establishing her influence on the frontiers of English territory. The present moment appears the most propitious for the attainment of this object, and it is not without good grounds, may be, that the English Government is bestowing itself to diminish the armed strength of her vassal Chiefs in India. England understands that a force of 60,000 British soldiers and 127,000 picked natives is inadequate to crush a revolt in a population numbering 240,000,000 people!"

Since the appearance of the article in regard to the Ameer of Bokhara, the "Russki Mir" states that it reported that Mr. Weinberg, the Diplomatic Agent above referred to, has died suddenly at Tashkend from heart disease.

No. 146.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received August 8.)

My Lord, India Office, August 8, 1878.

I AM directed by Viscount Cranbrook to request that you will be so good as to lay before the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs the inclosed copies of telegrams received from the Viceroy of India, together with the following observations, which his Lordship desires me to submit for the Marquis of Salisbury's consideration on the subject of the reported arrival of General Abramoff on a special mission at Cabul, accompanied by a Russian military escort.

Lord Salisbury is so thoroughly conversant with the general bearings of the important question now brought to an issue by this open interference of the Czar's Government in Afghanistan, that, as a prelude to the general remarks he has to offer, Lord Cranbrook thinks it unnecessary to do more than recapitulate the declarations which have been made by the Russian Government in respect to that country between the years 1869 and 1876.

On the $\frac{24\text{th February}}{7\text{th March}}$, 1869, Prince Gortchakow wrote to Baron Brünnow as follows:—

"Vous pouvez donc, mon cher Baron, réitérer au Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique l'assurance positive que Sa Majesté Impériale considère l'Afghanistan comme entièrement en dehors de la sphère où la Russie peut être appelée à exercer son influence. Aucune intervention ou ingérence quelconque contraire à l'indépendance de cet Etat n'entre dans ses intentions."

On the 28th January, 1874, Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh reported that, in a conversation with the Russian Chancellor, his Highness had expressed himself in the following terms:—

"As regards Afghanistan, his Highness (Prince Gortchakow) repeated to me that the Imperial Government considered that Kingdom to be beyond the sphere of their political action, and that, happen what might in the internal state of that country, the Imperial Government would not interfere."

This intelligence was confirmed by Prince Gortchakow himself in a despatch addressed to Count Brünnow, which was communicated to Her Majesty's Government on the 17th February, 1874. His Highness wrote: "J'ai réitéré à Lord A. Loftus l'assurance positive que le Cabinet Impérial persiste à considérer l'Afghanistan comme entièrement en dehors de sa sphère d'action," a declaration which was quoted by the Prince in a Memorandum inclosed in a despatch to Count Schouvaloff dated 5th April, 1875. Finally, on the $\frac{3\text{rd}}{15\text{th}}$ February, 1876, the Chancellor issued the following instructions to the Russian Ambassador in London:—

"Veuillez dire à son Excellence, d'ordre de notre auguste Maître, que nous adhérons entièrement aux conclusions d'après lesquelles en maintenant, de part et d'autre, l'arrangement convenu quant aux limites de l'Afghanistan, qui demeurerait en dehors de la sphère d'action de la Russie, les deux Cabinets considéreraient comme closes les discussions reconnues peu pratiques relatives à la zone neutre et à la zone intermédiaire."

It is only necessary to mention further that in 1869 Prince Gortchakow expressed to Sir A. Buchanan, then Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, his concurrence with the late Lord Mayo's views, that Russian Agents should not visit Cabul.*

The Russian Government has thus, during the last ten years, stood pledged to an attitude of absolute non-intervention in the affairs of Afghanistan. On the other hand, the policy of the British Government towards that State during the same period has been shaped in an entirely opposite sense; it has been, in fact, to exercise a proper and legitimate influence at Cabul; to encourage Shere Ali in a peaceful policy towards his neighbours; to respect his independence, and, whilst accepting no further responsibility in regard to his action than to press on him, when needful, our friendly advice, to protect him from foreign interference and aggression. In other words, whilst Russia has bound herself to abstain from exercising influence of any kind in Afghanistan, the policy of Her Majesty's Government has been in the interests of peace to exercise an influence which should be unchallenged and paramount.

It is true that the Russian Government has denied the reality of any such step on its part as that now reported.† M. de Giers has formally stated, in fact, to Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, that no such Mission as that referred to by Lord Lytton has been, or was intended to be, sent to Cabul by the Imperial Government or by General Kaufmann; he has, with equal emphasis, denied the existence of intrigues between General Kaufmann and Shere Ali. But in the face of the particulars now received from India, corroborated as they are from other sources, Viscount Cranbrook cannot pretend to accept as satisfactory these denials.

* Sir A. Buchanan to the Earl of Clarendon, November 2, 1869.

† M. de Giers to Lord A. Loftus; Lord A. Loftus to Marquis of Salisbury, July 3, 1878.

Assuming the truth of the fact reported, it appears that, contrary to all engagements with England, a Russian Mission has found its way to the Ameer of Cabul, who has received it, either willingly, or under pressure, without reference to the Indian Government. This Mission is said to be backed by four Russian columns, aggregating some 15,000 men, moving through the Turkoman country, and on the line of the Oxus, and converging on points which may be said to directly menace the safety and integrity of Afghanistan.

To meet this difficulty the Viceroy has proposed, as a preliminary measure, to insist on the reception by the Ameer of a suitable British Mission at Cabul, a proposal which, as will be seen from the telegram quoted in the margin,* the Secretary of State for India has deemed it expedient to sanction.

But Lord Cranbrook cannot consider this step as adequate in itself to the occasion, and is strongly of opinion that Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh should be at once instructed to address the Russian Cabinet upon the proceedings of the Russian authorities in Turkestan.

It is the Russian Cabinet alone which is responsible for the acts of its Agent; and it is the Russian Governor-General of Turkestan, rather than the Ameer Shere Ali, who, with or without authority, is at this moment pursuing a policy of which the effect must be to seriously agitate the minds of Her Majesty's subjects throughout India.

' In view of the gravity of the situation the Secretary of State for India may safely leave to Lord Salisbury, who has a full knowledge of the question, the adoption of such language at St. Petersburgh as he may think best calculated to bring about a result such as the engagements of Russia entitle us to expect.

I am directed to add, in conclusion, that Viscount Cranbrook proposes to submit hereafter remarks on the alleged movements of Russian expeditions in the Turkoman country and on the Oxus, which he is of opinion should form the subject of a distinct and separate communication to the Government of Russia.

I have, &c.

(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 146.

The Viceroy of India to Viscount Cranbrook.

(Telegraphic.) July 30, 1878.

BRITISH native medical officer, lent some time ago to Ameer, returned on leave to Peshawur on the 21st instant, reporting that Kaufmann, with troops, had reached Karki, and was personally proceeding to see Ameer. Afghan officials at the Oxus tried to stop him, pending Ameer's orders, but he declined to obey them. Ameer thereupon sent orders forbidding opposition to Russian officers.

Native doctor heard Ameer tell his Minister in Durbar, 7th July, that Kaufmann, or officer of equal rank from Tashkend, had crossed Oxus on road to Cabul, refusing to be stopped.

I refrained from telegraphing this information to you pending confirmation. Have now heard from Peshawur reported arrival of Russian officer at Cabul with large military escort. This, of course, cannot be Kaufmann, and may be native of rank in Russian service, though all accounts as yet point to European officer. If such Mission be authenticated I will telegraph again.

It will be difficult to act or instruct frontier officers without definite indication of views of Cabinet on such conduct on part of Russia and Ameer, having regard to Russia's formal promises, and Ameer's refusal to receive British Mission in any shape. What I shall then require to know, without delay, is, whether this will be treated by Her Majesty's Government as an Imperial question with Russia, or left to us to deal with as a matter between Ameer and the Government of India.

In latter case, I shall propose, with your approval, to insist on immediate suitable reception of European British Mission.

I will communicate with you further on measures which may, in this contingency,

* To Viceroy, August 3, 1878 — "Assuming the certainty of Russian officers at Cabul, your proposals to insist on reception of British Envoy approved.

"In case of refusal you will telegraph again as to the steps you desire to take for compelling the Ameer to receive your Mission."

become necessary for securing due permanent preponderance in Afghanistan. The alternative would be continued policy of complete inaction, difficult to maintain, and very injurious to our position in India.

Inclosure 2 in No. 146.

The Viceroy of India to Viscount Cranbrook.

(Telegraphic.) Simla, August 2, 1878.

FURTHER confirmation received of presence of Russian Mission at Cabul, headed by General Abramoff, Governor of Samarcand, who is mentioned by name.

Referring to my telegram of 30th, we desire to point out that present situation requires immediate correction. It will soon be known throughout India that Russian officers and troops have been received with honour and are staying at Cabul, within short distance of our frontier, and our largest military garrison, while our officers have been denied admission there.

We have further reports of Russian officers having visited, and been well received, at Maimena.

To remain inactive now will, we respectfully submit, be to allow Afghanistan to fall as certainly and as completely under Russian power and influence as the Khanates.

We believe we could correct situation, if allowed to treat it as question between us and Ameer, and probably could do so without recourse to force; but we must speak plainly and decidedly, and be sure of your support.

It appears to us that the contingency contemplated in Secretary of State's letter of the 2nd January, 1875, has arisen, and we propose, therefore, in the first place to insist on reception of suitable British Mission at Cabul. To this we do not anticipate serious resistance; indeed, we think it probable that Ameer, adhering to his policy of playing Russia and ourselves off against each other, will really welcome such Mission, while outwardly only yielding to pressure. We would thus endeavour to effect arrangements similar to those urged on us by your Lordship's predecessor in despatch above quoted, but avoiding all dynastic obligations.

It is possible we should find considerable difficulty in obtaining Ameer's assent to such arrangements, but in hands of skilful negotiator difficulties might be overcome, and at least it is desirable to make the effort in the first instance.

Ameer is aware we are in position to enforce our demands. Failing in these endeavours to re-establish the preponderance of British influence in Afghanistan, which we believe to be necessary for the safety of India, we shall then have to consider what measures are necessary for the protection and permanent tranquillity of our north-west frontier as indicated in last paragraph of Secretary of State's despatch of 4th October, 1877.

We earnestly solicit an early reply, as situation is urgent.

Inclosure 3 in No. 146.

The Viceroy of India to Viscount Cranbrook.

(Telegraphic.) Simla, August 5, 1878.

YOUR telegram of 3rd. Cabul. No hostile action shall be taken without full previous communication with you.

No. 147.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received August 9.)

My Lord, India Office, August 9, 1878.

WITH reference to my letter of yesterday's date, I am directed by Viscount Cranbrook to forward herewith, to be laid before Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copy of a further telegram from the Viceroy of India, on the subject of the Russian Mission at Cabul.

I have, &c.

(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure in No. 147.

The Viceroy of India to Viscount Cranbrook.

(Telegraphic.) Simla, August 9, 1878.

REPORTS from Cabul, July 30th, state Ameer received Russian Envoy in Durbar 26th.

Envoy presented two letters, one from Governor-General of Tashkend, other from the Czar. Contents not stated.

Review of troops ordered for 2nd instant.

No. 148.

Mr. Stanhope to Lord Tenterden.—(Received August 13.)

My Lord, India Office, August 13, 1878.

IN my letter of the 8th instant, relative to the breach of Russian engagement involved by the presence of a Russian Envoy at Cabul, I informed you of Viscount Cranbrook's intention to submit, for the consideration of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, certain further observations on the movements of Russian troops in the Turkoman country and on the Oxus, which, in his Lordship's opinion, might form the subject of a separate communication to the Russian Cabinet.

In accordance with this intimation, I am now directed to request you to be so good as to lay before the Marquis of Salisbury the views of the Secretary of State for India on this important matter, which has a direct bearing on the declared policy of Her Majesty's Government in Central Asia, on the tranquillity of the north-west frontier of India, and on the relations between the Government of India and that of Afghanistan.

The reports which reached Her Majesty's Government in the spring of the year, announcing extensive military preparations in Russian Turkestan for some object not officially revealed, received practical confirmation in the General Order issued by the Russian Governor-General of Turkestan on the 14th May last. That General Order, which was stated to be based on instructions received from the Russian Minister of War, directed the formation, as a preliminary measure, of three operating columns aggregating some 15,000 men. The principal column, consisting of about 12,000 combatants at full strength, under Major-General Trofsky, was ordered to be formed at Samarcand, to proceed thence to Djam; and further, according to orders, the second column, organized at Marghilan, and consisting of about 1,700 men, was to proceed, under command of Major-General Abramoff, to the Kizil-Su Valley, where it was also to await further orders; the third, or Amu-Darya (Oxus) column, formed at Petro Alexandrovsk, under Colonel Grotenhelm, and amounting to about 1,700 men, was to move up the banks of the Oxus to Chardjui, and further according to orders. In addition to these three columns, a force of five regiments of infantry and some guns, besides 1,000 Cossacks, or some 4,000 men in all, has, according to reports received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tehran, been organized at Chikishlar on the Caspian, for the occupation of the Akhal country, a measure which, by the latest information received in this Office, is in course of execution, with the consent and assistance of the Persian Government.

Thus, there are reported to be in movement in the trans-Caspian district, and on the Oxus, four Russian military expeditions, comprising nearly 20,000 men, converging on points which directly command Merv and the Akhal country, and menace the northern frontier of Afghanistan.

In the absence of an explanation from official Russian sources, it may be surmised that the object of the Russian Government in originally sanctioning the movements in question, was to anticipate the contingency of a war with England, and consequent danger to Russian Turkestan by seizing strategical positions on the Oxus and elsewhere.

The Russian press is generally so well informed on these matters, that Lord Cranbrook would invite Lord Salisbury's particular attention to the articles referred to in the margin,* which strongly support the view above expressed.

It will be in Lord Salisbury's recollection that when, in the spring of 1875, the Russian Ambassador at the Court of St. James called upon the Earl of Derby to ascertain more clearly than he had yet done the "views of Her Majesty's Government on the Central Asian question," he was reminded of the warning which the

* "Russki Mir," May $\frac{17}{29}$; "Moscow Gazette," July $\frac{7}{19}$.

Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs had already given to him of the great importance which the Indian Government attached to Merv, and of the danger to the relations between the two Governments that would, in Lord Derby's opinion, ensue if that place were meddled with. The private interchange of views which at that period took place resulted, as Lord Salisbury is aware, in the important communication, dated the 5th April of that year, addressed by Prince Gortchakow to Count Schouvaloff, inclosing a Memorandum which reviewed all the correspondence that had passed between the two Governments since 1864. That Memorandum expressed the determination of the Czar not to extend the frontier of Russia beyond its then existing limits, either in the direction of Bokhara, Krasnovodsk, or the Attrek, reiterated in unmistakable language a declaration on the part of the Russian Government that Afghanistan was a State outside the sphere of Russian action, but at the same time concluded by claiming full liberty of action over the countries intervening between the Russian possessions and the latter State.

This claim so gravely qualified the formal and satisfactory assurances given in the earlier paragraphs of Prince Gortchakow's communication that the reply of the English Cabinet was framed in language which could not be mistaken in its import. Whilst frankly accepting the assurances given by the Russian Chancellor, it strongly deprecated any further advance of the Russian frontier toward Afghanistan as being likely to involve complications which might seriously compromise the integrity of Afghan territory, "to maintain which Her Majesty's Government reserved the most complete liberty of action under all future contingencies."

The exchange of views thus carried on between the two Governments in 1875, conceived and conducted in a conciliatory manner on both sides, had no practical result. In spite of the direct engagement recorded in Prince Gortchakow's Memorandum as to non-extension of Russian territory, the Russian Government increased rather than relaxed its activity in the Turkoman country and on the Oxus. On the strength of rights secured in 1873 by Treaties with Khiva and Bokhara, the Governor-General of Turkestan placed steamers on that river, and dispatched exploring parties to Hissar, Kulab, Sherabad, and elsewhere in its neighbourhood; whilst, in direct contravention of orders issued by His Imperial Majesty, the Russian Commander of the trans-Caspian district scoured the country in the neighbourhood of the Attrek with a considerable force. Close upon this renewed activity followed the annexation of Khokand, as well as a marked increase of correspondence (carried by Russian Agents) between the Russian Governor-General of Turkestan and the Ameer Shere Ali, in a tone, on the part of General Kaufmann, which drew from Her Majesty's Government a remonstrance at St. Petersburgh.

In short, far from the Russian Government adhering to its pledges of 1875, the past three years have been marked by a considerable increase of territory, by expeditions into the Akhal country, by secret Missions of Russian Agents both in the Turkoman country and in Western Afghanistan, and, finally, by the present military movements.

Lord Cranbrook is not in a position at this moment to indicate what effective steps should, in his opinion, be taken by the Indian Government in the altered situation created by the proceedings of the Russian authorities in Turkestan; but requests Lord Salisbury to keep him informed of any measures which he may adopt to obtain explanations from the Russian Government, and the result.

I have, &c.
(Signed) EDWARD STANHOPE.

No. 149.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 19.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 12, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship an extract from the "Messager du Turkestan," which, in addition to other news from Central Asia, states that last year a survey was taken and a line drawn of a projected road from Krasnovodsk to the Lake Sary Kamisch. This road, it would appear, is to be utilized by the detachment appointed to watch the route to Khiva. The survey has likewise been made of a road from Bui Kitchick to Kizil Arvad.

Your Lordship will also observe that soundings have lately been taken of the Amou-Daria, or River Oxus.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

Inclosure in No. 149.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of July 30 / August 11, 1878.

L'EXPÉDITION du Colonel Bonsdorf dans les provinces de l'Oural et de Tourgaï, ainsi que vers l'Ourst-Ourt, a été entreprise, au dire du "Messager du Turkestan," dans le but de déterminer la position géographique de quelques points pour la carte de la contrée d'Orenbourg actuellement en préparation. La base pour la détermination des longitudes était la ville d'Orenbourg, les fortifications d'Ak-tub et le poste d'Emba déterminés antérieurement par le Colonel Tillo en 1870 et 1871. Les travaux de l'expédition se divisaient en deux parties ; la première consistait à fixer les points compris entre Orenbourg, Ak-tub, et Emba ; la seconde à parcourir les localités entre Emba et l'embouchure de l'Emba, dans la direction de l'Ourst-Ourt, et à revenir à Emba. L'expédition a duré soixante-dix-huit jours ; vingt points ont pu être déterminés. A son retour à Orenbourg, le Colonel Bonsdorf a pu faire les calculs relatifs à tous ces points de la steppe Kirgise, et établir les conditions astronomiques des localités qu'avait parcourues en 1876 le défunt Colonel Solimani.

La topographie du district de Nicolaïeff, dans la Province de Tourgaï, a été achevée, 4,451 verstes carrées ont été calculées, et 519 points ont été déterminés. La base de ces travaux a été les déterminations astronomiques et trigonométriques antérieures entre les rivières Omein et Tobol.

Huit cent onze verstes entre Ilets, Akmolinsk, Caraboutak, Irghiz, et Tourgaï ont été reconnues.

Les reconnaissances des points habités entreprises en 1876 dans la Province d'Orenbourg ont été continuées ; de nouvelles données relatives au nombre des maisons de chaque village forment une riche matière pour la statistique de la Province d'Orenbourg.

L'année passée a été dressée l'itinéraire de la steppe du Transcaucase à partir de Krasnovodsk jusqu'au Lac de Sary-Kamisch, pour servir à la marche du détachement destiné à observer la route de Khiva. Cette route a des montagnes peu élevées, et des collines couvertes de sable en plusieurs endroits. En outre a été dressé l'itinéraire depuis Bui-Kitchik jusqu'à Kyzyl-Arvat, comme suite des travaux topographiques antérieurs dans le Trauscaucase.

Dans cette même contrée les membres de l'expédition de l'Ouroun-Dar-Jin ont achevé la levée du plan de l'embouchure des canaux Khan-Jab, Laudon, et Daria-Lyk, et aussi de toute la rive droite de l'Amou-Daria depuis Daria-Lyk jusqu'à Laudon et le long du Daria-Lyk.

On a déterminé la profondeur de l'Amou-Daria en plusieurs endroits.

Les travaux de nivellement de l'Amou-Daria ont continué pendant toute la durée du printemps et de l'été de 1877

No. 150.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 19.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 14, 1878.

WITH reference to Lord A. Loftus' despatch of the 3rd ultimo, I took occasion to remind M. de Giers this afternoon of the conversation which Her Majesty's Ambassador had had with him shortly before leaving St. Petersburgh, and I expressed the hope that, at a moment when good relations were being at last re-established between Great Britain and Russia on the graver questions in Europe and in Asia Minor, the Imperial Government would not compromise the growth or maintenance of those friendly relations by pursuing in Central Asia a policy which seemed little in conformity with previous agreements.

Reverting to the explanation which he had given to Lord A. Loftus, that, in view of the probability of a war with Great Britain, the Russian military commanders in Asia had been justified in preparing such measures as they deemed most likely to prejudice Great Britain, I said that peace was now happily secured, and therefore I ventured to inquire what measures had been taken for arresting the march of the Russian colomns which had left Tashkend and Krasnovodsk, and whether it was true that the Russian Envoy or Agent was still residing at Cabul.

After carefully weighing his words his Excellency replied that I must understand that, in questions of military movements, he could not be answerable for the details, with which he was naturally not acquainted; he could only answer for the principles which had been laid down for the policy of the Government. He could then assure me that it was not true that any Russian Emissary had proceeded to Cabul with any letter from the Emperor to the Ameer. Possibly there might have been a letter from General Kaufmann. Orders had been given to arrest the march of all the columns which had been put in movement from Tashkend, and as a matter of fact he was under the impression, although he could not tell me so either officially or positively, that the troops had already resumed their old stations.

I then inquired whether the column which had left Krasnovodsk under General Llamakin had also returned; but on this point I failed to elicit any distinct reply.

I obtained, however, an assurance from M. de Giers, which he repeated to me twice, that all the special measures which had been taken in Central Asia, and which, M. de Giers said, Russia had as much right to take, in view of the impending risk of war, as Great Britain had had to bring Indian troops to Malta, had been stopped; and he asserted positively that at the present moment no military measures whatever were being taken which could give umbrage to Her Majesty's Government.

I said that I was glad to receive these assurances as regards the stoppage of all military movements; could his Excellency give me equally satisfactory assurances concerning those political steps which had been commenced in view of complications with Great Britain?

M. de Giers at once replied: "Everything has been stopped. The political as well as the military precautions which we thought ourselves justified in taking against you—everything has been stopped."

I have full confidence that in the above assurances M. de Giers correctly conveyed to me the substance of the orders sent from here as far as the Cabinet knows them; but he had warned me that he was necessarily ignorant of many military details, and experience has already shown how elastic Imperial orders become by the time they reach Tashkend

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

No. 151.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 19.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 14, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith a translation by Mr. Michell of an article in the "Golos," showing the supposed destination of the different columns which had left Tashkend for the frontiers of Afghanistan.

These articles are at present interesting, more from a theoretical than from a practical point of view; the opinion is here very generally entertained in well-informed circles, and it is confirmed by the official assurances reported in my despatch of this date, that the contemplated movement in Central Asia has been stopped since the conclusion of the Peace of Berlin.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

Inclosure in No. 151.

Extract from the "Golos" of August $\frac{1}{13}$, 1878.

(Translation.)

THE RUSSIAN EXPEDITION TO FRONTIERS OF AFGHANISTAN.—The "Golos" of the $\frac{1st}{13th}$ August reproduces the following letter addressed to the "Politische Correspondenz" from St. Petersburgh:—

"The mystery which has hitherto enveloped the objects of the long meditated and secretly fitted out expedition, already despatched from Tashkend, is commencing by degrees to clear up. Although all the three Russian columns are to operate along the course of the Oxus, each of them has a special task to execute, after which they will act in concert. The troops under General Abramoff, who commands the left wing of the corps of operation, may be regarded as having for their temporary object the establishment of Russian rule over the tribes inhabiting the upper course of the Oxus. Colonel Grotenhelm has received instructions to occupy the Turk Settlement at Merv, while the principal force of the Russian corps is ordered to pacify and subdue the inhabitants of the region between the Oxus and the Hindoo Koosh. This column is advancing straight on Samarcand, Balkh, Kulm, Bamiam, Cabul, India. The three columns will effect a junction at some point on this route. The work to be accomplished by the principal force presents considerable difficulties. To the south of the Oxus and beyond to the Hindoo Koosh there are, at the present time, five Khanates: Karategui, Shugnal, Darvas, Sarikol, and Vakhan. This last Khanate is indirectly dependent on Afghanistan, whereas Sarikol formerly formed a part of the territory of Yacub Bek of Kashgar; Karategui, Shugnal, and Darvas are perfectly independent Khanates. It is now purposed to subdue these five Khanates and render them accessible to European civilization. On the occupation of Vakhan, the Khan of which prides himself on being a descendant of Alexander of Macedon, the frontiers of Russia will be advanced 400 versts nearer to British Asia, so that these two powerful Empires will be separated in Asia by about 68 German miles; at the same time it is necessary to note that the intervening space is inhabited by people who are imbued with the greatest hatred towards England. If the above operations are crowned with success the three columns will effect a junction in the Khanate of Balkh, so that the whole corps will appear on the frontiers of Afghanistan. It will only be then that the whole plans on which the expedition hinges will become definitely known. It is thought here that the first object is to elucidate the question whether the Ameer of Afghanistan will or will not give his adhesion to Russian policy? In the first case, the Russians will steadily advance to the gates of India; in the second case, General Kaufmann will proceed to subdue Afghanistan. "In this case, naturally, there will arise another question: whether the English will calmly await the nearer approach of the Russian columns, or whether they will oppose Russia's attack on Afghanistan."

According to a letter addressed to the "Golos" from Orenburg, on the $\frac{16}{28}$th July last, the Russian detachment which had left Tashkend "for the purpose of clearly ascertaining the relations between Russia and Afghanistan," were to march, in the first instance, to Djam, where final instructions for their ultimate destination were to be issued to them.

No. 152.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Plunkett.

Sir, Foreign Office, August 19, 1878.

FROM telegraphic despatches received from the Government of India, it appears that intelligence has reached the Viceroy that a Russian force under General Kaufmann has proceeded as far as Karki, a short distance to the north of the frontier of Afghanistan, and that a Russian Mission, headed by General Abramoff, Governor of Samarkand, has gone on to Cabul, where it has been received by the Ameer.

It is scarcely necessary to recapitulate the occasions on which Prince Gortchacow has disclaimed any intention on the part of the Russian Government to interfere in the affairs of Afghanistan. The assurances given by his Highness in this respect have been numerous and explicit, and have been renewed at a very recent date.

On the $\frac{24\text{th February}}{7\text{th March}}$, 1869, his Highness wrote to Baron Brünnow as follows:—

"Vous pouvez donc, mon cher Baron, réitérer au Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique l'assurance positive que Sa Majesté Impériale considère l'Afghanistan comme entièrement en dehors de la sphère où la Russie peut être appelée à exercer son influence. Aucune intervention ou ingérence quelconque contraire à l'indépendance de cet Etat n'entre dans ses intentions."

On the 28th January, 1874, Lord A. Loftus reported that, in a conversation with the Russian Chancellor, his Highness had repeated to him that "as regards Afghanistan, the Imperial Government considered that Kingdom to be beyond the sphere of their political action, and that, happen what might in the internal state of that country, the Imperial Government would not interfere." In a despatch addressed to Count Brünnow, which was communicated to Lord Granville on the 17th February, 1874, Prince Gortchacow wrote: "J'ai réitéré à Lord A. Loftus l'assurance positive que le Cabinet Impérial persiste à considérer l'Afghanistan comme entièrement en dehors de sa sphère d'action," a declaration which was quoted in a Memorandum inclosed by the Prince in a despatch to Count Schouvaloff, and communicated to Lord Derby on the 11th May, 1875. Finally, on the $\frac{3\text{rd}}{15\text{th}}$ February, 1876, the Chancellor gave the following instructions to the Russian Ambassador in London:—

"Veuillez dire à son Excellence, d'ordre de notre auguste Maître, que nous adhérons entièrement aux conclusions d'après lesquelles en maintenant, de part et d'autre, l'arrangement convenu quant aux limites de l'Afghanistan, qui demeurerait en dehors de la sphère d'action de la Russie, les deux Cabinets considéreraient comme closes les discussions reconnues peu pratiques relatives à la zone neutre et à la zone intermédiaire."

It is only necessary to mention further that, as reported by Sir A. Buchanan, then Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, on the 2nd November, 1869, Prince Gortchacow expressed to him his concurrence with the late Lord Mayo's views, that Russian agents should not visit Cabul.

The Russian Government has thus, during the last ten years, stood pledged to an attitude of absolute non-intervention in the affairs of Afghanistan. On the other hand, the policy of the British Government towards that State has confessedly, and with the concurrence and approval of Russia, been shaped, during the same period, in an entirely opposite sense; it has been, in fact, to exercise a proper and legitimate influence at Cabul; to encourage Shere Ali in a peaceful policy towards his neighbours; to respect his independence; and, whilst accepting no further responsibility in regard to his action than to press on him, when needful, our friendly advice, to protect him from foreign interference and aggression. In other words, whilst Russia has bound herself to abstain from exercising influence of any kind in Afghanistan, the policy of Her Majesty's Government has been, in the interests of peace, to exercise an influence which should be unchallenged and paramount.

The Government of Russia have given that of Her Majesty no reason to suppose that they had departed from the line of policy thus indicated. On the contrary, when inquiries were recently made by Lord A. Loftus, as reported in his despatch of the 3rd ultimo, M. de Giers emphatically denied that any such Mission as is now spoken of had been sent, or was intended to be sent, to Cabul, either by the Imperial Government or by General Kaufmann.

But the circumstantial reports now received from India, corroborated as they are from other sources, are of a nature which it is impossible for Her Majesty's Government to ignore or overlook.

Assuming the truth of the facts reported, it would appear that a Russian Mission has found its way to the Ameer of Cabul, who has received it, either willingly or under pressure. This Mission is said to be backed by four Russian columns, aggregating some 15,000 men, moving through the Turcoman country and on the line of the Oxus, and so directed that the Ameer may not unnaturally consider them as offering a menace to the safety and integrity of his dominions.

I must therefore request you to mention these reports to Prince Gortchacow, and to inquire whether there is any foundation for them. You will not conceal from his Highness that proceedings of the kind referred to would cause uneasiness in India and dissatisfaction in this country, and should it prove that there is any truth in the statement that a Russian Mission has proceeded to Cabul, you will express the hope of Her Majesty's Government that it may be at once withdrawn, as being inconsistent with the assurances so frequently received from his Highness.

I am, &c.
(Signed) SALISBURY.

No. 153.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 21.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 16, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith an extract from the "Agence Russe" of this morning, stating that the military preparations in Central Asia have been stopped since the Congress of Berlin, and I also inclose an extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of this morning, practically to the same effect.

I beg also to submit to your Lordship a translation taken from the "Agence Russe," of an article from the "Golos," which endeavours to prove that the Russian movements in Central Asia are the reply of this Empire to the Anglo-Turkish Convention of the 4th June; but I would venture to remark that, as General Stoletoff, who commands the expedition, was despatched on his mission so long ago as the end of March or commencement of April, the dates of the two events clearly prove the hollow nature of the argument put forth by the "Golos."

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

Inclosure 1 in No. 153.

Extract from the "Agence Russe."

LE "Golos" consacre à ce sujet l'article suivant:—

"Les Anglais ont décidé d'envoyer une mission à l'Emir de Caboul, mission à la tête de laquelle sera placé M. Neville Chamberlain et qui se mettra en route vers le commencement du mois de Septembre, escortée d'un régiment de troupes de l'Inde. L'idée leur en est venue sans doute parce qu'ils ont appris de l'arrivée d'une mission Russe à Caboul et de l'accueil qui lui a été fait par l'Emir Shir Ali. Lord Lytton s'est aperçu, quoiqu'un peu tard, que les affaires d'Afghanistan prennent une tournure susceptible de réagir très-défavorablement au point de vue des intérêts Anglais sur l'esprit des indigènes de l'Inde. Le Gouvernement Britannique a caché, aussi longtemps qu'il l'a pu, les conséquences probables de la marche de l'armée Russe vers le Turkestan—la presse avait le mot d'ordre de ne pas traiter de ce sujet pendant tout le temps que durèrent les séances du Congrès. De même qu'elle avait fait semblant d'ignorer le mouvement d'opinion provoqué par l'idée de la flotte volontaire. La raison de ce silence est compréhensible. Le Ministère avait souci d'empêcher la publication de nouvelles qui auraient pu jeter du froid dans les ovations que le Comte Beaconsfield tenait à savourer jusqu'au bout. Maintenant même ce n'est qu'avec une répulsion évidente que les journaux et les sphères officielles s'occupent de ces faits qui détonnent dans l'harmonie générale du triomphe Ministériel.

"Le Cabinet a voulu préserver le prestige tant que cela a été possible, mais enfin la nécessité est venue de parler de ces sujets désagréables; alors la presse a entamé timidement des relations sur la marche du Général Kaufmann. Puis le Parlement a commencé à s'intéresser à la chose—de là l'interpellation de Mr. Dilke, à laquelle Sir Stafford Northcote a répondu d'une façon, pour ainsi dire, évasive. Cependant la nécessité d'une confession sincère et complète devient de plus en plus éminente. Et, alors on ne sait comment fera le Gouvernement pour s'excuser, lui, qui a su combiner la Convention Anglo-Turque, n'a pas eu la clairvoyance de prévoir que la Russie répondrait à cet acte par des mesures de compensation en Asie Centrale. La presse Russe, au lendemain même du jour où la Convention du 4 Juin fut rendue publique, indiqua le revirement que prendraient les affaires—elle le fit dans des termes assez clairs pour permettre de tirer cette conclusion que la Convention Anglo-Turque serait suivie d'incidents qui ne seraient pas du goût des hommes d'Etat Anglais. Donc, en cachant les faits le Gouvernement, et la presse, qui lui a prêté sa complicité, ont sciemment intercepté une publicité qui pouvait être nuisible au Cabinet."

Inclosure 2 in No. 153.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of August $\frac{4}{16}$, 1878.

ON s'est encore une fois occupé avant-hier, à la Chambre des Communes d'Angleterre, de "l'expédition" Russe au-delà de l'Oxus et de la mission envoyée auprès de l'Emir de Caboul. Nous avons déjà fait remarquer il y a deux jours que c'étaient là des préoccupations parfaitement périmées par la conclusion du Traité de Berlin. Et comme la Session Parlementaire en Angleterre tire à sa fin, il est permis de croire qu'on n'entendra plus parler les sujets que MM. Dilke et Harcourt ont touchés Mardi.

Inclosure 3 in No. 153.

Extract from the "Agence Russe."

St. Pétersbourg, Jeudi soir, le $\frac{3}{15}$ Août, 1878.

NOUS voyons par les télégrammes et les correspondances des journaux étrangers qu'on se préoccupe beaucoup à Londres, à Vienne, et ailleurs, des progrès d'une prétendue expédition Russe en Asie-Centrale, ayant plus ou moins en vue les approches de Merv et de Caboul.

Nous avons lieu de croire ces journaux bien tardivement renseignés. Les faits dont ils parlent se rapportent à un moment où, de la part de la Russie, ces faits se trouvaient justifiés par le cas de légitime défense qui lui créaient les préparatifs de guerre de l'Angleterre, mais il va sans dire que depuis le Congrès de Berlin, ces faits ont cessé d'exister avec les causes qui les avaient crées. Aussi ne serions-nous pas étonnés de voir ces mêmes organes déclarer sous peu que toutes les mesures relatives à une expédition en Asie-Centrale ont été depuis contremandées par le Gouvernement Impérial, et, cette fois, ces organes seront dans le vrai.

No. 154.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 21.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 16, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith translation by Mr. Stephen of an account borrowed from the "Turkestan Gazette" of the surveys which had been made by Colonel Majen in view of the contemplated march of a Russian expedition towards Afghanistan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

Inclosure in No. 154.

Extract from the "St. Petersburg Herald."

THE "Turkestan Gazette" writes as follows respecting the movements of the Russian troops in Central Asia :—

"Lieutenant-Colonel Majen had been told off by the Governor-General (Kaufmann) to make a careful examination of the ways and roads over which our troops were to have marched to the Amou Daria. M. Majen's journey lasted eighteen days. During this time Colonel Majen visited Karshi, where he had an interview with the Ameer of Bokhara relative to the expedition mentioned above. The road from Djam to Tschiraktschi, Karabat, and Gissar were surveyed on the Colonel's way to Karshi. This former place is a large commercial town situated on the spurs of the Gissar chain of mountains, and was chosen for head-quarters during the survey of the road to the Amou Daria. From here two roads were surveyed—

"1. The road to Derbent Schir Abat, and Kara Kaneor, and Kelif, over the Amou Daria ; and—

"2. The road likewise leading over the mountains from Kelif to Gissar.

"This road, as also the mountain way from Schir Abat to Kelif, which M. Majen travelled over, had never previously been trod by an European. In consequence of this journey our maps of the Gissar district have received important additions. The orographic character of the country between Gissar, Karshi, Schir Abat, and Baissun is now much better known. A topographer of the name of Petron accompanied Colonel Majen, surveying all the roads they travelled over."

No. 155.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 30.)

My Lord, Tehran, July 1, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose translation of a letter which I have received from the Mission Agent at Meshed, describing the reports which have been circulated in Khorassan respecting a rumoured advance of Russian troops towards Akhal, and in regard to the Mission of the Russian Consul at Asterabad to Meshed.

The Persian Minister informs me that the authorities in Asterabad have no information of the arrival of Russian troops at Krasnovodsk or anywhere on the eastern coast of the Caspian Sea.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 155.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.) June 22, 1878.

I ARRIVED at Meshed on the 19th instant. A cossid came in on the same day from Herat, bringing the news that an English and Turkish officer had arrived at Cabul, and had been received by the Ameer with much courtesy. Shah Kasse Shere Dil, Governor of Balkh and Turkestan, and Arsela Khan, one of the Kaleejoi Chiefs, are both dead. The Ameer is peaceably inclined.

About the latter end of May I received a letter from Boojnoord saying that the messenger who had been sent to Krasnovodsk had returned with the intelligence that six regiments of infantry and six guns had arrived, and six other regiments had passed Ashuradeh en route for Krasnovodsk. Their intention is to advance on the Akhals. No one is allowed to go amongst the troops except a few of the Yemoot Elders. It is not known when the Russians will start on their expedition. The Akhals are in a great state of alarm, but they have an idea that they will be protected by England.

There was a rumour at Boojnoord that the Russian Consul intends visiting Merv, and that he has 250,000 gold Imperials with him.

No. 156.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August* 30.)

My Lord, Tehran, July 7, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that the Asterabad Agent has reported to me that he had sent a trustworthy agent to Chekishler to inquire into the truth of intelligence which he had received respecting the arrival of Russian troops there. This man reported, on his return, that five regiments of Russian infantry, with ten guns, had been landed there, and that 1,000 Cossacks had come from the north by land and joined them. The Asterabad Agent added that it was generally supposed among the Turkomans that these troops were destined for Akhal and Merv.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

No. 157.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 30.)

My Lord, Tehran, July 8, 1878.

WITH reference to my despatch to your Lordship of yesterday's date, I have the honour to transmit herewith translation of the Asterabad Agent's letter therein mentioned, in which he reports the arrival of Russian troops at Chekishler, near the embouchure of the Attrek River.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

Inclosure in No. 157.

The Asterabad Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.) July 2, 1878.

ON the 25th ultimo I was informed that the Prince Governor had received a report that Russian troops had landed at Chekishler. I went to Ak Kaleh myself, and sent a Turkoman friend of mine to ascertain about the matter. He returned after four days, informing me that five regiments, and another General, besides General Llamakin, had landed, and he had also counted ten unmounted guns; 1,000 Cossacks had also arrived by land from Khiva. Their Chief is a Turkoman of the Charva tribe of Jaaferbaïs, who had several years ago been taken prisoner and sent to Russia. The Russian General is purchasing camels, and buys at any price. He sent for Tel Kaldee Khan, who was recently fined 800 tomans by General Llamakin, and turned away from Russian protection. The General told him that 800 tomans would be given to him to purchase and hire as many camels as he could, and another 800 tomans for himself. The Khan, however, excused himself on account of the hardships he had undergone, and managed to get away to the Prince Governor's camp, in the hope that he would take his part; but, as the Prince Governor had received orders from Tehran not to hinder the Russians in any way, he paid no attention to Tel Kaldee Khan. The Russian General, in fact, is in no want of the Khan, for he pays so handsomely that all the Turkomans, even those of the Kejjek and Tatar Turkomans, who reside on the frontiers of Goklan, are ready to sell their camels. Any Turkoman who visits the camp merely to see it is summoned by the Russian General, who, after talking a few words with him, gives him a present of two imperials. Although the General's intentions are unknown, it is generally believed that he will march up the Attrek Valley, upon the Téké country; others say he is going to Merv, and that another force is proceeding by Khiva upon that place.

* The substance of this despatch was telegraphed.

On the 27th ultimo M. Petrow, who acts for the Russian Consul, arrived here, and was received with the usual ceremonies.

It is said that two regiments and 1,000 horse, from the camp at Shahrood, have been ordered to proceed to Meshed. The Prince's camp is still at Ak Kaleh, but in a miserable state through the dearness of provisions, and no pay being given to the troops. The Turkoman tribes also do not intend paying any taxes, and are only waiting to get in their crops. The Jaaferbaï tribe are so hostile that they do not pay the slightest regard to Hijjij Koolee Khan, who has gone against them with 500 horse and foot; they are unceasing in their endeavours to draw him and his forces into the open plain, when they will be able to beat him easily and plunder his camp.

Asker Khan, an engineer officer, is repairing the fort of Ak Kaleh. The Goorgan River has subsided, and buffaloes can ford it now, so the Persian camp is therefore in danger.

It is currently said amongst all classes that there is great friendship between Russia and Persia, and that Persia does nothing without the advice of the Russian Government.

No. 158.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 2.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 27, 1878.

I HAD the honour to receive yesterday morning your Lordship's despatch of the 19th instant, desiring me to mention to Prince Gortchakow the reports which have reached Her Majesty's Government of Russian military movements towards Afghanistan, and to express the hope that the Russian Mission to Cabul may be withdrawn as being inconsistent with the assurances so frequently received from his Highness.

As M. de Giers, the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs in the absence of Prince Gortchakow, was to leave for the Crimea last night in the suite of the Emperor, and would, therefore, be sure to have his last hours in town fully occupied, I had taken the precaution, in view of the arrival of the messenger, of writing two days previously to ask his Excellency to grant me an interview yesterday; but, although I called twice at the Foreign Department at the hour which he had fixed as the most likely to see him, and also a couple of hours later, I was not fortunate enough to find him. I therefore handed to M. Melnikoff, the Acting Director of the Asiatic Department, the note, copy of which is herewith inclosed, embodying the substance of your Lordship's despatch, and requesting that care should be taken for having it sent to M. de Giers with as little delay as possible.

M. Melnikoff promised to do so at once, and apologized for the absence of M. de Giers, who, he said, had expected to have seen me, but had been kept away from the office by the pressure of other business consequent on his departure for the south.

I have, &c.

(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

Inclosure in No. 158.

Mr. Plunkett to M. de Giers.

M. le Conseiller Privé Actuel, St. Petersburgh, August 26, 1878.

IN compliance with instructions which I have received from the Marquis of Salisbury, it is my duty to inform your Excellency that intelligence has reached the Viceroy of India that a Russian force has proceeded as far as Karki, a short distance to the north of the frontier of Afghanistan, and that a Russian Mission headed by General Abramoff, Governor of Samarcand, has gone on to Cabul, where it has been received by the Ameer.

Lord Salisbury considers that it will be scarcely necessary to recapitulate the many occasions on which Prince Gortchakow has disclaimed any intention on the part of the Russian Government to interfere in the affairs of Afghanistan. The assurances given by his Highness in this respect have been numerous and explicit, and have been renewed at a very recent date.

On the $\frac{24\text{th February}}{7\text{th March}}$, 1869, his Highness wrote to Baron Brünnow as follows: "Vous pouvez donc, mon cher Baron, réitérer au Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique l'assurance positive que Sa Majesté Impériale considère l'Afghanistan comme entièrement en dehors de la sphère où la Russie peut être appelée à exercer son influence. Aucune intervention on ingérence quelconque contraire à l'independance de cet Etat n'entre dans ses intentions."

On the 28th January, 1874, Lord A. Loftus reported to Her Majesty's Government that in a conversation which he had had the honour of having with the Imperial Chancellor, his Highness had repeated to him that, "as regards Afghanistan, the Imperial Government considered that Kingdom to be beyond the sphere of their political action, and that, happen what might in the internal state of that country, the Imperial Government would not interfere." In a despatch addressed to Baron Brünnow, which was communicated to Lord Granville on the 17th February, 1874, Prince Gortchakow wrote:—"J'ai réitéré à Lord A. Loftus l'assurance positive que le Cabinet Impérial persiste à considérer l'Afghanistan comme entièrement en dehors de sa sphère d'action." A declaration which was quoted in a Memorandum inclosed by the Prince in a despatch to Count Schouvaloff, and communicated to Lord Derby ou the 11th May, 1875. Finally, on the $\frac{3\text{rd}}{15\text{th}}$ February, 1876, the Imperial Chancellor gave the following instructions to the Russian Ambassador in London:—"Veuillez dire à son Excellence, d'ordre de notre auguste Maître, que nous adhérons entièrement aux conclusions d'après lesquelles en maintenant, de part et d'autre, l'arrangement convenu quant aux limites de l'Afghanistan, qui demeurerait en dehors de la sphère d'action de la Russie, les deux Cabinets considéreraient comme closes les discussions reconnues peu pratiques relatives à la zone neutre et à la zone intermédiaire."

I would further venture to remind your Excellency that Prince Gortchakow expressed to Sir A. Buchanan, in the year 1869, his concurrence with the views entertained by the late Lord Mayo, that Russian Agents should not visit Cabul.

The Imperial Government has thus, during the last ten years, stood pledged to an attitude of absolute non-intervention in the affairs of Afghanistan. On the other hand, the policy of the British Government towards that State has confessedly, and with the concurrence and approval of Russia, been shaped during the same period in an entirely opposite sense; it has been, in fact, to exercise a proper and legitimate influence at Cabul; to encourage Shere Ali in a peaceful policy towards his neighbours; to respect his independence; and whilst accepting no further responsibility in regard to his action than to press on him when needful our friendly advice to protect him from foreign interference and aggression. In other words, whilst Russia has bound herself to abstain from exercising influence of any kind in Afghanistan, the policy of Her Majesty's Government has been in the interests of peace to exercise an influence which should be unchallenged and paramount.

The Government of Russia have given that of Her Majesty no reason to suppose that they had departed from the line of policy thus indicated. On the contrary, when inquiries were recently made on this subject by Lord A. Loftus, your Excellency said that no such Mission as is now spoken of had been sent, or was intended to be sent, to Cabul either by the Imperial Government or by General Kaufmann.

It now, however, becomes my duty to state that the circumstantial reports which have been received from India, corroborated as they are from other sources, are of a nature which it is impossible for Her Majesty's Government to ignore or overlook.

It would appear that a Russian Mission has found its way to the Ameer of Cabul, who has received it either willingly or under pressure. This Mission is said to be backed by four Russian columns, aggregating some 15,000 men moving through the Turkoman country, and on the line of the Oxus, and so directed that the Ameer may not unnaturally consider them as offering a menace to the safety and integrity of his dominions.

I have, therefore, been instructed by the Marquis of Salisbury to bring these reports to the knowledge of the Imperial Government, and to inquire whether there is any foundation for them, and I am to remind your Excellency that proceedings of the kind referred to give rise to much uneasiness in India and to great dissatisfaction in England, and should it turn out that there is truth in the statement that a Russian Mission has proceeded to Cabul, I am to express, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, the hope that it may be at once withdrawn, as being inconsistent with the assurances so frequently received from the Imperial Chancellor.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

No. 159.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 2.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 28, 1878.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 16th instant, respecting the surveys which have been made by Colonel Maeff of the routes towards the Oxus, I have the honour to inclose a translation by Mr. Michell of an article in the "Turkestan Gazette," giving further particulars on the same subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

Inclosure in No. 159.

Substance of an Article from the "Turkestan Vedomisti."

RUSSIAN MOVEMENTS ON FRONTIERS OF AFGHANISTAN. — The "Turkestan Vedomisti" publishes the following particulars of the expedition of Lieutenant-Colonel Maeff, who was dispatched from Tashkend for the purpose of surveying the routes leading through the Hissar region to the Oxus. Colonel Maeff returned to Tashkend in the middle of June last, having collected very detailed information in respect of these routes.

The march-routes drawn up by Colonel Maeff commence at Djam, a point to the south-west of the town of Samarcand. From Djam the road leads to the large town of Gusar, and is 116 versts in length. This route does not present any special obstacles to the movement of a detachment, and may be considered as the easiest portion of the route to the Oxus.

From Gusar to the passage over the Oxus at Kelif there are two routes; the first is 146 versts in length, and the other, through Shirabad, 229 versts in length. Comparing these two routes Colonel Maeff gives the preference, not to the first and shortest, but to the second, viâ Shirabad. The shortest route presents the disadvantage of passing through a district devoid of fresh water, the springs found, and they are but few, giving a brackish water, while the wells contain a bitter salt water. On the second route, however, fresh water is met with in abundance. Similarly the second route has the advantage in regard to supplies, being situated nearer the inhabited localities from whence forage could be obtained in the march from Gusar to Derbent; fuel is also very plentiful. Two populous settlements, those of Derbent and Ser-ob, are encountered in this latter route, and not far distant is situated the Khanate of Baissun, rich in cattle.

In this manner the Gusar-Shirabado-Kelif route, although somewhat longer in extent (67½ versts), affords the possibility of securing forage and fuel for the detachment, is also more convenient for the transport of supplies, and, what is of great importance, a supply of pure spring water is obtainable.

At Kelif there is a convenient passage over the Oxus. The river at this point narrows to the extent of 167 fathoms, which circumstances places the Afghan bank within the range of our guns. Moreover, steamers can easily reach Kelif. The passage over the river can be performed in Bokharian boats. Although Kelif in itself is not a point of great importance, it is surrounded by cultivated fields and vegetable gardens.

The passage at Kelif leads to the Afghan town of Achtcha or Andhai, a distance of 40 versts from Kelif. Further the route leads from Achtcha to Shiburgan, 40 versts; from Shiburgan to Saripul, 48 versts; from Saripul to Maimeni, 80 versts; the distance from the latter place to Kelif representing a journey of ten days.

No. 160.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 10.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, September 4, 1878.

I WOULD beg to call your Lordship's attention to the inclosed translation by Mr. Michell of an article in the "Turkestan Gazette," stating that the last portion of the expeditionary forces was to have returned to Tashkend by the $\frac{18}{30}$th August, that the telegraph lines were to be pushed on from Samarcand and Djam to Kattakurgan, and that the Ameer of Bokhara had offered, in case of hostilities, to continue the telegraph as far as the Amu-Daria. The Ameer also promised to provide the Russian troops with provisions, and sent an Envoy to Samarcand to compliment General Kaufmann.

The "Turkestan Gazette" states that news has been received from the Mission under General Stoletoff, which had reached Haiben, in northern Afghanistan; that it had been well received by the Afghans, and expected to arrive at Cabul on the 22nd July / 3rd August.

The morning papers of to-day announce the return to Tashkend, on the 30th July / 11th August, from Samarcand, of General Kaufmann and of General Troitzki, the latter being described as Commander-in-chief of the troops in the Amu-Daria district.

The above extracts would seem to prove that it is General Stoletoff, and not General Abramoff, who has been sent as Russian Envoy to Cabul.

P.S.—As the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of this morning contains a French translation of the above article, I inclose herewith two copies of it.

Inclosure 1 in No. 160.

Extract from the "Turkestan Vedomisti" of August $\frac{1}{13}$, 1878.

(Translation.)

THE Russian troops concentrated at Djam, on the frontiers of Bokhara, are gradually returning home in eight echelons. The last echelon will enter Tashkend on the $\frac{18}{30}$th August. The telegraph line constructed from Samarcand to Djam will be removed to Katta Kurgan, and will form the continuation of the line from Tashkend, Hodjent, Ura-tubi, Djizak, and Samarcand.

It is worthy of note that when the Ameer became aware of the Governor-General's intention to continue the telegraph line to the Oxus, he expressed a desire to supply the whole quantity of posts necessary. Moreover, the Ameer undertook to furnish our detachments with forage and provisions during their sojourn in the Khanate, and ordered that large quantities of clover, rye, rice, and sheep should be prepared at Shaar, Kitab, and Tchirakchi. The Ameer encountered no great difficulty in executing the above, in view of the rich harvest of the present year, while it proved of great assistance to the Russian detachments.

Several days prior to the arrival of the Commander-in-chief, General Kaufmann, a special Mission was sent by the Ameer of Bokhara for the purpose of meeting and paying their respects to the Governor-General. The principal member of the Mission was the Bek of Huzar, the son of the Ameer. Among other members were the Beks of Shakrizabz and Ziactdina and a representative of the Bek of Kernim. The immediate representatives of the Ameer were, Durbun Bey and Rahkmetula-Mirahur. Besides these were the Bek of Shaar and Alim Bek Permanachi, both enjoying the favour of the Ameer, and much respected by the people generally. The Mission dispatched by the Ameer on this occasion was particularly brilliant. In response to this attention, the Governor-General intends dispatching a messenger to the Ameer at Karshi, who will be the bearer of a courteous letter.

The commencement of direct relations with Afghanistan must be considered as one of the results of the present condition of things in the Turkestan region. The mission of Major-General Stoletoff, as might have been expected, will be far from proving a fruitless experiment. The only news received of General Stoletoff comes from Haibek in the Vilayet of Tchahor, in Northern Afghanistan. General Stoletoff was received with great honour and kindness by the Afghan authorities, and expects to be in Cabul by the 22nd July. We hope, in a short time, to be able to publish more detailed particulars of General Stoletoff's travels.

A scientific expedition composed of MM. Oshanin and Neveski (for botanical researches) and M. Radionoff (military topographer) will start shortly from Samarcand for the purpose of exploring the mountainous Hissar region. The expedition will proceed from Samarcand over Shakrizabz, the pass of Segri-Dag to Denau, from thence to Karatag, Dushambey, Kafirnagan, and Harm (in Koretegin), it will then direct its course to the south and issue out on the Pamir, where, in all probability, it will meet with M. Severtsoff's expedition.

Besides the above expedition, M. Maeff intends this summer to explore the mountain roads in the localities between Djam, Shir-abad, and Kelif, with the object of finding a connecting road between the Huzaro-Shir-abad and the Huzaro-Kelif roads. Such convenient connecting routes exist, it is thought, from the Kishlak of Sir-ob to Haz-Kishlak or from Derbent to the River Karchak-Darya.

Inclosure 2 in No. 160.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of $\frac{\text{August}}{\text{September}}\ \frac{24}{5}$, 1878.

D'APRÈS la "Gazette du Turkestan," les troupes concentrées à Djama, sur la frontière de Bokharah, retournent successivement à leurs cantonnements primitifs. Le dernier détachement devait revenir le 18 Août. La ligne télégraphique organisée de Samarcande à Djama sera transportée à Kattakourgan et formera la prolongation de la ligne de Tachkend-Khodjent-Oura-Tubé-Djizak-Samarcande. C'est un fait digne de remarque que lorsque l'Emir a appris l'intention du Gouverneur-Général de faire passer une ligne télégraphique jusqu'à l'Amou-Daria, il s'est engagé lui-même à fournir le nombre de poteaux nécessaires. Il s'est proposé, en outre, à procurer à nos troupes les fournitures de fourrage et de vivres dont elles auraient besoin pendant leur séjour dans le Khanat, et a ordonné de préparer préalablement à Schara, Kitaba, et Tchiaktchi des approvisionnements de riz, de froment, et de moutons. La belle récolte de cette année en avait donné les moyens à l'Emir.

Quelque temps avant l'arrivée du Général Kaufmann à Samarcande, une Ambassade de l'Emir de Bokharah s'est présentée au camp Russe pour saluer le Général au nom de l'Emir. Cet Ambassade était composée des Beks les plus influents et les plus distingués de la Cour de l'Emir. Le Gouverneur-Général envoie maintenant, en réponse, une lettre des plus amicales à Karchi à l'adresse de l'Emir.

Nos relations avec l'Afghanistan se sont établies sur un bon pied. L'Ambassade du Général-Major Stolétoff ne restera pas improductive. On n'a encore que des nouvelles du Général datées de Haibeck (138 verstes de Masari-Scherif). Il a été reçu par les autorités Afghanes avec beaucoup d'honneurs, et le 22 Juillet comptait arriver à Caboul.

Une expédition scientifique a été envoyée de Samarcande pour reconnaître la contrée montagneuse de Hissar. Cette expédition se compose de MM. Oschanine, Nevessky, et du Lieutenant Rodionow. Elle traversera Samarcande, Schakhrisiabz, le défilé de Segri-Dag, le Denau; de là elle si dirigera sur Karatag, Duchambe, Kafirnaghan et Harm, puis passera au sud et ira à Pamir, où elle se rencontrera probablement avec l'expédition Siéverston.

En outre, une autre expédition, dirigée par M. Maïew, fera cette année l'exploration de la contrée montagneuse comprise entre le Djam, Shere-Abad, et Khelif, dans le but de reconnaître les chemins qui unissent la route de Houssar-Schir-Abad et celle de Houssar-Khelif.

No. 161.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received September 10.)

My Lord, India Office, September 10, 1878.

I AM directed by Vicount Cranbrook to forward herewith, to be laid before the Marquis of Salisbury, copies of letters from the Government of India, with accompanying news Reports relating to affairs in Afghanistan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 161.

The Governor-General of India in Council to Viscount Cranbrook.

My Lord, Simla, August 5, 1878.

IN continuation of our despatch dated the 22nd ultimo, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of the news Reports received through the Government of the Punjab.

We have, &c.
(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.
W. STOKES.
A. R. THOMPSON.
R. STRACHEY.

Inclosure 2 in No. 161.

Extract from Confidential News-letter from the Government Agent at Peshawur, dated June 18, 1878.

THE following news has been received from an authentic source :—

The Russian Envoy stationed at Cabul laid before the Ameer the under-mentioned proposals on the part of the Russian Government :—

1. That the Ameer may permit the location of Russian Agents at Cabul and at other places in his territory where it may be deemed necessary to locate such Agents of the Russian nationality, and that the Agents should enjoy the powers of Consuls.

2. That permission be accorded for the quartering of Russian troops at four suitable places on the boundaries of Afghanistan, and that the Ameer should engage to protect those troops.

3. That the Russian Government be allowed to construct a road from Samarcand to Cabul viâ Kata Kurghan, Khoja Salih, and Balkh, then from Cabul to Herat viâ the course of the Hamun River, the plain of Indkho, Bala Murghab, Maruchak, Pandi, and Firoz Koh, and from Herat to Candahar by the Garmsir route.

4. When necessity arises, the Cabul Government may allow passage, by routes it may be desirable to follow, to Russian troops proceeding to India.

5. That telegraph wire be set up between Samarcand, Kata Kurghan, Balkh, Cabul, Candahar, and other places where the Russian troops or Agents be stationed.

6. That when necessary, Russian troops may be supplied with provisions and carriage on payment of reasonable prices.

7. The Russian Government will allow the continuance of the country of Afghanistan to the representatives, successors, and heirs of the Ameer in perpetuity, in accordance with the will (of the last Sovereign) and legal rights.

8. That the Russian Government will in no way interfere in the internal affairs of Afghanistan and the administration of the country.

9. That the Russian Government will ever afford proper aid for the maintenance of peace in Afghanistan and to (assistance against ?) the external and internal enemies of the Principality.

10. The Russian authorities will consider the enemies of the Ameer as their enemies.

11. That if it becomes desirable that the Russian Government should send an expedition to wage war in India, the Ameer should furnish supplies to the Russian troops on payment; and that the Afghan Government will establish Agents at the capital of Russia, at Tashkend, &c.

Inclosure 3 in No. 161.

Extract from Confidential News-letter from a Correspondent in Jellalabad, dated June 16, 1878.

THE following items of news have been obtained from persons who have recently arrived here from Cabul and from the local officials:—

Some time ago a Russian Envoy brought a letter to the Ameer from the Russian Government. This letter contained a number of questions or proposals. With reference to these proposals the Ameer has informed the Envoy that as the Government of Afghanistan is not totally independent in making a choice, and the Ruler of the Principality cannot do any act without assembling and consulting the Mahommedan public, the carrying out of the proposals of the Russian authorities is an impossibility without the acquiescence of the entire body of the Afghans, notwithstanding that he was prepared to agree to the Russian orders or demands; that he had, therefore, addressed all the Grandees of the country residing in Candahar, Herat, Turkestan, and Badakshan, intimating to them the proposals, and asking their opinion, advice, and counsel in the matter, desiring them at the same time to consult their tribes and parties on the subject, and to communicate their replies by letter, the more important of their number coming to Cabul in person with their answers; and that the proposals have created a great excitement among the population.

It is heard from a reliable source that one day the Ameer received intimation that a Christian Russian Envoy, accompanied by Sayad Rahim Khan, the brother of the Khan of Khiva, had left the Russian capital, and was on his way to Cabul to discuss matters with His Highness.

Inclosure 4 in No. 161.

The Governor-General of India in Council to Viscount Cranbrook.

My Lord, Simla, August 5, 1878.

IN continuation of our despatch dated the 16th May last, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of the confidential diary of the Deputy Commissioner of Peshawur, dated the 8th May last, and copy of a statement made by ———, for some time a retainer in the service of ———.

We have, &c.

(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.
W. STOKES.
A. R. THOMPSON
R. STRACHEY.

Inclosure 5 in No. 161.

Extract from Peshawur Confidential Diary, dated May 8, 1878.

HADJI ATAULLAH, who has for some months past been staying at Bokhara as an Envoy from Ameer Shere Ali Khan, has returned to Cabul in company with Momin Beg, the Envoy from the Ameer of Bokhara.

Ostensibly the latter has been sent to Cabul, in connection with the return to Bokhara of Abdul Malik, the Ameer's son; but information from an apparently trustworthy source has been received that the Mission has been deputed to consult with the Ameer of Cabul regarding a demand said to have been made by the Russian authorities that Karki should be given to Sirdar Abdur Rahman Khan. Up to the present time nothing has openly transpired to confirm this report. Rumours have been prevalent for some time that the lately arrived Russian Agent has promised the Ameer of Cabul an extension of territory towards Bokhara as the condition of an alliance with Russia. It is generally believed that the Russians are commencing to put pressure on Bokhara, with the view to acquiring Charjui and Karki.

Some few days after the departure of Munshi Bakhtiar Khan from Cabul, the mother of the Heir Apparent, on hearing that the Mustaufi had been authorized to send a written communication by the Munshi to the British authorities, reproached the Ameer for having permitted this to be done, giving her opinion that this would only widen the breach between him and the Government, as the Ameer should either have had the letter written in his own name, or else have not sent any letter at all, as one sent from a subordinate would most likely be regarded as a breach of etiquette. She succeeded so far as to induce the Ameer to send a special messenger after the Munshi, to try and recall the letter, but it had been delivered by Bakhtiar Khan before the messenger reached Peshawur.

Sirdar Mir Afzal Khan has frequently written to the Ameer from Candahar urging him to elect at once whether to join the English or the Russians. The mother of the Heir Apparent, in consultation with the Mustaufi, has been trying her best to induce the Ameer to summon her father from Candahar, to deliberate on what action should be taken; but the Ameer does not appear inclined to follow this advice.

The Governor of Turkestan has reported to the Ameer that it is rumoured that some Russian officers are wandering about Afghanistan in disguise. The Ameer has given orders for vigilant search to be made, and has ordered the Shahghassi to send back any officers who cross the Oxus, unless provided with letters from the Russian authorities.

Sikandar Khan has written to the Ameer from Europe to the effect that the Ameer should be more circumspect in his conduct, and take precautions regarding the strengthening of Candahar and Herat, as the English will occupy them, and advising him to ally himself at once either with the English or the Russians before it becomes too late. The Ameer laid this letter before the Durbar.

The Shahghassi has informed the Ameer that he has established a friendly feeling with the Uzbegs of the Pamir Steppe, on the frontier of Badakhshan, and also with the Téké and Yamut Turkomans on the western border. He reports that Abdur Rahman Khan has assured the Russian authorities that if the Ameer of Cabul does not do what they may require of him, he can, with a little assistance from them, do all that is wanted.

The Governor of Herat has written to the Ameer that the Turkomans of Merv are alarmed at news of Russian military preparations. He reports that Russian officers go about in disguise, and that it is difficult to detect them.

(Signed) N. CAVAGNARI, Major,
Peshawur, May 8, 1878. Deputy Commissioner.

Inclosure 6 in No. 161.

Statement made by ———, for some time a Retainer in the Service of ———.

LAST year the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan proceeded from Tashkend to Samarcand, for the purpose of meeting the Ameer of Bokhara, who had been invited there to receive a communication from the Czar. The Ameer declined the invitation, as he feared being sent off to St. Petersburgh and detained there, but sent two of his sons, with a retinue of seventy men, to Samarcand. The sons were sent to St. Petersburgh, but one died on the way there, and, on arrival of the other, the Emperor informed him that the Ameer should not have suspected the Russian Government of any evil intentions towards him, as they were friendly disposed to him, in consideration of the assistance he had given the Russian troops during the Khivan expedition. The Ameer's son was then dismissed, and returned to Turkestan, and is now Governor at Hissar.

In the month of Safar 1295 H. (February 1878), the Governor of Samarcand was deputed by the Governor-General to the Ameer of Bokhara, to make the following demands on the part of the Russian Government:—

1. That as there was now no necessity for the Ameer to keep up a large Usbeg army, the Ameer should disband it, and merely retain a body-guard of 1,000 men, and that in the event of any revolt within the Bokhara Kingdom, or of aggression by enemies from without, the Russian troops would provide the necessary assistance.

2. That the Russian Government had received information that the Slave Trade, which it had prohibited, was still carried on at Charjui, and other places within the Ameer's territory, and must be put down at once.

3. That the town of Karki on the Oxus should be made over to Sirdar Abdur Rahman Khan.

4. That as there was no necessity for either of the two Afghan Envoys now at Bokhara—one from the Ameer of Cabul, the other from the Governor of Afghan Turkestan—to remain there, they should be dismissed.

To the first and third demands the Ameer replied that he would give a definite answer in seven months.

Regarding the Slave Trade, the Ameer denied that the report was true, and that it was fabricated by his enemies to create bad feeling between him and the Russians.

To the fourth demand the Ameer replied that the Afghan Envoys were his guests, and that he could not in honour dismiss them, nor was he required by any Treaty obligations with the Russians to do this.

The Russian General was informed that he was at liberty to remain at Bokhara pending the Ameer's reply; but he declined to do so, and went back to Samarcand.

The Ameer then arranged to send an Envoy, Abdul Momin Beg, to inform the Ameer of Cabul of the Russian demands, and to point out to him that the cession of Karki was quite as injurious to Afghan as to Turan interests.

(The informant was at Bokhara while this was going on, and he obtained the Ameer's permission to accompany the Mission to Cabul.)

On the 15th of the month Safar (8th February) the Mission left Bokhara and reached Mazar-i-Sharif, in Afghan Turkestan, on the 12th of Rabi-ul-awal (17th March), and stayed there with the Governor for ten days.

Khudayar Khan, the ex-Ruler of Khokand, who had escaped from the Russians, was at Mazar-i-Sharif. On the 11th of Rabi-us-Sani (15th April) the Envoy reached Cabul. The Ameer sent one of his relatives, accompanied by some Sirdars, to receive him some little distance out of the city of Cabul.

Three days after his arrival the Envoy had an interview with the Ameer, and presented the letter he had brought from the Ameer of Bokhara, together with the customary presents.

The Ameer advised the Envoy to refuse the Russian demands, and that if the Ameer of Bokhara was pressed by the Russians, he would find a place of refuge in Afghan territory.

(The informant did not wait longer at Cabul, but returned to Peshawur, viâ Kuram.)

(Signed) N. CAVAGNARI, Major,
Deputy Commissioner.

Peshawur, May 1, 1878.

No. 162.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 16.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, September 10, 1878.

NOT having yet received any reply to the note which I addressed to M. de Giers on the 26th ultimo, the day upon which he left with the Emperor for Livadia, I called upon M. Melnikoff, on the 6th instant, to inquire why I had not yet received any answer to the request of Her Majesty's Government that the Russian Mission should be withdrawn from Cabul.

I pointed out to him that in the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of the previous day there was an account of the progress of the Mission towards Cabul; that after the repeated assurances given to Her Majesty's Government, it was difficult to see what right such a Mission had to go there; and even if, as the Russian Government now tried to argue, such a step was an act of legitimate preparation in view of the then possible war with Great Britain, there could now no longer be any excuse for such a measure, after the signature of the peace of Berlin. I added that the question raised in my note was one which deeply affected the interests of Great Britain, and that I must therefore beg him to press M. de Giers for a reply.

M. de Melnikoff promised that he would immediately inform M. de Giers of my wishes. After objecting to my having quoted any extract from the unofficial portion of the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg," M. Melnikoff stated that the Foreign Department had not been aware of the dispatch of this Mission; that it had been sent by General Kaufmann, in the exercise of the discretion with which he is invested as Governor-General of Turkestan; and that the Foreign Department often did not know exactly where the Mission might be, except from what it learnt through the Ministry of War.

To this I replied that Central Asiatic affairs being directly under the Foreign Department, except in so far as regards military details, I could not accept this explanation, for, even if General Kaufmann had taken upon himself, without permission, such a step as to send a Mission to Afghanistan, the Foreign Department were responsible for the acts of their Agents, and might long ago have directed him to recall it.

This morning I received from M. Melnikoff the note, copy of which is herewith inclosed, informing me that M. de Giers has telegraphed to him to tell me that the answer to my note left Livadia on the 27th August, 8th September, and that the Russian Chargé d'Affaires in London is in possession of instructions which will enable him to furnish Her Majesty's Government with the desired explanations.

Inclosure in No. 162.

M. Melnikoff to Mr. Plunkett.

M. le Chargé d'Affaires, Le 28 Août / 9 Septembre, 1878.

JE n'ai pas manqué de faire parvenir à M. de Giers la communication verbale que vous avez bien voulu me transmettre le 23 de ce mois d'ordre de votre Gouvernement.

Par un télégramme que je viens de recevoir, M. de Giers me charge de vous informer que la réponse à la note que vous avez remise au sujet des affaires de l'Afghanistan sera expédiée de Livadia avec le courrier du 27 Août, et que d'ailleurs notre Chargé d'Affaires à Londres est en possession des instructions nécessaires, pour fournir au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique les explications voulues.

Veuillez, &c.

(Signé) MELNIKOFF.

(Translation.)

M. le Chargé d'Affaires, August 28 / September 9, 1878.

I HAVE not failed to forward to M. de Giers the verbal communication which you did me the honour to transmit to me on the 23rd instant by order of your Government.

By a telegram which I have just received, M. de Giers charges me to inform you that the reply to the note which you have delivered on the subject of the affairs of Afghanistan will be dispatched from Livadia by the messenger of the 27th August, and that, moreover, our Chargé d'Affaires in London is in possession of the necessary instructions to supply the desired explanations to Her Britannic Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.

(Signed) MELNIKOFF.

No. 163.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Plunkett.

Sir, Foreign Office, September 16, 1878.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 27th ultimo, reporting the steps which you had taken to bring to the knowledge of the Russian Government the contents of my despatch to you of the 19th ultimo respecting Russian military movements in the direction of Afghanistan, and the dispatch of a Russian Mission to Cabul.

I approve the note which you addressed to M. de Giers on this subject, and of which a copy is inclosed in your despatch.

I am, &c.

(Signed) SALISBURY.

No. 164.

Mr. Plunkett to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 18.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 13, 1878.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 10th instant, I have the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship by post a copy of the note which I have received from M. de Giers this morning, replying to the communication which, in compliance with the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 19th ultimo, I had addressed to him on the subject of Russian movements in the direction of Afghanistan.

While recognizing the correctness of the promises which I had cited, M. de Giers repeats what he had already stated verbally, viz., that the dispositions of the Imperial Government in Central Asia were affected by the political condition in which Russia was placed by the attitude of England during the late crisis in the East, but that now those dispositions are the same as formerly, and are not of a nature to excite the suspicions of Her Majesty's Government.

M. de Giers adds that the Mission erroneously attributed to General Abramoff is of a provisional and purely courteous character, and therefore does not clash with the assurances which I had cited; and he concludes by expressing the hope that the explanations which M. de Bartholomei has already been intrusted to furnish to your Lordship will have thrown sufficient light upon the situation.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. R. PLUNKETT.

Inclosure in No. 164.

M. de Giers to Mr. Plunkett.

M. le Chargé d'Affaires, Livadia, le 27 Août / 8 Septembre, 1878.

CE n'est qu'aujourd'hui que je me trouve en mesure de répondre à la note que vous avez bien voulu m'adresser en date du $\frac{14}{26}$ courant et qui m'est parvenue durant mon voyage.

Tout en reconnaissant la parfaite exactitude des citations faites dans cette pièce, je ne puis que confirmer ce que j'ai eu déjà l'honneur de vous dire, c'est que les dispositions du Gouvernement Impérial dans la question de l'Asie Centrale, dont ces citations reproduisent les témoignages, ont dû nécessairement subir le contre-coup des conditions politiques dans lesquelles l'attitude de l'Angleterre nous a placé durant la dernière crise en Orient. Mais, dans les circonstances actuelles, ces dispositions sont les mêmes que jadis, et de nature à n'inspirer aucune défiance au Gouvernement Anglais.

Je dois ajouter que la mission, qu'à tort vous attribuez au Général Abramow, est d'un caractère provisoire et de pure courtoisie; elle ne peut dès lors porter la moindre atteinte aux assurances pacifiques que vous mentionnez.

J'aime à espérer que les explications que M. Bartholomei a déjà été chargé de donner à Lord Salisbury a ce sujet auront suffisamment éclairci la situation.

Recevez, &c.
(Signé) GIERS.

(Translation.)

M. le Chargé d'Affaires, Livadia, August 27 / September 8, 1878.

I HAVE not until to-day been able to reply to the note you did me the honour to address to me, dated the $\frac{14}{26}$th instant, which reached me during my journey.

While acknowledging the perfect accuracy of the quotations made in that document, I can only confirm what I have already had the honour of saying to you :—that the dispositions of the Imperial Government in regard to the Central Asian question of which those quotations reproduce the expression, have necessarily been affected by the political condition in which we were placed by the attitude of England during the recent crisis in the East. But, under the present circumstances, those dispositions are the same as formerly, and are not of a nature to give rise to any distrust on the part of the English Government.

I should add that the mission, which you erroneously attribute to General Abramoff, is of a provisional nature, and one of simple courtesy; it cannot, therefore, interfere in any way with the pacific assurances which you mention.

I trust that the explanations which M. Bartholomei has already been charged to give to Lord Salisbury on this subject, will have sufficiently explained the situation.

Accept, &c.
(Signed) GIERS.

No. 165.

Sir J. Pauncefote to Sir L. Mallet.

Sir, Foreign Office, September 20, 1878.

WITH reference to previous correspondence in regard to Russian military movements in Central Asia, and to the Russian Mission recently sent to Cabul, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to transmit to you, for the information of Viscount Cranbrook, copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh, forwarding M. de Giers' reply to the representation which has been addressed to the Russian Government on this subject.*

Lord Salisbury infers from M. de Giers' note that his Excellency acknowledges that all the former assurances of the Russian Government in regard to Afghanistan have now recovered their validity.

I am, &c.
(Signed) JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

No. 166.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Plunkett.

Sir, Foreign Office, September 25, 1878.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 10th instant, reporting the substance of your conversation with M. Melnikoff on the subject of recent Russian proceedings in Central Asia.

I approve the language held by you on this occasion, as reported in your despatch above mentioned.

I am, &c.
(Signed) SALISBURY.

No. 167.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Plunkett.

Sir, Foreign Office, September 30, 1878.

IN the note from M. de Giers of the 27th August, 8th September, of which copy is inclosed in your despatch of the 13th instant, reference is made to explanations which the Russian Charge d'Affaires in London had been instructed to offer in regard to the recent proceedings of the Russian authorities in Central Asia.

The communications made by M. Bartholomei have been generally to the same effect as what has been stated by M. de Giers. He has stated that the military and political measures adopted in Turkestan were actuated by the necessities of the situation caused by the state of affairs in regard to Turkey, and were called forth especially by the attitude of Great Britain towards Russia. General Kaufmann's proceedings, he said, must therefore be regarded as the result of a course imposed upon him by the force of circumstances.

As I had spoken to M. Bartholomei of a letter from the Emperor which was supposed to have been transmitted to Shere Ali Khan, he asked the Russian Government for information on the point, and subsequently said that he was authorized to state that there had never been any question of sending such a letter.

I am, &c.
(Signed) SALISBURY.

Appendix No. 1.

CORRESPONDENCE IN 1865.

No. 1.

Mr. Lumley to Earl Russell.—(Received July 10.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, July 3, 1865.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship an extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg," containing a translation of that portion of Sir R. Murchison's address to the Royal Geographical Society in the month of May last which had particular reference to the progress of Russia in Central Asia.

In this article, which has no doubt emanated from Prince Gortchakow's Department, great satisfaction is expressed at the language held by Sir A. Murchison on that occasion, which, it is hoped, will tend to dispel the belief in absurd and imaginary projects of aggression on India, which, in some quarters, are still attributed to Russia.

The article further points out that it is the evident interest of Russia not to waste her resources in extending her frontiers by war, but to fix and consolidate them by peace, commerce, and industry.

This language coincides not only with the official declarations made by Prince Gortchakow, but also with expressions which I have lately heard his Excellency use, to the effect that the progress which Russia was making in Central Asia, which had excited so much suspicion, was for the purpose of acquiring, not laurels, but roubles; it was with the view of insuring the safety of the caravan trade of Russia through the Kirghese Steppes and Khokand.

It is impossible not to agree with the writer of this article when he says that at the present date the system of conquests is condemned by the science of economy, not only as unjust and immoral, but as a most detestable speculation, the advance of civilization and interchange of productions being acknowledged to be the only true source of the wealth, power, and prosperity of States.

If the future policy of Russia is in earnest and good faith to be based on such principles as these, this Empire may look forward to an era of progress and to a development of its resources far surpassing the aspirations of its most ardent well-wishers.

I have, &c.

(Signed) J. SAVILE LUMLEY.

Inclosure in No. 1.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of $\frac{\text{June } 19}{\text{July } 1}$, 1865.

LE 22 Mai dernier, la Société Royale de Géographie se réunissait à Londres, en séance annuelle, sous la présidence de l'Honorable Sir Roderick Murchison.

Un vif intérêt s'attache à ces réunions. Les sciences géographiques, partout en progrès, ne rencontrent nulle part plus d'attention qu'en Angleterre, où les immenses intérêts politiques et commerciaux du pays embrassent pour ainsi dire le monde entier. Nulle part aussi l'on n'a vu se produire une école plus nombreuse de voyageurs intrépides, d'explorateurs intelligents et de savants illustres qui, unissant la patience de l'homme de cabinet à l'énergie de l'homme d'action, apportent à leur patrie le tribut continuel et sans cesse croissant de notions pratiques sur le domaine de l'humanité. La science les enregistre, mais le commerce et l'industrie les exploitent aussitôt comme une mine féconde, an profit de la richesse, de la puissance, et de la prospérité colossale que la nation Britannique offre à la fois à l'admiration et à l'instruction du monde.

Voilà pourquoi ces discussions scientifiques méritent également l'attention du Continent.

En passant en revue les hommes éminents qui en Angleterre se sont consacrés au progrès de eette branche importante des sciences politiques, et en analysant leurs travaux, l'Honorable Sir R. Murchison a recontré sur sa route une question qui a pour nous un intérêt direct: c'est l'appréciation, au point de vue Anglais, des derniers événements accomplis dans les régions de l'Asie Centrale voisines de l'Empire Russe.

Voici la traduction de ce passage de son discours:—

"En traitant la question des frontières de la Russie, je ne saurais m'empêcher d'attirer votre attention sur un changement partiel survenu dans une partie de ces frontières, et nommément dans celle qui se trouve entre la ligne primitive des limites de cet Empire et le Khanat de Khokand, d'autant plus que je désire prouver combien les craintes manifestées par une partie, il est vrai, bien petite de nos compatriotes, composée principalement de ceux qui dirigent la presse périodique aux Indes, sont dénuées de toute fondement. Un simple énoncé des faits et de l'immense distance qui sépare toute cette nouvelle ligne Russe du point le plus rapproché de l'Inde Anglaise ou plutôt même de Cachemir, notre tributaire, aurait dû calmer toutes ces appréhensions.

" Il faut se rappeler que bien avant le temps où l'Angleterre avait des établissements aux Indes Orientales, les Czars entretenaient un commerce avec la Chine et les Grands Khanats de Boukhara, Samarcande, etc. Depuis un temps immémorial, les caravanes traversaient les tribus nomades des Kirghises, qui ont été longtemps sous la domination Russe. Dans ces dernières années, ces relations commerciales ont été souvent empêchées par des détachements de Khokands, guerriers et maraudeurs qui, franchissant les montagnes, pillaient les caravanes et les tribus Kirghises le long de cette partie de la frontière Russe qui se trouve située entre le Fort Pérovsky sur le Sur-Darya (anciennement Iaxartes) et le grand lac d'Issikoul, qui s'étend vers la frontière Chinoise. Résolu de punir ces désordres, le Gouverneur d'Orenbourg fit abandonner aux stations de Cosaques la contrée stérile où des troupes ne pouvaient guère être maintenues, et les avança vers un pays plus fertile, contenant la ville de Tchemkend, qui fut conquise, pays qui produit le blé et l'herbe en quantité suffisante pour alimenter une ligne nouvelle de postes de Cosaques entre le Fort Pérovsky et le Lac d'Issikoul. Cette manière d'agir est conforme à la conduite adoptée par notre propre Gouvernement aux Indes, à l'égard de tous les maraudeurs sur notre frontière; mais ces faits ont donné lieu aux plus grandes exagérations, et entre autres à la nouvelle de la prise de Khokand. Or il se trouve que les dix-neuf vingtièmes du Khanat de Khokand restent dans le même état que par la passé, et j'ai entendu dire que les Russes, qui prétendaient à une partie du territoire au sud du Lac d'Issikoul, ont consenti à tracer leur frontière au milieu du lac et à abandonner au Khokand toute la partie méridionale.

"Je vondrais surtout enlever à mes compatriotes, qui n'étudient que des cartes de l'Asie à l'échelle de 100 milles au pouce, cette idée absurde que l'Empereur de Russie, en prenant pour base d'opération cette partie la plus stérile, la plus dépeuplée, et la plus éloignée de son vaste Empire, puisse avoir les moindres desseins contre l'Inde Anglaise.

" Si l'on trouvait moyen, ce que je nie, dans la connaissance que j'ai des steppes Khirghises, de faire avancer une grande armée organisée à travers les déserts de l'Oxus, vers ces parties de la Chine avec lesquelles le peuple Russe a entretenu longtemps des relations commerciales, il n'en reste pas moins vrai que l'on peut affirmer positivement que l'invasion de l'Inde Anglaise, venant de la nouvelle frontière Russe du côté de la Chine, frontière qui n'est occupée que par quelques postes de Cosaques, est une pure chimère, si ce n'est une impossibilité physique. Non-seulement toutes les parties de la nouvelle frontière Russe se trouvent séparées du Cachemir, notre tributaire, par un espace de 400 milles de large, mais de plus, cet espace contient des montagnes élevées, couvertes de neige éternelle, infranchissables, le Thian-Chan de Humboldt, qui, se reliant aux chaînes du Mustagh et du Karakoram, forme la partie orientale des montagnes immenses de l'Himalaya. Ainsi, jamais la crainte d'une invasion de l'Inde par la Russie n'a-t-elle été aussi dénuée de fondement et aussi imaginaire que celle qui a surgi à la suite d'une rectification partielle de la frontière, que nos alliés étaient parfaitement en droit d'exécuter, afin de protéger leurs tributaires et de maintenir leurs anciennes communications avec la Chine, qui leur accorde, par le Traité de Pékin, la faculté d'établir un Consul dans la partie occidentale de son territoire, à Kashgar, où Adolphe Schlagintweit fut assassiné.

"Je retourne aux sujets de pure géographie, après cette digression à laquelle je me suis livré dans le désir sincère de contribuer à rétablir sur une base solide les relations de bonne amitié qui ont heureusement existé pendant des siècles entre la Russie et l'Angleterre, et dont j'ai eu l'occasion de recueillir personnellement bien des preuves."

C'est avec une véritable satisfaction que nous portons à la connaissance de nos lecteurs ce langage loyal et vrai. La question qu'abordait Sir Roderick Murchison était rendue délicate par les préventions enracinées dans l'esprit d'une partie de ses auditeurs et entretenues par la presse avec une aveugle obstination. Il était difficile à un orateur Anglais, parlant à un public Anglais, de s'exprimer avec plus d'impartialité, de bon sens, et de justice. Son témoignage est d'une grande valeur. Personne ne contestera en Angleterre ni l'honorabilité de son caractère, ni l'autorité de sa parole, ni le patriotisme avec lequel il a consacré sa vie à des travaux scientifiques éminemment utiles à son pays. Mais sa pensée s'est élevée à ces hauteurs où l'impartialité devient un culte, et où l'on ne croit pas pouvoir rendre un meilleur service à ses concitoyens que de leur faire entendre la voix de la raison et la vérité.

Sir R. Murchison savait qu'il allait à l'encontre de préjugés invétérés. Il a dû, par conséquent, leur parler le seul langage à leur portée, celui des faits. Il aurait pu sans cela y ajouter des considérations morales dont l'évidence est tout aussi certaine.

Le monde politique subit chaque jour des transformations non moins considérables que celui des idées.

Il y a un siècle, les peuples se faisaient des guerres acharnées pour ce qu'on appelait le système Colonial. Aucun ne croyait pouvoir se passer de cet appendice indispensable afin d'avoir à bon compte les denrées Coloniales et les matières premières qui alimentaient le commerce et l'industrie. On s'est ruiné en luttes formidables à la poursuite de ces richesses imaginaires. L'Angleterre s'est battue pendant des années pour conserver ses Colonies de l'Amérique dont l'émancipation semblait devoir causer sa ruine, et dix années ne s'étaient pas écoulées depuis leur emancipation que son commerce avec les Etats-Unis avait décuplé.

Aujourd'hui elle n'envisage les Colonies qu'elle sème sur tous les points du globe que comme des fruits qu'elle cultive, qu'elle développe, et qu'elle laisse tomber de l'arbre lorsqu'ils sont mûrs. Il y a cinquante ans on se battait pour l'Empire des Indes, et les ennemis de l'Angleterre ne croyaient pas pouvoir l'atteindre d'une manière plus sensible qu'en la frappant dans cette source présumée de sa puissance. Aujourd'hui les Indes ont secouru l'Europe dans un moment de crise considérable en produisant du coton, et il n'y a pas un homme sensé qui ne comprenne qu'en civilisant ces contrées et en mettant en valeur les richesses de leur climat, l'Angleterre rend le plus grand service à tout le monde. Aujourd'hui le système des conquêtes est condamné par la science économique non-seulement comme injuste et immoral, mais encore comme la plus détestable spéculation. Les progrès de la civilisation, de la production, et des échanges sont reconnus comme la seule vraie source des richesses, de la puissance, et de la prospérité des Etats.

En présence de ces révolutions dans les idées, n'est-il pas étrange de voir persister obstinément des préventions et des préjugés d'une autre époque?

Sir R. Murchison n'a guère parlé que des obstacles matériels pour démontrer l'absurdité des projets d'aggression attribués à la Russie contre l'Empire Britannique des Indes. Il aurait pu ajouter la distance morale qui les sépare plus encore que la distance géographique, et l'intérêt évident qu'a la Russie, non pas à étendre ses frontières par la guerre, mais à les fixer, à les consolider par la paix, le commerce, et l'industrie.

Nous irons même plus loin et nous dirons que les esprits retardataires qui, en Angleterre, voudraient parler aujourd'hui le langage d'il y a un demi-siècle, et donner pour base à la politique que tout Etat doit chercher son bien dans le mal d'autrui, manquent entièrement de logique en signalant d'avance les projets ambitieux de la Russie. Ils devraient au contraire l'encourager à s'immiscer dans les querelles des Etats de l'Asie Centrale, à étendre sur eux son influence et sa domination, à entrer enfin dans cette voie indéfinie d'empiétements, d'annexions, de luttes, et de conquêtes à laquelle elle a hautement et irrévocablement renoncé, dans la conviction qu'elle n'a rien à gagner à gaspiller—dans ces aventures lointaines et stériles—des forces et des ressources dont elle a un emploi plus utile à faire sur son propre sol.

Tout cela est d'une telle évidence qu'on est surpris de voir des préventions aussi absurdes trouver encore du crédit chez un peuple aussi pratique que le peuple Anglais.

Nous n'en devons que plus de reconnaissance à Sir Roderick Murchison d'avoir protesté contre ces préjugés illogiques. Le vœu par lequel il a terminé, celui de voir se consolider sur une base solide et durable les relations de bonne amitié qui ont existé pendant des siècles entre la Russie et l'Angleterre, est trop conforme à nos propres convictions pour que nous n'y applaudissions pas de toutes nos forces. Le meilleur moyen d'y arriver est assurément de rendre, comme il l'a fait, un loyal hommage à la vérité.

No. 2.

Mr. Lumley to Earl Russell.—(Received July 24.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, July 19, 1865.

I TOOK an opportunity yesterday of asking M. de Westmann what truth there was in a report which had reached me that the Russian army in the desert of Khokan was preparing to advance to Kashgar and Yarkand.

M. de Westmann said he should be greatly surprised to learn that any such movement was in contemplation; without having a full knowledge of the details of what was going on in Central Asia, he was sufficiently acquainted with the salient features of the policy of his Government in that country to state that such a movement would be in direct contradiction with the views of the Emperor. Any further advance in that direction would necessitate very great expense without any corresponding advantage.

I have, &c.

(Signed) J. SAVILE LUMLEY.

No. 3.

Earl Russell to Mr. Lumley.

Sir, Foreign Office, July 31, 1865.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 3rd instant, inclosing an extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" containing observations on that part of Sir R. Murchison's address to the Royal Geographical Society which had reference to the progress of Russia in Central Asia.

I have to observe that Her Majesty's Government share completely the sentiments of Sir R. Murchison, and are glad to think that the article in the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of the 1st July expresses those of the Russian Government.

Still there are circumstances in the present situation of the British and Russian Empires which might give rise to anxiety, and Her Majesty's Government being fully persuaded of the friendly and pacific sentiments of the Emperor of Russia are desirous to remove every cause of danger which might threaten the future good understanding of England and Russia.

Her Majesty's Government consider it would be useful for this end if the two Powers were to make friendly explanations to each other, based on the present state of affairs.

Her Majesty's Government on their part are determined to respect the present state of possession in Central Asia. Her Majesty's Government will also respect the independence of the Persian Monarchy, will be careful not to encroach upon the territory of Persia, and will act in such a manner as may best support and strengthen the sovereignty of the Shah.

If His Majesty the Emperor of Russia will be prepared to make analogous declarations, Her Majesty's Government think that without the formality of a Convention an exchange of notes might take place which would tend to settle the minds of the inhabitants of Central Asia, and prevent misunderstandings, thereby affording a fresh security for the maintenance of peace between the two Empires.

You will read this despatch to Prince Gortchakow, and you will furnish his Excellency with a copy of it.

I am, &c.

(Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 4.

Mr. Lumley to Earl Russell.—(Received August 4.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, July 23, 1865.

ON the receipt of your Lordship's telegraphic despatch of the 20th instant, referring to the rumour of a Treaty respecting the territory of Khokand concluded between Russia and Bokhara, I applied to a source which, though not favourable to Russia, was likely to afford reliable information on the subject.

From that quarter I learned that nothing was known of such a Treaty, and it was considered very improbable that Russia should bind herself to a man of such proverbial bad faith as the present Ameer of Bokhara for the partition of a territory of which she was well able to take entire possession if it suited her policy to do so.

On Saturday, the 21st instant, I happened to meet M. Stremoouchoff, the Director of the Asiatic Department, on his way to Peterhoff to see Prince Gortchakow, and who, of his own accord, spoke to me of this report.

He said that Russia knew too well how unsatisfactory it was to have dealings with the Khans of Central Asia to think of concluding a Treaty with the Ameer of Bokhara for that or any other purpose; it was worse than useless to enter into engagements with a barbarian who was certain to break them as soon as it suited his convenience, and who could not be punished for his breach of faith without great invonvenience and expense.

Nevertheless, he said, Russia is naturally desirous of turning to the best advantage the progress she has made in Central Asia. A regular post-route is now opened to the furthest point occupied by Russian troops, and the new Governor-General of Arenburg, General Kryjanovsky, has been instructed to conclude certain arrangements with the Ameer of Bokhara for the benefit of the commerce of the two countries, and if the Ameer does not agree to these regulations or infringes them, we have the means of making him amenable to reason by stopping his trade.

M. Stremoouchoff stated further that the Russian Government hoped at no distant period, without occupying Tashkend, to make that place the great entrepôt for Russian commerce with Central Asia.

The position of Tashkend no doubt greatly favours such a project, as steamers can approach it up the Sir Daria to within thirty miles, and it is natural enough to suppose that the Russian troops may take up and fortify a safe position close to that city, which would enable them to overawe it without incurring the risk which would attend the occupation of a large place like Tashkend with a comparatively small force.

As M. Stremoouchoff's observations agreed with information I had received from other quarters, and as I knew Prince Gortchakow would have referred me to him if I had spoken to his Excellency with reference to the rumoured Treaty with Bokhara, I did not mention the subject to the Vice-Chancellor. I had already obtained all the official information I was likely to get, and I did not think it advisable to show too much anxiety with reference to the report.

Prince Gortchakow himself, however, referring to the subjects on which I had spoken to M. de Westmann, as reported in despatches forwarded to your Lordship by the last messenger, said: "I hear from Baron Brunnow that you will be instructed to ask for amicable explanations as to our movements in Central Asia. My reply in that case will also be amicable, but your Government really appears to attach too much importance to the question."

I have, &c.
(Signed) J. SAVILE LUMLEY.

No. 5.

Mr. Lumley to Earl Russell.—(Received August 4.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, July 23, 1865.

WITH reference to the report communicated to your Lordship in Mr. Alison's despatch of the 1st instant of a rumoured advance of the Russian force in Khokand on Kashgar and Yarkand, and to my despatch of the 19th instant, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that I have had an opportunity of conversing with the Director of the Asiatic Department on the subject of that report. M. Stremoouchoff said that it argued very little knowledge of geography to suppose such a movement to be possible, since an army invading Kashgar would have to cross three tremendous chains of mountains, to say nothing of the deserts it would have to traverse.

With reference to this observation, I find the following note in Mr. Davies' Report on the trade and resources of the countries on the north-western boundary of British India:—

"From Bashkarwal, the last post (No. 22) on the western slopes of the Kaksal Mountains (which divide Khokand from Kashgar), the road lies in a dreary desert, with no habitations, no water, no grass.

"There is a spring of water at No. 23 (Karawal Mingyal). On the arrival of a caravan at this place, supplies are brought from Kashgar. The name Mingyal, which means 1,000 kos, indicates the distress and hardship which travellers experience on this line from want of water, &c."

So that, without assistance from Kashgar, not even a friendly caravan could reach that city,

Mr. Davies mentions further that a portion of the hilly country on the west of the Province of Kashgar, together with the valley of Birutukka and Ortagh, are now in the possession of Khokand. Should it, therefore, be within the designs of the Russian Government to extend their authority over the whole of the Khanate of Khokand, it is not impossible that Russian troops might still advance in the direction indicated in the report communicated to your Lordship by Mr. Alison, without having the intention of invading Kashgar and Yarkand.

I have, &c.
(Signed) J. SAVILE LUMLEY.

No. 6.

Mr. Lumley to Earl Russell.—(Received August 20.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, August 10, 1865.

ON the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 31st ultimo, which was delivered to me by Mr. Stephens, Prince Gortchakow being at Peterhoff, I asked by telegraph for an interview with his Excellency.

The Vice-Chancellor, who gave me an appointment for to-day, sent his carriage to meet me, and received me the instant I arrived.

I was proceeding to read your Lordship's despatch to Prince Gortchakow, when his Excellency asked me to let him read it himself, which he did aloud. At the conclusion he said he was very glad to receive these friendly assurances on the part of Her Majesty's Government, which would give great satisfaction to the Emperor, who was always glad when any opportunity offered of improving and drawing closer together the bonds of amity which existed between the two countries; nor should he have any difficulty in replying to them in a similar tone as regarded the substance of this communication, though there might be some as to the form or rédaction in which that reply should be drawn up.

His Excellency said, however, that he did not exactly understand what object your Lordship had in view in desiring this interchange of declarations; as a practical man, he did not see what was to be gained by it.

As regarded the policy of Russia in Central Asia, the Emperor's views had been publicly announced, and even published; they were to the effect that Russia desires no extension of territory in that country: what she does desire is a peaceful and settled state of affairs on her Turkestan frontier, such as will enable her to open a safe road for commerce to Kashgar, not for Russia alone, but for the whole world.

There would be no difficulty, Prince Gortchakow continued, in making such a statement as that proposed by Her Majesty's Government with regard to the present state of possession in Central Asia, were it not for the behaviour of the Khan of Bokhara, who had already entered and taken possession of some portion of the territory of Khokand; an intimation of a hostile nature had also been received by General Tchernaieff from the Khan of Bokhara, and it was difficult to say what might arise from the action of the barbarous leaders of the hordes of Bokhara, who seemed prepared to overrun the neighbouring Khanate. This Russia could never tolerate, and measures had been taken, by laying an embargo on the trade of Bokhara, which it was hoped would have the effect of compelling the Ameer to withdraw from the territory of Khokand.

With regard to your Lordship's declaration that Her Majesty's Government will respect the independence and territory of Persia and uphold the sovereignty of the Shah, his Excellency said he could not understand the connection between Central Asia and the Persian Monarchy which had induced your Lordship to make this declaration.

The declaration itself was of a very satisfactory nature, and one which was quite in accordance with the views of the Imperial Government, but, while receiving it with pleasure, he must say that he had never suspected Her Majesty's Government of any intention of encroaching upon the territory of the Shah.

In conclusion, his Excellency repeated that, although he felt no difficulty in replying to your Lordship as regarded the fond of your proposition, he felt somewhat embarrassed as to the forme in which it should be made; he would, however, think over how this was to be done, and, as was usual in similar cases, his reply would be conveyed to your Lordship through Baron Brunnow.

I have, &c.
(Signed) J. SAVILE LUMLEY.

No. 7.

Prince Gortchakow to Baron Brunnow.—(Communicated to Earl Russell by Baron Brunnow.)

M. le Baron, Péterhoff, le 5 Août, 1865.

JE crois utile d'appeler l'attention de votre Excellence sur un incident.

Depuis longtemps l'Emir de Boukhara convoite le Khokand et Taschkend. Il aura cru le moment favorable pour réaliser ses convoitises à cet effet, ses troupes se sont mises en mouvement dans deux directions. Leurs Commandants ont adressé au Général Tchernaieff une sommation insolente. Nous ne pouvons admettre ni ce langage ni les prétentions de l'Emir. S'il persiste, un conflit est inévitable. Céder serait anéanter l'influence qui nous appartient dans ces parages et que nous ne tenons à exercer que dans un intérêt commercial et dans un esprit de civilisation. Cet incident n'entrait pas dans nos prévisions immédiates. Il ne modifie pas la détermination de l'Empereur de s'abstenir de conquêtes inutiles pour la grandeur de la Russie. Mais il peut introduire dans l'application des principes que nous poursuivons des atermoiements et des modalités indépendants de notre volonté. Si nous sommes contraires à tout agrandissement territorial, nous sommes décidés à poursuivre le but de la sécurité de nos frontières et de l'établissement de relations commerciales solides et regulières. Nous aimons à croire qu'aucune instigation étrangère n'a suggéré à l'Emir cette levée de boucliers, et qu'il ne s'y est aventuré qu'en vue du chiffre peu élevé de notre détachement dans ces parages et des troubles qui ont éclaté.

Quoiqu'il en soit, nous avons été mis en présence d'un état de choses que nous n'avons ni désiré ni amené. Si l'Emir ne se ravise pas, il faudra procéder à son châtiment. C'est une vérité banale pour les Anglais qui ont l'expérience des affaires de l'Orient. Sinon, toute chance d'amener dans ces pays sauvages un ordre régulier quelconque serait étouffé dans son germe et ferait place à une situation intolérable.

Recevez, &c.
(Signé) GORTCHAKOW.

(Translation.)

M. le Baron, Peterhof, August 5, 1865.

I THINK it desirable to call your Excellency's attention to an incident.

For a long time the Emir of Bokhara has coveted Khokand and Tashkend. He seems to have thought the moment favourable for the realisation of his desires in this respect, and his troops have been put in motion in two directions. Their Commanders have addressed to General Tchernaieff an insolent summons. We cannot submit either to this language or to the Emir's pretensions. If he persists, a conflict is inevitable. To yield would be the destruction of the influence which we possess in those countries, and which we are only anxious to exercise in a commercial interest and in a spirit of civilisation. This incident did not enter into our immediate expectations. It does not modify the determination of the Emperor to abstain from conquests which do not contribute to the greatness of Russia. But it may produce in the application of the principles which we follow delays and modifications independent of our wishes. While we are opposed to any territorial aggrandisement, we are determined to pursue the object of securing our frontiers and establishing solid and regular commercial relations. We trust and believe that no foreign instigation has suggested to the Emir this recourse to arms, and that he has only ventured on it in view of the small size of our detachment in those countries, and of the disturbances which have broken out.

However this may be, we have been placed in presence of a state of affairs which we have neither desired nor occasioned. If the Emir does not change his mind, we must take steps for his chastisement. That is a commonplace truth for Englishmen who have an experience of Eastern affairs. Otherwise all chance of bringing about in those wild countries any kind of regular order would be nipped in the bud, and would be replaced by an intolerable state of affairs.

I remain, &c.
(Signed) GORTCHAKOW.

No. 8.

Prince Gortchakow to Baron Brunnow.—(Communicated to Earl Russell by Baron Brunnow.)

M. le Baron, Péterhof, le 5 Août, 1865.

J'AI l'honneur de transmettre à votre Excellence copie d'une dépêche de M. le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique que nous a communiquée M. le Chargé d'Affaires d'Angleterre.

Notre auguste Maître y a surtout relevé le désir témoigné par Lord Russell de consolider les bonnes relations qui nous unissent au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Ce vœu répond trop bien aux sentiments de l'Empereur pour ne pas rencontrer l'entière adhésion de Sa Majesté Impériale.

M. le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique exprime l'opinion qu'une explication franche et amicale, sur les vues respectives des deux Gouvernements, relativement à l'Asie Centrale, pourrait contribuer à ce résultat. Son Excellence a indiqué à cet effet les principes que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté la Reine Victoria est disposé à prendre pour règle dans ses rapports avec les Etats de cette partie du monde. Ceux qui président à la politique de notre auguste Maître ont déjà été communiqués par votre Excellence à M. le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Vous pouvez réitérer à Lord Russell l'assurance que nous n'avons dans l'Asie Centrale qu'un seul intérêt, celui du repos, de la sécurité de nos frontières, de l'établissement et du développement de relations commerciales et pacifiques avec nos voisins, dont nous ne serions pas les seuls à profiter. Nous ne poursuivons pas d'autre but; mais nous y attachons une juste importance et nous travaillerons avec persévérance à l'atteindre.

Si M. le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique vous témoigne le désir d'avoir une copie de la présente dépêche, vous pouvez la laisser entre ses mains.

Recevez, &c.
(Signé) GORTCHAKOW.

(Translation.)

M. le Baron, Peterhof, August 5, 1865.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Excellency copy of a despatch from the Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty which has been communicated to us by the English Chargé d'Affaires.

Our august Master has noticed in it particularly the desire evinced by Lord Russell to consolidate the good relations which exist between us and Her Britannic Majesty's Government.

Her Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State expresses the opinion that a frank and friendly explanation on the respective views of the two Governments with regard to Central Asia might contribute to this result. For this purpose his Excellency has stated the principles which the Government of Her Majesty Queen Victoria are disposed to take for their guidance in their relations with the States of that part of the world. Those which influence the policy of our august Master have already been communicated by your Excellency to Her Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State.

You may repeat to Lord Russell the assurance that we have in Central Asia only one interest, that of the repose and security of our frontiers, of the establishment and development of commercial and pacific relations with our neighbours, by which we shall not be the only ones to profit. We pursue no other object, but we attach to it great importance, and we will work perseveringly for its attainment.

If Her Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State expresses to you a desire to have a copy of this despatch, you may leave it in his hands.

I remain, &c.
(Signed) GORTCHAKOW.

No. 9.

Earl Russell to Sir A. Buchanan.

Sir, Foreign Office, September 16, 1865.

I HAVE to instruct your Excellency to thank Prince Gortchakow for the friendly answer which he has given to my despatch of the 31st July, and for the assurances it contains of a wish to consolidate the amicable relations which now exist between the two countries.

In this despatch, of which I inclose a copy,* after referring to a Circular which was communicated to Her Majesty's Government,† his Excellency desires Baron Brunnow to repeat the assurance that the Russian Government has in Central Asia no other interest than that of repose, of the security of the Russian frontiers, and of the establishment of commercial and pacific relations with their neighbours, by which Russia will not profit alone.

These assurances are satisfactory, but it would have given Her Majesty's Government still greater confidence if Prince Gortchakow had replied to the declaration of the views of Her Majesty's Government by a similar declaration.

Her Majesty's Government, however, are willing to accept the explanation of the principles which guide the policy of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia, contained in the Circular already referred to, and are quite ready to believe that legitimate desires for the extension of commerce, and the security of the Russian frontiers, and no wish for territorial aggrandizement guide the proceedings of the Government of Russia.

Such an extension of commerce, and the security of the Russian frontiers, will no doubt tend to the advantage of other nations who carry on trade with Central Asia, and of none more than Great Britain.

You may leave a copy of this despatch with Prince Gortchakow.

I am, &c.

(Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 10.

Sir A. Buchanan to Earl Russell.—(Received September 18.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 12, 1865.

I CALLED on Prince Gortchakow on Sunday the 3rd instant, the day after my return to St. Petersburgh, to acquaint his Excellency with my arrival, when he spoke to me of the correspondence which had just taken place between the two Governments on the subject of Central Asia.

I said that, as I had only arrived the previous evening and was then on my way from church, I had not had time to make myself acquainted with Mr. Lumley's correspondence with Her Majesty's Government; but that I had seen Baron Brunnow at the Foreign Office, as I passed through London, the day on which he communicated to Mr. Layard his Excellency's answer to your Lordship's despatch of the 31st July last, and that from a hurried perusal of it on that occasion I feared it would not be considered sufficiently explicit to meet your Lordship's wishes, or to remove the apprehensions of those persons in England who look with suspicion on the proceedings of Russia in Central Asia, and who would doubtless attach importance to his Excellency having omitted to respond to the declaration respecting Persia contained in your Lordship's despatch.

Prince Gortchakow answered, he could not believe that an unfavourable interpretation would be given to that omission, as it was impossible for any one acquainted with the policy of the Imperial Government to suspect it of designs against the independence of the Persian Monarchy, and as he had, therefore, considered your Lordship's reference to Persia merely intended to give to the Russian Government the same assurances on the part of Her Majesty's Government with respect to that Asiatic State, which they wished to receive from them respecting the Khanats of Central Asia, he had considered it unnecessary to instruct Baron Brunnow to speak of the policy of the Emperor with regard to Persia, because Her Majesty's Government could not doubt the desire of His Imperial Majesty to promote the independence and prosperity of that Monarchy.

This consideration alone had prompted his silence on the subject, and had induced him to expunge from the original draft of his despatch to Baron Brunnow a paragraph,

* No. 8. † For this Circular see "Central Asia, No. 2 (1873)," Appendix, which, after alluding to the friendly conduct of Russia towards Persia, expressed the satisfaction of the Emperor at learning from your Lordship's despatch that the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards that Monarchy was based upon principles entirely in accordance with his own. His Excellency, having then sent for the draft, read the paragraph in question, and as I expressed my regret that he had thought it advisable to omit it in the text of the despatch, he replied that if it would afford any satisfaction to Her Majesty's Government to receive confidential assurances from the Russian Ambassador in London, of the firm intention of the Emperor to respect the independence and integrity of Persia, and to promote the interests of the Shah, Baron Brunnow would be instructed to give such assurances to your Lordship, on being asked for them.

Prince Gortchakow, without exactly saying so, seemed to consider that your Lordship entertained unjust suspicions of the honesty of Russian policy towards Persia, and I have since learnt that he has expressed this feeling to other persons. I have, therefore, said to him that as I had not seen your Lordship before I left England, I could not pretend to explain more fully than your despatch itself, the sentiments under which it was written, but that I could only see in it a desire to establish a friendly understanding between the two Governments, as to their future policy with respect to the countries which separate the two empires, and to impress upon the Rulers of those countries that they must not expect to advance their own ambitious designs through the mutual jealousies of the British and Russian Governments.

I understand from his Excellency that he has reported our conversation to Baron Brunnow, and that he has authorized him to address a communication to your Lordship respecting Persia, in conformity with the language which he has held to me.

I think it right, however, to add that, in speaking of the friendly conduct of Russia towards that country, he alluded to the Turkomans as pirates, who were not subjects of the Shah, and whose depredations against Russian commerce it was necessary for the Imperial military and naval authorities to repress and punish.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ANDREW BUCHANAN.

No. 11.

Sir A. Buchanan to Earl Russell.—(Received September 18.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 12, 1865.

AT an interview yesterday with Prince Gortchakow I asked his Excellency for some information respecting the relations of the Imperial Government with Bokhara, and he stated that the measures lately adopted against the commerce of that country had induced the Khan to suspend his military operations in Khokand, and to offer to send a Diplomatic Agent to St. Petersburgh.

The Imperial Government had, however, he said, declined to receive a Bokharian Envoy here, and had informed the Khan that all future negotiations between the two Governments must be conducted through the Governor-General of Orenburg.

He said no good had ever resulted from such missions to St. Petersburgh, and he intended, therefore, to adopt the system of Her Majesty's Government in their dealings with Asiatic Princes, with whom negotiations are carried on through the Viceroy of India.

It was also the intention of the Imperial Government to insist on the Bokharian troops being withdrawn from the Khokanese territory, and on Tashkend being declared an independent town.

In answer to my inquiries he stated that the towns of Khokand and Kodjend were now occupied by the Bokharians, whose forces were represented to amount to 40,000 men, which was, doubtless, he said, an exaggerated statement, while those of Russia in Turkestan did not exceed 5,000 men.

I rejoined that the strength of the latter, however, would probably be increased in consequence of late events, and his Excellency replied that only 800 men had been sent to reinforce them.

I then asked whether Russia had at present a factory or a Consul at Kashgar or Yarkand, and his Excellency replied he believed not. He said he personally disapproved of establishing permanent commercial agents in these remote and barbarous countries, and he had, therefore, opposed a proposal to send a Consul to Bokhara, on the ground that such an Agent would not be safe without a regiment to protect him.

It was, therefore, more expedient, he added, that the Chiefs of the caravans which periodically traversed these countries should be themselves the ordinary organs of communication with the local authorities.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ANDREW BUCHANAN.

No. 12.

Sir A. Buchanan to Earl Russell.—(Received September 18.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, September 14, 1865.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 12th instant, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that the Emperor was pleased to speak to me of the correspondence which has recently taken place between the two Governments respecting Central Asia, at the audience which His Imperial Majesty granted to me on my return to St. Petersburgh, and he stated that I might assure your Lordship that his Government had no ambitious designs in that quarter of the world, and that their language on the subject was entirely free from reservation or "arrières pensées."

His Majesty said that his Empire was already sufficiently large, and that his sole policy in Central Asia was to encourage commerce and civilization. But that in following this object, it was of course impossible to prevent collisions occurring from time to time between his troops and the inhabitants of these distant and barbarous countries.

His Majesty held much the same language to me as Prince Gortchakow, and as he also explained in the same manner the omission of any reference in the Prince's despatch to the policy of Russia with respect to Persia.

I replied that I had already expressed my regret to Prince Gortchakow at that omission, and that I could only repeat it to His Majesty. The Emperor said that Baron Brunnow had, however, been instructed to give your Lordship satisfactory assurances on the subject, though he could not understand, unless it was merely to meet Parliamentary inquiries, why your Lordship should desire them. In replying to these observations I used the same language which I had held to Prince Gortchakow, and stated that without having received any further explanations of the views of Her Majesty's Government than were to be found in your Lordship's despatch of the 31st July last, it appeared to me that your Lordship's object was to establish an understanding between the two Governments with respect to the States of Central Asia, which would conduce to the future tranquillity and welfare of these countries, and satisfy their Rulers that they had nothing to gain from the mutual jealousies of Great Britain and Russia.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ANDREW BUCHANAN.

No. 13.

Sir A. Buchanan to Earl Russell.—(Received October 16.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 9, 1865.

I LEARN from Prince Gortchakow that the Governor-General of Orenburg is now at Tashkend, and that he is instructed to confer there with the Bokharian Envoy whom the Khan had proposed to send to St. Petersburgh.

The negotiator in question was sent to St. Petersburgh on a former occasion, and is said to be a sensible person; but Prince Gortchakow, as I have already informed your Lordship, has declined receiving him here, and is of opinion that a negotiation with the Khan of Bokhara will be of little value unless carried on near the frontiers of his Principality.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ANDREW BUCHANAN.

No. 14.

Sir A. Buchanan to Earl Russell.—(Received October 16.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 11, 1865.

PRINCE GORTCHAKOW will dispatch a messenger to London to-morrow, who will be the bearer of instructions to Baron Brunnow on the subject of the policy of Russia with respect to Central Asia and to Persia,* which will, I trust, prove satisfactory to your Lordship and to Her Majesty's Government.

Although the form of Prince Gortchakow's declaration is not so formal and binding as that which your Lordship invited, it, at all events, gives an assurance that Russia has only commercial objects in Central Asia, and that she will respect the independence of Afghanistan, and that, in common with Great Britain, she will support the Persian Monarchy.

Under present circumstances this assurance may, I presume, be considered satisfactory; and with regard to the eventualities of the distant future, it would perhaps be rash to expect that any declaration, however honest and however formal, Prince Gortchakow might give, would indefinitely restrain this nation from seeking to follow out what many Russians are believed to consider the mission of Russia in the East.

In speaking to me on the subject his Excellency said that Baron Brunnow cannot declare too positively to Lord Russell that all the Russian Government seek in Central Asia is to establish secure caravan routes towards the East, and that with respect to their present measures, they consider it necessary, in order to effect this, that Khohand and Tashkend shall be assisted to maintain their independence of Bokhara.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ANDREW BUCHANAN.

No. 15.

Sir A. Buchanan to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 11.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, December 6, 1865.

PRINCE GORTCHAKOW has again expressed to me his satisfaction with the reports which he has recently received from Baron Brunnow of his conversations with your Lordship, and he said he trusted the two Governments may be able to carry out in practice the good understanding which he believes to exist between them in theory.

He represented their policy and interests to be the same in all questions of present importance.

England, he said, desires to promote the maintenance of peace and of the present balance of power in Europe, and so does Russia. England likewise desires to maintain the integrity of the Turkish Empire, but at the same time to secure the Christian subjects of the Sultan against oppression, and so does Russia.

The policy and interests of the two Governments in Europe and in Turkey being, therefore, identical, would it not, he asked, be wise and prudent were they to act together in endeavouring to carry out, by moral influence, their common objects, and to guard against eventualities which may arise at no distant future, of a nature to disturb the balance of power in Europe, or endanger the existence of the Sultan's Empire.

The position of Russia in Central Asia, he said, ought not to be a cause of difference between them, and he trusted that any misgivings which may have been felt in England respecting the late military operations in Turkestan, will have been removed by the explanations which have already been given to Her Majesty's Government, and by the despatches of General Kryjanoffsky which have just been published.

The Governor-General of Orenburg was, he added, as convinced as he was himself of the impolicy of extending the frontiers of Russia towards the East, and General Tchernaieff had recieved orders to return for the present to St. Petersburgh.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ANDREW BUCHANAN.

---

* There is no official record of these instructions having been communicated.

Appendix No. 2.

CORRESPONDENCE: 1870-73.

No. 1.

Mr. Melvill to Mr. Hammond.—(Received August 3.)

Sir, India Office, August 2, 1870.

I AM directed by the Duke of Argyll to forward, for the information of Earl Granville, copy of a despatch recently received from India, dated 24th June, 1870, with inclosed papers, relative to a letter addressed by General Von Kaufmann, the Russian Governor of Turkestan, to the Ameer of Cabul.

I am, &c.
(Signed) JAMES MELVILL.

Inclosure 1 in No. 1.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

My Lord Duke, Simla, June 24, 1870.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of the papers relative to a letter addressed by General von Kaufmann, the Russian Governer-General of Turkestan, to His Highness the Ameer of Cabul.

2. From the Diary of the British Agent at Cabul, ending the 16th May, 1870, your Grace will have been informed of the receipt at Cabul of this letter in Russian, English, and Persian, from General von Kaufmann, and of the difficulty felt by the Ameer in understanding the Persian triplicate, written in an idiom strange to him. The English version was translated into Persian by Sirdar Mahomed Yakoob Khan (a son of the Ameer), but very imperfectly. The Ameer, misunderstanding the purport of the communication from General von Kaufmann, was apparently much disquieted, and forwarded the documents to the Viceroy, with a request that he might be favoured with a translation of the Russian letter into Persian, and that the Viceroy would suggest to him such an answer as might be considered appropriate and advisable.

3. We have been able to obtain a translation of the Russian original, and have transmitted English and Persian versions of it to the Ameer.

4. The original letter in Russian, with the English and Persian versions, have been returned to Cabul, but a photographed copy of the Russian original accompanies this, and also a four-columned paper containing copy of the first translation into French, with the English duplicate, and translations of the two Persian, which, for the purpose of comparison, we have printed side by side.

5. General Von Kaufmann's communication appears to us to be the result of the instructions which, as reported in your Secretary's Secret letter, dated 6th May, 1870, the Court of St. Petersburgh had determined to send to Tashkend, viz., that General von Kaufmann should make it known everywhere in Central Asia that a perfect understanding exists between the Governments of Great Britain and Russia with reference to the affairs and interests of those countries. In answering the Ameer's letter we have taken the opportunity to explain to him the repeated assurances we have received from the Russian Government of their determination to pursue a peaceful policy in Central Asia. We have also informed him that the letters addressed to him by General von Kaufmann, containing as they do a renewed expression of this policy to the Ameer himself, will doubtless be, when rightly viewed, a source of satisfaction and an additional ground of confidence to His Highness that, so long as he continues the course he has so happily followed since his meeting with the Viceroy at Umballa, it is most unlikely that his territories will be disturbed by Russia, or by any tribe or State which may be influenced by the officers of the Emperor.

6. We beg to refer to the Viceroy's reply to the Ameer for a full expression of our sentiments. A copy in print is inclosed, but the original was sent as usual in manuscript.

We have, &c.
(Signed) MAYO.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
JOHN STRACHEY.
R. TEMPLE.
J. F. STEPHEN.
B. H. ELLIS.
H. W. NORMAN.

Inclosure 2 in No. 1.

Major Pollock to Mr. Thornton.

Peshawur, May 26, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to submit Cabul Diary (translation) from the 16th to the 19th instant.

2. Also a letter and inclosures received with the diary to the address of his Excellency the Viceroy.

3. With the above came a forwarding letter from His Highness the Ameer to my address, and one from the Cabul Agent, to the effect that the Ameer was much troubled at the receipt of the letters from the Russian authorities at Tashkend, for the following reasons :—

1st.—What reasons can the Russians have for writing letters in a friendly strain to a State which has already friendly relations with the British Government?

2nd.—Having seated amongst them one of our enemies ("muanid"), why should they write pointing out the fact?

3rd.—What is the meaning of their writing that Asia has no boundaries?

4th.—What do they mean by saying, as a reason for our establishing permanent friendly relations with them, that up to the present time they have had no occasion to be angry with me?

5th.—What do they mean by asking for a reply agreeably to their aims ("mafik apné neeut ké")?

There is room for apprehension, for the King of Bokhara has already submitted himself to, or become a dependent of, Russia, and it would not be surprising to find Russian officials establishing themselves on the actual border of Afghanistan. If (which God forbid) they should so establish themselves on the actual border and harbour our enemies, what hope is there of the borders of Turkestan, Balkh, and Herat remaining on a satisfactory footing without full ("kamil") arrangements being made, and it is impossible that such complete measure can be carried out for the protection of these borders without the help and assistance of the British Government, with which the Afghan Kingdom is allied ("muta ahid"). The Ameer also feels anxiety as to what may have been said by Russia to the British Ambassador at her Court as to her meaning and intention in writing such letters, or what the Ambassador may have learnt as to such intentions, or what action may have been taken, or be about to be taken, by the British Government in the matter. The Ameer defers replying to the letters, meaning to be guided entirely by the wishes and counsels of the British Government. A duplicate set of these letters has to-day reached the Ameer, received through the Meer of Samarcand and the Turkestan officials; the duplicates have been kept at Cabul, and the Ameer's apprehensions have been further aroused by the receipt of the duplicate letters; he wonders why they should be at such trouble in the matter.

Inclosure 3 in No. 1.

Mr. Thornton to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of India.

Murree, May 28, 1870.

WITH reference to letter, dated 26th May, from the Commissioner and Superintendent of the Peshawur Division, of which copy has been forwarded by Major Pollock direct to the Foreign Department, I am desired by the Honourable the Lieutenant-General to forward, in original, the several papers alluded to in the 2nd paragraph of the Commissioner's letter, together with a translation of that addressed to his Excellency the Viceroy by His Highness the Ameer of Cabul.

Inclosure 4 in No. 1.

The Ameer of Cabul to the Viceroy of India.

(Translation.)
(After compliments.)

A LETTER has been received from Van Kauf Sahib, the Governor-General of the Russian territory, from the Turkestan direction, and through the Agency of the King of Bokhara, containing references to the concerns of your Excellency's Government.

The letter was written in three different languages, and, since friendly relations exist between us and the British Government, exalted States, and it is advisable to inform your Excellency of all news and information of such a nature, the originals of all the letters (which are in Russian, English, and Persian) have been herewith sent to you.

The translation of the English letter was made by Sirdar Mahomed Yakob Khan, well-beloved and virtuous, the light of my eyes, and the Government translators.

By the favour of God, the letters above-mentioned will reach his Excellency, who, from their perusal, may acquire full information.

Do me the favour to obtain the translation of the Russian letter into Persian, and also I beg that such an answer as may by you be considered appropriate and advisable may be forwarded to me, with a translation into the Russian language, for transmission to the Russian General, who desires an answer.

May your Excellency remember me with favour and honour, and send me news of your welfare.

Dated 17th Sufur-ul Muzufur, 1287, Hijri (i.e., 19th May, 1870), Cabul.

Since the above letter, dated 17th Sufur-ul Muzufur, was written, a duplicate set of the three letters, exactly similar to those inclosed, was received from a man of the Ameer of Samarcand at Tukhtapool, and sent from that place to me. Since they are the precise counterparts of the first, it is not necessary to send them.

Inclosure 5 in No. 1.

Mahomed Alum to the Ameer of Cabul.

(Translation.)

I BEG to mention the state of affairs at this place, that up to Saturday, the 13th of Sufur, I, by the grace of God, passed my time at Gori in offering up my prayers for the welfare and perpetuity of your Government. On Thursday, the 11th Sufur, a letter was received from Cubernaut, the Governor of Tashkend, through a man of the Ameer of Samarcand at Tukhtapool, and, Sirdar Sahib having kept the said man at Tukhtapool, forwarded the letter to me at Gori. I beg to send it for your perusal without loss of time. I beg to assure you that everything is right here. There is nothing new which I deem worth communicating for your information.

A letter from Mahomed Yacob Pekooshbegee is herewith inclosed.

Inclosure 6 in No. 1.

*Copy of French translation, of Russian original, English duplicate and English translation, from Persian versions, of letter from General von Kaufmann to the Ameer of Cabul.

(Literal Retranslation into English of the Translation made at Cabul.)

Translation (into Persian) of the Letter in English from Military Van Kauf, Russian Governor-General, which reached Huzoor (the Ameer of Cabul) on Monday, the 13th Sufur, 1287, Hijree.

YOU have probably heard that your nephew, Abdoor Ruhman Khan, who, a few years ago, was Ruler of Balkh and other parts of Afghanistan, has now arrived in Tashkend, and I, as a Vakeel on the part of the Russian Emperor, have given him permission to come into Tashkend, and due honour has been done to him. In ordr that I may not have misinterpreted the Sirdar's staying here to Afghans, I, from my customary honesty and sincerity, and out of regard to relations, think it necessary to express that I desire that unity may exist between Russian Turkestan and you.

The countries in Asia which are in the possession of the Russian Emperor have no limits that are at present in your possession. These limits are separated by the River of Bokhara, the Ameer of which place is Syud Muzufur Khan, who has concluded a Treaty with me, and who has been passing his days happily under my protection. It is necessary that no quarrel and disagreement should take place between me and you. Although we are distant neighbours, it is proper that we pass our days in friendship and pleasure. I had a desire for a long time that I might be a "wastah" (mediator) in the Kingdom of Afghanistan, not only because you are under the protection of the British Government, with whom we are also, you are aware, on friendly relations, but also because we did not see any mischievous interference on your part in the affairs of Bokhara. Afghanistan and Bokhara ought not to be in terms of disagreement with each other. It is proper for each party to act in accordance with his own ways, and not to care for the welfare or for the misfortune of his neighbour.

These considerations require this, that when Abdoor Ruhman Khan made a request to come into Tashkend I answered that "our Emperor, from his greatness, shows kindness to all, especially to you, as you are now unfortunate, but you should not hope to receive through me any assistance to wage war." I don't want that I should take part in his quarrel with you, because your behaviour has not been the cause of any complaint. I also hope that our old friendship and unity should continue to exist as before. For this reason I send you this letter. I shall be very glad to receive from you such a reply as may be conformable to my wish and to established usage, regarding the canals† of the rivers of Bokhara, Khiva, and other Ilaquas.

(Literal Translation of the Persian Triplicate sent by General Kaufmann.)

Translation of a Letter from the Russian Governor-General in Turkestan to His Highness Ameer Shere Ali Khan, Ameer of the whole Territory of Afghanistan.

YOU must have been informed that Abdoor Ruhman Khan, son of the late Ameer Afzul Khan, who formerly ruled the country of Balkh and all its cities, has now come into the country of Tashkend. I am a Vakeel and Ruler of this place on the part of the wealthy and powerful White Padshah. I have shown respect and regard to the above-mentioned personage. Do not miscontrue the fact of this Sirdar of the Afghans being in this place. Therefore I inform you by letter. I have written what is true and correct, what relation Russian Turkestan has with Afghanistan, which is now subject to your rule, and the regard which I have for you. The Emperor who has no limits‡ of his own in Turkestan between the two exalted States of Afghanistan and the Russian Kings, Bokhara and enough (lit.) The Ameer of that place, Syud Muzufur Khan, has concluded a Treaty of Peace, has thereby become a friend, and also has come and remained under the protection of Ameer Atour Azum (Emperor). This act cannot in any way cause enmity and misunderstanding between us and you. As we are distant neighbours of yours, permanent peace and friendship will be established between us and you. It is not my wish to meddle with the affairs of the State of Afghanistan. As you are under the protection of the British Government, it is known to you that our Emperor is a friend of the British Government. For this reason you have not now meddled with the affairs of Bokhara. Let there be not anything in common between Afghanistan and Bokhara, let the Masters of both the countries pass their days in peace and tranquillity, and be ignorant and without care for what happens in the neighbour's country. When Abdoor Ruhman Khan applied for leave by letter to come into Tashkend, I granted it to him. As our Emperor naturally gives protection to those who are subjected to misfortunes and troubles, I, before the said Abdoor Ruhman's arrival here, informed him by letter that he should not ask for aid and help to wage war with you.

* For French translation communicated by Prince Gortchacow, see Correspondence respecting Central Asia presented to Parliament in 1873 ("Central Asia, No. 2, 1873"), No. 58, p. 43.

† "Anhar" in Persian translation. The translator has evidently mistaken the word "khanates" in the English for "canals."—C. U. A.

‡ Here the sentence is confused; but the meaning corresponds with the English version that Russian Turkestan has no common limit with Afghanistan.—H. Le P. W.

I do not at all wish to discontinue friendship with you, because as yet your acts have caused no displeasure to me. I earnestly hope that you will bear the same relation with me in perpetuity. For this reason I have sent a letter to you. When you receive this, you will, after understanding the above said contents properly, and regarding them as right, send me such an answer as may be in accordance with my wish, so that I may thereby be satisfied, and be obliged to you as well as be pleased with you. May your life be prolonged. For your honour and for the comfort of those needy men who depend upon you, this letter is written.

Tashkend, March 28, 1870.

(Transcript of the Duplicate sent in English by General Kaufmann.)

To the Ameer of Cabul, Shere Ali Khan.

YOU probably will have heard that your nephew, Abderahman Khan, who a few years ago was Regent of Balkh and of other parts of Afghanistan, is just arrived in Tashkend, and that I, as representative of my gracious Emperor, have allowed him an honourable hospitality. In order that the staying here of the above-mentioned Afghanistan Sirdar might not be erroneously interpreted by you, I suppose it necessary to explain to you, with my accustomary sincerity and veracity, my point of view concerning the relations I should like to see established between Russian Turkestan and you.

The Asiatic possessions of His Majesty the Emperor have no common limits with the country now submitted to your supremacy ; they are separated by the Khanate of Bokhara, whose Ruler, the Ameer Seid Mosafar, having concluded a Treaty of Peace with Russia, stays now in friendly relations to us, and is enjoying the mighty protection of our great Emperor. Between us both there must not be any misunderstandings and vexations at all, and, though distant neighbours, we ought to live in friendship and harmony. I am quite far of longing for meddling with the interior affairs of Afghanistan, not only because you are under the protection of the British Government, with which, as you know, the Russian Government is in the best and most friendly relations, but also because I did not see any infraction from your part in the internal affairs of Bokhara. Afghanistan and Bokhara ought not to have any point of contact together, both of them must go their separate ways without caring for the welfare of the neighbour.

These considerations leaded me, when, having received from Abderahman Khan the request of being admitted to Tashkend, I answered him that His Majesty the Emperor of Russia graciously affords hospitality to everybody, so much the more to an unfortunate, but that he must not in the least reckon on my interference in his quarrel with you, and not expect any assistance from our part. I should not like to be in discordance with you, because your behaviour gave no matter for complaints. I hope also that our mutual relations will remain the same, and therefore I send you this letter, and should be glad to receive from you the assurance that, on your part, the analogue principles of neutrality will be strictly observed concerning the Khanates of Bokhara, Khiva, and other neighbours.

Tashkend, $\frac{\text{March } 30}{\text{April } 11}$, 1870.

The Turkestan Governor-General and Commander of the Troops of the Turkestan Military Circle,
(Signed) VON KAUFMANN,
General Aide-de-camp.

Pour traduction conforme :
Le Conseiller d'Etat et Gentilhomme de la Chambre, (Signed) C. STRUVE.

(Translation of Letter sent in Russian by General Kaufmann.)

A son Altesse l'Emir.

VOTRE Altesse a probablement déjà entendu que votre neveu le vénérable Abdul Rahman Khan n'a jamais envahi Balkh et d'autres villes d'Afghan ; il est arrivé il y a quelque temps à Tachkend, et moi, ici comme le Représentant de mon puissant Maître, je l'ai reçu avec honneur et plaisir.

Je ne désire pas que la résidence d'un Afghan Sirdar soit mal compris de vous. Je le trouve nécessaire de vous exposer immédiatement dans cette lettre, avec une loyauté accoutumée et franche, ma vue concernant le Turkestan Russe avec votre puissance dans l'Afghanistan et ces régulations que je dirige dans les relations avec vous.

Les dominions du Czar Blanc dans le Turkestan et les terres aujourd'hui subordonnées à vous n'ont pas de communes frontières ; les possessions du Khan de la Boukharie nous séparent ; l'Emir Said Mouzaphar, le Souverain qui a juré la paix avec la Russie, est en amitié et sous la protection du grand Empereur de Toutes les Russies. Pour cela il ne peut avoir aucune attaque ni malentendu entre nous, et nous, quoique des voisins éloignés, nous pouvons et devons vivre en amitié et en accord. Je n'ai pas l'intention de me mêler des affaires intérieures de l'Afghanistan, parce que vous êtes sous la protection du Gouvernement Anglais, lequel, comme vous savez probablement, est en amitié et en accord avec l'administration du Czar Blanc, et pour cela vous de votre part ne devez vous mêler des affaires de Boukharie. L'Afghanistan et la Boukharie ne doivent avoir rien de commun entre eux, et chacun de ces royaumes doit vivre de sa propre vie.

Une pareille signification j'ai donné à Abdul Rahman Khan, quand celui-ci s'adressa à moi avec la supplication de le recevoir à Tachkend, parce que le grand Souverain ne refuse à personne l'hospitalité, surtout quand un homme est malheureux ; et pour cela je l'ai accueilli aimablement, mais il ne compte nellement sur mon intervention dans sa querelle avec vous, et il n'en suit aucune assistance de notre côté. Je ne désire pas de me diverger de vous, parce que votre efficacité n'a donné aucun sujet de mécontentement.

Dans l'entière espérance que nos relations resteront ainsi dans le futur je vous écris cette lettre, et je serais très-content si je reçois de vous l'assurance écrite que vous avez l'intention de vous tenir à mon programme.

Que le Dieu Suprême prolonge vos jours pour votre gloire et pour le bien-être du peuple !

Le Gouverneur-Général de Turkestan et le Commandant Militaire du District de l'Armée, (Signé) KAUFMANN,
Le Général Aide-de-camp.

Ville Tachkend, le 30 Mars. 1870.

Inclosure 7 in No. 1.

The Viceroy of India to Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

My honoured and valued Friend, Simla, June 24, 1870.

I HAVE had the pleasure to receive your Highness' friendly letter dated 17th Safar-ul-Muzafir, 1287, Hijri (corresponding with 19th May, 1870), and thank you for your courtesy and this further token of friendship, in thus sending for my perusal the letters you have received in Russian, Persian, and English, from General Aide-de-camp Von Kaufmann, Governor-General of Turkestan, and Commander of the Russian troops of the Turkestan Military Circle, and also in consulting me as to the reply which it is desirable that you should give.

In compliance with your Highness' request, I send you a correct translation in English and Persian of the letter in the Russian character. You will perceive that General Von Kaufmann's letter states that the frontiers of the Asiatic possessions of the Emperor do not anywhere touch on those of your Highness; it also contains assurances of the peaceful intentions of the Russian Government towards your Highness, their determination to abstain from interference with the territories now in your Highness' possession, and their hope that your Highness will continue the same policy which has hitherto marked your conduct towards the States and tribes lying beyond the frontier of Afghanistan.

My friend, it affords me great pleasure to inform you that I have received intelligence from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India that, in September last year, Prince Gortchacow, the Chief of the Statesmen to whom the Emperor of Russia has confided the government of his country, assured Her Majesty's Minister for Foreign Affairs that Russia has no intention of extending her boundary further south. I have also heard from Mr. Forsyth, one of my high officers who visited St. Petersburgh last year, that he had the honour of an interview with the Emperor, when he informed His Majesty of the deep interest which the British Government take in your independence and welfare, in reply to which the Emperor remarked there was no intention of extending the Russian dominions, and that, if the idea of conquest were banished from your Highness' mind, there would be peace in Central Asia. The Ambassador of the Queen at the Court of St. Petersburgh, together with Mr. Forsyth, have also received assurances from the Ministers of the Emperor of Russia, with the full concurrence of His Majesty, that all the provinces that your Highness now holds should be accepted as Afghanistan; and that, whilst the good offices of England should be exerted to dissuade your Highness from aggression, Russia should similarly use all her influence to restrain Bokhara from transgressing the limits of Afghan territory.

I have also been informed that Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh has reported to the Secretary of State that instructions have been sent to General von Kaufmann to the effect that, as the Government of India had taken measures to carry out the understanding come to with Mr. Forsyth, the Russian authorities should act in a similar spirit, and should make it known that England and Russia are agreed as to the policy that should be followed with a view of securing the tranquillity of the countries on their respective borders, and the peace of Asia. I have further received information that General von Kaufmann has informed the Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan (now supposed to be resident at Tashkend) that Russia is firmly resolved not to interfere in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, and that consequently all negotiations with him (Abdul Rahman Khan) are useless, and that General von Kaufmann will once more intimate to Abdul Rahman Khan that he can only be granted an asylum in the territories of Russia on condition of his abstaining from intrigues and political projects, for the realization of which he must not in any way reckon on assistance from Bokhara.

The letter which General von Kaufmann has addressed you contains, as I have already stated, assurances on the part of the Russian Government of their resolution to adhere to this policy of peace; and these letters will, doubtless, be, when rightly understood, a source of satisfaction and an additional ground of confidence to your Highness, because they indicate that, so long as you continue the course you have so happily pursued since the visit you honoured me with at Umballa, it is most unlikely that your territories will be disturbed by Russia or by any tribe or State which may be influenced by the officers of the Emperor.

My friend, these assurances given by His Imperial Majesty himself—by his Ministers of State—and now by the distinguished General who commands His Majesty's Forces in Russian Turkestan, have given to me unfeigned satisfaction. For in these I see a further and an additional security for that which I so much desire, namely, the permanency of your rule, the complete establishment of your power, and the maintenance of a just, wise, and merciful administration throughout the whole of Afghanistan. Further, it is a matter of great gratification to me that the servants of the Queen, both in England and in India, have by the representations made by them in your behalf to Her Majesty's ally, been enabled to contribute in this important manner to the interests of your Highness and of your State.

I therefore suggest for your Highness' consideration that it would be wise that you should reply to General Von Kaufmann to the effect that you are glad to receive his assurances that no interference, direct or indirect, will be undertaken by any officer in the service of His Imperial Majesty in the affairs of Afghanistan, and that no assistance or encouragement will be afforded by them to your enemies; that in pursuance of the counsel and advice repeatedly given you by the British Government, you have instructed your frontier officers that, while they should firmly defend your border and maintain your authority, they must not permit any aggressions to be made on their neighbours, and that they must abstain from interference in the political affairs of countries and tribes beyond the legitimate borders of Afghanistan; and, further, that you are determined to adhere to this policy, not only because you have been advised thereto by the Viceroy of India, whose Sovereign is in strict alliance with the Czar, but also because you are convinced that it is in accordance with the best interests of your kingdom and the welfare of your people.

It will be sufficient to reply to General von Kaufmann in Persian, with which language he or his officers are, doubtless, familiar.

I beg to express the high consideration I entertain for your Highness, and to subscribe myself

Your Highness' sincere friend,
(Signed) MAYO.

Inclosure 8 in No. 1.

Mr. Aitchison to Mr. Thornton.

Simla, June 24, 1870.

I HAVE laid before his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council your letter dated the 28th May, 1870, with the letter from the Commissioner of Peshawur, therein referred to, and its accompaniments from His Highness the Ameer of Cabul.

2. His Excellency in Council has taken fully into consideration the contents of those letters, and has addressed a khureeta, in reply to the Ameer—a copy of which is inclosed for the Lieutenant-Governor's information. Another copy is forwarded for communication, confidentially, to the Commissioner of Peshawur.

3. With the khureeta to the Ameer are sent English and Persian translations of General von Kaufmann's letter to him in Russian, and two copies of the English translation are sent for the information of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, and for transmission to Colonel Pollock.

4. His Excellency in Council desires that, with the Lieutenant-Governor's permission, the Commissioner of Peshawur may be instructed to send on the communication for the Ameer without delay, and by the hand of a special and trusty messenger.

No. 2.

Mr. Melvill to Mr. Hammond.—(Received October 13.)

Sir. India Office, October 12, 1870.

WITH reference to my letter of the 2nd August I now transmit to you, for the information of Earl Granville, copy of a letter with inclosures, lately received from the Government of India, relative to the reply which the Ameer of Cabul has been recommended to return to the letter of General Kaufmann.

I am, &c.
(Signed) JAMES MELVILL.

Inclosure 1 in No. 2.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

My Lord Duke, Simla, August 26, 1870.

IN continuation of our despatch dated the 24th June last, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of a letter from the Government of the Punjab, inclosing translation of a khureeta from His Highness the Ameer of Cabul, in answer to one from his Excellency the Viceroy, a copy of which was sent with the despatch above referred to.

2. We also forward copy of a letter from the British Agent at Cabul to the Commissioner at Peshawur, reporting his proceedings at the interview with the Ameer, at which he delivered the Viceroy's letter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) MAYO.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
JOHN STRACHEY.
R. TEMPLE.
J. F. STEPHEN.
B. H. ELLIS.
H. W. NORMAN.

Inclosure 2 in No. 2.

Mr. Thornton to Mr. Aitchison.

Murree, July 29, 1870.

I AM directed to forward a murrasilla from His Highness the Ameer of Cabul, to the address of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, received through the Commissioner of Peshawur.

Inclosure 3 in No. 2.

The Ameer of Cabul to the Governor-General of India.

(Translation.) Cabul, Saturday, 16*th Rubee-oos-Sanee,* 1287 Hijree
(After compliments.) (July 16, 1870).

THE noble and kind letter which your Excellency, from friendship and unity, wrote to me in reply to my communication, reached me at an auspicious time, and was (to me) an expounder of State matters and of views of primary importance.

The pleasure and thanks which your Excellency, on account of my good intention and sincere nature, has expressed, have proceeded from the firm bonds of sincere friendship, nay, may be said to be the reflection of the mirrors of the hearts of two parties sincere in their mutual relations.

In fact, when the welfare and interest of the two parties, coming out from the circle of contrariety become identical, it is naturally to be expected that the joys of friends shall delight friends. The few paragraghs which have been kindly written to me, containing gratifying assurances that firm and complete arrangements in respect to border matters have been made between the officers of the British and Russian Governments, to the effect that my territories will not be disturbed by any tribe or State which may be influenced by the officers of the Russian Emperor, have laid me and all the people of this country under great obligation. Your Excellency has expressed gratification at the welcome thought (literally, joyful tidings) that the authorities of Hindostan and England take interest in the firm establishment of the rule of the country of Afghanistan.

Such friendly sympathy, which will in reality result in the firm establishment of the authority of my dominion, has led me to expect that my various hopes will be realized in future, and has particularly given a hope of peace and tranquillity to the inhabitants of the country of Afghanistan. For this friendly favour what words can I make use of to express my thanks? The prosperity of the garden of my State always depends on the kindness of the British officers.

Considering that the few lines which were, out of friendship, written at the conclusion of your Excellency's letter, with the view that a reply might agreeably thereto be returned to the Russian Government, would, if adopted in my reply, prove of benefit to the territory of Afghanistan, I have, in accordance therewith, sent an answer to the letter from the Russian Government. A perusal of its copy will show how it is couched from the beginning to the end. I have issued strict orders to the officers in charge of my frontiers to watch and defend always the borders, so that it may be the cause of assurance to the minds of both those who are in the vicinity and those who are at a distance. Further, by the grace of God, great possible exertions will be made according to the wishes of the British officers to keep relations of friendship.

I hope that your Excellency will consider me as a friend, and will kindly continue to gratify me with accounts of your health.

Inclosure 4 in No. 2.

Lieutenant-General Pollock to Mr. Aitchison.

Abbottabad, July 23, 1870.

SUBMITS copy of translation of a letter from the British Agent in Cabul, containing the remarks and acknowledgments of His Highness the Ameer of Cabul on the murrasilla of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India regarding the mode of replying to the murrasilla received by His Highness from the Russian authorities.

Inclosure 5 in No. 2.

Atta Mahomed Khan to Lieutenant-Colonel Pollock.

(Translation.) July 11, 1870.

I BEG to acknowledge the receipt, through the Deputy Commissioner of Peshawur, of a murrasilla from his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, to His Highness the Ameer of Cabul, regarding the mode of replying to the murrasilla received by His Highness from the Russian authorities. After mastering the contents of the murrasilla, the Ameer expressed himself highly gratified with the British Government, and remarked:—

"Owing to the patronage ('himayut') and kindness of the British Government I was quite assured that they would devise suitable and appropriate measures in regard to the security of the Afghan border, and my protection and that of all the people of Afghanistan from the threats of foreign assailants. I myself and all my officials are unable to express sufficiently our gratitude at the contents of tke above murrasilla. However, I am grateful to state that I have been thoroughly reassured as regards the Turkestan border, and it is desirable that a complimentary murrasilla should be addressed to his Excellency the Governor-General of India in a suitable style; also, a murrasalla should be sent, in accordance with the instructions of the British Government, to the Russian Governor in Tashkend, in reply to the one received from him."

No. 3.

Mr. Grant-Duff to Mr. Hammond.—(Received June .,

(Extract.) India Office, June 15, 1871.

I TAKE this opportunity of forwarding, for the information of Earl Granville, copy of a letter from the Government of India on matters connected with Central Asia.

Inclosure 1 in No. 3.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

(Secret.)

My Lord Duke, Simla, May 9, 1871.

WITH reference to our Secret despatch dated the 26th August last, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of papers, from which it will be perceived that the Ameer of Cabul has received a reply to the letter which he addressed to the Russian Governor-General in Turkestan in July last.

2. General Kaufmann's letter is, in our opinion, most satisfactory, and the Viceroy has advised His Highness the Ameer to reply, briefly expressing his gratification at the friendly assurances which it contains.

We have, &c.
(Signed) MAYO.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
JOHN STRACHEY.
R. TEMPLE.
J. F. STEPHEN.
B. H. ELLIS.

Inclosure 2 in No. 3.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Aitchison.

Peshawur, March 11, 1871.

IN submtting the inclosed murrassulla received from the Ameer of Cabul, to the address of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, has the honour to annex copy of a letter dated 6th March, 1871, received from the British Agent at Cabul, for information.

Inclosure 3 in No. 3.

Atta Mahomed Khan, Khagwanee, to Mr. Macnabb.

(Translation.) March 6, 1871.

ON Friday, the 3rd instant, when the Ameer rode outside the city of Cabul (for recreation), His Highness received a letter at evening by the hand of a messenger of Naib Mahomed Alum Khan from General von Kaufmann, Governor of Tashkend. His Highness sent the original murrassulla of the General in Persian and Russian characters to the Agency Office with his murrassulla to the address of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and both these communications are herewith submitted. The Ameer has dispatched copies of the above murrassulla of the Russian Empire for information to Sirdar Mahomed Aslum Khan, and Governors of Herat and Turkestan, and has deferred its reply until the receipt of instructions from the British Government.

Inclosure 4 in No. 3.

The Ameer of Cabul to the Viceroy and Governor-General.

(Translation.)

(After compliments.) 14*th Zilhijja,* 1287 Hijree (March 7, 1871.)

A LETTER from General von Kaufmann, a Colonel of the Russian Government, in reply to the one which I formerly addressed him, reached me from Tashkend on Friday, the 11th* of Zilhijja, 1287 Hijree. The original letter, which is in Russian and Persian languages, is herewith forwarded to your Excellency. From the perusal of the letter your Excellency, please God, will learn its contents. Your Excellency will inform me as to the nature of reply which it may be deemed advisable to return, in order that I may send an answer accordingly.

I beg that your Excellency will order your translators to translate the Russian version of the letter, and will forward the translation to me.

I hope that your Excellency will continue to gratify me with accounts of your health. I have nothing else to communicate than to express my wish for an interview.

---

* March 4.

Inclosure 5 in No. 3.

Translation of Persian Version of Letter from General von Kaufmann, Governor of Tashkend, to the Ameer of all the Territories of Afghanistan, Shere Ali Khan, the Illustrious, dated December 21, 1870.

THE friendly letter which your Highness sent me reached me at Tashkend on the 29th August of the present year. I have perused it with great attention, and have been able to learn that your Highness has issued strict orders as to how respect and regard should be shown to your neighbours. This written order of your Highness has been in accordance with the wishes of my heart. Indeed, this good sentiment of your Highness will meet with the approbation of our Emperor.

May your Highness continue to be on friendly terms with, and to love sincerely, the Russian Government and its neighbouring territory, as by pursuing such a course you will not on any occasion have cause to regret. Trust me that your habits and ways have tended to increase our friendship. Having had regard to this, I beg to say that experience, acquired by age, has shown that enmity and disunion between two States become the cause of destruction to nations [whereas]. The circumstances of the bonds of friendship and peace between two States being established on a firmer basis will serve to augment the happiness and prosperity of the people thereof. For this reason our Emperor, having always the welfare of his poor subjects at heart, never interferes in their concerns as well as in those of his close neighbours; but, on the other hand, he directs his dependents to keep friendship with them, and desires that the other Chiefs of the neighbouring countries should maintain sincere friendship with Russia.

I offer my prayers to God for your health, in order that by your wisdom and care you may promote the welfare of your poor subjects.

Here follows the name of the Governor of Tashkend in Russian.

Inclosure 6 in No. 3.

Translation of Russian Version of Letter from General von Kaufmann to His Highness the Khan, dated Tashkend, December 20, 1870.

I HAVE read with attention the friendly letter which I received from you at Tashkend on the 29th August of the present year. I have observed with pleasure that the contents of this letter, and the adoption of the resolution to which you have come with regard to your relations towards your neighbours, answer my expectation and naturally merit the approbation of my august master. Believe me, you will never have reason to regret your frank and kindly action towards the Russian power, and with the protector of its territorial neighbours. I hope that time and circumstances will fortify the friendship between us.

It has long been shown by perpetual experiments, that each discord, each act of hostility, never fails to lead nations into misery alone, while, on the contrary, peace and amicable relations between Sovereigns will advance their nations into a most flourishing condition.

For this reason my great master, who is always occupied with the prosperity of his subjects, desires (his servants) to live in peace and in harmony with the neighbouring people, not meddle in their internal affairs, and justly looks for the same frankness and friendly conduct on the part of the reigning princes of other States.

I offer my prayers to God for your health, for your renown, and that He may cause you to guide your people with wisdom.

The Governor-General of Turkestan and Military Commandant of the Military Circle of Turkestan, the General Aide-de-Camp,
(Signed) VON KAUFMANN.

Inclosure 7 in No. 3.

The Viceroy of India to Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

Simla, May 9, 1871.

I HAVE had the pleasure to receive your Highness's friendly letter dated the 14th Zilhijja, 1287 Hijree (corresponding with the 7th March, 1871), with which you have forwarded, for my perusal, a letter which you have received from General Kaufmann, Governor-General of Turkestan, in reply to that which your Highness addressed to his Excellency in July last.

It gives me much pleasure to observe that your reply gave the greatest satisfaction to the Russian Governor-General, and that it has elicited from him a renewed expression of the friendly intentions of his Government.

In compliance with your Highness's request I send you a correct translation of the letter in Persian and English, and I beg to suggest, for your Highness's consideration, that you should send a brief letter to General Kaufmann, expressing in general terms your gratification at his friendly assurances, and the determination of his Government to cultivate harmonious relations with its neighbours.

Inclosure 8 in No. 3.

Mr. Aitchison to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Punjab.

Simla, May 9, 1871.

WITH reference to the subject of your letter, dated the 29th July last, I am directed to forward a khurreeta from his Excellency the Viceroy to the Ameer of Cabul in reply to the one received from His Highness through the officiating Commissioner of Peshawur, and I am to request that the Commissioner of Peshawur may be instructed to forward the khurreeta speedily and with due precaution for ensuring its safe delivery. With it are sent, in accordance with the Ameer's request, English and Persian translations of a letter from General von Kaufmann, in reply to that addressed to him by the Ameer in July last.

2. A copy of the khurreeta, with its inclosures, is herewith forwarded for the information of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

No. 4.

Mr. Merivale to Mr. Hammond.—(Received June 8.)

Sir, India Office, June 6, 1872.

WITH reference to my letter of the 15th June, 1871, I am directed by the Duke of Argyll to forward, for the information of Earl Granville, copy of a despatch from the Government of India, with inclosed correspondence, regarding the letter addressed by General Kaufmann to the Ameer of Cabul in reply to that sent to him by the latter in accordance with the advice of the Viceroy of India.

I am, &c.

(Signed) HERMAN MERIVALE.

Inclosure 1 in No. 4.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

My Lord Duke, Fort William, May 10, 1872.

IN continuation of our despatch dated the 9th May, 1871, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers, from which it will be observed that the Ameer of Cabul has received a reply to the letter which, in accordance with our advice, he addressed to the Russian Governor-General in Turkestan.

2. We have addressed the Ameer, expressing our gratification at the friendly and satisfactory character of General Kaufmann's letter.

We have, &c.

(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
JOHN STRACHEY.
R. TEMPLE.
H W. NORMAN.

Inclosure 2 in No. 4.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Aitchison.

Peshawur, December 11, 1871.

I HAVE the honour to forward in original a letter in Russian and Turki-Persian, addressed by the Russian Governor of Tashkend, &c., to His Highness the Ameer of Cabul, received under cover of the Agent's letter of the 4th December, 1871. The Ameer is anxious to obtain a correct translation in Persian of the Russian letter. The return of the original of a Russian letter forwarded for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy, and for translation under cover of Agent's letter dated the 20th July, 1871, is also solicited.

Inclosure 3 in No. 4.

General von Kaufmann to Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

(Translation.) Tashkend, October 28, 1871.

AFTER presenting your Highness my friendly salutations, and expressing my good wishes, I beg to state that, while I was engaged in making arrangements for the countries which have been placed in my charge by our Great Emperor, your welcome letter, dated 28th Rubee-oos-Sanee, 1288 Hijree, reached Tashkend, whence it was sent to me at Kuldja without delay. I was at the time engaged in settling the affairs of Kuldja, the irregular proceedings of Abool Ala, Sultan of that country, having rendered it necessary for me again to assemble an army and capture his country. From the contents of your letter I have been gratified to learn that it is your wish to maintain friendship with Russia, as well as with other countries under its protection. If your officers would carry out strictly the orders issued by you not to interfere with the neighbouring country of Bokhara, our friendship would daily increase to the great benefit of the neighbouring people.

Such a state of things is entirely in accordance with the well-intentioned views expressed by our Great Emperor, and would also be in harmony with the good understanding that exists between Russia and the English Government. The Ameer of Bokhara, a firm friend and ally of Russia, has sent intelligence that Mirza Mahomed Tahir has been deputed to that place (Bokhara) as an Envoy from Cabul. Among other tidings brought by the said Envoy is the intelligence that dissensions that had hitherto existed among the Afghans have been brought to an end. It has also been ascertained from the Envoy that your eldest son, Mahomed Yakoob Khan, has sought a reconciliation with you. If this is actually the case, I congratulate you on the happy termination of this miserable business. My sympathies have been with you throughout the affair, since the right was on your side; for God favours not a son who rebels against his father, nor do men wish success to such a one.

Inclosure 4 in No. 4.

Mr. Wynne to Mr. Macnabb.

Fort William, May 1, 1872.

IN compliance with the request conveyed in your letter dated the 11th December last, I am directed to forward herewith a correct Persian rendering of the Russian letter therewith transmitted, which was addressed by General von Kaufmann to His Highness the Ameer of Cabul. I also inclose a letter from his Excellency the Viceroy to the address of the Ameer, with which these translations and their originals are to be returned to his Highness.

2. I am also, as requested, to return herewith the Russian original, together with the original of the previous letter sent with your letter dated the 11th March, 1871. It is believed that this is the letter referred to in the last words of your letter under acknowledgment, as no letter sent under cover of a communication from the Cabul Agent, dated the 20th July, 1871, has apparently been received in this Office.

Inclosure 5 in No. 4.

The Viceroy of India to Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

Fort William, May 1, 1872.

I HAVE the pleasure to return herewith the letter in Russian and Turki-Persian which has been addressed to your Highness by the Russian Governor of Tashkend, and at the same time to send you translations of them in Persian and English.

Your Highness will learn from these translations that General Kaufmann's letter contained renewed assurances as to the peaceful intentions of the Russian Government, and confirmed the assurances on this subject which the late Viceroy communicated to your Highness in his letter of the 24th June last year.

It is a source of much gratification to me to know that the letter of your Highness to the address of General Kaufmann has elicited so friendly and satisfactory a reply.

Inclosure 6 in No. 4.

The Ameer of Cabul to General von Kaufmann.

(Translation.) Monday, 28th Rubee-oos-sanee, 1288 Hijree (July 17, 1871).

YOUR friendly letter, dated Tashkend, the 21st December, giving assurances of friendship between the Governments of Russia and Afghanistan, has reached me, and has served to afford me fresh joy and great pleasure. By it I have been more fully assured than before that the officers of the Russian Government cherish no other wish in their heart than to maintain peace and harmony with the neighbours, and not to meddle with their internal affairs, and further, that they will continue for ever to pursue such course. As to my part, I will act in the same way as I have communicated in the reply which I sent to your letter on Thursday, the 15th Rubee-oos-sanee, 1287 Hijree. In respect to the future, it is also my wish that there should occur nothing to weaken the ties of friendship subsisting between the two Governments, as on such friendship depend the peace and tranquillity of the people.

I hope that you will continue to consider me as ever anxious to hear of your welfare.

No. 5.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

My Lord Duke, Simla, June 24, 1872.

WITH reference to the correspondence ending with the telegram from the Viceroy to your Grace, dated the 5th instant, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of documents relative to the proposed return to Cabul of Sekunder Khan.

We have, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
JOHN STRACHEY.
R. TEMPLE.
H. W. NORMAN.
ARTHUR HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.

Inclosure 1 in No. 5.

The Agent at Cabul to Mr. Macnabb.

(Translation.) May 18, 1872.

A murrasilla for his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, together with a murrasilla recently received by the Ameer from the Russian Government, and a copy of the khureeta lately written by His Highness in reply to one formerly received from the Russians, arrived to-day in the Agency Office, and the same are herewith submitted. His Highness desires that the original murrasilla of the Russian Governor may be returned to him after perusal.

Inclosure 2 in No. 5.

Mr. Griffin to Mr. Aitchison.

Simla, May 27, 1872.

I AM desired to forward murrasilla from His Highness the Ameer of Cabul to the address of his Excellency the Viceroy, with one from General Kaufmann to the Ameer received this day from the Commissioner of Peshawur.

Inclosure 3 in No. 5.

The Ameer of Cabul to the Viceroy of India.

(Translation.)
(After compliments.) 10*th Rubbee-ool-awul*, 1289 A.H. (May 19, 1872.)

I HAVE received your Excellency's letter dated the 1st May, together with the letter from the Russian Governor at Tashkend, and translations of the same into Persian and English. Your Excellency remarks that the letter of Kaufmann contains renewed assurances of amity and friendship, and entirely confirms what the late Viceroy said in his letter of the 24th June of last year. This is indeed remarkable, and confirms the truth of the Arabic proverb: "There is no need to prove what is already evident."

It is clear (lit., "more evident than the sun") that no human being can possibly doubt the friendly and intimate relations* that exist between the great English Government and the Government of Afghanistan, or that the English Government has not always at heart an earnest desire for the welfare of, and sympathy for, Afghanistan.

I send for your Excellency's perusal a copy of the reply addressed by me to the Russian Governor at Tashkend.

I received on the 3rd Rubbee-ool-awul a further communication from the Russian Governor, dated in the month of Feebral 1872, A.D., which is inclosed for your Excellency's information.

Trusting your Excellency will always consider me as a friend, and keep me informed of your health, I offer up my best wishes for your Excellency's welfare.

Inclosure 4 in No. 5.

General von Kaufmann to the Ameer of Cabul.

(Translation.)
(After compliments.) Feebral, 1872, A.D.

INFORMATION has lately been received from St Petersburgh to the effect that your nephew, Sekunder Khan, who, as you know, has been for four years in the service of our Emperor, has now quitted the Imperial service, and has left for his native country, travelling through England and Hindoostan. After paying his respects to you, his Sovereign, he hopes to be reinstated in his former position, and to be put in possession of his ancestral possessions; also to have the honour of entering your Highness' service. I make this friendly representation of your nephew's intentions, and trust your Highness will receive him according to his deserts, and regard him with your Royal favour. For three years he has resided at our capital, and rendered honourable service to our Emperor. He will, therefore, doubtless serve your Highness with the same devotion.

* Literally, "the oneness for good and evil."

Actuated by feelings of friendship, I informed your Highness by letter, four months ago, of the capture by the Russian army of the town and dependencies of Kuldja, but have as yet received no reply. I fear, therefore, that from some cause or other my letter may not have reached you.

Trusting you will favour me with accounts of your welfare, I commend you to the protection of God.

The Russian original of this is in my handwriting.

Inclosure 5 in No. 5.

The Ameer of Cabul to General von Kaufmann.

(Translation.)

(After compliments.) 10*th Rubbee-ool-awul*, 1289 A.H.

YOUR friendly letter, dated the 28th October, 1871, which was a reply to mine of the 28th Rubbee-oos-sanee, 1288 A.H., has duly reached me, and afforded me much gratification. It has given me great pleasure to hear of the victories of the Russian arms at Kuldja, intelligence of which was communicated in your friendly letter.

Your congratulations regarding the reconciliation of Mahomed Yakoob afford a proof of the friendly feeling that exists between the two Governments.

As regards the preservation of the Bokhara boundary, please God there will be no deviation from the arrangements mentioned in the friendly letter* dated the 15th Rubbee-oos-sanee, 1288 A.H. The situation there is still the same.

Inclosure 6 in No. 5.

The Viceroy of India to Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

Simla, June 13, 1872.

I HAVE received your friendly letter dated the 19th May, 1872, forwarding a communication in Persian and Russian from General von Kaufmann, Governor of the Russian Province of Turkestan, in which he informs your Highness of the desire of your sister's son, Mahomed Sekunder Khan, to return to Afghanistan.

It is already known to your Highness that Mahomed Sekunder Khan has been for some little time in London, awaiting permission to return to his native country. Your Highness' views with respect to the Sirdar's return have been made known to me by the British Agent at Cabul. I have accordingly requested the Government of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen to make the inquiries you suggested. On receipt of further information, I will again communicate with your Highness on the subject.

My friend, the expressions in your letter, which show your Highness' appreciation of the interest which Her Majesty's Government takes in the welfare of Afghanistan, have caused me sincere gratification. As Her Majesty's Representative in this country, it will be my continued and pleasing duty to manifest that interest in the way which may best conduce to your Highness' prosperity, and to that of the country over which you rule.

I return the letter from General Kaufmann, and thank you for having sent it for my perusal.

I beg to express the high consideration I entertain for your Highness.

---

* This may mean "my letter," or "your letter,"

Inclosure 7 in No. 5.

Mr. Wynne to Mr. Griffin.

Simla, June 13, 1872.

I AM desired to inclose a letter from his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General to Ameer Shere Ali, in reply to that which was forwarded with your communication dated the 27th May, 1872, and to request that instructions may be issued for its delivery through the British Agent at Cabul.

2. Copy of the letter, and translation of the Ameer's murrasilla and of its inclosures, are herewith sent for the information of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

No. 6.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

(Secret.)

My Lord Duke, Simla, August 5, 1872.

IN continuation of our despatch dated 8th July, 1872, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We have, &c.

(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
JOHN STRACHEY.
R. TEMPLE.
H. W. NORMAN.
ARTHUR HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.

Inclosure in No. 6.

Translation of a Murrasila from the Ameer to the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan at Tashkend, dated 13th Jamadi-ool-Awul, 1289 H. (July 20, 1872).

(After titles, compliments, &c.)

YOUR kind despatch of "Febral" 1872, every letter and word of which expressed tokens or desire for increasing and confirming the sincere friendship existing between us, reached me in a happy and gratifying time on 3rd "Rabi-ool-Sanee" (corresponding to the 10th June, 1872), and tended to the confirmation of the ties of our mutual friendship and unity. I mastered the contents of the few lines of your letter, inviting me to send a reply to your friendly communication of 28th October, 1871, and giving some information regarding Sirdar Sekunder Khan, and have to state that the reply to your "murrasila" in question was forwarded to you some days before the receipt of your despatch of Febral 1872, i.e., on 1st Rabee-ool-Awul (corresponding to May 1872), I conclude that you must have received it ere this. I hope that you will always consider me desirous of the firmness of friendly relations and cordiality.

No. 7.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

(Secret.)

My Lord Duke, Simla, September 9, 1872.

IN continuation of our Secret despatch dated 10th May last, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers from which it will be perceived that a further communication has been addressed to the Ameer of Cabul by the Russian Governor of Turkestan.

2. We would take this opportunity of inviting your Grace's attention to our recent despatch dated the 5th April last, on the subject of the boundary between Afghanistan and Bokhara. We hope that Her Majesty's Government may soon be able to arrive at a satisfactory understanding with Russia on that question. As long as the boundary remains undefined, we are of opinion that there will be more or less risk of misunderstanding and anxiety between the Ameer and his neighbours.

We have, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
JOHN STRACHEY.
R. TEMPLE.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.

Inclosure 1 in No. 7.

Mr. Griffin to Mr. Aitchison.

Simla, July 31, 1872

I AM directed to forward copy of a letter, dated 25th July, from the Commissioner of Peshawur, with translation of a letter received from the British Agent in Cabul, together with an original letter from the Russian Governor of Turkestan, and a careful translation of the Persian version of the same prepared in this Office.

2. I am also to forward copy of two letters, dated 25th instant, from the Commissioner of Peshawur, covering translation of the murrasilla, dated 20th instant, from the Ameer of Cabul to the Governor of Russian Turkestan.

Inclosure 2 in No. 7.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Griffin.

Peshawur, July 25, 1872.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a translation of a letter received this day from the Agent at Cabul, detailing the observations of the Ameer on receipt of a communication from the Russian Governor at Turkestan, which His Highness has forwarded in original for the perusal of the Supreme Government, and of the Russian version of which he is desirous of obtaining an accurate Persian translation.

2. I inclose a copy of the translation of the Agent's letter for transmission to the Foreign Secretary, along with General von Kaufmann's letter, as nothing would be gained by sending the Agent's letter without its inclosure direct to the Foreign Secretary.

3. There is also another appendix to the Agent's letter, viz., copy of the answer of the Ameer to the last communication of the Russian Government in intercession for Sirdar Sekunder Khan.

Inclosure 3 in No. 7.

Translation of a Letter from Atta Mahomed Khan, Vakeel at Cabul, dated July 20, 1872.

" YESTERDAY a murrasilla from the Russian Governor in Turkestan was received by the Ameer in answer to His Highness' communication mentioned in my petition of 18th May, 1872. I append the original murrasila to this letter. The Cabul Government will then send an answer to it, when it has been perused by the British Government and returned with an accurate translation into Persian. In the meantime His Highness the Ameer has read the murrasilla, and caused a copy to be taken of it, which he has sent to Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, Ruler of Turkestan, with strict injunctions to keep a good look-out along his frontier, and take the greatest care in managing all affairs along the Bokhara border, so as not to give an opening for any ground of complaint on the part of any foreign State. His Highness in private said that he gathered from this murrasila that it was the wish of the Russian authorities to establish a regular and frequent correspondence with the Cabul Government. What demands careful thought in their inconsiderate language is, that notwithstanding that the Russian Government must have thoroughly apprehended and been convinced that the weal or woe of the Afghan State is entirely bound up in and associated with that of the British Government, still when writing about boundaries they make use of this unguarded expression, which may indicate God knows what intentions in their minds, viz., "for as much as the slightest alteration in intention leads to displeasure between parties, it destroys entirely the harmony which may exist between them."

Further, when the Governor of Turkestan writes in his letter that the instructions of his Sovereign are to avoid all interference with or annoyance to his neighbours, it is a cause of astonishment that the Russian interpretation of harmony with neighbours is a strange one, for in but a few years they have extended their possessions from the foot of the throne of Russia to the borders of Bokhara, and now style the Afghan State "their neighbours," oblivious of the fact that Bokhara and Khiva intervene.

If (which may God forfend) the country of Bokhara and Khiva becomes theirs, and their frontier is extended without the intervention of any buffer ("pardah") to the limits of Afghanistan, which may indeed be truly styled the frontier of Hindustan, God only knows what line of policy or demeanour they will adopt towards Afghanistan, and what troubles may be in store for the Afghan and English Governments.

On these considerations he was induced to hope that when the British Government has read and understood the drift of this murrasila, they may bestow even more serious attention than they have hitherto done on the establishing and maintenance of the boundaries of Afghanistan.

This day His Highness the Ameer wrote the answer to the letter of the Russian Governor forwarded to the English Government with his murrasilla of the 18th May, 1872, in which the Russian Governor intercedes for Sirdar Sekunder Khan, sister's son of the Ameer, now in London. The answer has been sent to Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, to be forwarded to its destination by the hand of some of his dependents, according to custom. I append a copy of it.

Inclosure 4 in No. 7.

The Governor of Turkestan to the Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

AFTER wishing the friendship and welfare of your Highness.

Your letter dated the 1st of Rubee-ul-Awul, 1289 (corresponding to the 28th April, 1872, Russian year) having been received, I have been happy to become acquainted with your good health. I have derived boundless delight from the receipt of your letter. The advantages of the interchange of letters are first, that the circumstance argues existence of mutual good feeling; next, it becomes the cause of strengthening reciprocal friendship, and the respective subjects of both parties becoming comfortable, it indicates the preservation of reciprocal engagements up to date.

Your Highness has mentioned the lands forming the boundary between yourself and Bokhara. This matter was placed and confirmed on its former footing, on receipt of your former letter. God willing, it is hoped that no change will take place in this. I trust that the old status will be maintained in perpetuity, for the slightest changes causing displeasure to both parties, destroys manifestly the comforts of both.

And let it not be concealed that before the receipt of your reply to my letter, about four months ago, Pod Folkonik Sekunder Khan, your "jen," came from Petersburgh really with the intention of going to see you. I gave a letter to him, and have sent it by the hand of Mahamud Jan, a servant of his, to you. It is hoped that he has delivered it.

Regarding you as my friend and neighbour, I inform you that the people in the territories entrusted to my charge by the great Imperateur, my Sovereign, are all comfortable. At the present time perfect friendship and amity exists between ourselves and all our neighbours. From the bottom of my heart, and in perfect sincerity, I desire that God may preserve you also in comfort, and I sincerely believe you also to be my friend.

Your wisdom and sagacity will doubtless have taught you by the study of history, that the Great God wishes that King to rule who, preserving his subjects in comfort, maintains friendship with his neighbours.

May God preserve you in health and safety, during years innumerable, and believe me that I am anxious to see friendship maintained between us.

The original letter was signed at Tashkend on the 16th June (1872, Russian year) and 23rd of Rubee-oos-Sanee, 1289 of the Mahommedan era, by the Gubernator of Turkestan, General Adjutant von Kaufmann, and the signature is witnessed by me—Islateki Savepuk General Istrode.

Inclosure 5 in No. 7.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Griffin.

Peshawur, July 25, 1872.

FORWARDS, for the information of Punjab Government, translation of murrasilla, dated 20th July, 1872, from the Ameer of Cabul to the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan.

Inclosure 6 in No. 7.

Translation of Murrasila, dated 13th Jamadiul-awul, 1289 H. (July 20, 1872), from the Ameer to the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan at Tashkend.

(After titles, compliments, &c.)

AFTER titles, compliments, &c., your kind despatch of Febral 1872, every letter and word of which expressed tokens, a desire for increasing and confirming the sincere friendship existing between us, reached me in a happy and gratifying time on 3rd Rubee-ul-sanee (corresponding to the 10th June, 1872), and tended to the confirmation of the ties of our mutual friendship and unity.

I mastered the contents of the few lines of your letter, inviting me to send a reply to your friendly communication of 28th October, 1871, and giving some information regarding Sirdar Sekunder Khan, and have to state that the reply to your murrasilla in question was forwarded to you some days before the receipt of your despatch of Febral, 1872, i.e., on 1st Rubee-ul-awul (corresponding to the 9th May, 1872). I conclude that you must have received it ere this. I hope that you will always consider me desirous of the firmness of friendly relations and cordiality.

Inclosure 7 in No. 7.

The Viceroy of India to the Ameer of Cabul.

Simla, September 7, 1872.

I HAVE received through my Agent at Cabul the original letter in Persian and Russian, dated 23rd Rubee-oos-sanee, 1289 A. H., addressed by General von Kaufmann to your Highness. I have also been favoured by the perusal of your Highness' reply to the previous communication of the Russian Governor. For these further tokens of your Highness' courtesy and friendship I beg to express my acknowledgments.

With regard to the reply which it would seem advisable to return to General Kaufmann's letter, I would suggest, for your Highness' consideration, that you should simply acknowledge its receipt with an expression of thanks for the friendly sentiments which it contains. Your Highness might add that you have already, in your letter dated 15th Rubee-oos-sanee, 1287 A. H., and subsequent communications, explained the peaceful policy to which it is your Highness' intention to adhere, and that your Highness confidently looks to General Kaufmann for the maintenance of the same friendly relations on his part, and for the fulfilment of the repeated assurances with regard to Afghanistan which have been given by His Imperial Majesty the Czar and the high officers of the Russian Government to the Government of Her Majesty the Queen of England.

My friend! since the date of my lamented predecessor's letter to your address of the 24th June, 1870, I have no reason to believe that any change has taken place in the views and policy of the Russian Government. On the contrary, I confidently believe that the assurances given by the Russian Government, of which your Highness was informed in that letter, will be strictly and faithfully adhered to.

The original letter from General Kaufmann is herewith returned, and I hope by an early opportunity to forward to your Highness an accurate translation into Persian of the Russian version of that letter.

Inclosure 8 in No. 7.

Mr. Wynne to Mr. Griffin.

Simla, September 7, 1872.

I AM to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated 31st July last, giving cover to an original letter received through the Commissioner of Peshawur from the Russian Governor of Turkestan to the address of His Highness the Ameer of Cabul, together with other inclosures.

2. A khureeta from His Excellency the Viceroy to the address of the Ameer is herewith inclosed, and I am to request that it may be forwarded to the Commissioner of Peshawur for early transmission to His Highness. A copy of the khureeta is forwarded for the information of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

No. 8.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

My Lord Duke, Simla, October 10, 1872.

IN continuation of our despatch, dated the 9th September last, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers regarding two Russian and Persian letters written by the Russian authorities at Tashkend to the Ameer of Cabul and his local Governor in Afghan Turkestan, which have created some anxiety in the mind of His Highness.

We have, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
JOHN STRACHEY.
R. TEMPLE.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.

Inclosure 1 in No. 8.

Mr. Macnabb to Mr. Aitchison.

Peshawur, September 12, 1872.

SUBMITS copy of translation of a letter dated 5th instant from the British Agent at Cabul, together with two inclosures therein mentioned.

Inclosure 2 in No. 8.

The British Agent at Cabul to Mr. Macnabb.

(Translation.) September 5, 1872.

THE two letters mentioned in my letter of 2nd instant, as having been received from the Russian authorities at Tashkend,—one to the address of the Ameer, and the other to the address of Naib Mahommed Alum Khan, Governor of Turkestan, and received by me from His Highness the Ameer,—are forwarded herewith in original, and it is hoped that you will inspect them. The Durbar officials, after perusing both papers, remarked as follows in a private conference:—

"It is mentioned in both these despatches that the Russians are satisfied with the friendly relations hitherto maintained towards them by the Government of Afghanistan; that they consider it their pleasing duty to bring this to the notice of their Emperor; and that they desire that the friendly relations existing between them and the Afghan Government should become more firm and consolidated every day. Under these circumstances, it is a matter of anxiety what ultimate consequences these expressions point to, what will be the purport of the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan's communications to this Government on his return from St. Petersburgh, and what designs the Russian Government in reality entertains as regards the Afghan State. Notwithstanding that the Russian authorities are well aware that the Government of Afghanistan is united with the British Government, they openly write, unsolicited, letters for the promotion of their friendship with Afghanistan, and do not relax in the frequency of their communications on the subject, and now they have commenced to send letters to the Governor of Balkh also.

Inclosure 3 in No. 8.

The Governor-General of Tashkend to the Ameer of Cabul.

(Translation.) 7th Jumadi-oos-sanee, 1298 H. (August 13, 1872.)

BEFORE my leaving the country of Tashkend, your Highness' welcome and friendly letter dated 14th* Jumadi-ool-awul, 1289 H., reached me, and the receipt of this, your exalted communication, gave me great satisfaction. I am now ready to start for St. Petersburgh for the purpose of communicating to my Imperial master the state of affairs of the countries which His Imperial Majesty has entrusted to me, and also the circumstances connected with those territories of the Khans which are situated in the neighbourhood of our possessions. I do not wish that the bearer of your letter should go away without a letter in answer to yours. Whatever I wrote to say in my former letter I repeat in my present communication, that I cherish no other wish in my heart than that for the tranquillity and repose of my neighbours, inasmuch as such desire accords with the disposition of my Emperor. I am more satisfied because your Highness agrees to follow the same course. I consider it my pleasant duty to bring this commendable intention of your Highness to my Imperial master.

I hope that your Highness will never afterwards allow any change to take place in this laudable course. May God grant you health and happiness! It is my constant prayer to the Almighty that all His creatures may live in peace and tranquillity.

Inclosure 4 in No. 8.

Translation of a Letter from† to Mahomed Ali Khan,‡ dated Tashkend, the 9th Jumadi-oos-sanee, 1289 H. (August 15, 1872.)

AFTER expressions of friendship I beg to state that Ahmed Naib, whom you deputed, having left Balkh, arrived in the country of Tashkend on the 15th, and delivered to the Governor-General and the Chief Officer of Turkestan the letter from Ameer Shere Ali Khan, intimating his intention to maintain friendly relations with all. The Governor-General having been gratified with the receipt of the above letter, wrote, agreeably to the requirements of time, a hasty reply, made it over to the said Ahmed Naib, and sent him to you to Balkh. The Governor-General hopes that, on the arrival of the letter, you will forward it to the Ameer of Cabul. It is now three days since the Governor-General has started from this place for St. Petersburgh for the purpose of paying a visit to the Great Emperor. He has commanded me to communicate to you his prayer that the grace of God may be with you, and to request that you will, without loss of time, forward the above letter to the Ameer. Further, it is the wish of the Governor-General that the friendly relations subsisting between the Russians and the Afghans should become more firm and consolidated daily, but the maintenance of such friendly relations depends on the peace and tranquillity of the neighbouring countries. Mahomed Ali Khan, you are a respectable servant of the Ameer, and you are carrying out his intention. May you, please God, continue to follow this laudable course.

It is my prayer to the Almighty that you may continue to enjoy health and happiness.

---

* July 21, 1872.
† No name mentioned.
‡ A mistake for Mahomed Alum Khan.

Inclosure 5 in No. 8.

Mr. Aitchison to Mr. Griffin.

Simla, September 30, 1872.

I AM directed to forward, for the purpose of their being returned to the British Agent at Cabul, the accompanying Russian and Persian letters received under a docket from the Commissioner at Peshawur, dated the 12th September, 1872.

2. Should His Highness the Ameer allude to these letters, and manifest the apprehensions which his courtiers entertain, the Agent should be instructed to state that the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council sees in them no ground whatever for apprehension, but rather additional reason for believing that the Russian authorities desire to maintain none of the relations but those of amity with the Government of Afghanistan.

COPY forwarded to the Commissioner of Peshawur for information with reference to his Memorandum dated the 12th instant.

No. 9.

Mr. Merivale to Mr. Hammond.—(Received January 31.)

Sir, India Office, January 30, 1873.

I AM directed by the Duke of Argyll to forward, for the information of Earl Granville, copy of a despatch from the Government of India, dated the 20th December, 1872, with inclosed copies of Cabul Diaries; and I am to request that, in laying these papers before his Lordship, you will suggest to him the expediency of forwarding a copy to Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, a course which his Lordship may possibly consider advisable with reference to this as well as to future correspondence relating to Central Asia.

I am, &c.
(Signed) HERMAN MERIVALE.

Inclosure 1 in No. 9.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

My Lord Duke, Fort William, December 20, 1872.

IN continuation of our despatch, dated the 11th October, 1872, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of a letter relative to the affairs of Afghanistan.

We are, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
B. H. ELLIS.
H. W. NORMAN.
A. HOBHOUSE,
E. C. BAYLEY.

Inclosure 2 in No. 9.

Translation of a Letter from the Correspondent at Tashkoorghan to the Agent at Cabul, dated 22*nd Rajab* (26*th September*, 1872).

I WROTE to you before that Sirdar Abdool Rahman Khan had gone to Orenburg. A Lahanee lately arrived at Tashkoorghan from Samarcand on account of the death of his brother at Tashkoorghan. He says that when the Sirdar had gone three stages from Tashkend another Governor-General came from Russia to relieve the former Goovernatt, and questioned the Sirdar for what purpose he had intended to go to Orenburg. The Sirdar said that he would petition the Emperor that he had not come to his dominions to seek subsistence, or to ask for the grant of any troops, but that he desires that His Imperial Majesty should grant him ten light guns and four lakhs of zangas for expenses as far as the Oxus, as he hopes that, by the grace of God, Afghanistan would fall into his possession. Also, that if the Emperor does not accept his petition, he would request him to allow him to proceed to any direction he should please. The new Governor-General told him to return to Samarcand, and said that he would undertake to obtain a reply for him from the Emperor in forty days regarding the grant of the above-mentioned guns and the money, or for permission to proceed to any place he wishes to go. The Sirdar has, therefore, returned to Samarcand pending the receipt of the above reply.

Inclosure 3 in No. 9.

The Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawur Division, to Mr. Aitchison.

Peshawur, November 18, 1872.

SUBMITS, for information of the Supreme Government, translation of Cabul Diary, from the 8th to the 11th November, 1872, inclusive, together with its annexures.

Inclosure 4 in No. 9.

Extract from Cabul Diary from the 8th to the 11th November, 1872, inclusive.

THE messenger sent by Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan, whose apprehension at Cabul was mentioned in the Cabul Diary of the 7th instant, on being rigorously examined represented as follows:—

"I recollect that three guns, which could be drawn by mules, were cast in the iron factory at Balkh. Of these two were missed from the said factory, and I saw them concealed at Samarcand in the house of Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan. Some of the Meers of Turkestan send rebellious letters from Balkh to the Sirdar. I do not know their names. I have brought no letter from him, except that for Azimudin Khan, Commandant of the Jezailchees in Indrah."

After hearing these representations, the Ameer remarked that, in forwarding a reply to the murrasilla dated the 1st August, 1872, or the 9th Jamadiul Sani, or the 14th August, 1872, from the Russian Governor-General at Tashkend to the address of Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, Governor of Turkestan, which was received at Cabul on the 2nd September, 1872, and to which no reply has yet been sent, the Naib should fully mention the above-described hostile conduct of Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan, and that, after transmitting the original letter from the Sirdar to the address of Azimudin Khan to the Russian Governor-General, he should request him to hold the Sirdar answerable for the submission of such communications. His Highness further observed that a copy of the letter received by Azimudin Khan from the Sirdar, together with a copy of the murrasilla, which will be forwarded to the Officiating Russian Governor-General, on the part of Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, should be submitted to the British Government, with a view to their being forwarded to the Russian Government through the British Ambassador, requesting them to adopt suitable measures regarding the hostile behaviour of the Sirdar.

A murrasilla has therefore been sent to Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, to the address of the Russian Governor-General at Tashkend, together with the original letter received from Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan. The Naib will forward them in the usual manner, by hand of one of his agents, to Tashkend, after attaching his seal to the murrasilla. Copies of both of these papers are inclosed by desire of the Ameer. His Highness ordered Mahomed Umar Khan, Baghban Bashi, and Mirza Abdul Haah Khan, trusted agents of Naib Mahomed Alum Khan, to proceed quickly to Turkestan, and wrote to the Naib that he should endeavour as far as possible to arrange for the security of his border, and transfer any of the men of the Hajdahuahri cavalry who may be considered unfit for service in Turkestan, or may be suspected of raising disturbances, &c.

Inclosure 5 in No. 9.

Abstract Translation of a Letter (no date) from Naib Mahomed Alum Khan to the Russian Governor-General at Tashkend.

YOUR predecessor's letter of the 9th Jamadiul-Sani to my address, together with a murrasilla to the address of His Highness the Ameer, reached me in a happy time and gratified me exceedingly. The murrassilla to the address of the Ameer was submitted in the usual manner to His Highness quickly. In accordance with the instructions of the Ameer, I beg to state that, as regards the observance of peace and tranquillity of the two Kingdoms, the system which I have hitherto observed will be upheld in future also, but a surprising event has recently occurred. Notwithstanding that Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan is so distant from our territory as Samarcand, he desires to shake the ties of friendship existing between us, and to disturb the peace enjoyed by the people. He has lately sent a letter in an unbecoming style to Azimudin Khan, one of my adherents, and I submit the same in original to you, hoping that you will properly restrain him from entertaining such evil designs in future, in order that the friendship existing between us and the tranquillity enjoyed by the people may be confirmed. I beg to inform you that, merely on account of the friendship existing between the Ameer and the Russian Government, His Highness did not allow Meer Sarrah Beg Khan, ex-Governor of Kulab, to remain near Turkestan or Bokhara border, but kept him at Cabul. If, in like manner, Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan be kept in a place very far from Afghanistan border, it will tend to the promotion of the friendship existing between you and our Government. To this letter his Excellency has applied his Yakrukha seal, which is always held by his Mustowfee, Abdul Rahman Khan, Toki. The Dorokha seal is used by the Sirdar himself. The bearer of the letter, by name Ahmed, a man with squinting eyes and an impediment in speaking, says that it has been written by Mirza Abdul Majid, son of Mirza Ramsan, resident of Cabul, at present at Samarcand, of tall stature, dark complexion, long beard, and large eyes.

Inclosure 6 in No. 9.

Abstract Translation of a Letter (no date) from Sirdar Rahman Khan to Azimudin Khan.

AS I have been informed that you bear friendship and affection for me, I have taken the opportunity of sending this letter to you. If you desire to propagate the Mahommedan religion, I hope you will gallantly join in partizanship with me, along with your friends, and propagate the Prophet's faith. The world is not always in one condition. You should exert yourself in a manly manner in the propagation of our religion, because Shere Ali Khan is a servant of the English, and will ruin you, the Mahommedans. May I not be held answerable by God or the Prophet? If you exert zealously you will gain both, this world and eternity; you will gain nothing by doing service to Shere Ali Khan; if you render yourself useful to me for a few days you will be exalted in both worlds.

No. 10.

Sir J. Kaye to Mr. Hammond.—(Received August 14.)

Sir, India Office, August 14, 1873.

I AM directed by the Duke of Argyll to forward, for submission of Earl Granville, copy of a despatch from the Government of India, Secret, dated the 30th June, 1873, containing a résumé of the past, and suggestions for the future policy of the British Government as regards Central Asia. I am to request that, in laying these papers before his Lordship, you will invite his special attention to the suggestion contained in paragraph 21, to the effect that a copy of the despatch now forwarded should be communicated to the Russian Government.

I am, &c.
(Signed) J. WM. KAYE.

Inclosure in No. 10.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll, No. 60, Secret, Simla, June 30, 1873.

[See Papers published by India Office, No. 22, p. 103.]

No. 11.

Sir J. W. Kaye to Mr. Hammond.—(Received August 14.)

Sir, India Office, August 14, 1873.

I AM directed by the Duke of Argyll to forward, for submission to Earl Granville, copy of a despatch from the Government of India, dated the 30th June, 1873, suggesting that advantage should be taken of the good understanding that at present exists between the British and Russian Governments to arrive at a definition of the northern and western boundaries of Yarkand. I am to state that his Grace is of opinion that it would be advisable, in the first instance, that Lord A. Loftus should be instructed (should Earl Granville concur) to take an opportunity, in the course of conversation, to touch upon the subject with the view of eliciting an expression of opinion as to the spirit in which such a proposal would be viewed by the Cabinet at St. Petersburgh.

I am, &c.

(Signed) J. WM. KAYE.

Inclosure in No. 11.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Duke of Argyll.

(Secret.)

My Lord Duke, Simla, June 30, 1873.

IN our Secret despatch of this date we have communicated our views as to the general policy agreed upon between the Governments of England and Russia in regard to their dealings with the countries which lie between their respective possessions in the East, and in paragraph 9 of that despatch we have expressed our satisfaction at the acceptance by the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh of the views of Her Majesty's Government upon the question of the boundaries of Afghanistan.

2. The line of the Oxus from Khojah Saleh as far as Woods (Victoria) Lake has now been recognized as the northern frontier of the Ameer's possessions.

3. In connection with this subject, we desire to invite your Grace's attention to a representation made by the Yarkand Envoy to his Excellency the Viceroy, regarding the boundaries of Yarkand. From the memorandum of conversation, under cover of our Secret despatch dated 14th March, 1873, your Grace will observe that the Envoy expressed a hope that, in the event of any further discussions between the British Government and Russia with regard to the boundaries of Central Asian States, opportunity would not be lost of obtaining a definition of the boundaries of Yarkand.

4. We were unwilling, during the continuance of the recent negotiations regarding the boundaries of Afghanistan, to give expression to any views which would have the effect of introducing a fresh element into that discussion. Now, however, that those negotiations have been carried to a satisfactory conclusion, we feel ourselves at liberty to represent to Her Majesty's Government the expediency of taking advantage of the good understanding that exists at present between the two Governments to arrive at a definition of the northern and western boundaries of Yarkand. Such a definition we consider would be advantageous to the peace and tranquillity of Central Asia, and would complete the good work which has been so far carried out with the assistance of the Russian Government.

5. Mr. Forsyth will be instructed to collect, during his approaching mission to Yarkand, the fullest possible geographical information regarding the countries now under the rule of the Ataligh Ghazee.

We have, &c.
(Signed) NORTHBROOK.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
R. TEMPLE.
B. H. ELLIS.
H. W. NORMAN.
ARTHUR HOBHOUSE.
E. C. BAYLEY.

No. 12.

Mr. Hammond to Sir J. W. Kaye.

Sir, Foreign Office, August 25, 1873.

I HAVE laid before Lord Granville your letters of the 14th instant, one inclosing a despatch from the Government of India of the 30th June, reviewing the late negotiations with Russia respecting the boundaries of Afghanistan; the other, a despatch of the same date, suggesting that a proposal should be made to Russia with the view of defining the northern and western boundary of Yarkand; and I am to request that you will state to the Duke of Argyll that Lord Granville would not think it desirable to communicate to the Russian Government, as suggested by the Indian Government, a copy of the former despatch, and so convey to it indirectly an intimation that any aggression by it on Afghanistan would be resisted by Great Britain with force of arms; and his Lordship would not think it expedient to run the risk of raising, without absolute and pressing necessity at the present moment, any question with Russia respecting the frontiers of Yarkand, as suggested in the latter despatch.

Lord Granville, however, desires that the opinions expressed in this letter may be considered simply as having reference to the propriety of present action in either of the points referred to, and not as indicating any desire or tendency to modify the policy which it has been agreed upon to pursue in Central Asia generally, and with respect to Afghanistan in particular.

I am, &c.
(Signed) E. HAMMOND.

CENTRAL ASIA. No. 1 (1878).

CORRESPONDENCE respecting Central Asia.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. 1878.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY HARRISON AND SONS.

CENTRAL ASIA. No. 2 (1878).

FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE

RESPECTING

CENTRAL ASIA.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty.
1878.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY HARRISON AND SONS.

[C.—2188.] Price 4d.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
1	India Office	Sept. 30, 1878	Despatch from Government of India. Further particulars respecting Russian Mission to Cabul ..	1
2	Lord A. Loftus.. ..	27,	Conversation with Prince Gortchacow at Baden. His friendly assurances respecting Afghanistan ..	7
3	Mr. R. Thomson .. (Telegraphic)	Oct. 14,	Retreat of Russian expedition from Khoja Kala. General Llamakin's return to Chikislar	8
4	India Office	18,	Despatch from Government of India. Particulars as to reception of Russian Mission at Cabul ..	8
5	Lord A. Loftus.. ..	11,	Order by Governor-General of Turkestan for demobilization of reserves	11
6	„ „ ..	16,	Account in "Russki Mir" of Russian Mission to Cabul, and arrival of Afghan Mission at Tashkend.	11
7	„ „ ..	21,	Turkestan reserves, though demobilized, are retained and employed in making roads to the Oxus ..	12
8	„ „ ..	22,	Accounts of Russian Mission to Cabul, and of Russian expeditions	13
9	Mr. R. Thomson .. (Telegraphic)	29,	General Llamakin's movements	15
10	Lord A. Loftus	Nov. 3,	Account in Russian newspaper of march of the expedition to Djam	16
11	Mr. R. Thomson .. (Telegraphic)	11,	Return of Russian troops to Krasnovodsk. General Llamakin gone to Tiflis	17
12	India Office	12,	Correspondence with Viceroy as to date of arrival of Russian Mission at Cabul	17
13	Mr. R. Thomson ..	Sept. 26,	Reported halt of General Llamakin near Karee Kala	18
14	Lord A. Loftus.. ..	Nov. 20,	Letters published in "Moscow Gazette" describing expedition from Krasnovodsk to Kizil Arvat ..	18
15	„ „ ..	28,	Account published in "Golos" of reception of Russian Mission at Cabul	23
16	„ „ ..	28,	Return of General Llamakin's column to Chikislar ..	27

Further Correspondence respecting Central Asia.

No. 1.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received October 2.)

My Lord, India Office, September 30, 1878.

I AM directed by Viscount Cranbrook to forward herewith, to be laid before Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copies of further letters from the Government of India, with inclosed News Reports from Afghanistan and adjacent countries.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

Inclosure 1 in No. 1.

The Governor-General of India in Council to Viscount Cranbrook.

My Lord, Simla, August 26, 1878.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of News Reports received through the Government of the Punjab.

We have, &c.
(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.
W. STOKES.
A. R. THOMPSON.
R. STRACHEY.
S. J. BROWNE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 1.

News-letter from the Government Agent at Peshawur, dated August 3, 1878.

Statement made by ——— ———.

(Confidential.)

A EUROPEAN Envoy of the Russian Government, attended by two Musahibs (Aides-de-camp) and forty-five attendants, arrived at Cabul on the 21st Rajab (22nd July, 1878), and was received by Sirdar Muhammad Ibrahim Khan, son of the Ameer, who went out with General Daud Shah and two troops of cavalry. The Envoy was lodged in the State garden in Balahisar, and Mustaufi Habibulla Khan and Sirdar Ibrahim Khan are appointed to look after his comforts. The Envoy had an audience with the Ameer the following day, and laid before him presents consisting of articles of Russian manufacture—arms, a musical box, and a watch, which were accepted. It was learnt at the place of Sirdar Wali Muhammad Khan that the Envoy had been entrusted by his Government with certain proposals for the execution of a Treaty between Russia and Afghanistan.

The Envoy stated before the Ameer that friendly relations existed between the Russian Government and His Highness for some time past, and that the Russian authorities desired that this friendship should be strengthened and perpetuated by the execution of a Treaty of Amity.

The Ameer is said to have remarked in reply that the matter required consideration and consultation with his Ministers and the Grandees of his State, and that a proper reply would be given to the proposal after this had been done.

After this conversation the audience broke up, and the Envoy returned to his lodging.

It is rumoured in Cabul that the object of the Envoy in coming to the Ameer's capital is to try to induce His Highness to break off all friendly relations with the British Government, and to contract an alliance with Russia. The Ministers of the Ameer's Court are generally of opinion that His Highness will not enter into any engagement with Russia which will impose a condition of Russian interference with his country. It is, moreover, said that the Ameer asserts that he would like an English officer of excellence, learning, and acquainted with the affairs of Afghanistan, to come to Cabul for a few days in the capacity of Envoy from the British Government, with whom he may personally discuss the proceedings which passed between him and the English Government within the last few years, when he would acknowledge, without any grudging, any blame which might be justly thrown on him, but at the same time the British Envoy should acknowledge (or give in) if, with reference to the principles of justice, he is convinced of the soundness of His Highness' objections to the proposals made to him by the British Government.

The Ameer further remarks that he is quite aware that the news-writers in the employ of the two Governments (Cabul and the English) have unnecessarily widened the gulf of imaginary differences. His Highness says that a small territory, of which he is the Ruler, lies between the dominions of two Great Powers, and that, as a matter of policy, and in the interests of his country, he will incline himself towards the party whose alliance would be deemed more beneficial to him. It is said that the Chief is now in great anxiety on account of the arrival of the European Russian Envoy at his capital.

An anonymous writer sent a petition to the Ameer from Peshawur, in which he informed the Chief that the British and the Russian Governments were on friendly terms with each other, and agreed in the unity of purpose, that Persia was on the side of Russia, and the Persian territory adjoins the Russian possessions, and that the three Powers desired to somehow take possession of His Highness' dominions and to partition them among themselves. The writer further remarked that it was known that Turkey was first weakened, and that Russia, England, and the other Powers then interfered with the country and encumbered the Turkish exchequer with a large war indemnity; and that, under these circumstances, the Chief should not be lax in the administration of the affairs of his country at such a critical time, but should issue arms and money to the different tribes inhabiting the hills and the plains, and induce them to be ready to engage in a religious war in his behalf.

The petition having been read to the Ameer, His Highness uttered hundreds of abusive words against its writer, and tore it up.

The reporter of this news learnt at Gandmak, while on his way to Peshawur, that Shah Mard Khan, late Hakim of Jellalabad, died at Cabul.

The nobles of Afghanistan are pouring into the capital.

Inclosure 3 in No. 1.

Extract from News-letter from the Government Agent at Peshawur, dated August 4, 1878.

(Confidential.)

A TRADER who has come from Turkestan states that the Russian Envoy, who lately arrived at Cabul, formerly held the office of Hakim of Samarcand. Probably he is General Ibramoff. The man remarks that, in the month of Jamadi-ul-auwal, 1295 (May 1878), the Russian authorities held a Council in private chambers, and proposed that if the Ameer of Cabul displayed a friendly spirit towards them and accepted their proposals the Russian Government will also treat him in a friendly manner; otherwise they would aid Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan, the nephew of the Ameer of Cabul, who is now at Samarcand, in subjugating Maimana, Balkh, and Badakhshan as far as the Hindu-kush mountain, and annex the country thus conquered to the Russian dominions, and then help the Sirdar in taking possession of the rest of Afghanistan. When the Russian Envoy alluded to above started from Tashkend towards Samarcand, Balkh, and Cabul, it was proposed by the Russian authorities to remove Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan from Samar-cand, and to station him either at Cabul or Hisar to frighten the Ameer. The Turkestan trader further stated that when he left Turkestan the Ameer of Bokhara was at Karshi and Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan was at Samarcand. Also, that a detachment of the Russian force was quartered on the road to Karshi to the west of Shaihr-i-Sabz and east of Samarcand. He says that Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan was preparing to start for Cabul and Hisar on the 15th Jamadi-ul-auwal (15th May), and that he was thence to proceed towards Karki and Charjui. The trader left Samarcand on the 15th Jamadi-ul-auwal and arrived at Peshawur viâ Kharoz, Sherabad, Balkh, Cabul, and Jellalabad. He proposes to go to Mecca on a pilgrimage.

——— ———, who arrived at Peshawur on the 4th instant, states that on the evening of the 2nd of the month Faiz Muhammad Khan, Ghilzai, the officer in charge of the fort of Ali Musjid, now at Lohargi, received news from the Ameer of Cabul to the effect that there was a rumour that, by assistance of the Russians, Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan was about to attack Miani and Balkh. The Ameer is said to have intimated to the officer that, if the above report proves to be correct, the troops now stationed at Dhakka will be ordered to proceed to Balkh, and that they will be replaced at Dhakka by irregular infantry, which would be under his command. Faiz Muhammad Khan has, in the meantime, been desired by the Ameer to forward the Elders of the tribes residing in Khyber and Shinwar to Cabul without delay; and he has been told that, as detachments of regular and irregular troops and young men enlisted from among His Highness' subjects are being summoned to Cabul from different parts of the country to impress upon the Russian Envoy the greatness of the Afghanistan Government, he was excused from attendance and was charged with the protection of the frontiers. The Ameer has sent a musket to Faiz Muhammad Khan. The weapon can be fired thirty-six times in a minute. Faiz Muhammad Khan is said to have observed that the coffin of Shah Mard Khan was brought to Jellalabad on the back of an elephant and buried there.

Inclosure 4 in No. 1.

News-letter from a Correspondent at Peshawur, dated August 6, 1878.

(Confidential.)

SAYAD ABDUL KRIM KHAN, Ghazi, arrived at Peshawur at 9 o'clock last night. He was accompanied by twenty-five horsemen, and I and the Tahsildar of the Sub-Collectorate took him to Gorakpuri, near the Tahsil House, where he was lodged; and, as desired by the Deputy-Commissioner, every hospitality was shown him. It being previously arranged, we took Abdul Krim Khan to the house of the Deputy-Commissioner at a quarter past 9 o'clock this morning. He rode in a carriage drawn by two horses, and was accompanied by four of his Uzbak horsemen as orderlies. After the Khan exchanged the usual compliments with the Deputy-Commissioner and took his seat, the officer inquired of him the cause of his leaving Cabul for Peshawur, and he made the following statement in reply:—

"Khokand having taken up arms against the Russians, and Sayad Khudayar Khan and his son Nasir-ud-din Khan having been deposed, and Faulad Khan having been killed, the State officials in Farganah appointed me to the Khanship of Khokand, and I waged a religious war against the Russians, and fought with Generals Iskoboloff and Kalpakoff, &c., at Sukh, Chartgh Indijan, Gulshah, Osh, Takht Suliman and Dasht Alai; Abdul Ghufar Beg, Dewanbegi, Abullah Beg, Umar Beg, Suleman Hudaechi, Kurban Beg Hudaechi, Mahmud Beg, Eshak Akasi, and other grandees were with me in the field. At last, having run short of materials for carrying on the war, I and Abdullah Beg arrived at Cabul, while my other companions stopped at Khunduz by direction of the Ameer of Afghanistan. Umar Beg died at Cabul eighteen months ago. I stopped at Cabul for two years, first in the State garden outside the city and then in a State building in the Khabgah street of the town. I had a large number of men with me; but as the Ameer allowed me an allowance of 400 rupees per mensem only, and the amount was not sufficient for the support of the whole party, the majority of the people wandered away. When I lately heard that a Russian General was coming to Cabul with great pomp in the capacity of an Envoy I did not think it advisable to stop there, as I had fought agains the Russians several times. Moreover, the Ameer seemed to be less favourably inclined towards me since he heard the report that the Envoy was coming to his capital, and, as I heard that the Ameer desired to treat me in a different manner, I left Cabul on the pretence that I desired to go on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and have come under the shadow of the great English Government. I intend to wait upon the Lord Sahib and have a talk with him."

The Deputy-Commissioner heard the above statement of the Khan with great attention. After some other conversation the officer directed, as a matter of generosity that the Khan be allowed a daily allowance of 40 rupees, and 280 rupees were forthwith paid to him on account of one week's allowance. He also informed the Khan that his arrival will be reported to the Lord Sahib, and that if his Honour is pleased to give permission for his waiting upon him he will be sent on.

With reference to the arrival of the Russian Envoy at Cabul, who is said to have reached that place on the 20th or 21st of Rajab (21st or 22nd of July), the Khan stated that the Ambassador did not get there before his leaving the town. He said he reached Peshawur on the twelfth day after leaving Cabul, and that he made halts of a day each at Jellalabad and Lalpura. It appears from this statement that the Khan left Cabul on the 25th July or the 24th Rajab. The difference between the date of the entry into Cabul of the Russian Envoy and the date on which Sayad Abdul Krim Khan left that place is three days. On the Deputy-Commissioner's further questioning the Sayad on the subject, he stated that when he left Cabul preparations were being made there for the reception and hospitable treatment of the Envoy, but that the Envoy's party had not then come in. It is probable that, as the movements of the Envoy between Balkh and Cabul were eagerly watched by correspondents, they reported his arrival there in anticipation, when he was still at a distance of a stage or two from the Ameer's capital. At the same time it may be stated that the Uzbaks are not very expert in remembering the dates on which they leave a place, and so it cannot be said whether the Khan was right in saying that he made up the journey between Cabul and Peshawur in twelve days.

Besides the Deputy-Commissioner and the Khan, the only other persons present at the interview were Sayad Abdul Khan Tarah, Pandit Durga Pershad, the Tahsildar of Peshawur and myself. I acted as interpreter for Turki, Persian, and Urdu, in which the conversation was conducted, and performed the duty thus entrusted to me in a satisfactory manner. The day's proceedings are as reported above.

Inclosure 5 in No. 1.

Extract from Confidential News-letter from a Correspondent at Jellalabad, dated 7th of Shaban, 1295 (August 7, 1878).

(Translation.)

THERE is a rumour that the 3,000 horsemen who came with the Russian Envoy as far as Jam are now quartered at Sherabad. The Ameer has collected (and placed under guard) all the boats available at the several ferries of the Hamun river in his territory. The Russian Envoy has presented the Ameer with 1 lakh of rupees cash and a valuable khillat, which His Highness accepted. The Envoy has been lodged in the Shah garden, and Sirdar Muhammad Ibrahim Khan, son of the Ameer, attends to his comforts. No discussions have yet taken place between the Envoy and the Ameer. Mir Akhor Ahmad Khan, the Hakim of Jellalabad, does not yet believe that a new Russian Envoy has arrived a Cabul.

Inclosure 6 in No. 1.

The Governor-General of India in Council to Viscount Cranbrook.

My Lord, Simla, August 26, 1878.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of Peshawur Confidential Diaries.

We have, &c.

(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.
W. STOKES.
A. R. THOMPSON.
R. STRACHEY.
S. J. BROWNE.

Inclosure 7 in No. .

Extract from Peshawur Confidential Diary, dated August 7, 1878.

THE Russian Envoy entered Cabul on the 22nd July. In a private letter from Cabul it is stated that the Chief of the Mission is General Abramoff, Governor of Samarcand. Openly the people speak of the Envoy as the "General Sahib." A salute of guns was fired in honour of the arrival of the Mission.

A man has passed through Peshawur on his way to Kashmir, to communicate to Sirdar Yahya Khan that the Russian Envoy, at the request of the Persian authorities, made at the solicitation of Sirdar Muhammad Ayub Khan, has spoken to the Ameer in favour of Sirdar Muhammad Yakub Khan, and that it is thought that the Ameer would do something to meet the Envoy's wishes.

A rumour has been reported that a Persian Envoy is expected to reach Cabul. This cannot be considered authentic as yet, though it is by no means improbable.

A number of the Adam Khel Afreedees, chiefly Jowakis, passed through the Khyber on the 31st July on their way to Cabul. Their object is to try and get some rifles from the Ameer, in accordance with the promise he made them in the spring.

The Russian Envoy is said to have full power from the Czar to arrange a Treaty with the Ameer. He has made his proposals, but the counter-proposals of the Ameer have not yet been decided on. Some Russian troops are stationed between Samarcand and Karshi, and it has been stated that the reason for this movement is to watch the proceedings of certain malcontent Begs of Khokand, who are said to be meditating some disturbances in Kolab and in the vicinity of Shahr Sabz.

The Russian Envoy was received in Durbar at 2 P.M. on the 22nd July. He wore a chogha over his uniform. The Ameer, Sirdar Wali Muhammad Khan, Sirdar Ahmed Ali Khan, Sirdar Abdulla Jan, and the Mustaufi were present. The audience lasted until 5 o'clock P.M. It took place in the "Seratcha."

One Haji Sofi Bai of Khokand arrived at Peshawur on the 2nd August, and stated that, when at Jellalabad, he heard of the arrival at Cabul of the Russian Envoy with fifty Russian and fifty Mahommedan (Uzbeg) sowars. He heard that it was the Governor of Samarcand. He reported that 18,000 Russian troops* were encamped three stages from the Oxus, and that roads were under construction. He said there were no preparations for making a bridge of boats on the Oxus. He heard it stated that the Russians contemplated war with the Chinese in Kashgar, and also that they intended asking the Ameer of Cabul to concede Turkestan for Sirdar Abdur Rahman Khan. Abdul Malik, the son of the Ameer of Bokhara, is still at Cabul, although the Ameer (Shere Ali Khan) wished him to go to Bokhara.

News-letter from Cabul reports that on Saturday, the 26th July, the Ameer received the Russian Envoy at a private audience, at which Sirdar Wali Muhammad Khan was the only Minister present. After this a public Durbar followed, at which the Envoy gave the under-mentioned presents:—

To the Ameer, six rifles and a watch.
To the Heir Apparent, a watch and a musical-box.
To Sirdar Wali Muhammad Khan, a watch.
To Sirdar Ahmed Ali Khan, a watch.
To Mustaufi Habibulla Khan, a watch.
To Ismatulla Khan, Ghilzai, a watch.
To Mirza Nabbi Khan (Private Secretary), a watch.

The Heir Apparent was prevented through ill-health from attending the Durbar. He had gone to Ali Ahad for change of air. The Ameer received the presents on his behalf.

It is stated that the Ameer is about to call in all the regiments in the neighbourhood of Cabul, probably in order to have a grand review before the Russian Envoy. The Khans and leading men who draw allowances have been ordered to get ready with their followers, no one to have less than ten men.

---

* He stated he saw some troops here and there, and heard there were altogether the number he has reported. He had been over two months on the road. (Signed) N. C.

Inclosure 8 in No. 1.

Extracts from Peshawur Confidential Diary, dated August 14, 1878.

ONE ——— ———, of Cabul, on his way to Amritsur, gave information that he was present when the Russian Envoy entered Cabul. Sirdar Ibrahim Khan, Sirdar Wali Muhammad Khan, General Daud Shah, and the Mustaufi, with some other officials, went out to meet him. The usual military salutes were fired. The Ameer received the Envoy at the "Seratcha." The Envoy and his attendants wore Russian dress. The Envoy talks a little Persian, but he seemed to understand it well. On the same day the Ameer had a long secret interview with the Envoy. Nobody was allowed to enter the Durbar. What took place has not transpired. The people of Cabul think that the Russian proposals will be more than the Ameer can comply with. Some of the Durbar officials are in favour of the English, and some urge the Ameer to comply with the Russian requests.

All the way from Turkestan to Cabul the Russian Envoy was supplied with everything he required; and, since his arrival at Cabul, the Ameer directed food, fruits, &c., to be sent him. The 26th July was fixed for a ceremonial visit to the Ameer in Durbar. Seven elephants were sent to bring the Envoy and his attendants to the Durbar. The "Zirih-posh" (chain-armour) cavalry and the body-guard were drawn up to receive him at the "Seracha" gate. The Envoy made complimentary remarks on the appearance of the troops, and said they were quite as good as he had heard they were. General Daud Shah led the Envoy to where the Ameer was seated. The Ameer rose and shook hands with the Envoy, and seated him beside him, and made the usual inquiries after his health. The Durbar lasted two hours. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon, one of the Envoy's aides-de-camp took the presents intended for the Ameer and his Ministers (another account stated that they were presented by the Envoy in Durbar, which is the usual custom). The Ameer does not allow any one to visit the Envoy, but Sirdar Wali Muhammad Khan, the Mustaufi, and certain special attendants. The Envoy delivered two letters to the Ameer—one from the Czar, and the other from the Governor-General at Tashkend.

The Envoy had private interview with the Ameer for two hours on the 30th July.

The Russian Envoy inspected the Ameer's workshops. He expressed his satisfaction at what he had seen, and said that the Afghan workmen would become very skilled if Russian artizans were permitted to come and teach them. He also spoke about trade, and suggested to the Ameer to lower the import duties, and permit Russian merchants to travel freely through Afghanistan. The above are the only public proposals the Envoy has made. Some of the Envoy's attendants have given out that it is intended to visit the frontiers of Afghanistan.

A grand review of the troops took place on the 2nd August, but, owing to the heat of the day, it did not last long. On the following day the Envoy visited the Ameer in Durbar. Conversation took place regarding the Ameer's unsatisfactory relations with the British Government. The Envoy replied that he had heard about it. The conversation then turned upon trade, and the Envoy proposed that the Ameer should lower the duties, and allow Russian merchants to visit Afghanistan. Some talk then followed about the Turks, the Russians, and the English, and the Durbar was closed. The Ameer gave the Envoy written replies to the letters that had been brought by the Envoy. Special Russian horsemen, escorted by some Afghan sowars, conveyed them towards Turkestan. It is said that the Ameer requested the Envoy to remain at Cabul until a reply was received to these letters. The general impression is that the Ameer has not concluded any definite arrangement with the Russian Envoy, and that he is trying to gain time, with the view to watching what action the British Government will take.

For some time after the news of the arrival of the Russian Mission at Cabul had reached Peshawur, the matter did not attract much notice. People regarded it at first as one of the ordinary Missions sent by the Russians to Cabul. During the past week it has attracted more attention, and people are wondering what the Government will do.

Inclosure 9 in No. 1.

Peshawur Confidential Diary, dated August 16, 1878.

1. AT the review held in honour of the Russian Envoy, the Ameer wore the uniform of a General Officer.

2. An express from Turkestan brought letters from Samarcand to Cabul from the Russian Governor-General. The Ameer sent it to the Russian Envoy through Sirdar Wali Muhammad Khan and the Mustaufi. The Envoy replied that he had heard that the letter had been dispatched to the Ameer's address, and that he would visit the Ameer on the following day and discuss the subject.

3. Excepting the openly expressed proposals by the Envoy regarding trade and artizans for the Ameer's workshops (to both of which the Ameer gave no reply, and changed the subject of the conversation), nothing has transpired regarding any definite proposals made by the Russian Mission. It has been reported that the Envoy has been trying to induce the Ameer to consent to some arrangement by which Sirdar Abdur Rahman Khan should be entrusted with the Government of Balkh. A rumour of a similar kind regarding intercession for Sirdar Yakub Khan has already been reported. It seems somewhat improbable that the Russian Mission, if it desired to court the Ameer's good-will, would have, at such an early stage, put forward proposals which could not but irritate him.

4. In the conversation which took place between the Envoy and the Ameer during one of the late interviews, when the conversation turned on European politics, the Ameer was very bitter against the English.

5. The Russian Envoy left a portion of his escort at each of the stages between Cabul and the Oxus, ostensibly to convey despatches, but really to survey the country. It is reported that they have been very active in this respect, but have exercised a due amount of caution, doing as much as they can by night.

6. At Cabul the Russian Mission conducts all its secret inquiries, and sends messages to Sirdars and others, through merchants who are well known to the Russian authorities.

7. As a precautionary measure, the Ameer has decided to send for the leading men of Jellalabad, Candahar, and Kuram, for fear of their being intrigued with from the British frontier. Some of the Chiefs of the Turis of Kuram have been kept at Cabul on this account.

8. The Ameer tried to persuade the Buner Jirga, which lately visited Cabul, to agree to furnish a number of men to do service on the frontier, promising them that a handsome allowance would be paid to the tribe. The deputation replied that it would consult the tribe.

(Signed) N. CAVAGNARI, Major,
On Special Political Duty.

No. 2.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 14.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, September 27, 1878.

ON my passage through Baden-Baden, on the 22nd instant, I had an interview with Prince Gortchakow, who was then residing there.

Although His Highness professed to be ignorant on passing events, he replied, on my referring to the question of Afghanistan, in exactly the same terms as those used by M. de Giers in his note to Mr. Plunkett of the 8th instant, stating that the Mission of General Stoletoff to Cabul was purely one of courtesy, and of a provisional nature, observing that the Emperor could never forego his right of sending complimentary missions to any foreign Sovereigns or neighbouring Princes. "Do not forget," said His Highness, "that the Emperor is an independent Sovereign ruler over 80,000,000 of subjects." I replied to his Highness that I was aware of this fact, as also that our Gracious Sovereign the Queen was ruler over more than 200,000,000 of subjects. "Yes," said his Highness, "but they are dispersed and scattered—the Russian Empire is one and united."

With regard to Afghanistan I observed to Prince Gortchakow that I was returning from a short excursion to Italy, and was, consequently, without any official intormation or instructions. I could not, however, refrain from remarking to his Highness that the very fact of sending a Mission to Cabul was, in my opinion, a violation of the compact and engagements which Russia had entered into with England, adding that it was the more incomprehensible to me, inasmuch as on a late occasion, and only a few days before my departure, M. de Giers had expressly denied to me that there had been, or was, any intention on the part, either of the Emperor or of General Kaufmann, of sending a Mission to Cabul.

Prince Gortchakow merely repeated what he had previously stated that the Mission was one of courtesy, and added that probably M. de Giers, at the moment he gave me the assurance, had not been informed of it. Prince Gortchakow observed that it was true that military measures had been devised when a war between England and Russia appeared to be imminent, but that they had been countermanded and the troops recalled. His Highness then explicitly stated that the Imperial Government would maintain their engagement with England in regard to Afghanistan; that they had no wish or object to interpose in the affairs of that kingdom, and that the Ameer of Afghanistan, in the event of war, would receive no assistance either in arms or money from Russia.

No. 3.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 14.)

(Telegraphic.) Tehran, October 14, 1878.

THE Asterabad Agent reports that the Russians have retreated, fighting their way from Khoja Kala to Chat. A large caravan of provisions was cut off by the Tekkeh Turkomans on its way from Krasnovodsk. General Llamakin has since retired to Chikislar, leaving a small detachment at Chat and Bayat Hajiki; on the retreat from Chat he is said to have been again attacked, and to have suffered some loss.

No. 4.

Mr. Stanhope to Lord Tenterden.—(Received October 18.)

My Lord, India Office, October 18, 1878.

I AM directed by Viscount Cranbrook to forward herewith, for the information of the Marquis of Salisbury, copies of letters from the Government of India, with accompanying Diaries and News Reports, in reference to the affairs of Afghanistan and adjacent countries.

I have, &c.
(Signed) EDWARD STANHOPE.

Inclosure 1 in No. 4.

The Governor-General of India in Council to Viscount Cranbrook.

My Lord, Simla, September 9, 1878.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, the "Journal of Political Events on the West and North-West Frontier" for the month of August 1878.

We have, &c.
(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.
W. STOKES.
A. R. THOMPSON.
R. STRACHEY.
S. J. BROWNE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 4.

Extract from Journal of Political Events on the West and North-West Frontier for August 1878.

AFGHANISTAN, AND THE COUNTRIES FURTHER WEST AND NORTH-WEST.

1.—Cabul.

THE Russian Envoy, whose arrival at Cabul was mentioned in the last Journal, has been received with every honour. He was met by Sirdar Ibrahim Khan, one of the Ameer's sons, and conducted to quarters in the Royal Gardens of the Bala Hissar. Sirdar Ibrahim Khan and the Mustaufi Habibulla have been specially appointed to entertain the Mission.

On the 26th July General Abramoff,(?) with the officers of his staff, paid a ceremonial visit to the Ameer. Seven elephants were sent for their conveyance, and the Envoy was received at the gate of the palace by the Ameer's body-guard.

General Daud Shah then led the Envoy into the presence of the Ameer, who rose and shook hands with him. After the usual formalities General Abramoff (?) presented two letters to the Ameer, one from the Czar and one from General Kaufmann. The Durbar lasted two hours.

On the 30th July the Russian Envoy had a private interview with the Ameer, which also lasted two hours.

On the 2nd August General Abramoff (?) witnessed a review of the troops, comprising twenty-two battalions of infantry and cavalry, with some artillery, and is said to have expressed his satisfaction at their bearing and equipment. Detachments are stated to have been withdrawn from all the outlying garrisons of Afghanistan in order to muster as large a force as possible for the Envoy's inspection.

The next day General Abramoff (?) was received at a second interview, at which he presented his gifts, chiefly consisting of firearms, watches, musical boxes, &c. One account mentions that a lakh of rupees in cash was also given. After receiving the presents the Ameer gave two letters to General Abramoff, (?) one for the Czar and one for General Kaufmann, which were at once dispatched by special messengers to Russian Turkestan.

Various rumours are afloat as to the objects of the Russian Mission. The reports cannot be regarded as entirely trustworthy, but are mentioned quantum valeant. Such are the encouragement of Russian trade in the country, the appointment of Russian artizans in the Ameer's workshops, a survey of the country lying between the Oxus and Cabul, and the acquisition of as much information as possible regarding the military strength and resources of Afghanistan. The survey has apparently been already commenced by small parties of men, left by General Abramoff (?) for the purpose, at the different stages of the road traversed by the Mission. According to other rumours General Abramoff (?) has been authorized to press for an alliance which is to give Russia the right of making roads, establishing a telegraph line, and, should occasion arise, moving troops into Afghanistan—Herat, Balkh, and Candahar being mentioned, among other places, as future cantonments—an alliance, in fact, that would completely establish Russian preponderance in the country. In the event of its not being accepted a threat is held out of support to Abdur Rahman. A more recent account mentions that among the chief demands of General Abramoff (?) are the erection of supply depôts in various parts of the Turkestan frontier, and permission to construct roads and move troops through Afghanistan as occasion may require. It is added, however, that the Ameer has been disappointed in not having had the expected offer of a subsidy made to him.

Several news-writers mention that, in discussing the political situation with the Russian Envoy, the Ameer has spoken in a very bitter way of his treatment by the British Government.

Again, he is described by one writer as overcome with delight at the increasing importance of his own position, whilst another depicts him as much distressed by the difficulties of it.

As to the internal condition of the country little is known. The Ghilzai outbreak, in which, according to one account, the troops of the Ameer have been thrice defeated, nevertheless has not spread. A recent telegram from Quetta announces the arrival there of Adam Khan, described as an influential Ghilzai Malik, deputed by the tribe to prefer certain charges against the Ameer, and solicit the interference of Her Majesty's Government. He claims to represent tribes aggregating 95,000 fighting men, who offer their services in any way that may be required. They ask for the presence among them of a British officer, for whose safety they will give approved hostages. Their complaints against the Ameer allege oppression and increased taxation, and they disclaim connection with the Cabul Ghilzais, whom they represent favourable to the Ameer.

But the event of paramount importance reported during the month is the death of the Heir Apparent, Sirdar Abdulla Jan, which occurred on the 15th August.

In order that the Ameer should not be troubled during the period of mourning which the Mahommedan religion imposes on these occasions, it has been determined to postpone for a short time the dispatch of the British Embassy that was about to proceed to Cabul; and meantime the condolences of the Viceroy have been sent to the Ameer. Numbers of the nobles and Chiefs of the country have arrived at Cabul to condole with the Ameer on his recent bereavement. Sirdar Ahmad Ali Khan, son of the late Sirdar Muhammad Ali Khan, and grandson of the Ameer, is mentioned as being likely to succeed Sirdar Abdulla Jan as Heir Apparent.

Lal Muhammad Khan, the recently appointed Governor of Afghan Turkestan, has, it is said, been directed to muster for immediate service all the available forces under his jurisdiction; and similar orders appear to have been given by the Ameer to the tribal Chiefs recently summoned to Cabul; but nothing is said to indicate the object the Ameer has in view in making these military preparations. Meanwhile, there seems reason to believe that no obstacle will be placed in the way of the British Mission that is shortly to visit Cabul.

2.—Bokhara and Eastern Turkestan Frontier.

The latest accounts of Russian movements in this quarter are as follows:—

Three completely-equipped columns, estimated at about 12,000 of all arms, are advancing upon the Afghan frontier; the right column, from Petro-Alexandrovsk, follows the course of the Oxus to Charjui; the centre, from Samarcand, is concentrating at Jam; the left, from Margilan in Khokand, is moving on the Kizzil Su River in the Alai Valley. Their further movements are said to depend on secret orders to be hereafter given. According to more recent news, a portion of the centre column has since advanced to Karshi, and commenced the construction of a bridge of boats across the Oxus.

Inclosure 3 in No. 4.

The Governor-General of India in Council to Viscount Cranbrook.

My Lord, Simla, September 9, 1878.

WE have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of Peshawur Confidential Diary, dated the 26th August, 1878.

We have, &c.

(Signed) LYTTON.
F. P. HAINES.
A. J. ARBUTHNOT.
A. CLARKE.
W. STOKES.
A. R. THOMPSON,
R. STRACHEY.
S. J. BROWNE.

Inclosure 4 in No. 4.

Extract from Peshawur Confidential Diary, dated August 26, 1878.

IT was reported from Cabul that the Ameer was displeased with Sirdar Zakariah Khan, and had deported him, viâ Kuram, to the British frontier. This has turned out to be incorrect. It was scarcely likely that the Ameer would have deported one of the principal Sirdars while the Russian Mission was at Cabul.

The Russian Mission travelled very leisurely from the Oxus to Cabul, marching sometimes only a few miles a day. At each stage enquiries into the state of the country and the people were made.

The Envoy is located in the house of Sirdar Muhammad Sharif Khan.

The Ameer was much embarrassed at receiving reports that the Russian escort halted at the different stages between the Oxus and Cabul, and had been making surveys and enquiries regarding the country. Sirdar Wali Muhammad Khan was directed to inform the Envoy that, unless the Ameer's officials were given orders as to the requirements of the Russian escort, some altercation would sooner or later take place, and it would therefore be better for the Envoy to warn his men not to move about the country, and to inform the Ameer of anything he required. This has caused the Ameer much anxiety.

No. 5.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 28.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 11, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship herewith an extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of this day, stating that an order of General Kaufmann, dated the $\frac{16}{28}$th August, has been published in the "Turkestan Gazette" for the demobilization of the reserve troops and dismissal of the levies of 1870 and 1871 in the military circle of Turkestan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 5.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of $\frac{\text{September } 29}{\text{October } 11}$, 1878.

UN ordre du jour du Gouverneur-Général du Turkestan inséré dans la "Gazette du Turkestan" sous la date du 16 Août, prescrit la démobilisation de troupes de réserve et la mise au dépôt des soldats des levées de 1870 et 1871.

No. 6.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 21.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, October 16, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship the following articles in translation by Mr. Michell from the Russian press:—

Imperial order granting furloughs to Russian soldiers.

Article from the "Russki Mir" of the $\frac{\text{3rd}}{\text{15th}}$ October, giving particulars respecting General Stoletoff's Mission to Cabul and the Afghan Embassy to Tashkend.

Inclosure 1 in No. 6.

Extract from the "Official Gazette" of October $\frac{1}{13}$, 1878.

FURLOUGHS TO RUSSIAN SOLDIERS.—By an order of His Imperial Majesty, the troops within the confines of the Empire and in the Caucasus, and which have been reduced to a peace footing, may, at the discretion of their commanding officers, be granted short furloughs to the $\frac{\text{1st}}{\text{18th}}$ March, 1879. These furloughs are, however, not to be granted indiscriminately, but on substantial grounds, and the number of such furloughs granted must not be so excessive as to weaken the effectiveness of the forces.

Inclosure 2 in No. 6.

Extract from the "Russki Mir" of October $\frac{3}{15}$, 1878.

(Translation from the Russian.)

THE "Russki Mir" of the $\frac{\text{3rd}}{\text{15th}}$ October, 1878, publishes the following letter from Tashkend:—

"About 12 o'clock on the $\frac{\text{3rd}}{\text{15th}}$ September the Afghan Embassy arrived at Tashkend.

"In order to explain how the above-mentioned Embassy found its way to us, I must go back to the $\frac{2nd}{14th}$ July, when Major-General Stoletoff, accompanied by Colonel Rosgonoff, four interpreters, and twenty-two Cossacks, left Samarcand for Cabul.

"From reliable information which I have obtained, I am able to state that the Russian Embassy was dispatched with the object of opening direct commercial relations with Afghanistan as well as with India, and likewise to express to Shere Ali our appreciation of his mode of action in regard to Russia during the Russo-Turkish war.

"On the $\frac{6}{18}$th July our Embassy reached the town of Mazari-Sherif, the Governor of which place was instructed by the Ameer to conduct the Embassy to Cabul, but as the Governor was taken ill on the arrival of the Embassy, it was necessary to await his recovery. On the seventh day after its arrival the Governor died, and the Embassy then proceeded accompanied only by an escort.

"On the 29th July the Embassy reached Cabul, and, in accordance with the Ameer's orders, was lodged close to the Palace.

"On the following day the Ameer formally received the Embassy in the presence of his Ministers and Court officials. According to the accounts of witnesses the Ameer was extremely gracious, and ordered that the Russians should be shown everything of note in the town. Ceremonial dinners were given, and a large parade took place in honour of the Embassy. The total number of troops in Cabul itself amounted, as I am informed, to about 40,000 men. The majority of these are equipped in the English style. In regard to their arms, they are not so bad as the English papers try to represent, on the contrary, all the infantry are armed with English breech-loaders, and the artillery consists of many breech-loading guns.

"Shere Ali, in order to express the extent of his appreciation of Russia's friendship, requested Major-General Stoletoff to inform him whether he considered it possible to take with him some officials which he, the Ameer, would appoint, to Tashkend, in order that they might personally testify to General Kaufmann the great honour which had been done the Ameer by the despatch of an Embassy to him.

"And thus, as stated above, the Afghan Embassy arrived at Tashkend.

"The Embassy consists of Munshi Mahomet Hassan Khan, Minister of Interior. In appearance he is about 40 years old, middle height, dark complexion, and thick black beard.

"The next important person in the Embassy is the Ameer's personal Adjutant, who holds the rank of Colonel; there are also two staff officers and a Treasurer.

"On the $\frac{5}{17}$th September General Kaufmann received the Embassy at his country residence, in the presence of the officials of the Turkestan region.

"The Envoy expresses himself fluently in the Persian tongue, and speaks so rapidly that General Stoletoff found difficulty in translating all that he said into Russian.

"A large parade will take place in honour of the Embassy.

"It is reported that the Embassy will visit St. Petersburgh. I cannot, however, vouch for the truth of this, and can only assert that Major-General Stoletoff left Tashkend for Livadia on the 10th September.

"I have obtained a view of the presents which are to be made to the Embassy. Munshi Mahomet Hassan Khan will receive a silver goblet with a lid; the Adjutant will receive a silver mug; and the two staff officers are to be presented with a silver cup and goblet. The members of the Embassy, being all smokers, are also to receive a silver cigar case.

"Moreover, General Kaufmann has given orders for the purchase of some good cloth, which will also be presented.

"It is not yet known what will be sent to the Ameer."

No. 7.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 28.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 21, 1878.

I HAVE learnt that the Turkestan Reserves referred to in my telegram of this date,* although disembodied and disarmed, and consequently demobilized, are still retained and employed in making roads to the Oxus.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

---

* Giving substance of information in No. 5.

No. 8.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 28.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, October 22, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship the three following papers, which have been translated from the Russian press by Mr. Michell :—

1. From "Moscow Gazette" of $\frac{6th}{18th}$ October, on the march of a Russian column from Tashkend to Djam.

2. From the "Novoe Vremia," giving particulars respecting General Stoletoff's Mission to Cabul.

3. From "Novoe Vremia" of $\frac{6th}{18th}$ October, on General Llamakin's expedition to the Attrek.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure 1 in No. 8.

Extract from the "Moscow Gazette" of October $\frac{6}{18}$, 1878.

(Translation.)

MARCH OF THE RUSSIAN COLUMN FROM TASHKEND TO DJAM.—The "Moscow Gazette" of the $\frac{6}{18}$th October, 1878, contains the following letter from Tashkend on the subject of the march of the main Russian column to Djam :—

* * * * *

"The first échelon of the main column left Tashkend on the $\frac{1st}{13th}$ June. The immediate object of its advance was stated to be Djam, situated on the Russo-Bokharian frontier. According to prearranged march-route, the troops were to march nineteen days. The soldiers exhibited their usual powers of endurance and sprightliness on the march, notwithstanding the terrible heat that prevailed, and the scarcity of water, which occurred between the forts of Chiniaz and Djuzak. The men had to proceed on foot, as the means of transport were inadequate, even for the train and field ambulance. Notwithstanding these difficulties, the number of invalids during the whole nineteen days was very small, and the sick-list only commenced to swell while the troops were stationed at Djam, and on the return journey to Tashkend. The troops easily crossed the Narutin mountain range, famous for the "Tamerlane Gates," which pierce the rocky chain of mountains. At the town of Samarcand the rapid advance of the column was somewhat impeded by the River Zaravshan, which was very much swollen; the soldiers were obliged to cross the river on the croups of the Cossack horses. On account of the rapid current of this river, and the shifting nature of its bed, no other means of crossing it have yet been devised. The passage was effected successfully with the loss of a few rifles, which the soldiers sincerely deplored. The troops reached Djam without any important incident. The ancient Bokharian fortress of Djam owed its importance in former times to its proximity to the frontiers of Bokhara and Khiva; now it is only a picturesque ruin, entirely deserted by the Bokharians. The column encamped at Djam, and awaited the progress of events.

* * * * *

"The real object of the movement of the Russian troops was known to very few persons. Different reports were current. Many supposed that the march was undertaken for the purpose of practical experience, with a view to a future campaign against India, and to disprove the opinion generally entertained as to the possibility of a successful expedition against that country. The feasibility of such an expedition has now been proved."

Inclosure 2 in No. 8.

Extract from the "Novoe Vremia."

(Translation.)

FURTHER PARTICULARS RESPECTING GENERAL STOLETOFF'S MISSION TO CABUL.—The correspondent of the "Novoe Vremia" at Samarcand supplies the following additional information on this subject, under date of $\frac{3rd}{15th}$ September last :—

"It is known that General Stoletoff was despatched from Tashkend in the latter part of May, in the capacity of Extraordinary Envoy to Shere Ali, Ameer of Afghanistan. This journey, through an almost unknown country, occupied a long time, and rumours of a most unfavourable kind continued to reach us. It was said that General Stoletoff, on arriving at the ferry over the Oxus at Tchardjui, was stopped by Afghan troops, and that Shere Ali Khan would not allow a Russian Mission to enter his territory. All this, however, turned out to be false. General Stoletoff had certainly to wait at the ferry over the Oxus for the arrival of an Afghan Bek, who had been appointed to escort him in the place of the Afghan who had died. A whole month was spent in waiting for the functionary, but our Envoy was eventually received with great honours.

"A special ceremonial exists at Cabul for the reception of foreigners of distinction; an English Ambassador would accordingly receive a salute of 13 guns, a Maharajah 30 guns, and an Indian Viceroy 51 guns. General Stoletoff received a salute of 115 guns, and he was met by Shere Ali in person at a considerable distance from Cabul. That an Ameer of Cabul should go out so far to meet an Envoy is an event without any parallel in the history of the country.

"On the $\frac{\text{31st August}}{\text{12th September}}$, at 11 P.M., General Stoletoff returned to Samarcand, and he was accompanied by the Afghan Envoy and his suite. The Afghan Mission consists of Murza Magdazan, Minister of War, two Colonels, and a Secretary. They have an escort of twenty-one Afghans. From Samarcand the Afghans proceeded to Tashkend, where they were received by the Governor-General.

* * * * * *

"According to the accounts of the members of the Russian Mission the road they journied by to Cabul was very fatiguing, included nine mountain passes, and occupied twenty-one days."

Inclosure 3 in No. 8.

Extract from the "Novoe Vremia" of October $\frac{6}{18}$, 1878.

(Translation.)

LLAMAKIN'S EXPEDITION TO THE ATTREK.—The following information relating to Llamakin's expedition to the Attrek appears in the "Novoe Vremia" of the $\frac{6}{18}$th October, 1878, in a letter written by the correspondent of that journal from the shores of the Caspian:—

* * * * * *

"In a previous letter I informed you that the Turcomans had shown signs of turbulence. At that time our detachment, under General Llamakin, marched eastwards along the Persian frontier. The movement of this detachment was undoubtedly in connection with that of the Turkestan columns. It is said that the object of the latter was to reach that part of the Oxus which lies south of Samarcand, so as to render secure the passage of the river at that point, and to enter into direct communication with Afghanistan. The Krasnovodsk detachment, proceeding at first along the Attrek and then along the Persian frontier, was to have occupied consecutively several points in the direction of Merv. The distance of Merv to the Caspian exceeds 800 versts (533 miles), but no one can doubt the importance of an advance towards that point. By the occupation of Merv we shall completely subjugate the Turcomans and their territory, which will be then encircled by our forts, and order would be established among these semi-barbarous tribes. Direct communication would also be opened with Turkestan. At present our southern frontier in Central Asia is not well defined on the Khiva side. It is necessary to consolidate this frontier, and to establish ourselves on the Oxus and at Merv, before we can think of any serious advance in the direction of Afghanistan and India. The best route to India is by way of the Caspian, but our means of transport over this sea are very limited, and develop but slowly. We have yet to create a flotilla of steamers, without which it is difficult to transport troops. There are at present only twenty schooners on the Caspian, and each schooner can only carry 500 men. The transport of one regiment of Cossacks, with their horses, would require four schooners, and one regiment of infantry of three battalions would require no less than seven schooners."

Inclosure 4 in No. 8.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg."

UNE correspondance adressée des bords de la Mer Caspienne à la même feuille dit :—

"La navigation à vapeur n'est pas très-développée sur la Caspienne : il y a en tout vingt vapeurs et schooners jaugeant en tout 3,280 lasts ; cinq bâtiments jaugent moins de 100 lasts ; cinq autres ont un tonnage de 100 à 150 lasts ; quatre autres ont un tonnage au-dessous de 200 lasts ; six enfin ont plus de 200 lasts. Toute la navigation est concentrée entre Astrakhan, Bakour et les ports du Midi. L'industrie du naphte a donné un essor nouveau à l'activité commerciale. Krasnovodsk et le port de Briansk commencent un peu à s'animer également. Ce dernier port est à l'embouchure du Térek, non loin de Kizliar, connu par son vin de Tchikhir.

"La Société Caucase et Mercure centralise la grande navigation. Le vin de Tchikhir exporté de Briansk entre en Russie ; il y est travaillé puis mis en vente sous le nom de vin de Lisbonne, de Madère (supérieur), &c., Krasnovodsk consomme, mais ne produit presque rien. Les produits de Khiva y sont amenés. Cette année la caravane est arrivée tout droit au port Alexandrovsk, à cause des désordres qui s'étaient produits parmi la population Tourkmène. Les Khiviens ont été désillusionnés à leur arrivée à Alexandrovsk. Un schooner est arrivé dans ce port à leur intention mais n'a pu emporter qu'une moitié de la cargaison prête, et a dû remettre le soin d'embarquer le reste au trajet suivant. C'est ainsi que les marchands de Khiva ont attendu deux semaines, sans savoir comment mettre leurs marchandises à l'abri jusqu'au retour du schooner. Toute cette cargaison était destinée à la foire de Nijni-Novgorod et n'est parvenue à Astrakhan qu'au commencement du mois d'Août.

"Malgré cela il y a tout avantage à prendre la route d'Alexandrovsk au lieu de celle de Krasnovodsk. Outre qu'elle est plus sûre elle est aussi plus courte et le transport par mer est de moitié meilleur marché d'Alexandrovsk à Astrakhan que de Krasnovodsk à Astrakhan. Le seul inconvénient c'est que le premier trajet n'est fait qu'une fois tous les quinze jours par les vapeurs de la compagnie, tandis que le second est fait deux fois par semaine.

"Les désordres parmi la population Turcomane continuent. Notre détachement commandé par le Général Llamakin a longé la frontière de Perse. Le détachement a suivi le cours de l'Attrek, et devait occuper certains points dans la direction de Merv, cette capitale des Tourkmènes. Depuis Merv jusqu'à la mer il y a 800 verstes, mais on ne peut nier que la pacification de cette contrée ne soit très-utile au commerce Russe et Khivien dans ces parages. Des relations directes entre Merv et le Turkestan seraient bientôt établies.

"On sait que notre frontière avec la Perse n'est déterminée d'aucune façon de ce côté. On sait aussi que les Persans ont autant à souffrir que nous des incursions continuelles de ces sauvages nomades et que les provinces du nord et du centre des Etats du Shah sont souvent désolées par leurs bandes ennemies. D'ailleurs les troupes Russes dans ces parages sont depuis longtemps habituées à assurer les voies au commerce en le garantissant contre les Tourkmènes, et depuis longtemps déjà la présence de nos détachements armés est le seul moyen de créer un minimum de sécurité à l'est de la Mer Caspienne."

No. 9.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 29.)

(Telegraphic.) Tehran, October 29, 1878.

INFORMATION has been received here that General Llamakin has established a camp at Chikislar, and having obtained provisions, winter clothing, and huts there and at Krasnovodsk, has returned to Chat, where a fort is being constructed. It is also reported that the Tekkeh Turkomans have attacked, in the direction of Krasnovodsk, the Khoja Shehee tribe, subject to Russia, and that they are building a fort with ditch and constructed for guns at Khoja Kala, under the direction of Afghans, said to be of the Jamshedee tribe. A certain number of Turkomans from Merv are said to be among them. They are strengthening the passes, and are reported to have 25,000 horses at their disposal.

The Yemoot Turkomans are clamorously demanding pay for their camels and cattle lost in the late Russian expedition.

No. 10.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 8.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, November 3, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship herewith translation by Mr. Mitchell from a Russian newspaper on the following subjects:—

An account by the correspondent of the "Sovremenoi Izvesti" of the march of the expeditionary force destined for Afghanistan, which started on the 20th June, and by way of Tchinaz, Djizak and Samarkand, reached Djam, on the Bokharian frontier, where it awaited the result of the Congress of Berlin, and on an amicable conclusion being arrived at, the troops were ordered to be demobilized.

Inclosure in No. 10.

Letter published in the "Sovremenoi Izvesti" of October $\frac{10}{22}$, 1878.

THE "Sovremenoi Izvesti," of the $\frac{10\text{th}}{22\text{nd}}$ October publishes the following letter from its correspondent who took part in the expedition of the Turkestan detachment to the town of Djam:—

"The expedition which I am about to describe is familiar to the public in its general features. We started on the $\frac{8}{20}$th June on our march to Afghanistan by way of Tchinaz, Djizak, and Samarkand.

"Nothing of importance transpired on the march to Tchinaz. Here we made a halt, and on the following day crossed the Syrdarya. This river is very wide, and the current is so swift that the rafts were carried down the stream for a distance of three versts.

"After leaving Tchinaz we passed the waterless halting places of Malek, Murza-Rabat, and Uch-Toop. At Malek we expected to obtain fresh water, but the men despatched in search of it were met on all sides with the reply that, with the exception of bitter-saltish water, no other was obtainable in the vicinity. Notwithstanding these assertions wells were discovered which contained very drinkable, though slightly brackish, water.

"I may state that the native Oarts did everything in their power to divert us from the localites where the wells were situated. At Murza-Rabat, the next station, not a drop of fresh water was to be obtained. At length we left this waterless district behind us and reached the town of Djizak.

"After halting at Djizak, we proceeded further to Samarkand. For a distance of 25 versts the road leads through mountain defiles. Eight versts from the town of Djizak are situated the two rocks which bear the name of the Gates of Tamerlane. From this point, during a march extending over 20 versts, we encountered as many as ten rivulets which we were obliged to ford, and there still remained to be effected the difficult passage of the river Zaravshan. The road itself was excellent; beyond the mountains which extend for a distance of 25 versts, a level highway commences lined on both sides with trees, so that Samarkand itself for a distance of 80 versts is approached by a shady avenue.

"Here we entered the region of Zaravshan, and considerable animation became visible; numerous kishlaks with large fruit-gardens were frequently met, whereas as far as Djizak a totally bare and waterless steppe prevails. Altogether, the scenery in the Zaravshan region is very picturesque, and this part of the route was certainly the easiest and most pleasant.

"At length we reached the Zaravshan river. This stream flows with a terrible rapidity, and sets large stones lying at the bottom of its bed into motion. It is utterly impossible to stand in the stream, and swimming or battling against the current is out of the question. The river at the ford is not deep, the greatest depth not exceeding 6 feet. At the ford the river is intersected by little islands. When it overflows (which was the case during our passage across), the width of the river would be about 3 versts, and it then forms several arms. Several carts were lost, and their contents carried away during our passage. The officers crossed on horseback,

"After we had effected the passage of the Zaravshan, we halted at a distance of 6 versts from Samarkand. On the following day we proceeded further, and again encountered the steppe under the scorching rays of the sun and a hot wind. After a march of four days we arrived at Sarakul, situated 8 versts from the Bokharian frontier. Here commenced privations which may well be termed diabolical. Imagine to yourself a perfectly level steppe, a heat of 49½ degrees Réaumur, and a hot wind, and it was in this climate that we had to remain for more than a month. We hoped to advance further, but orders were received to await the conclusion of the Congress. The troops were divided into two parts—one body took up a position at Sarikul, and the other was stationed in the town of Djam on the Bokharian frontier.

"The day after our arrival I started for the town of Djam. The road was terrible. I had traversed a distance of 300 versts by stages of 30 versts, and yet here I found myself scarcely able to accomplish a final stage of 8 versts. My horse scarcely kept on its legs, as I had been imprudent enough to set out when the heat was most intense. I rode up to a post on which I read a notification to the effect that that spot formed the frontier of the Russian and Bokharian territory. Half a verst from this spot a portion of the Russian detachment had passed its bivouac, and in the distance I descried a garden with native huts, and that was all.

"And this was the town of Djam!

"Cases of sickness, dysentery, typhus fever, and sunstroke were the inevitable results of a sojourn in such a climate. Soldier's funerals were to be winessed each day. The average number of fatal cases was two per day. A healthier spot was sought for nearer to Samarkand, and a kishlak situated between two hills was selected. We removed to this place in the middle of July. We reached Sarakul on the 26th June, and consequently nineteen days were spent in that place of torment.

"On returning to Aksai, we ascertained that we were to return home. The Congress was amicably concluded, and we only awaited orders for the demobilization of the troops before setting out on our return journey.

"I must confess that we were all delighted to receive the news of the order for our recall. Nothing could be worse than remaining in a state of inactivity, and moreover, in such a terrible climate."

No. 11.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 11.)

(Telegraphic.) Tehran, November 11, 1878.

IT is reported from Asterabad that the Russian troops which had started from Krasnovodsk have returned there, and that General Llamakin having provided the detachment at Chat with winter supplies, and left a battalion at Chikislar, has now left for Tiflis.

No. 12.

Sir L. Mallet to Lord Tenterden.—(Received November 12.)

(Secret.)

My Lord, India Office, November 12, 1878.

WITH reference to your letter of the 31st October, inclosing translation of an extract from the "Russki Mir" of the $\frac{3rd}{15th}$ idem,* I am directed by Viscount Cranbrook to forward herewith, to be laid before Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copies of telegrams to and from the Viceroy of India, on the subject of the date of the arrival of General Stoletoff's Mission at Cabul.

Copies of the papers referred to by the Viceroy are forwarded herewith.

I have, &c.

(Signed) LOUIS MALLET.

---

* See Inclosure 2 in No. 6.

Inclosure 1 in No. 12.

Viscount Cranbrook to Viceroy of India.

(Telegraphic.) India Office, November 7, 1878.

IN apparently trustworthy letter from Tashkend, Stoletoff said to have left Samarcand 14th July, and reached Cabul 10th August. These dates do not agree with yours. Can you explain discrepancy? Has Nawab Ghulam Hassan any information on point.

Inclosure 2 in No. 12.

The Viceroy of India to Viscount Cranbrook.

(Telegraphic.) November 12, 1878.

YOURS 7th. Impossible to verify now by fresh evidence precise dates of Stoletoff's journey and arrival at Cabul.

Ameer certainly mentioned in full Durbar 7th July, that Russian Envoy had crossed Oxus. He reached Cabul about 26th; was certainly received in full Durbar 26th July.

See inclosures to my despatches 5th, 19th August. Evidence is authentic and cumulative; could hardly be strengthened.

[For Inclosures 3 and 4 see "Correspondence respecting Afghanistan," Nos. 48 and 49, pp. 229—231.]

No. 13.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 15.)

My Lord, Tehran, September 26, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that it is reported that General Llamakin's force has halted in the vicinity of Karee Kala, and is suffering from sickness and scarcity of provisions, whilst there is also great mortality among the camels.

I have, &c.

(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

No. 14.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 27.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, November 20, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship, in translation by Mr. Michell, three letters lately published by the "Moscow Gazette," giving an account of the comparatively unknown Turkoman region nominally subject to Russia, and which extends from Krasnovodsk to Kizil Arvad.

These letters are of interest and importance, as giving geographically a circumstantial description of the zone of the Turkoman steppe, which has hitherto been untraversed by any European traveller, and which is only represented in the best and most detailed maps by a space almost entirely blank.

Politically these letters are of interest as giving, in addition to a minute description of the line of march followed by General Llamakin in July last, considerable information respecting the military capabilities of the country on the right bank of the Attrek, and along the Sambur River.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 14.

"The Moscow Gazette" of the 25th and 28th October (6th and 9th November N. S.), 1878, Nos. 271 and 274, publishes the following letters under the initials of "N. W.," descriptive of the Turkoman country stretching from Krasnovodsk to Kizil Arvad. The author, apparently, is attached to General Llamakin's staff.

(Translation from the Russian by J. Michell.)

LETTER I.

July 30 (August 11.)

LEAVING Krasnovodsk we proceeded along the shores of the Caspian, and crossing two dry beds in which the Oxus in former days emptied itself into the Caspian, a low sandy plain, separated from the coast by a chain of hillocks, is reached; this plain extends to the Silver Hills,* which is considerably lower than Hassan-Kuli Bay and the mouth of the Attrek. This portion of the Caspian shore, called the Chikishliar littoral, extends in a wide zone for nearly a whole degree between 37° and 38° latitude and 72° and 73° longitude, while the great and shallow expanse of water bears the name of the Chikishliar Bay. The depth of water at a distance of more than 1 verst from the shore is about 2½ feet, and diminishes to 1 inch in shore. In fine weather steamers stop 4 versts from the shore, and during rough weather at a much greater distance. The flat-bottomed boats of the Turkomans approach to within half a verst, and from that distance everything has to be carried on shore by hand, the water reaching to the knees.

We had to remain several days on this coast, from which we were to penetrate into the Turkoman steppe by a road which I think has hitherto never been described, but which is the nearest and most practicable route to the Attrek, the bank of which, from its mouth at Hassan-Kuli Bay almost to Balt Adji, is bordered by inapproachable morasses. The road along which we proceeded runs through territory subject to Russia, and forms almost a straight line from Chikishliar to Balt Adji.

Early on the morning of the $\frac{22\text{nd July}}{3\text{rd August}}$ we broke up our camp; our detachment advanced under the cover of infantry, Cossacks, Kirghizes, local militia, and some guns. The long line of camels, heavily laden with a large quantity of stores, stretched for a considerable distance. As we receded from the shore, the shells, which covered the ground and made it firmer, gradually disappeared, and the vehicles in the rear sank deeper and deeper into the sand. At the seventh verst the ground, instead of being formed of clean sand, now presented the appearance of a salt marsh petrified by the heat of the sun. Verdure between the low mounds is observed at intervals, and the vegetation itself proves that the soil is capable of cultivation. After proceeding about four versts over these salt marshes, the road again reaches a sand bank, vegetation almost entirely disappears, and the wheels sink into the friable sand. This sand, however, does not extend for a long distance, and a depression is reached, which is surrounded on all sides by low hillocks; the ground becomes firmer, and emits under the horses' hoofs a hollow sound, which would seem to indicate a cavity under the upper crust of the soil, suggesting also the existence of a "subterranean basin." All the hollows are covered with a rich vegetation. Plants appear which plainly show the presence of water in the subsoil. A halt was made after a march of four hours along this hollow. It was near 11 o'clock; the heat, scorching rays of the sun, together with the dust and flies, had so exhausted the men that they all threw themselves down on the ground. The poor horses refused the forage, while none of us thought of food; each economized his supply of water, and only moistened his lips and throat. "Samovars" (tea urns), however, soon made their appearance, and the unharnessed camels made for the steppe, where they found forage in the shape of the high grass of the steppe. The Cossacks and Kirghizes collect this grass for fuel. No water was here given to the poor horses, as the wells were still a day's march distant. At 5 o'clock in the evening we again started, the heat had decreased, but the flies, which were in myriads, continued to be very troublesome. The steppe over which the road now ran presented a livelier and more animated appearance; salines, with patches of verdure, became here and there visible; the sand was almost everywhere overgrown with grass; numerous camel tracks and roads were noticed; the soil became firmer, so that even the guns moved along easily. About 9 in the evening we reached Murat-Lar locality, where there are no wells, though, judging from the sounds which the earth emits when struck by horses' hoofs, from the surrounding vegetation, and from the temperature of the soil on a sultry day, it may, with safety, be asserted that water is to be found at no great depth.

* White Mountain (?).

Early on the following morning we continued our march, and the horses, having received a bucket of water each, advanced with greater spirits. The farther we proceeded, the more verdant did the vegetation become, hillocks and undulations were now frequent, the sand disappeared, and the soil became firmer and argillaceous. About 6 versts beyond Murat-Lar, and in close proximity to the road, traces of old melon plantations and cultivated fields are visible. The Djefarbaï Turkomans, who roam in this part of the country, cultivate the ground here every year, and, after gathering their harvests, remove to other camping grounds. At one place I receded somewhat from the road, and observed clear traces of an old encampment, and also of fields cultivated by means of regular irrigation. We reached the wells at about 10 o'clock in the morning, or after a journey of five hours from Murat-Lar locality. The place where the wells are situated is called Karadji-Batyr, and represents several sandy hillocks surrounded for about a verst by friable sand. These hillocks are easily distinguishable by their contrast to the argillaceous and affluvial soil in the immediate vicinity of the wells. There are here at present twenty-seven wells, and probably as great a number abandoned, and each well gives, if properly attended to, excellent clear and cool water, especially when it is covered up and left untouched for several hours. We remained at these wells for nearly a whole day, and it was near 7 A.M. before we started further. The road took a sharp turn to the right, as though leading directly into the heart of the steppe. The traces of artificial irrigation continued for about 7 versts, and they then diaappeared, reappearing again about 4 versts beyond, though not in the same regular form as at the wells. About 12 versts from the wells we arrived at the gates, as it were, of an enormous wall, which bore a greater resemblance to an artificial structure than to a natural conformation of the soil. Three versts beyond this point the valley of the River Attrek appeared in sight with the river itself winding in zig-zags between high and verdant banks.

To the left of the road, and on a high mound, stands a little stone edifice, which is called Bayat-Adji, and forms the tomb of a Mussulman who had performed the pilgrimage to Mecca. This monument gives the name to the whole of the surrounding country. There are no settlements here, but the Atabai Turkomans, who are semi-independent and semi-submissive, roam in the neighbourhood. Beyond the Attrek is the Persian frontier, and an old fortified camp, which served to protect our detachments in 1869 and 1872, stands on the bank of the river.

$\frac{10\text{th}}{22\text{nd}}$ August.—We were compelled to stay at Bayat-Adji a whole week. I rode for a considerable distance down the course of the Attrek, and, in spite of the excessive heat of the last three months, the banks were everywhere covered with luxuriant vegetation. Large bushes, which sometimes approach the size of small trees, grow between the edge of the river and the high shelving banks. Grass grows so abundantly in the valley of the Attrek that thousands of horses might be fed there, and the quality of the grass is very good. About 10 versts below Bayat-Adji the banks begin to be boggy. Here a different vegetation presents itself, and with it reeds appear, which, on being brought to the camp by the Turkomans, the horses ate greedily. About 40 versts from the mouth of the river in Hasan-Kuli Bay the marshy zone merges into an impassable swamp or "tundra," which, from the Russian or right side of the Attrek, is connected with a salt marsh, and from the left, or Persian side, is bordered by steep heights known under the name of the Persian mounds.

Ascending the Attrek, its very steep banks gradually narrow the basin of the river, and the valley opens out again in the form of small islands in places where the Attrek during its overflow separates into two streams.

From Bayat-Adji we proceeded up the Attrek to "Tchat" or "Tchid," but the bed of the river is not seen from the road, and the steppe itself presents a picture similar to that on the road from the hills of Kara-Batyr to Bayat-Adji. We continued to advance along an excellent road, which did not, however, run in a straight line, at times approaching nearer to the river and receding from it at other places. On the first day after our departure we traversed 20 versts, and then made a halt. The head of the column had advanced a considerable distance further; the guide having mistaken the road, missed a turning to the Attrek which led to an open space on its banks, where we should have halted. Notwithstanding the 15 versts that had been uselessly traversed, the column halted about 4 versts from the Attrek on an open plain, which resembled an enormous terrace. We remained at the foot of this terrace until the following morning. The country here is very picturesque, and masses of thick "gribinchuk" border the banks, so that at mid-day it is quite shady. This place, at which we halted for a day and night, is called Yatchny-Ulun. On the following day we again struck the old road, and having traversed about 20 versts, turned off to the Attrek, and halted until the following morning at Domakh-Olun locality. Domakh-Olun is a very convenient halting-place, and is also somewhat like a terrace, but the descent to it is tedious. The bank is steep to the water on our side, while from the Persian the river is reached by a long wide road. From this place we proceeded for 22 versts more, and halted at Tchat. The road presented no extraordinary features, and runs close to the Attrek in a tortuous manner. The incline from our side, which comprises the bank of the river, is so full of depressions and holes, as to render the cultivation of this bank impossible.

About 10 versts before reaching Tchat, the road turned to the left, receding from the Attrek; on the right side large auls, or settlements, are visible at a place called Bairam-Olun (Holiday Ferry), a beautiful river-terrace animated with abundant verdure, but the descents on each side of the stream are narrow and inconvenient. The large auls, the inhabitants of which did not fly from us (though they belonged to the Atabai tribe, who bear us no love), possess large flocks of sheep. Nearly all the shepherds had white asses of an excellent breed. At length we reached Tchat. This is the most repulsive place along the whole Attrek, although, from a strategical point of view, the most important, because it is here that the River Sumbar flows into the Attrek, and the Delta may, if fortified, be converted into an impregnable position. The Sumbar is that dirty stream which, uniting with the waters of the Attrek, makes the latter turbid; the water in the Sumbar is bitter salt, with a mixture of injurious salts, and its narrow stream is of a dirty green colour. We have been already a week at Tchat. Fifty versts higher than Tchat rise two enormous rocks out of the Attrek, forming a sharp delimitation of the geological structure of the country, as well as of the river itself. This place is called Su-Sium. Above Su-Sium the water in the Attrek again becomes clear, the bed stony, and the banks covered with a rich vegetation; the grass here grows up to one's waist, and whole copses of oak dot the surface of the country. Wild grapes also grow in abundance. Pheasants are also numerous. Unfortunately the road becomes impassable for camels, and 10 versts further on becomes very difficult even for horses. One hundred versts beyond Tchat the course of the Attrek can only be followed on foot, and to make the road practicable three months would at least be required. At the 108th verst beyond the ridge of rocks that rise perpendicularly to the Attrek are to be seen ruins of enormous forts, which must have existed at some distant period. Their names were not accurately known. The local inhabitants call them Komnuk-Kala, and on the right side of the Attrek they are called Oklan-Kala. Traces of irrigation are to be seen at this place on all the neighbouring steppes. The bank itself resembles a series of gardens, and the elevated plateau is abundantly covered with grass. It would be possible to depasture any quantity of cattle here, but wildness and desolation reign around.

For two weeks past the barometer has shown from 35° to 38° Reaumur in the shade. In the sun the temperature far exceeds 40°. In the morning there are only 14°. Rain fell only once for about half an hour in large but few drops. The sky is cloudy only in the morning, and the heat commences at mid-day. The wind, which covers everything with sand, is so violent, especially in the evening, that not unfrequently the tents have been broken. Even inside the tents it is necessary to use lamps for writing at night. The steppe is desolate in appearance from the dust, and the heat, flies, &c., cause no small inconvenience. Life, however, is still possible, even at Tchat.

Letter II.

August 22 (September 3), 1878.

In my last letter I informed you that the road along the Attrek, 8 versts beyond Su-Sium, proved inconvenient for pack animals, and that it was, therefore, necessary to abandon the line of the Persian frontier, that is, the course of the Attrek along which we had hitherto proceeded, and to strike a new road. After making the necessary surveys we turned to the left, at a place called Alun-Yak (where there is a ferry across the Attrek, 22 versts from Tchat), and proceeded over the high Sugundag chain, after having crossed the bridge which exists between the Attrek and Sumbar. The Sugundag forms, together with these two rivers, a triangle, the smallest angle of which is at the point at which the Attrek receives the Sumbar, and is equal to about 48 degrees, whilst its opposite side, that is, the line of the Sugundag, presents a distance of 50 versts. This line commences at first with a gentle ascent at Alun-Yak, and then rises steeply over an extent of 24 versts. At the foot of the most abrupt part of the ascent there are springs of excellent water; these springs are called Kabeli-Katje, and are separated from the steep ascent by a deep precipice. Strangely enough, the water in the springs is completely black, and yet its colour does not affect its taste. The particles of black mud which it holds in suspension are easily precipitated, and the water becomes quite clear. The grasses in the neighbourhood of the springs are very luxuriant, date and pomegranate trees being also found in abundance at this spot. The ascent and descent of the Sugundag, the highest point of which I estimate at 2,000 feet, extends over a distance of 16 versts ($10\frac{2}{3}$ miles), the descent terminates at the small River Chandyr, which falls into the Sumbar. There is a spring of cold and clear water, containing, however, particles of lime, at the point of junction of the Chandyr with the Sumbar. In spring, it is said that the former stream has a very rapid current, but its appearance, as we observed it in the summer, was not at all imposing.

At 25 versts from Tchat we crossed over to the left bank of the Sumbar. The country traversed by us along the right bank of this river is of a similar nature to that of the elevated steppe stretching along the Attrek; the chief features are clay, mud, sand, and deep fissures, and hillocks of various shapes, forming narrow, and oftener broad, defiles through which the road trends. There are no considerable elevations. Receding from the Attrek the soil becomes more and more barren, the vegetation scantier, and yellow in appearance, succulent grasses disappear, and prickly shrubs predominate.

The appearance of the steppe and hillocks is dreary and monotonous; no good water is to be found, that in the Sumbar being bitter and salt to the taste. Our night halt at Har Alun was a very trying one, owing to the scarcity of good water. Commencing from the Chandyr to the point of its fall into the Attrek no drinkable water was found. This can only be explained by the circumstance that both the Chandyr and Sumbar had at this time (August) become dry in many parts of their course, and the remaining water had become impregnated with the saline soil through which these rivers flow.

At Sharol-Daù, 5 versts beyond Har Alun, and a verst and a half below the fall of the Chandyr into the Sumbar, we crossed over to the left bank of the Sumbar. After a very difficult passage over the river (the banks being here very high and precipitous), we continued our advance along the left bank of the Sumbar (between the Sumbar and Chandyr), and reached an elevated mountain called Bek-Tépé, belonging to the spurs of the Kurin Dag. The whole distance traversed by us along the bank from the Sharol-Daù and Bek-Tépé is about 40 versts; the march was a difficult one, in consequence of the scarcity of water and barren soil. It was only at Bek-Tépé that we again struck the Sumbar; the water here was rather better, though muddy, the bitter saltness of taste having completely disappeared. The course of the Sumbar at this point is more rapid, the volume of water greater, the bed harder, and the evaporation of the river less. Here we again crossed over to the right bank, and proceeded along a bad though deeply-trodden camel's path, and again reached the Sumbar, having receded from it about 10 versts in order to strike the head of the defile, which extends between the more elevated spurs of the Kurin Dag, extending perpendicularly in the direction of the Sumbar. This defile, and the locality adjoining the river, is called Ters Akon. Here we finally separated from the Sumbar, and, proceeding through the waterless defiles of the Ters Akon and through the Morgo defile (belonging to the Kaplan Dag range), reached the ruined fort of Hadjan-Kala.

Letter III.

Bent-Essent, September 5 (17), 1878.

Leaving behind us the fortress of Kizil Arvad, where our Cossacks, under Arnoldi, distinguished themselves last year in an unequal combat with the Tékés, we crossed the undetermined though really existing line of frontier between Russian territory and the land inhabited by the Tékés, who recognize no authority over themselves. I consider the extreme point of this line of demarcation to be the fortress of Hadjan-Kala, which is flanked on one side by the Téké fort of Kizil Arvad, and on the other by the Karakala fort; in front, then, is a line of Téké forts, the more important of which are Bami, Buirma, &c.

The road from the River Sumbar, which we left at Ters Akon, to Hadjan-Kala passes through long defiles formed by the spurs of the Kurindag; they are severally known under the names of Dairon, Nishik Sund, Turugai, and Kuvmius. The entrances into these defiles are very narrow, and present the most dangerous places for caravans. The road winds through them along steep ascents and descents, and only two horses can proceed abreast at a time along it. The most dangerous portion of the route terminates at about 12 versts before reaching Hadjan-Kala. It would be neither difficult nor expensive to construct a good road through these defiles; if this were done, the caravans would derive great benefit from it, and the defiles would no longer serve as hiding places for the marauding Téké bands. Beyond the defiles, in the direction of Hadjan-Kala, the vegetation becomes extremely rich, and wild boar and other game is found in great abundance. In these respects the country is similar to that stretching along the banks of the Atrek.

In close proximity to Hadjan-Kala stands an old deserted earthwork in the shape of a regular quadrangle, flanked by two conical crenelated towers, about 2 fathoms in height The upper platforms of these are protected by a low wall, pierced with apertures for musketry firing. A similar fort, though of smaller dimensions, and with one tower only, is passed at a place 3 versts before reaching Hadjan-Kala. This kala, or small fort, proved to be a Téké habitation ; it was surrounded by cultivated and well irrigated fields, the water being obtained from a small rivulet which flows through the neighbouring bushes and reeds, and ultimately reaches Hadjan-Kala. Not far from the latter place, and in the middle of the so-called Téké oasis, there is a fine spring, which yields an abundant supply of water, and which forms the source of the rivulet that flows on in the vicinity of the small fort 3 versts distant from Hadjan-Kala. At this point, from a hill on the right, is obtained a fine view of the Goklan fort of Kara-Kala, and of the surrounding country, which is well cultivated and thickly populated. Ascending a high hill on the left, at Bent-Essent (which likewise stands high), the whole Téké oasis presents itself to the view, dotted with numerous dwellings. On the immediate horizon is seen the fort of Bami, an awkward structure resembling Hadjan-Kala; beyond again appears fort Buirma. The Téké oasis, although producing cotton in some places, cannot be described as a fertile land ; small patches of cultivated ground alternate with stretches of brushwood and dry sterile salines.

No. 15.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 2.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, November 28, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship herewith, in translation from the "Golos" by Mr. Michell, a letter received from Cabul, dated $\frac{2nd}{14th}$ August last, giving a description of the journey to, and reception of General Stoletoff at, Cabul.

I also annex a French translation of the same, published in this morning's "Journal de St. Pétersbourg."

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure 1 in No. 15.

Extract from the "Golos" of November $\frac{14}{26}$, 1878.

(Translation.)

THE "Golos" of the $\frac{14}{26}$th November, 1878, contains the following letter addressed to it by a correspondent from Cabul, and descriptive of the journey of the members of the Russian Envoys to the Ameer of Afghanistan. This letter, the "Golos" says, was dispatched by special opportunity soon after the arrival of the Mission at Cabul, posted to St. Petersburgh at Tashkend on the 4th November, and received here on the 25th of the same month :—

"Cabul, August $\frac{2}{14}$.

"The Russian Mission, consisting of seven officers (among whom was one general), twenty-two Cossacks, four servants, and fifteen Kirghishor semen, left Samarcand on the $\frac{2nd}{14th}$ July.

"Our route lay through Bokharian territory, and as the Ameer of Bokhara was at Karshi, we proceeded in the direction of that town.

"The Ameer of Bokhara showed the Mission every courtesy, and the members presented themselves to him.

"The road selected for reaching the Oxus was through Huzar, Shirabad, and Chushkogosar, which, though presenting some difficulties, running as it does along a rocky ridge of hills, was traversed in five days. On this route the Mission passed through the famous defile known in ancient times under the name of the "Iron Gates," and now called Burghasse Khana.

"At Shirabad we met an Afghan messenger, who was the bearer of a letter to the Chief of the Mission. In this letter Shir-i-dal Khan, the Governor of Afghan-Turkestan, asked us to wait ten days at Shirabad, as he had not yet made the necessary preparations for the reception of the 'prized visitors.' He also informed us that he had not yet organized the honorary escort which was to accompany the Mission from the Oxus to Mizar, Sheriff, and, further, to Cabul.

"Notwithstanding this request, General Stoleteff considered it advisable to continue the advance to the Oxus, and there to halt if it were really necessary to do so. The Oxus was crossed by the Mission in very primitive boats. On the banks of this river we waited three days, when we were joined by the Afghan escort, consisting of 200 men and two generals. They were all well armed, and excellently equipped. They received the Russian Mission with great politeness, and apologised for having caused its detention. In order to avoid the great heat of the day, which reached 41 degrees in the shade, it was determined to resume the march at night.

"The advance of the Mission was very picturesque. Two long lines of horsemen, with pennons flying, flanked the Envoy and his party on both sides, and closed the rear. The sounds of drums and trumpets broke the silence of the desert. We progressed all night across a sandy arid steppe, intercepted by hillocks, and next morning reached Karshiak settlement, which is situated in a cultivated country.

"We made three stages before reaching Mizar and Sheriff, and on entering the latter town, which was lined with soldiers in our honour, we were received by Hosh-dal Khan, son of the Governor of the province. A salute of eighteen guns was also made, to welcome our arrival.

"Great crowds thronged the streets, and gazed with curiosity on the people from the distant north. There were no visible traces of fear or fanaticism among the spectators. In this town, where we were to pass a fortnight, we were lodged in the palace of the Governor-General, which was shaded by large Chinar trees. The Governor-General, who was ill when we arrived, and could consequently not welcome us personally, died soon after. The Mission was, under these circumstances, unable to proceed until the appointment of a new ruler had been made.

"After an interval of some days Hosh-dal Khan received his nomination from Cabul as Governor, in succession to his deceased father.

"On the expiration of two weeks we resumed our journey in the direction of Cabul; the escort from this point was still more numerous and brilliantly equipped. The Afghans showed themselves very well disposed towards us by anticipating all our wishes. On reaching a halting-place we always found everything prepared for us; tents were spread and excellent repasts frequently provided, &c.

"After leaving Tashurgan we reached the spurs of the Hindu-Kush, and journied to Cabul during twenty days.

"Ascending at first in gentle slopes, the Hindu-Kush gradually rises higher and higher, forming, amidst its frequent passes, terraces of increasing height.

"After traversing a series of such terraces, we reached the elevated Bamian Valley (8,500 feet), in the proximity of which are the Kalu and Great Tran Passes (13,000 feet).

"A few stages before Bamian we were welcomed by Lal Mahomed Khan, Governor of Bamian, who was accompanied by a numerous suite.

"After passing the famous Bamian idols, chiselled on the face of the rock, we cleared the Great Tran Pass, and then descended from the Ugly Pass into the Cabul Darya Valley. A journey of three days was still before us.

"At Koteashrik village, 50 versts from Cabul, we were met by the Sirdar Nasruddin Khan, the Afghan Minister for Foreign Affairs, and at Kala and Kazy by the Afghan Vizier, who was mounted on an elephant. Here the members of the Mission were also supplied with elephants, each elephant carrying two persons, and in this manner we advanced to Cabul.

"At a distance of seven versts from Cabul we were met by Prince Abdullah Khan, Shere Ali's nephew. He rode on an enormous elephant, of ashy grey colour, and with long gilded tusks. The Prince himself was seated in a basket profusely ornamented with gold. He invited General Stoletoff to seat himself on his elephant, and they then entered the town together. We followed also on elephants, the sowdas of which were ornamented with silver. A brilliant body of cavalry followed in the rear of the Prince. Crowds lined both sides of the road, and even the neighbouring rocks and trees were covered with people. The 'Urus' were the objects of the greatest curiosity, and the blessings of the four Caliphs were invoked on them.

"Entering on a large plain we found it filled with regular troops. On the left flank stood the cavalry, and twelve brass and steel guns, which glistened in the sun, were placed in front. As soon as the elephant on which the Envoy was seated was in a line with the troops, a salute of 36 guns was fired. The mournful, though very original air of the Afghan National March was struck up, the strains of which were, however, soon drowned by the vociferous exclamations of the crowd, who called down on us, especially on General Stoletoff, the blessings of the first four Caliphs. This greeting is equivalent to the Russian hurrah. Followed by these exclamations we entered the Bassohissar, or citadel of Cabul, and at the gates we were met by its keepers, who wore the Highland uniform. After traversing some of the streets we reached Shere Ali's palace, where everything was in readiness for the reception and entertainment of the Russian Mission. The Ameer himself did not come out to meet us, and it was only on the following day, namely, the 30th July (11th August, new style), that, with General Stoletoff at our head, we were formally received by him in audience in his Hall of State, and in the presence of the highest nobles of Afghanistan. Further particulars of this reception I shall send hereafter."

Inclosure 2 in No. 15.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of November $\frac{16}{28}$, 1878.

NOUS empruntons à la "Voix" la correspondance suivante, reçue de Caboul, en date du $\frac{2}{14}$ Août dernier :—*

"Notre Mission, qui se composait de sept officiers, dont un général, de vingt-deux Cosaques, quatre Brosseurs, et quinze Djighites, a quitté Samarcande le 2 Juin. Le chemin que nous devions suivre traversait les possessions de l'Emir de Boukhara. Comme celui-ci se trouvait à Karschi, nous prîmes la direction de cette ville, où notre Mission fut parfaitement reçue par le potentat à qui elle crut devoir se présenter.

"Nous choisîmes ensuite pour atteindre l'Amou-Daria la route qui passe par Houzar, Schirrabad, et Tchichko-Housar. Cette voie présente des difficultés assez nombreuses, car elle traverse une chaîne de montagnes rocheuses et nous fûmes cinq jours à la parcourir, en devant traverser les anciennes 'Portes de Fer,' qui portent actuellement le nom de Bourgassé Khan (maison de la chèvre, en Persan).

"Nous nous rencontrâmes à Schirrabad avec un Envoyé Afghan, porteur d'une lettre destinée au Chef de la Mission Russe et par laquelle Schir-i-dal-Khan (ce qui veut dire 'cœur de lion'), Gouverneur-Général du Turkestan, Afghan, nous priait d'attendre une dizaine de jours à Schirrabad, vu qu'il n'avait pas encore préparé la réception 'de ses chers hôtes.' Il nous faisait savoir, entre autres choses, que l'on n'avait pas encore réuni l'escorte d'honneur qui devait accompagner la Mission depuis les bords de l'Amou-Daria, par Mizar et Schérif, jusqu'à Caboul. Malgré toute l'amabilité de cette demande de Schir-i-dal-Khan, le Général Stolétoff crut devoir poursuivre sa route jusqu'à l'Amou-Daria et s'arrêter seulement là si le délai demandé était effectivement nécessaire.

"A son arrivée sur l'Amou-Daria, la Mission traversa le fleuve sur des bateaux d'une construction des plus primitives et ne dut attendre que trois jours sur l'autre rive l'arrivée de l'escorte Afghane, qui se composait de 200 cavaliers, avec deux Généraux à leur tête, tous parfaitement armés et portant de très-beaux uniformes. Les deux Généraux firent à la Mission un excellent accueil et s'excusèrent de nous avoir fait un peu attendre.

"Pour éviter la forte chaleur, qui atteignait 14° à l'ombre dans la journée, on ne se mit en route qu'à la tombée de la nuit. La marche de la Mission et de son escorte aux dernières lueurs du crépuscule présentait un tableau saisissant. Deux longues files de cavaliers armés de lances à oriflammes entouraient la Mission et le bruit des tambours et des clairons se perdait dans l'immensité du désert. La traversée des sables arides dura toute la nuit, et ce n'est que dans la matinée que nous atteignîmes le village de Karschiak, qui se trouve dans la zone cultivée.

"Nous eûmes trois étapes à faire pour arriver à Mizar et Schérif. A notre entrée dans cette dernière ville notre Mission fut reçue par les troupes rangées sur la place et par Khosch-dal-Khan (cœur tendre), fils du Gouverneur-Général. L'artillerie tira une salve de douze coups; des masses de peuple se pressaient sur notre passage et examinaient avec curiosité ces hommes du nord, venant de si loin et qu'elles n'avaient jamais vus. Leurs physionomies ne réflétaient qu'un sentiment de forte curiosité et ne portaient aucune trace de fanatisme ni de crainte.

"Une fois dans la ville, nous fûmes installés au Palais du Gouverneur-Général, à l'ombre d'immenses arbres. Le Gouverneur-Général, qui n'avait pàs pu nous recevoir

* Cette correspondance a été envoyée avec une caravane quelques jours après l'arrivée de notre mission a Caboul; elle n'a été expédiée de Taschkent par la poste que le 24 Octobre et la "Voix" l'a reçue le 13 Novembre.

parce qu'il était malade, mourut quelques jours après notre arrivée, et nous dûmes attendre pendant quinze jours la nomination de son successeur, qui fut son fils Kosh-dal-Khan.

" Ce n'est donc que quinze jours après notre arrivée à Schérif que nous nous remîmes en route pour Caboul. Notre escorte, devenue plus nombreuse, était encore plus magnifique. Les Afghans étaient tellement aimables qu'ils prévenaient le moindre de nos désirs. Tout était prêt à notre arrivée aux endroits indiqués pour les haltes. Une grande tente Indienne se trouvait dressée pour nous recevoir et de riches tapis invitaient nos membres endoloris au repos. Nous n'avions pas besoin de nous occuper de nos repas. Le dîner se composait de plusieurs plats, parmi lesquels figuraient en première ligne, au point de vue culinaire, le fameux pilau du monde Musulman et un excellent schaschlyk à la mode de Caboul. On nous offrait en outre force boissons rafraîchissantes, sorbets, &c., et enfin dans la soirée un excellent souper. Tel était notre ordinaire de tous les jours.

Nous avons mis ensuite vingt jours pour atteindre Caboul, en traversant la chaîne de l'Hindoukousch, qui forme une suite de terrasses aboutissant à la plaine de Bamiam (8,500 pieds au-dessus du niveau de la mer). Cette plaine est entourée des pics de l'Hindoukousch, du Kalou, et du Grand-Iran (13,000 pieds au-dessus du niveau de la mer).

A quelques étapes avant d'arriver à Bamiam, nous fûmes reçu par le Gouvernement de cette province, Lal-Mohomed-Khan, accompagné d'une suite très-nombreuse. Nous passâmes ensuite devant les célèbres idoles-colosses de Bamiam, qui sont taillées en haut relief dans le rocher, puis nous traversâmes le défilé du Grand-Iran et celui d'Ougly, pour descendre dans le bassin de l'Océan Indien, dans la vallée du Caboul-Daria. Il ne nous restait plus alors que trois jours de route jusqu'à la ville de Caboul.

Le Serdar Nasreddin Khan, Ministre des Affaires Étrangères d'Afghanistan, vint nous recevoir au village de Kotéaschrik, à 50 verstes de Caboul, et le Vizir d'Afghanistan, monté sur un éléphant, nous rencontra aux villages de Kal et de Kaza. Toute notre Mission prit place sur les éléphants qu'il avait amenés avec lui, deux personnes sur chaque éléphant, et nous fîmes tout le reste du chemin à dos d'éléphant.

A 7 verstes de Caboul, nous fûmes reçus par le Prince Abdoullah Khan, neveu de Schir Ali Khan. Installé sur un énorme éléphant gris cendré et aux défenses dorées, le Prince était assis dans un palanquin tout couvert d'or. Il invita le Général Stolétoff à prendre place à côté de lui et partit ensuite dans la direction de la ville. Le Prince était suivi d'une foule de cavaliers et des deux côtés de l'excellente chaussée que suivait notre cortége se tenait la foule des indigènes, qui nous regardait avec curiosité, et appelait sur nos têtes la bénédiction des quatre Califes.

Nous atteignîmes bientôt un immense plateau où se trouvaient rangées des masses de troupes régulières. Le flanc gauche était formé par la cavalerie, devant laquelle se trouvaient 12 canons dont les flancs de bronze ou d'acier étincelaient au soleil. Quand l'éléphant qui portait le Général Stolétoff passa, devant le front des troupes, une salve de 36 coups de canon accueillit son arrivée et l'on entendit alors retentir la Marche Nationale Afghane, dont la mélodie originale et mélancolique est délicieuse, mais dont les sons furent bientôt converts par les cris de la foule appelant sur nous tous et surtout sur le Général Stolétoff la bénédiction des quatre Califes, cri qui remplace chez les Afghans notre hourra Russe.

C'est ainsi que nous fîmes notre entrée à Bassogissar, la citadelle de Caboul. Nous fûmes reçus à la porte de cette enceinte par la garnison de la citadelle, revêtue d'un costume Ecossais, jupes quadrillées, casques de feutre couverts d'or et d'argent. Après avoir suivi plusieurs rues, nous arrivâmes au Palais de Schir Ali Khan, où tout était prêt pour la réception de la Mission Russe. L'Emir ne vint pas en personne à notre rencontre, mais le lendemain, 30 Juillet, toute la Mission, le Général Stolétoff à sa tête, se présenta à l'Emir, dans la salle du trône de son palais, en présence de tous les hauts fonctionnaires de l'Afghanistan.

Les détails de la réception à une autre lettre.

No. 16.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 2.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, November 28, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to report that a correspondent of the "Moscow Gazette," writing from Ashurade under date of the $\frac{7}{19}$th October last, states that General Llainakin had then already returned with his column to Chickishliar after a campaign of two months in the steppes.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

CENTRAL ASIA. No. 2 (1878).

FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE respecting Central Asia

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. 1878.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY HARRISON AND SONS.

CENTRAL ASIA. No. 1 (1879).

FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE

RESPECTING

CENTRAL ASIA.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty.
1879.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY HARRISON AND SONS.

[C.—2209.] Price 2d.

BOMBAY BRANCH

OF THE

Royal Asiatic Society.

CLASS

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

No.	Name.	Date.	Subject.	Page
1	Lord A. Loftus	Dec. 4, 1878	Account in "Golos" of the reception of the Russian Mission at Cabul	1
2	Mr. R. Thomson	Oct. 14,	Retreat of the Russian expedition from Khoja Kaleh to Chat	2
3	„ „	28,	Reports from Meshed and Asterabad Agents as to movements of Russian expedition	2
4	„ „	29,	Fort established by Russians at Chat. Proceedings of the Turkoman tribes	7
5	„ „	Nov. 6,	Further accounts of the Russian expedition ..	7
6	„ „	6,	Reports from Meshed Agent of events in Afghanistan, and proceedings of Turkomans. Arrival of Sirdar Iskender Khan in Khorassan ..	8
7	To Lord A. Loftus . ..	Dec. 13,	Conversation with Count Schouvaloff as to continued presence of Russian Mission at Cabul; and as to the engagements taken by England respecting Afghanistan	9
8	Count Schouvaloff . ..	19,	Russian Government are prepared to withdraw their Mission from Cabul. Inquires whether Her Majesty's Government recognize the engagements entered into with regard to Central Asia ..	10
9	To Count Schouvaloff ..	19,	Presence of Russian Mission at Cabul is the only obstacle to revival of understanding between the two Governments in regard to Afghanistan and Central Asia	10
10	To Lord A. Loftus .. (Telegraphic)	19,	Instructions sent for withdrawal of Russian Mission from Cabul	11
11	Lord A. Loftus	20,	Letter in "Golos" from Cabul as to reception of Russian Mission	11
12	„ „	Jan. 1, 1879	Account in "Moscow Gazette" of march of Russian expedition from Petro-Alexandroffsk	12
13	Mr. R. Thomson . .. (Telegraphic)	16,	Russian detachments at Chat surrounded by Turkomans	13
14	Lord A. Loftus	15,	Article in "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" as to intention of Ameer to invite the mediation of Europe.	14

Further Correspondence respecting Central Asia.

No. 1.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 9.)

(Extract.) St. Petersburgh, December 4, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship an article, in translation by Mr. Michell, from the "Golos," relating to the reception of the Russian Mission at Cabul by the Ameer of Afghanistan in Durbar.

Inclosure in No. 1.

Extract from the "Golos" of November $\frac{18}{30}$, 1878.

THE "Golos" of the $\frac{18}{30}$th November, 1878, contains the following particulars, contributed by its Orenburg correspondent, respecting the reception of the Russian Mission by the Ameer at a Durbar held by him at Cabul:—

"The Ameer summoned a Durbar at Cabul of 250 loyal Chiefs of tribes. The conference was held under tents specially erected. The day following the arrival of the Chiefs, the War Minister having reported that nearly all the Chiefs had assembled, the Ameer proceeded to the camp where the Durbar was to be held, accompanied by his suite, numbering about 100 persons, consisting of his Ministers, Generals, and principal Ulemas of Cabul. The Ameer was enthusiastically received by the Chiefs, who crowded round their Sovereign with demonstrations of love and respect.

"The Ameer told them that the Russian Emperor Alexander had sent a Mission to Cabul for the purpose of strengthening the bonds of friendship which had long existed between Russians and Afghans. As Russia had always shown hospitality towards the Afghans who frequented with their caravans the Russian markets at Troitsk and Orenburg, at a time when Afghanistan was but little known to other European nations, he, the Ameer, considered it his duty to give a hearty welcome to the Russian Mission, and to receive it with due honour.

"This declaration of friendship on the part of the Ameer towards his Russian guests at Cabul called forth enthusiastic and approving exclamations from the Chiefs present at the Durbar. After this short speech the Ameer ordered his seal-bearer to read a concise Memorandum on the power, glory, and extent of Russia, her troops and subjects, in order that the Afghan Chiefs could be able to form a correct idea of the Power of which Representatives were then at Cabul. The concluding speech of the Ameer was as follows:—

"'Return to your brethren, sharpen your knives and lances, and saddle your horses, so that you may be ready to take the field so soon as I shall call on you to fight the enemies of our country.'

"The Ameer then left the camp and returned to Cabul. The two following sessions of the Durbar were devoted to an examination of the military budget of the country, the distribution of the regiments, a consideration of the forces available for a war with England, and the necessary measures to be adopted for supplying the troops with food and provender. The Ameer was not present at these last two assemblies, which were presided over by the Afghan War Minister. With regard to the stay of our Mission at Cabul, it is known that the Ameer lodged his dear guests in his best palace, or in the Modul Hissar, formerly occupied by his son Yakub Khan, and endeavoured to surround them with every comfort, and to show them every attention; the warmest welcome was accorded to them without stint of expenditure, notwithstanding the supposed unsatisfactory condition of the Afghan finances. Hunts were also organized for the members of the Mission, and the most remarkable mosques of the city thrown open to their inspection. Whenever the Russians visited these places the natives followed them in crowds along the streets with demonstrations of joy, and threw their caps into the air. After the departure of General Stoletoff to Livadia, Colonel Rozgonoff took his place as Russian Representative, and he has already succeeded in gaining the goodwill of the inhabitants of Cabul."

No. 2.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 12.)

My Lord, Tehran, October 14, 1878.

I HEAR from the Asterabad Agent, that on the retreat of the Russians from Khoja Kaleh to Chat they had to fight their way through the Téké Turkomans, who succeeded in cutting off a large caravan of provisions coming from Krasnovodsk.

Since arriving at Chat General Llamakin has retired to Chekishler, having left small detachments at Chat and Bayat Hadji. On this further retreat he was again attacked, with loss.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

No. 3.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 12.)

(Extract.) Tehran, October 28, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith copies of Reports from the Meshed and Asterabad Agents, and of a private letter from Asterabad, on the subject of the movements of the Russians and other matters of interest.

Inclosure 1 in No. 3.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.)
(Extract.) August 31, 1878.

THE people of Merv are much alarmed at the advance of the Russian troops upon the Akhal country. About twenty days ago twelve Elders of the Saryk tribes petitioned the Khorassan Government to allow them quarters, so as to enable them to quit Pendjeh and become Persian subjects. The people of Akhal also are in great alarm on account of the approach of the Russians.

There is no news from Seistan except that the roads of Yezd and Kernan have become unsafe through the Beloochees having taken advantage of Sirdar Taj Mohammed Khan's escape from Tehran.

I was with the Prince Governor the day before yesterday when Yar Mohammed Khan's letters arrived. He reported that twelve regiments and twelve guns had arrived with the Russian General at Chat, and that they intended building a fort between Kizil Arvad and Karee Kala, and then advancing to Geuk Tuppeh, which is in the centre of the Akhal country, and after erecting a fort there also, they would remain there.

It is said that the people of Merv will not submit to Persia after all, and that there was a rumour that they are going to send out horsemen on a raiding expedition. I think that in reality they are going to send assistance to the Akhal Turkomans; and as this is against the wish of the Persian Government, they have declined to submit to them; in fact, the only reason for their offer of allegiance was that they hoped to obtain their protection for the whole Turkoman community against Russian invasion.

A correspondent from Boojnoord writes, under date of the 26th instant, that three days previously a Russian interpreter came there from the Russian camp with ten Yemoot and Kara Kaleh horsemen; that the whole number of the Russian troops is 25,000 men; of these 12,000 were to have arrived at Khoja Kaleh on the 31st, with 1,000 horse and thirty guns; that two of the guns are of a heavy calibre and twenty-eight of small bore. Every twenty-five men have one hut and every 200 a kitchen. The remainder of the troops remain at Krasnovodsk and Chekishler. The troops are going to Bam and Boormeh, not to Kizil Arvad, as it appears that the people of Kizil Arvad have submitted. They have obtained 5,000 camels from the Yemoot tribes, 3,000 of which are purchased and 2,000 hired at 5 tomans a-piece. The Yemoot tribes have submitted, and their horsemen are doing duty in the Russian camp. Only 300 families claimed to be Persian subjects. These were told that they must quit their present quarters and go to the Goorgan valley, which they have accordingly done.

Kerum Dondee Eeshan and the other Téké Chiefs arrived at Boormeh from Bala. Horsemen are also continually arriving. It seems as if a fight were likely to take place. It has been decided also that the property of any Chief not coming in is to be given up to plunder. The price of grain there is 6 tomans the kharvar.

Inclosure 2 in No. 3.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.)
(Extract.) September 22, 1878.

THREE days ago the Governor of Kaïn wrote to the Prince Governor, saying that if 600 horse, 2 regiments with guns and ammunition, were not sent to him without delay, Seistan would be lost to Persia, and he would not be responsible for what might happen, because for the last two months he had been continually applying for reinforcements, and none had been sent; and that on the 12th he had received intelligence that Sirdars Taj Mohammed Khan and Shereef Khan, together with the followers of Sirdar Ibrahim Khan, Belooch, and other turbulent characters had entered Seistan and taken possession of all the forts except that of Husseinabad, which was being held by the Kaïn people.

Seven days ago Dowlet Murad Khan, nephew to Allahyar, the Governor of Derehgez, who quitted that place about seven years ago because of his uncle's oppression, and had become a resident of Meshed, suddenly left. In my opinion he has not the means of taking Derehgez, but should he attempt it and fail, he may go over to the Russian camp, and in that case the Russian General will have the advantage of an able and well-informed Chief.

One of the two regiments, lately despatched from Tehran, on arrival at Sabzewar was ordered to proceed thence to Seistan.

On the 21st news was received that Dowlet Murad Khan, not being able to make a stand against Derehgez, has escaped to the Koochan frontier, and to all appearance he is going to join the Russian General. Mirza Khanler Khan, formerly Foreign Office Agent in Ghilan, Asterabad, is the person appointed to proceed to Cabul on a visit of condolence, and to ask that Sirdars Shereef Khan and Taj Mohammed Khan should be given up to Persia or removed from the frontier.

A correspondent at Herat writes to me on the 11th that the usual prayers and lamentations were held for three days on the occasion of Abdullah Jan's death. It appears that the Heir-Apparent had been unwell for some time, and that several days previous to his death he was attacked with typhus fever and other diseases to which he succumbed. The two Russian officers who are on a mission to the Ameer were still there when he died. The day that these officers arrived, the Ameer received them with much honour and distinction, all the troops and artillery were sent out to meet them, and salutes were fired. As yet the nature of their mission is unknown, but there is a rumour that they have asked leave to build cantonments for their troops at two places, one at Herat, and another (somewhere) in Turkestan. The correspondent states that he will have authentic intelligence of their doings in another month, as some of his friends will return to Herat from Cabul by that time.

He also adds that great changes will take place in the internal administration of the country on account of the Heir-Apparent's death. He states that the English authorities are engaged in building cantonments, &c., at Chalcote, that the people of Candahar bring provisions to the camp, work for them, and none of the Afghan authorities interfere.

It is said that Russian troops have entered the city of Bokhara, and have deprived the Ameer of all interference in official matters.

A correspondent at Serrekhs writes to me on the 16th that as Kousheed Khan's son asked for a considerable sum from the Prince Governor to transport his tribe from

Merv, and had received no answer, he was disappointed, but Nasrullah Khan then agreed to pay him 1,000 tomans provided he gave ten hostages, would hoist the Persian flag, and bring his tribe; that the Khan demurred at giving hostages and returned to Merv; that the Octemish tribe had addressed a petition to the Prince Governor sealed by Taj Sirdar, Beg Murad Khan, Aman Neeyaz Khan-i-Seechmaz, Saree Bater, Saree Beg-i-Zakhshee, and Araz Murad Khan, saying that they would come and bring twelve guns; that Kousheed Khan's son had started without their knowledge, and the 200 horsemen who accompanied him were useless characters; that in fact one of them, Shalka Sirdar, was a person who some time ago made an attack upon Serrekhs, and had killed several persons in the attack; that he ought, therefore, to have been seized by the Persian authorities and put to death.

Inclosure 3 in No. 3.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.)
(Extract.) September 28, 1878.

I LEARN that about 2,000 Barbaree families, having sold and disposed of their lands and property in the neighbourhood of Herat, intended emigrating to Persia, but the Herat authorities sent horsemen after them and made them return.

An Afghan merchant, who recently came in from Bokhara, reports that 10,000 Russian troops came as far as Kirkee and Fergan and returned. He also reports that the Russian General asked the Ameer to give up Kirkee to them, but he replied that he had already given it to the Ameer of Afghanistan; that the Russians have dispatched an agent to Cabul, and the chief of the troops was briskly engaged in procuring waterskins and other necessary articles from the Ruler of Bokhara.

Dowlet Murad Khan, nephew to Allahyar Khan, the Governor of Derehgez, has again returned with a number of the inhabitants of Koochan, and has stationed himself at the Fort of Naubandan, a stronghold west of Derehgez, and he may cause great inconvenience in Allahyar Khan's Government. Although the local authorities have sent 300 horsemen to his assistance, yet it would appear that secretly they are encouraging Dowlet Murad Khan to rise against his uncle.

The Itimad-es-Saltaneh has been appointed Chief of the Forces to be sent to Seistan; he starts about the 4th or 5th October with 600 horse and two regiments of foot, one of which had already started from Sabzevar. Thirty thousand cartridges and two rifled guns, and other stores and ammunition, will also be sent after him if found necessary. Up to the present time the Persian authorities have spent 9,000 tomans for this expedition. Two regiments from Kerman are also to join him. Mirza Khanler Khan, the Agent appointed to Cabul, has received 700 tomans on account of his journey, and starts with the Itimad-es-Saltaneh.

I hear from Boojnoord on the 14th that the Russian troops, 12,000 strong, arrived at Bam and Boormeh, that the Téké Turkomans, as far as the Fort of Barzan, had submitted, but the Chiefs beyond that place were prepared to fight. One hundred and fifty families of the Yemoot tribes have taken service with the Russians, each family being paid 10 tomans a-month.

Inclosure 4 in No. 3.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.)
(Extract.) October 5, 1878.

NASRULLAH KHAN, the Persian Agent for arranging the allegiance of the Merv Turkomans to Persia, having finally failed, has returned to Meshed.

I received a message from Boojnoord, saying that the last news respecting the Russian occupation of Bam and Boormeh was premature.

Intelligence has been received that the Téké Turkomans have caused the Russians to retreat towards Chat, and attacked them with 500 horse.

Dowlet Murad Khan has made an attack on Allahyar Khan at Derehgez, in which twenty lives were lost. The former is in force and stationed at Naubandan. Some of the Turkomans from Ishkabad, &c., have joined him. The local Government sends verbal promises of support, but nothing further.

The troops of Seistan are encamped at Takhta, and will start in a few days. The Persian Agent to Cabul will start at the same time. He has telegraphed for a further grant of 300 tomans, saying that the previous grant of 700 tomans has all been spent in making preparations for the journey.

The Akhal Turkomans having asked for aid from those of Merv, they replied that they had first to repair the dam carried away by the water, and finish their negotiations with Persia.

Inclosure 5 in No. 3.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.) October 12, 1878.

TWO days ago an Afghan merchant came in from Herat. He reported that intelligence had been received there that a considerable body of Turkomans had come with the object of making a raid in the Herat territory, and plundering all caravans coming and going from that place, and that therefore a caravan which had intended starting for Meshed had been delayed and detained only 6 farsakhs from Herat. He also said that the inhabitants of a village near Cabul had revolted, and Ameer Shere Ali Khan had dispatched a regiment of infantry and four guns, under the command of Sirdar Abdullah Khan, former Governor of Herat, to suppress the revolt.

The Commander-in-chief at Herat is very much disturbed as to the future, as he was one of the adherents of the late Heir-Apparent. The Governor, Sirdar Mohammed Omar Khan, is sure of his tenure of office. Before the Ramazan festival (1st Sharval) he sent and asked of the Ameer whether it was to be celebrated or not. The Ameer replied that only an Heir-Apparent had died, and if he chose he could appoint 100 of them in an hour, therefore he was to celebrate the festival more grandly than on previous occasions. This was accordingly done.

The rice crops are better than in former years. Rice is selling at 2 tomans a kharvar, whilst wheat costs 3 tomans.

Two days ago two men came in from Merv, bringing petitions from all the Turkoman Chiefs, saying that they were sorry that they had delayed in submitting to Persian rule, but now they are arranging to send ten or fifteen of their Elders as hostages for their good conduct, but that 1,000 tomans was necessary to transport their families; if that sum was granted their Elders would come.

The Prince Governor has accorded their request, and written to them in that sense to-day.

The Itimad-es-Saltaneh left with his troops from Seistan on the 9th instant. There is a rumour that the people of the Hishmet-ul-Mulk (Governor of Kain and Persian Seistan) had killed and wounded about twenty-five followers of Sirdar Taj Mohammed Khan, and that a considerable number of the inhabitants of Seistan and Beloochistan have collected together.

Three days ago news was received that Allahyar Khan left Mohammedabad with his horsemen to fight Dowlet Murad Khan. After going a short distance, Dowlet Murad Khan's horsemen, who were lying in an ambush waiting for those of Allahyar Khan, suddenly rushed out, when several of Allahyar Khan's men deserted to Dowlet Murad Khan's side. Allahyar Khan, seeing this, became alarmed lest all his horsemen intended to do the same, and immediately fled direct to Kelat. Dowlet Murad Khan's cause has thus been strengthened.

To-day intelligence was received that Dowlet Murad Khan had seized Mohammedabad and all the property belonging to Allahyar Khan, and that 800 Turkomans have joined him. The Prince Governor, on hearing this, began to make preparations for suppressing Dowlet Murad Khan in person, and he will shortly proceed thither with troops and the Musteshar-ul-Mulk. The local affairs of Meshed will be in great confusion during the Prince's absence. In fact, all order has disappeared in Seistan and Khorassan, and if the Merv Turkomans are again disappointed in their overtures to Persia,* and hear of the retreat of the Russian troops, they will make raids on this country in all directions.

The journey of Mirza Khanlar Khan to Afghanistan has been put off, for the present, by a telegraphic order from the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

---

* As to receiving the 1,000 tomans before mentioned.

Inclosure 6 in No. 3.

The Asterabad Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.) September 30, 1878.

THE rice and other crops are very good this year.

The Prince Governor is expecting the arrival of money for the troops from Tehran. Most of the soldiers have deserted from Ak Kaleh, and no one is left there except the officers and a few of the men.

The Daz tribe have also rebelled. Some days ago they attacked Ak Kaleh, killing two soldiers, wounding one, and carrying off five of them prisoners. Nazar Taaneh, Chief of the Atabaï tribe, however, pursued them, and succeeded in liberating soldiers.

On the 28th it was reported that the Russian troops had returned from Khoja Kaleh to Chat, that the Téké Turkomans having made a stand, General Llamakin retreated. Disease is rife amongst the troops, and there is great mortality.

The Turkomans disinter the bodies and strip them of whatever clothes they possess. The Turkomans of Kizil Arvad have opened negotiations with the Russians.

It is further stated that the troops will arrive in a day or two at Bayat Hajji, as they have no provisions, and none have been received at Krasnovodsk.

Inclosure 7 in No. 3.

Private Letter from Asterabad.

(Translation.) September 16, 1878.

YESTERDAY a man came in from the Russian camp. He reported that the troops remained three days at Karee Kaleh, and their provisions running short, they sent to the Goklan tribe to procure some. That tribe, however, made excuses, saying that they had no means of transport. They then applied to the inhabitants of Karee Kaleh, who are a mixture of Téké and Yemoot Turkomans; they also proffered some excuse. Afterwards they dispatched 1,000 camels to Chekishler to bring provisions.

Noor Verdee Khan, Chief of the Téké Turkomans, and the Chiefs of Merv and Akhal, have bound themselves to fight. It is also said that thirty persons in the Afghan costume have appeared amongst the Téké tribes; some say they are Afghans, whilst others say they are Englishmen; that two Elders of the Téké tribe recently came with 200 horsemen to the Russian General, but he refused to admit the latter into the camp. The Elders then asked the General why he did not allow the horsemen to enter the camp, upon which General Llamakin got angry, and ordered the Elders to be arrested, whilst the horsemen returned; the General, however, afterwards released the Elders, and made them a present of money.

It appears that the Russians afterwards went to Khoja Kaleh, which is a strong place between Karee Kaleh and Kizil Arvad, and encamped there. The Téké tribes are mustering in great force. The troops are suffering greatly from the brackish water and unhealthy climate.

It is rumoured that General Llamakin has sent word to the Téké tribes that if they allow the Russian flag to be hoisted amongst them, and a garrison to protect it, he would return; but they had replied that as long as they lived they would not allow such a thing, and that they would fight, as the Merv Turkomans and the Afghans were with them also.

Inclosure 8 in No. 3.

The Asterabad Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.) October 6, 1878.

AUTHENTIC news has been received that the Russian troops were obliged to make a retreat from Khoja Kaleh. The Téké Turkomans beseiged their camp for two days, and at last General Llamakin retreated fighting. The Tékés then went and intercepted the caravan coming with provisions from Krasnovodsk; they carried off the whole of it, consisting of 300 camels laden with grain. Small garrisons have been left at Chat and Bayat Hajji. The General has returned to Chekishler with the intention of making a second expedition against the Turkomans.

The Daz Davajee tribes have revolted, and the Prince Governor is only waiting for the arrival of money from Tehran to form another camp at Ak Kaleh.

The Oghoorchelee Turkomans, who were under the Government of Mazanderan, have been transferred to that of Asterabad. Their revenue is 1,200 tomans a-year, and the Prince Governor issued orders that any of them found trading in future without his licence would be arrested and fined.

No. 4.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 12.)

My Lord, Tehran, October 29, 1878.

I HAVE been informed that General Llamakin has returned to Chat, where a fort is being built, and has established a camp at Chekishler, having procured supplies of food, winter clothing, Turkoman huts, and building implements there, and from Krasnovodsk.

The Téké Turkomans have attacked the Sheikhees, a tribe that are under the Russian rule, and live in the neighbourhood of Krasnovodsk. They are also building a fort with a ditch, and suitable for guns, under the direction of some Afghans, who are reported as belonging to the Jamsheedi tribe. The passes are being fortified, and they are reported as having 25,000 men in readiness.

The Yemoots are pressing urgently for payment of the value of their camels and cattle, which they had furnished to the Russians, and which had been lost during the expedition.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

No. 5.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 12.)

My Lord, Tehran, November 6, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose translations of two letters which I have received from the Asterabad Agent, containing information respecting the loss sustained by the recent expedition under General Llamakin to Akhal, and the proceedings of the Russians in the vicinity of the Attrek.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 5.

Private Letter from Asterabad, dated October 16, 1878.

(Translation.)

AFTER General Llamakin returned from Khoja Kaleh he came to Chat, and thence went to Bayat Hajji. The Téké horse followed him everywhere, and he retreated fighting until he got to Gumesh Teppeh. He left some men at Chat. The Tékés carried off a caravan of provisions, with the chief of the caravan, as well as two Cossacks. As for the report that seventy of the Turkomans were killed, it is false. Intelligence was received yesterday that a new official had arrived from Russia, with a sum of 12,000 tomans, who is buying up the Pampas grass at the rate of 5 or 6 krans per camel load, and storing it up. They are building a fort at Charkan, and have hoisted the Russian flag there, engaging the Turkomans of that place as servants. They have purchased 100 Turkoman tents, and are purchasing others. They are also building a fort at Chat. The Merv and Téké Turkomans, accompanied by the Jemsheedee Afghans, have come to Khojeh Kaleh, whence the Russians fled, and are fortifying the place and digging a moat round the fort, under the directions of some Afghans. About 25,000 Téké horse are now assembled here, and they are strengthening all the passes. All the Charva Yemoots have removed from those districts through fear of the Téké Turkomans. Some have come to the Goorgan Valley, and some have gone to the Attrek. The Tékés are daily increasing in force and numbers. A report was also received that 2,000 of them have gone in the direction of Boojnoord to make a raid. Affairs are in a bad state at present. It is also said here that the Afghans, having taken Seistan, intend marching upon Khorassan, and that the Téké Turkomans have joined them.

Inclosure 2 in No. 5.

The Asterabad Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.) October 21, 1878.

THE Prince Governor recently received 6,000 tomans for the troops—4,000 tomans in cash and 2,000 tomans in bills. He took the cash with him on the 15th to Ak Kaleh. He has full authority to send and bring in all the deserters, and to levy recruits to take the place of those missing, to punish all the culprits, and to repair the Fort of Ak Kaleh.

The Russian troops are dispersed at Chat, Bayat Hajji, and Chekishler. About 400 soldiers have been lost in the present expedition; some have died, and the rest have been cut off by the Téké Turkomans. The latter are felling trees for fortifying Khoja Kaleh, and they are going to throw up such fortifications as will enable them to work guns on them. Most of the Russian soldiers (who died) were killed by the Tékés when they were sent to escort a convoy of prisoners.

The Daz and Davajee tribes have not yet paid their annual taxes to the Prince Governor, nor has he sent anyone to recover them.

No. 6.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 12.)

My Lord, Tehran, November 6, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith translations of three letters which I have received from the Meshed Agent, containing information which had reached him from Afghanistan, Seistan, the Khorassan districts, and Turkoman territory.

He mentions the arrival in Khorassan from Cabul of the son of the late Shah Newaz Khan, Sirdar Iskender Khan. Shah Newaz Khan's brother, who was in the Russian service for some time after the family was driven out of Herat, and who has for several years resided in London, has lately also arrived in Persia. It is believed that he will apply for and probably obtain the pension hitherto granted by the Persian Government to his late brother.

I have, &c.
(Signed) RONALD F. THOMSON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 6.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.) October 22, 1878.

FOUR days ago the son of Shah Newaz Khan arrived here from Cabul with fourteen followers, en route for Tehran, by permission of Ameer Shere Ali Khan. His object is to look after his late father's estate. He informed me that the chief Russian officer who went on a mission to Cabul was still there, but that his assistant had returned. He also added that when he was in Kohistan an unknown person appeared, of whom the frontier authorities inquired who he was and whence he came. He replied that he was the bearer of petitions for the Shah and his Ministers from Sirdar Taj Mahomed Khan to the effect that he was a loyal servant and was ready to serve on condition that the Ameer of Kain should have no jurisdiction over him, or else he would take refuge with the English. He also added that the Sirdar had taken possession of Hoossein Abad and seized all the Government property and guns, and arrested the relations of the Ameer of Kain. The frontier authorities had him conveyed to Herat, and await the pleasure of the Governor as to whether he should be allowed to proceed to Persia or no.

I hear from Boojnoord that the Russians had retreated and were building a fort at Chat, that there are not more than 7,000 soldiers and 1,000 horse, and that the Russian General has gone to Krasnovodsk, but will return in a fortnight.

Seven days ago I received a letter from a friend at Serrekhs; he writes that news had been received from Chehar Jong that a party of Russian troops had been seen sailing up the Jaxartes, but that it was unknown whether they were going to Afghanistan or elsewhere.

Yesterday I went to visit the Guardian of the Holy Shrine; while there a letter was received from the Prince Governor, saying that at the onset he had dispatched horsemen with Allahyar Khan, Behbood Khan, the Governor of Khelat, and Kahramon (Khan) of Koochan, to the Fort of Chapeshlar, where the brother of Dowlat Moorad Khan was Governor, but that he fled on their approach. Dowlat Moorad Khan himself, on learning this, fled with forty or fifty Akhal Turkomans to the Fort of Noukhandan, and that he (the Prince Governor) had entered Chapeshlar, so that the affair of Derehgez may be considered as settled. The date of the Prince Governor's letter was the 20th October.

Inclosure 2 in No. 6.

The Meshed Agent to Mr. R. Thomson.

(Translation.) October 19, 1878.

A CORRESPONDENT at Herat writes on the 4th that there was an insurrection at Panj Sheer, and that Shere Ali Khan had dispatched Sirdar Abdullah Khan, formerly Governor of Herat, with three regiments, two squadrons of horse, and several guns against that place. There was great tyranny going on at Cabul, and the inhabitants were very weary of it. Three other regiments, accompanied by three ressalas of horse and six guns, have recently arrived at Candahar in order to guard the frontier near Peshany and Chalcote. Mohammed Saïd, son of Syed Shahdad of Peshany, is the Governor of Ghuznee. The aforesaid troops and guns will proceed to Mookr and be stationed there. Sirdar Meer Afzul Khan is the Governor, and Safdar Ali Khan the Commander-in-chief at Candahar, and Sultan Mohammed Khan the Deputy Governor; they intend strengthening the frontier of Peshany.

He also writes that intelligence had been received that a district in the neighbourhood of Meimaneh had also revolted, during which several of the Ameer's troops had been put to death, and that a force had been sent to suppress it. The Turkomans have also entered into Meimaneh.

Affairs at Herat are also in a state of confusion. In the last three days the Governor and the Commander-in-chief have been deliberating, and they have decided to send 2 regiments, 500 horsemen, and 6 mountain guns to Kohistan to guard the frontier, as it was reported that 1,500 Turkomans of the Yoola Tau tribe, horse and foot, intended making a raid into the Herat territory.

The son of Shah Newaz Khan has arrived at Herat from Cabul, en route for Tehran.

No. 7.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, December 13, 1878.

COUNT SCHOUVALOFF mentioned to me, in the course of conversation, on the 10th instant, that though the Russian Envoy who had been sent to Afghanistan had been recalled to Russia, the Russian Mission still remained at Cabul. I expressed great surprise at this statement, which was entirely new to me, and which, I was convinced, would be as new to my colleagues as to myself. I pointed out to him the untenable position taken up by the Russian Government, who admitted that the dispatch of a Mission had been an infraction of the understanding existing between the two countries only justified by the probability of war, but who now continued to maintain the Mission long after friendly relations had been fully re-established; and I earnestly urged upon him the expediency of withdrawing the Mission, the continued presence of which was entirely at variance with the engagements which were still in force between England and Russia. His Excellency admitted that the course followed by the Russian Government was abnormal.

He asked me whether I admitted that we had engaged to respect the independence of Afghanistan, basing his contention that such an engagement had been made by us upon the Memorandum contained in Lord Derby's despatch to Mr. Doria of the 25th October, 1875.

I said that all the engagements which we had taken, or which the Russian Government had taken, in that correspondence, I regarded as still binding; but I could not admit that the words used by Lord Derby went so far as to make the maintenance of the independence of Afghanistan a matter of engagement on our part towards Russia.

The discussion was renewed yesterday.

His Excellency intimated to me clearly that it was the intention of the Russian Government forthwith to withdraw their Mission. At the same time, he again asked me whether he might consider the understanding formerly arrived at with respect to Central Asia to be still in vigour; and whether we admitted that the recognition of Afghanistan as an independent State under British influence formed part of that understanding. He relied especially upon the language of the Memorandum of 1875.

I could only repeat England would adhere to all the undertakings she had given. The Memorandum did not, however, in our judgment, bear the construction which he placed upon it, and, therefore, I could not admit that we were under any engagement with respect to the independence of Afghanistan; but he might see from the speeches of Ministers in public that the maintenance of Afghanistan as an independent State under British influence was the policy which at present we desired to pursue.

Ultimately his Excellency observed that it might be desirable to reduce the substance of our conversation to the form of a note; a course to which I replied that I saw no objection.

I am, &c.
(Signed) SALISBURY.

No. 8.

Count Schouvaloff to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 19.)

Mon cher Lord Salisbury, Londres, le $\frac{7}{19}$ Décembre, 1878.

VOUS avez exprimé de la surprise en apprenant que la Mission Russe que vous avez cru avoir quitté Caboul s'y trouvait encore. Vous m'avez rappelé la déclarat on faite par M. le Sénateur de Giers au Chargé d'Affaires Britannique, concernant le caractère provisoire de cette Mission, envoyée dans des circonstances exceptionnelles et lorsqu'il était à craindre en effet qu'une guerre n'éclatât entre l'Angleterre et la Russie.

J'ai reçu un télégramme du Prince Gortchacow dans lequel il me charge de vous demander si les arrangements entre la Russie et l'Angleterre, tels qu'ils existaient avant l'envoi de la Mission et tels qu'ils sont consignés dans la correspondance échangée à ce sujet entre les deux Cabinets, sont maintenus par le Gouvernement de la Reine, et s'ils conservent à ses yeux leur caractère obligatoire.

Sa Majesté l'Empereur est disposé, pour sa part, à observer tous les arrangements relatifs à l'Asie Centrale conclus entre la Russie et l'Angleterre, et à rappeler immédiatement la Mission Russe qui se trouve à Caboul.

Veuillez, &c.
(Signé) SCHOUVALOFF.

(Translation.)

My dear Lord Salisbury, London, December $\frac{7}{19}$, 1878.

YOU have expressed surprise on learning that the Russian Mission, which you thought had left Cabul, was still there. You reminded me of the declaration made by M. de Giers to the British Chargé d'Affaires concerning the provisional character of this Mission, which was dispatched under exceptional circumstances, and at a time when it was to be feared that war might break out between England and Russia.

I have received a telegram from Prince Gortchacow, in which he charges me to ask you whether the arrangements between Russia and England, such as they existed before the dispatch of the Mission, and such as they are recorded in the correspondence exchanged on this subject between the two Cabinets, are maintained by Her Majesty's Government, and whether they retain in their eyes their obligatory character.

His Majesty the Emperor is disposed, on his part, to observe all the arrangements relative to Central Asia concluded between Russia and England, and to recall immediately the Mission which is at Cabul.

(Signed) SCHOUVALOFF.

No. 9.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Count Schouvaloff.

My dear Count Schouvaloff, Foreign Office, December 19, 1878.

IN reply to your letter of this day's date, I have to state to your Excellency that the continued presence of the Russian Mission at Cabul is the sole obstacle to a full revival of the understanding between the two Powers expressed in the correspondence which has passed between them upon the subject of Afghanistan and Central Asia; and when the Russian Mission is withdrawn, Her Majesty's Government will consider that all engagements on both sides with respect to those countries retain their obligatory character.

I have, &c.
(Signed) SALISBURY.

No. 10.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Lord A. Loftus.

(Telegraphic.) Foreign Office, December 19, 1878.

I WAS informed to-day by the Russian Ambassador that instructions had been sent to the Mission to withdraw from Cabul.

No. 11.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 25.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, December 20, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship, in translation by Mr. Michell, an article from the "Golos" of this day, which contains a letter, dated the $\frac{1st}{13th}$ October, from its correspondent at Cabul.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 11.

Extract from the "Golos" of December 20, 1878.

(Translation from the Russian.)

THE "Golos" (No. 339) of the $\frac{8}{20}$th December, 1878, contains the following letter, dated the $\frac{1st}{13th}$ October last, from its correspondent at Cabul:—

"As a caravan is to start to-morrow or the day after, I shall communicate some extracts out of my diary to you.

"General Stoletoff's Mission entered Cabul on the $\frac{29th\ July}{10th\ August}$ under the circumstances already described, and was lodged in the Bala Hissar Palace . . . . . The official visit of the Russians to the Ameer was made on the following day, the $\frac{30th\ July}{11th\ August}$. All the members of the Mission were in gala uniform, and although the Ameer's Palace was only about 50 fathoms distant, they proceeded on horseback to it, escorted by twelve Cossacks and a detachment of Afghan guards. The Ameer received the Mission on an open terrace which faces a garden, and which served as a hall of audience. The reception took place in the presence of a few high functionaries. On the presentation of each member of the Mission the Ameer paid him some compliment, or made a jocose remark. Thus, on the presentation of Malevinski, who was attached to the Mission as English interpreter, the Ameer, with a simulation of anxiety, said he hoped that Malevinski, as an Englishman and interpreter, was not the bearer of fire and sword through Afghanistan. . . . . The Ameer shook hands with each member as he was presented by General Stoletoff, retaining his seat on a gilt chair. The Ameer was very amiable with all. . . . . The audience lasted about an hour, the conversation being very animated and on many topics, ... In the evening the town was brilliantly illuminated, and there was a display of fireworks and Bengal lights.

On the $\frac{31st\ July}{12th\ August}$, at noon, the highest Afghan dignitaries—the Vizier, Dabir-ul-Mulk, and some others, came to inquire after the health of the members of the Mission. Having exchanged compliments, the Vizier and General Stoletoff were left alone for the purpose of negotiation. This order of things was generally observed during the succeeding days; the Vizier and Dabir-ul-Mulk used to appear about mid-day, and work at the Treaty with Stoletoff. Stoletoff went several times to the Ameer, especially when a difficulty arose between the negotiators. The Treaty had general reference to the Afghan system of administration, to the question of succession, the recognition by Russia of the existing political régime in Afghanistan, &c. As regards the conclusion of an offensive and defensive alliance between Russia and Afghanistan, this is a pure invention on the part o.

the English journalists, who made an elephant out of a fly. I can positively assert that there is nothing of the kind in the Treaty; nevertheless, Russia in this Treaty binds herself morally to support the integrity and independence of Afghanistan. . . . ."

The correspondent then describes the illness and treatment of Abdulla Khan, and his subsequent death.

"The labours of General Stoletoff and the Afghan Representatives proceeded from day to day, but several drafts of the Treaty had to be made before a final understanding was arrived at.

"On the conclusion of the negotiations Shere Ali Khan informed General Stoletoff he had received information that the English were also desirous of sending a Mission to Cabul, and that they wanted to know whether the Ameer would receive it. At the same time the Ameer observed that, in his opinion, the English had nothing to do in Cabul, and that he therefore intended to refuse the English request. The Ameer, however, asked General Stoletoff's advice as to the course he should pursue in the case. General Stoletoff gave an evasive reply, which was neither of an affirmative nor yet of a negative nature. He, nevertheless, gave the Ameer to understand that the simultaneous presence of the Missions of two States, which were at almost hostile relations with each other, would not be very convenient. Thereupon the Ameer decided to answer by a refusal.

* * * * *

"On the $\frac{12}{24}$th August General Stoletoff, accompanied by the Doctor and escorted by ten Cossacks, left for Tashkend, which place we hear he reached on the $\frac{4}{16}$th September, after a fatiguing journey of twenty-two days, and extending over 1,300 versts. The following members of the Mission still remain at Cabul:—Colonel Rosgonoff, Benderski (topographer), Malevinski (interpreter), Sub-Lieutenants Nazaroff and Zaaman Bek, with eleven Cossacks and attendants."

No. 12.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 6.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, January 1, 1879.

I HAVE the honour to inclose, in translation by Mr. Michell, an account given by the "Moscow Gazette" of the movements of the Russian detachment which marched last summer from Petro-Alexandroffsk, along the Oxus, having in view Kizil-Rabat for its ultimate destination.

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 12.

Extract from the "Moscow Gazette" of December $\frac{9}{21}$, 1878.

(Translation from the Russian.)

THE "Moscow Gazette" of the $\frac{9th}{21st}$ December, 1878, contains the following account, written by a correspondent, of the movement of the Russian detachment that marched last summer from Fort Petro-Alexandroffsk to the Oxus, having in view Kizil-Rabat for its utimate destination:—

"On the $\frac{15}{27}$th July our detachment, consisting of six companies of infantry, two sotnias of Cossacks, and four guns, left the encampment at Fort Petro-Alexandroffsk.

We were ordered to proceed up the course of the Oxus, keeping to the right bank. On reaching Fort Chardjui, situated on the left bank of the Oxus (south-west of Bokhara) the detachment was to halt and there await further orders. The advance of the detachment did not differ from previous expeditions undertaken by detachments from Turkestan; over the heated sandy plain, encountering violent gusts of wind, which raised large clouds of sand, and, and with the temperature at 42° Reaumur, the soldiers marched as on a parade-ground. The drifting sand proved the greatest obstacle to the advance of the troops: the feet of the soldiers and horses sinking deep into the friable sand at every step; the wheels of the gun-carriages sank almost to the axletrees, so that the horses were continually straining at their loads, owing to the increased force of resistance.

* * * * * * *

"And so we ascended the Oxus along the right bank, gradually approaching Bokhara. The men were in remarkably buoyant spirits. No doubts as to the practicability of marching to India were entertained; but the famous Berlin Congress pronounced its mandate. We retraced our steps. The extreme point of our advance was Kizil-Rabat."

No. 13.

Mr. R. Thomson to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 16.)

(Telegraphic.) Tehran, January 16, 1879.

IT would seem that the Russian detachment at Chat, consisting of 600 men, is in a critical position. The place is said to be surrounded by the Akhal Turkomans. They have also attacked Chekishler and carried off all the camels collected there from under the guns of the Ashourada squadron sent to protect the place.

No. 14.

Lord A. Loftus to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 20.)

My Lord, St. Petersburgh, January 15, 1879.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to your Lordship a leading article, of a semi-official character, from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" on the reported intention of Shere Ali to invite the mediation of Europe in his conflict with England, an intention which the article designates as a "generous illusion."

I have, &c.
(Signed) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

Inclosure in No. 14.

Extract from the "Journal de St. Pétersbourg" of December 29, 1878 / January 10, 1879.

IL se confirme que l'Amir de Caboul a quitté ses Etats et a réclamé l'hospitalité de la Russie. Il ressort des nouvelles mêmes publiées par les journaux Anglais sur les événements militaires, que ce ne sont pas les succès remportés par les troupes Anglo-Indiennes qui ont forcé Shir Ali à chercher asile à l'étranger. Le but du voyage entrepris par ce Souverain est, nous assure-t-on, d'invoquer la médiation de l'Europe, et de rendre les Puissances Continentales juges de son conflit avec l'Angleterre.

Généreuse illusion, s'il en fût! Amir Shir Ali ne s'est pas rendu compte de cette circonstance qu'une médiation n'est exercée que si elle est réclamée ou du moins admise par les deux parties intéressées, ce qui, dans l'espèce, est fort peu probable. Le Souverain de l'Afghanistan se trouve à cette heure sur le sol Russe, et il va de soi qu'il y rencontrera la sympathique hospitalité qui lui est due. Nous ignorons encore si, à la suite des explications et des éclaircissements qui ne sauraient tarder à lui être fournis sur les chances de son excursion, il jugera devoir la continuer.

CENTRAL ASIA. No. 1 (1879).

FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE respecting Central Asia.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. 1879.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY HARRISON AND SONS.

BOMBAY BRANCH
OF THE
Royal Asiatic Society.
CLASS

CENTRAL ASIA AND QUETTA.

RETURN to an Address of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 20 February 1879;—for,

"COPIES of DESPATCHES from the Governor General of India in Council to the Secretary of State, dated the 23rd day of January 1867, No. 15; the 8th day of February 1867, No. 28; the 23rd day of February 1867, No. 42; and the 23rd day of October 1867, No. 162, with MINUTES enclosed, on CENTRAL ASIA and QUETTA:"

"And, of the REPLY of the Secretary of State, dated the 26th day of December 1867."

India Office,
24 February 1879.

EDWARD STANHOPE,
Under Secretary of State for India.

(Mr. Grant Duff.)

Ordered, by The House of Commons, to be Printed,
25 February 1879.

BOMBAY BRANCH
OF THE
Royal Asiatic Society.
CLASS

PAPERS

RELATING TO

CENTRAL ASIA AND QUETTA.

— No. 1 —

(Foreign Department.—Political.—No. 15.)

To the Right Honourable Viscount Cranborne, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord, Fort William, 23 January 1867.

WE beg to forward, for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, copy of a correspondence with the Government of Bombay on a proposal emanating from Lieutenant Colonel Sir Henry Green, K.C.S.I., Political Superintendent on the Scinde frontier, which has for its ultimate object the occupation of Quetta, at the northern entrance of the Bolan Pass, by a British force.

2. We are unanimously opposed to the project, and have conveyed our rejection of it to the Bombay Government in decided terms.

3. It is the intention of some Members of this Government to set forth in detailed Minutes the objections which they entertain to the scheme, especially in its military aspect. These Minutes shall be transmitted to your Lordship by an early opportunity.

We have, &c.

(signed) John Lawrence.
W. R. Mansfield.
H. S. Maine.
W. Grey.
G. N. Taylor.
W. N. Massey.
H. M. Durand.

Enclosure 1, in No. 1.

From C. Gonne, Esq., Secretary to Government, Bombay, to the Secretary to the Government of India, in the Foreign Department, Calcutta (No. 62), dated the 26th December 1866.

I AM directed to forward to you, for submission to the Right Honourable the Governor General in Council, the enclosed copy of a confidential memorandum by Lieutenant Colonel Sir H. Green, C.B., K.C.S.I., containing "suggestions for the protection of the North-West Frontier of India."

2. I am also desired to forward copies of Minutes by his Excellency the Governor and his Excellency the Commander in Chief, recording their views on the important subject discussed by Sir H. Green, and to convey the recommendation of this Government that a grant of 50,000 rupees per annum may be placed at the disposal of the Political Superintendent on the Sind frontier for the next two years for the purpose of carrying out the preliminary objects contemplated by him. Dated the 26th November and 6th December 1866 respectively.

3. His Excellency in Council desires me to add that we already possess the power of establishing a Political Officer (who is frequently at Khelat) in the manner suggested by his Excellency the Commander in Chief.

Enclosure 2, in No. 1.

SUGGESTIONS for the Protection of the North-West Frontier of India, with reference to the Advance of the Russians in Central Asia, by Lieutenant Colonel Sir H. Green, C.B., K.C.S.I., Political Superintendent and Commandant on the Sind Frontier. Confidential, dated United Service Club, Pall Mall, the 16th August 1866.

HAVING maturely considered the disturbing effects which are being caused along our Indian frontier, and in India itself, by the continuous advance of Russia, I am most decidedly of opinion that it is absolutely necessary that a position be occupied in advance of our present line of frontier, not with a view of attempting to stay Russian progress, but with a view of being prepared to meet her with advantage on our side under any circumstances that may occur.

After a careful study of the letters of the late General John Jacob to Lord Canning,* which are to be found in a book entitled "Views and Opinions of General John Jacob," pages 375 to 398, I have few remarks to offer upon the subject. The arguments in favour of the scheme there proposed, and the details for carrying it out, are so clear and concise that little can be added. I think, however, that it might be to some extent modified, and that a very great object would be obtained by carrying out the occupation of Quetta in such a manner as to prevent the necessity of directing any sudden movement of troops towards the north, which might be construed, in the present excitable state of the public mind in India, as a deliberate advance to attack Russia, or to repeat the occurrences in Affghanistan of 1839 and 1840.

I consider, therefore, that the first object would be to gradually and in a peaceable manner clear the road leading towards the head of the Bolan Pass. To explain the feasibility of such a proceeding it will be necessary to give a slight sketch of the intervening country and its present political status. For a more elaborate description I must refer to Masson's "History of Beloochistan," Vol. 4, and to the Report of the Political Agents to the Bombay Government from 1856 to the present date.

The whole of the country lying to the north of our north-west frontier of Sind, and extending from between Affghanistan and the British territory, is denominated Beloochistan, and is composed of a succession of mountains and valleys, and is inhabited by nomad tribes, whose principal occupation is that of attending cattle and sheep, of which latter they have enormous flocks. They move their encampments according to the seasons and the pasturage. The whole country is portioned out between these tribes, certain lands being reserved for the chief ruler, styled Khan, from the produce of which and from certain transit dues levied upon merchandise passing through his country, he derives his revenue. The Khan exerts a certain amount of control over these tribes, but much depends upon his personal character.

The first relations we had with the Belooch tribes was in 1838, when our army, under Sir John Keane, advanced through the Bolan Pass to Affghanistan, and during which march the troops and baggage were much harassed by Belooch marauders. As a punishment for this misconduct, Sir T. Willtshire, on the return of the army from Cabool, stormed Khelat, the capital of Beloochistan, killing the chief, Merab Khan, father of the present ruler, Meer Khodadad Khan.

It would take up too much time to enter into all the events which followed the fall of Khelat, and which are to be found in the records of Government. It will suffice for the present purpose to state that, after the above event, the political relations between the British and Belooch became gradually of a more and more satisfactory nature, when in 1854, the late General John Jacob, then Commanding and Political Superintendent on the frontier of Sind, proceeded to Khelat, and concluded a treaty with the Khan, the IV. Article of which is as follows: "Should it be deemed necessary to station British troops in any part of the territory of Khelat, they shall occupy such positions as may be thought advisable by the British authorities."

The VIth. Article provided an annual subsidy of 50,000 rupees to the Khan, to aid him in carrying into effect the provisions of the treaty, besides reducing to a moderate and fixed sum the transit duties on merchandise passing through Beloochistan.

At the breaking out of the Persian War in 1856, and at the request of the Khan, a Political Officer was dispatched to his court on the part of the British Government, who remained there during the Indian rebellion, during which period the Khan and people of Beloochistan remained our true and faithful allies, never in any manner taking advantage of our troubles, nor of the reduction of the troops in Sind, and turning a deaf ear to all the overtures of our enemies to cause disturbance or trouble on our frontier.

During the residence of the different Political Agents at the Belooch Court a squadron from the Sind Horse formed their escort, and always moved with them in their tours, made in every part of the country, sometimes accompanied by the Khan, sometimes alone. By this means, and during a period of four years, these officers (Lieutenant Colonel Sir H. Green and Lieutenant Colonel Malcolm Green) became thoroughly acquainted with the people and the country, as well as with its resources; and, from the exact discipline maintained in the Sind Horse, and the payment in ready money for all articles supplied, caused the advent of their camps in any part of the country to be hailed with joy. The tribes tribes also became used to the appearance of British troops, and saw that wherever they appeared peace and plenty followed, and gradually came to understand that the only object of the mission was peace, and that the British Government had no object or wish to annex or take their country from them.

---

* See Appendix.

In 1862, at a time when the Political Agent was unavoidably absent, internal dissensions broke out amongst the tribes, which led to the dethronement of the then ruling khan, and the substitution of his cousin; little or no bloodshed, however, took place, and the usurper, having been unable to retain his position for more than a few months, was murdered, and Meer Khodadad Khan again resumed his hereditary position, which he at present retains, and continues to show on the part of himself and people a most marked friendship for the British Government. A confidential agent from him resides at the frontier town of Jacobabad, and every possible means are taken to meet the wishes of the British authorities so far as it lies in the Khan's power.

It must, however, be understood that the influence exerted over these tribes by the Khan is not so great as could be wished, and more particularly over those situated any distance from the seat of his government; but this influence for good would be greatly increased by more assistance and countenance being afforded him by the British Government. Of these tribes the two most warlike are the Murrees and the Boogtees. These are located in the mountains named after them, and which run parallel to the frontier of Sind until they meet the Soolima range, running along the Punjab border, from opposite Mittuncote to Peshawur. Branching north from the northern side of the Sind desert, opposite Jacobabad, they meet at Dadur, the great Brahoe range, which runs nearly due north from Kurrachee, and near the above place (Dadur) form the entrance of the Bolan Pass. Between the upper portion of these two ranges, before they narrow at Dadur, is situated the province of Cutchee, or Cutch Gundava, having a length of about 110 miles and an average breadth of 60. This province forms the richest portion of the Khan's territory, and is capable, under good management, of returning a fair amount of revenue; and as through it and the Bolan Pass the advance to Quetta would have to be made, it will be necessary to dwell upon its character and resources.

It is separated from Sind by a desert of about 25 miles in breadth, but which extends in length up to or beyond Dhera Ismail Khan, on the Punjab frontier. That portion of which we are now speaking, and which extends along the Sind frontier, is yearly decreasing by the extension of cultivation, caused by the irrigational canals, which are carried far into it, and I have every reason to hope that in a very few years the desert of Sind will be a thing of the past.

Having crossed this desert we enter the province of Cutch Gundava, belonging to the Khelat State, as before mentioned; it is situated between two ranges of hills, the Murree and Boogtee to the east and north-east, and the Brahoe to the west.

The province is partly dependent on rain for cultivation, which usually falls during the winter and spring. From the month of April until September the heat is almost unbearable, but during the remainder of the year the climate is cool and pleasant.

The province contains three principal towns, Gundava to the west, situated at the entrance of the Gundava Pass, Bagh about the centre, and Dadur to the north, at the entrance of the Bolan Pass. These three towns and portions of the country around them belong to the Khan, and are what may be called Crown land, the revenue from which is annually farmed to some Hindoo merchant, and forms the principal portion of the Khan's personal revenue. The whole of the remaining portion, with the exception of the north-east corner called Seebee and Kujjuch, belonging to the Affghans, is portioned out amongst the Brahoe and Belooch tribes, who, when the winter sets in the surrounding mountains, migrate with their flocks to the plains of Cutchee, returning again to the hills as the intense heats of summer arrive. The province is, therefore, to them of vital importance.

The whole of these tribes, without a single exception, inhabit the Brahoe or western mountains, of which Khelat is the capital. They are peaceably inclined, thinking of little beyond their flocks, but capable, if irritated by unjust treatment, of combining and causing great disturbances. They can muster about 40,000 armed men.

We must now proceed to the hills styled Murree and Boogtee, which run to the east and north-east of the province, and in which are located a race of freeboters, who, until the arrival of the late General John Jacob on the frontier of Sind, were in the habit of plundering in large bodies of horse and foot up to the very gates of Shikarpore, and who during our advance into Affghanistan harassed our baggage and communications in every way, and whom our troops had constantly to meet in fight, which did not always result in our favour.

The Boogtee tribe, being nearer the frontier, after the conquest and occupation of Sind came first in contact with us, and until 1847 our border was kept in a constant state of anarchy and bloodshed. The first real check that this tribe received was at the hands of the present Colonel Merewether, C.B., who, at the head of a squadron of 1st Sind Horse, met and destroyed nearly the whole tribe, leaving 600 of their best men dead on the field. Since this event, although the tribe at times has made spasmodic efforts to return to its old plundering habits, they have now entirely given in, and the advance of the whole of the Sind frontier posts has rendered any future efforts at evil on their part impossible. There only, therefore, remain the Murrees. This tribe, being located to the north of the Boogtee, has not come so much into immediate contact with our frontier officers as the latter, and although at times it has attempted raids within the British frontier, they have always always been met and repulsed with such loss to the tribe by the detachments of Sind Horse, that they may be said to have relinquished all hopes of success in the Sind direction. They, however, make up for this by their constant raiding into the province of Cutchee, which they enter in bodies of from 400 to 800 horsemen, laying waste the whole country. These raids generally take place when the Brahoe tribes have returned to their hills at the setting in of the hot season, and the Khan, from the poverty of his exchequer, is unable to maintain a sufficient force to keep his border. The above tribe, then, is the only one with which we should have to deal in Cutchee.

The greater part of this province is capable of excellent cultivation, and even now a very large amount of rich grain of every sort is produced, which is exported into Sind and Affghanistan; and could peace and civilisation be gradually introduced, a great increase would take place, as very much land now lays waste in its most fertile parts on account of the fear of Murree raids.

We now come to the Bolan Pass, but as this has been so often and so fully described by others, it is needless for me to enter into a description. I may, however, mention that I have frequently marched through it, and that there exists no difficulties with regard to the road; and I believe, if the measures I proposed are adopted, its transit may be made as safe from molestation as the most public thoroughfare in London.

Having passed the Bolan, a plain of 25 miles has to be crossed, and we arrive at a small fort styled Quetta, or Shawl.

I have long studied this position, and my Reports from the spot addressed to the Bombay Government will show my opinion formed long since: It appears to me to be a strategical point, remarkably adapted for meeting all comers, as friends or foes, from the west towards the east. If an enemy advance, it forms, as the late General Jacob aptly styled it, the "bastion of the front attack." If friends arrive, it is, without exception, the best possible position to form a mart for the reception of goods from Central Asia, which can pass down the Bolan to meet a future railroad at Dadur, and to be transported thence in 48 hours to the port of embarkation, Kurrachee.

From it nothing can occur in Central Asia of which we should not have immediate knowledge, and be able to provide accordingly. In our present position we are hidden behind a screen of mountains, of the occurrences beyond which we know nothing, and in consequence of our distance from Candahar, Herat, &c., a hostile force might be assembled in those districts without our knowledge, whereas by a telegraphic communication with Quetta any movement inimical to us occurring in almost any part of Central Asia might be immediately made known in Calcutta and London. Our advance would carry with it all the advantages of civilisation, and our presence would cause peace and plenty to follow us where now anarchy and confusion reign. All that is required is, that our advance should be made gradually, and under men who understand the people, have heart in their work, and who are earnestly and truly working for good ends; if such be the case, they will find no difficulty, but every assistance given them, and blessings at every step they advance.

I will now proceed to the measures I would propose for carrying into effect this scheme.

First, we must be most careful not to shake the confidence of the nomad tribes of Beloochistan in the honesty of our purpose towards them, and that we have no intention of taking from them one rood of land, or to introduce any of our laws; and that the whole country will be as ever for them to range over with their flocks and herds. We must make them clearly understand that we merely require a free passage through their country, and that compensation will be given to any tribe on or through whose lands we have to build or make roads. Quetta and the great part of the land around belongs to the Khan, who would only too willingly give us any portion in return for the security we should afford him against an Affghan invasion. All must see and feel that our presence brings peace and plenty; there must be no attempt to try and force on civilisation amongst them: if we set a good example, all that we can desire on this point will gradually follow.

As I have before mentioned, the Murree tribe is the main cause which prevents peace and plenty existing in Cutchee, and with whom it would be first necessary for us to deal before we advanced. There are two methods of dealing with them: one by a direct attack on their hills, and thus forcing them to surrender; the other by taking a part of the tribe into our pay. The first plan offers little difficulty, and if properly carried out and with a sufficient force, little opposition would be met with; but it would be somewhat costly, and we should have for some time to occupy positions in their hills, and I further consider that these little frontier wars ought to be avoided if possible. But these races of freebooters are generally forced to plunder, either in search of food, or from motives of revenge; and I am of opinion that, if the former can be by some means provided, they will soon give up the risk they run of having to provide for themselves sword in hand. I would, therefore, take 200 of their best horsemen, including their most noted leaders, into our pay, and make them the police of Cutchee.

This latter plan has been tried with great success with other tribes, and at one time when our army was in Affghanistan a portion of the Murree tribe was in our pay, and, I believe, behaved very well and with good faith.

They should be stationed under their own hills, and made responsible for raids committed by their own people. One of their principal chiefs should reside at Jacobabad. Long experience of semi-barbarous tribes has proved to me that nothing tames them so much much as regular pay and food; once having touched this, they seldom return to their old habits, and their families and relations partaking, to a certain degree, of the little luxuries which ready money enables them to procure, urge them to remain peaceable members of society. I believe that by this means the whole tribe might be gradually brought under subjection. The details must be left to the Political Superintendent on the Sind frontier. I estimate the expense at about 60,000 rupees per annum (6,000 l.). At the time of taking these men into our pay, I would increase the present subsidy received by the Khan of Khelat, by the addition of another 50,000 rupees, or 5,000 l. per annum. During the time of the Indian rebellion this additional sum was granted, and subsequently, in a most impolitic manner, in my opinion, withdrawn. This would bind him still more to us, and enable him to exert in our favour considerable influence over his people, for money gives great power amongst the semi-barbarous tribes, as it does amongst the highest order of civilisation.

Having made the above arrangement, I would allow matters to rest for a time; the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad frequently moving himself, or sending some officer under his command, in whose discretion he has perfect confidence, to move about Beloochistan accompanied by an escort, interfering as little as possible in the affairs of the country. But to effect the above it will be absolutely necessary to make a small increase to the frontier field force by making up the regiment of cavalry to 600, instead of as at present, 500 sabres. By the above means I believe that in one year the province of Cutchee would be as quiet and peaceable as any county in England. I would then take the Bolan Pass in hand by subsidising and forming a police from the tribes which inhabit it. The expense of this would probably amount to another 60,000 rupees, or 6,000 l., per annum. Having accomplished this and secured our communication, a small compact force might be detached from the Sind Frontier Brigade and encamped at Quetta, a spot being carefully selected for the formation of a camp of any extent. No particular notice would then be taken of our proceeding either within India or beyond it, and we might then firmly establish ourselves. In the meantime it is to be hoped that the Governments of England and India would have turned their attention more to the advantage to be derived from the scheme than they have yet done, and that a railroad will have connected Kotree, Sukkur, and Mooltan, and that a branch line will be in progress from Sukkur to Dadur, the foot of the Bolan, by which means, in case of war, Kurrachee would become our basis of operations, and, if peace continue, it would become the harbour of import and export for the whole trade of Central Asia.

In return for our outlay we shall be repaid by increased peace on our frontier, which always leads to an increase of revenue, the advancement of civilisation, and the possession, without an exhibition of physical force or any disturbing causes, of a position commanding the entrance to India, and from which we could observe anything that occurred from outside for or against our Eastern power.

The above is no visionary scheme. I have seen a much more difficult one carried out under my own eyes on the Sind frontier by the late General John Jacob. When he arrived there nothing existed but a howling wilderness; all was anarchy and bloodshed; not a tree grew; drinking water was scarcely procurable; but 20 years of earnest, honest work has created a flourishing town with peace and plenty. The desert is gradually becoming cultivated. The lawless inhabitants are its cultivators, and the bloody deeds for which it was famous are almost forgotten. Why not, then, continue the good work?

I will now take a glance at what will probably occur should we still continue to close our eyes to all that is taking place beyond our border.

It is useless to deny that of late years, and from many causes, our prestige has not fallen, or that the steady advance of Russia, and her frequent successes, have had no effect on the native mind both within and beyond our Indian limits.

I can from experience speak more of that produced beyond, and it is to the effect that Russia is destined to become the dominant power in Asia, and that we fear her; and neighbouring States have long been discussing the question on which side they should range themselves.

Afzul Khan, who has now made himself master of Affghanistan from Candahar to Balk, is a man of strong character, bold, daring, and enterprising, an excellent soldier, and the chosen of all the military restless spirits in Affghanistan. When he has firmly established himself, he will probably look round for the best means of maintaining his position, and will either seek an alliance with us or with Russia; he will probably first come to us, and, on meeting with no encouragement, will side with Russia. Should he meet with success, or without it, he will probably look to increasing his territory, or, what appears at present the fashion, seek a rectification of his frontier.

Beloochistan not many years ago owed allegiance to the Affghans. Should Afzul Khan cast his eyes in that direction, there is nothing to prevent his incorporating it in his own territory, or occupying Quetta and holding it for Russia. In such a position we could no longer hope or expect that the Belooch nation would continue friendly to us, in which case a large increase would have to be made in our Sind force; and from above the Pass any amount of intrigues prejudicial to our rule might be hatched, and when the time suited, probably when the Eastern question is again brought forward, and we may be again at war with Russia and straining every nerve to hold our own in Europe, a great part of our European troops withdrawn from India and unable to be replaced, we may then have a horde of Affghan and Persian Horse, led by Russian officers, pouring into Sind, and doing more harm in a few days to our prestige than years of success would make up for. Or Russia might ignore the whole transaction; but the harm would be done, and we should have a border war from Kurrachee to Peshawur. Russia could injure us considerably without a regular Russian soldier approaching within 500 miles of our frontier.

There are thousands of wild spirits in Central Asia, with everything to gain and nothing to lose, who only require a leader, and who would be only too eager for a raid into India; and, unfortunately for us, there are thousands under our rule who would be ready to assist them.

I, however, maintain that nothing of this sort could occur would our statesmen turn their attention in time to the defence of our frontier, and take up such a position as to prevent the possibility of anything prejudicial to our rule occurring without our being able to see and counteract it in time.

In conclusion, I would remark that the opinions expressed in this Paper have been formed after 18 years previous experience of the country, and people of which they treat, and a long and careful study of the subject taken from every point of view.

Enclosure 3, in No. 1.

APPENDIX.

EXTRACTS of LETTERS from the late General John Jacob, written in 1856, to the late Lord Canning, Governor General of India, and Sir H. Green.

SUGGESTIONS towards the permanent Defence of the North-West Frontier of India.

IT seems to me that, if arrangements for the permanent defence of our north-west frontier be not speedily applied and manfully carried out, they will have caused the loss of our Indian Empire within the next generation of men.

The first enormous error consisted in not at once, after your report of the state of the Turkish army at Erzeroom, sending a strong force, under an able commander, to that country, and then driving every Russian back to the north of the Caucasian range; the next error was allowing Kars to be taken; and thirdly, after all this had been committed, another egregious error was perpetrated in not making Russia withdraw from Turkish Armenia before we moved a man out of the Crimea.

The fall of Kars caused Persia to quarrel with our Ambassador; but the true Oriental cunning, wishing to be prepared for our ultimate success, the Persian Government pre tended that the quarrel was personal only.

Now Kars is still held by Russia, and Persia invades Beloochistan and Affghanistan, being, of course, quite convinced that we have been well beaten and that Russia is all-powerful. This effect is all that Russia proposed to produce by the delay in evacuating Kars, &c. She will now withdraw, and remain apparently perfectly quiescent.

But the result will be that Russia, all-powerful in Persia, will use that country as she pleases, herself unseen all the while; she will, as she is now in fact doing, endeavour quietly and steadily to place Persia in settled possession of Herat, and probably of Candahar, as well as of a considerable portion of Beloochistan.

While firmly securing her hold of these countries by means of the Persian Government, Russia will be recruiting her own strength for another European war. In this it is possible, though in my opinion not altogether probable, France may not be our ally. If we remain friends with France, the renewal of the war will only be deferred a little; but in any case, whenever the next occasion of war may arise, Russia will, under the policy she is now pursuing in the East, be able to occupy not Herat only, but Candahar, with an army of 50,000 Europeans and as much Persian rabble as she pleases, before we have begun to think seriously about the matter: and Russia might then soon be in full possession of the Punjab and Sind, in spite of all the tardy efforts of our stupid and unwieldy, though really gigantic, strength.

It is Ulysses and Polyphemus all over! I would now make the giant mind his eye.

If not, if we persist in our present blindness, and our Rulers, instead of attending to questions of really vital importance, persist in occupying themselves in miserable fidding about the salaries of the hardest working men on earth, while they should be looking the coming danger to the whole empire fairly in the face, then good bye to England's Eastern power; we shall gradually recede further and further, till all be lost.

The time for action is now, and the wise proceeding is that which I have proposed. Nothing short of this will answer, or will be safe.

By the arrangements proposed we should place between us and the enemy several wild and warlike nations devoted to our service, and render it impossible for an European army to approach our Indian frontiers with hostile intent.

Ultimately Herat might become an English fortress; but this move would not be required for many years, and long before it had become advisable to make it, all Affghanistan would be devoted to us.

However,

However, looking onward to a great European war, with a fortress at Herat, and a garrison of 20,000 men there (which would not necessarily involve any increase to our Indian army, or at least to its cost), India would be as firmly locked in our grasp as if surrounded by the ocean; for no invader could ever enter by any of the paths over the Hindoo Khoosh, &c., without exposing his flank or rear to destructive attacks from a strong force, fresh, vigorous, and well supplied, from the garrison of Herat.

But this is looking far forward to the time when Russia, having been shut out from her long-cherished schemes towards Constantinople, shall have again matured her preparations for advance in a new direction, and have poured her whole strength on our Indian frontier.

At present all that is required to be done is to ensure the certainty of success and security on our frontier.

I have for long past thought over the subject of the arrangements proper to secure our north-western frontier of India permanently in such a manner as to obviate the necessity of any alarm, unusual stir, or hasty operations of any kind, in consequence of movements of enemies, or possible enemies, from without.

At present it appears to me that we are, in a great measure, in the position of a mighty army without any outposts of any kind. The whole host is liable to be perplexed and disturbed to its centre even by any small body of adventurers who may confidently approach its unwieldy strength with impunity.

It seems to me that we now have the best possible opportunity of remedying this state of things; an opportunity offering a combination of circumstances favourable to our purpose, such as must very rarely occur.

Beloochistan is entirely at our disposal, the people being really most friendly towards us, and since the late treaty with Khelat more so than ever; Dost Mahomed and the Affghans generally are inclined to favour our advances, and the fairest possible reason for precautionary measures on our part exists in the Persian advance to Herat and through Seistan, while we have peace throughout the old provinces of India and in Europe, with perfectly settled tranquillity in Sind and in the Punjab.

There are but two great roads into our Indian Empire from the north-west; but two roads, in fact, by which it is possible for a modern army to march.

One of these, the Bolan, lies through an entirely friendly country. The Khelat territory extends to Pesheen, 40 miles beyond the head of the pass, in the table-land of Affghanistan, and is inhabited by Belooch and Brahoee tribes, who are of an entirely different race from the Affghans.

The road through the Bolan is, even at present, generally good, and sufficiently easy for an army to proceed by it with all its artillery, stores, &c. This road is also the shortest from Herat to British India, and is the natural outlet to the ocean of the commerce of a very large portion of Central Asia.

From the foot of the Bolan one continuous and almost dead level plain extends for nearly 600 miles through Cutchee and Sind to the sea.

The only other great road, the Khyber, is very differently circumstanced. The people are unfriendly and barbarous, the country is far more difficult, and the distance greater, while there is already a strong division of our army at Peshawur, so that we are tolerably well secured in that quarter; quite sufficiently secured, indeed, under the arrangements contemplated by me, because from Quetta we could operate on the flank and rear of any army attempting to proceed towards the Khyber Pass, so that, with a British force at Quetta, the other road would be shut to an invader, inasmuch as we could reach Herat itself before an invading army could even arrive at Cabul.

Such a position would form the bastion of the front attack, and nothing could, with hope of success, be attempted against us until this salient were disposed of. We may, I think, then, leave the Khyber without further discussion of the statistics of this road at present, and confine our attention to the Bolan.

The more the matter is considered in all its bearings, relations, and consequences, the more certain it will appear that there should be a good British force at Quetta, a good-made road from that place through the Bolan Pass to Dadur, and thence continued through Cutchee to the British frontier, to connect with the lines of road in Sind. The portion of this road from Dadur to the sea must, I think, eventually become a railway, but probably not till a very long period has passed by.

When we were fairly established at Quetta we might, I think, then subsidise the Affghans with advantage; but until we were so established, such a measure would, it seems to me, be unwise. The Affghans would not be true to us if we really required their services, and might probably turn against us the very means with which we had supplied them. Such a proceeding would only be characteristic of the people.

But, in the first instance, on commencing the arrangements for establishing ourselves at Quetta, in addition to the subsidy now payable to the Khan of Khelat under the present treaty, I would take into our pay a body of his troops, both horse and foot, to be entirely under their own officers and managed in their own fashion.

Such wild irregulars are invaluable when there is a certain force of our own soldiers to form a nucleus of strength and give tone to the whole. Such a nucleus would be formed by the frontier field force which I have proposed for Sind, and these troops of Khelat would completely connect us with the people of the country generally, a point of great importance. They would take the ordinary escort duties and such like, and would perform all the work which the Cossacks do for the Russian army, which is that which in general our regular soldiers perform the worst, and which is that by which they are most exhausted and demoralised.

The numbers of these auxiliaries could at any time be increased to any extent thought proper; their employment would make us, in a great measure, independent of the Affghans, while the enjoyment of regular pay by the Khelat people would have great influence on the Affghans generally. All would be anxious to obtain the same advantages, while our evident strength, independent of Affghan aid, in their immediate neighbourhood, would be the best security for their good faith.

We might then, if we pleased, and if it were necessary, safely and with advantage, subsidise all Affghanistan with money and arms; and the propriety of so doing would, under the proposed conditions, be in no way dependent on the success or on the life of Dost Mahomed; nor would there then be much danger or possibility of our subsidy being misapplied to the prosecution of internal feuds, for such abuses could not occur without being immediately known to and checked by the Political Agent at Quetta.

If we really intend (as I always suppose that we do really intend) to be fair and just to all men, and to conduct our public proceedings towards other States and other people according the principles which guide the intercourse of honest men in private life, the true interest of Affghanistan must be one with our own and be felt to be so by all its people.

If all distrust of us be removed from the Affghan mind, as it has been removed from the minds of the Government and people of Khelat, the whole country would aid us heart and hand, and an invasion of India wonld be impossible. The invaders would be starved or destroyed in detail.

The confidence in us and the perception of their own interest being identical with ours, which would certainly be engendered in the minds of the Affghans by the development and full operation of the means proposed, would constitute the surest, and, indeed, the only needful, precautions required. The amount of subsidy would be determined by the course of events.

But it is certain that the state of feeling towards us among the Affghans would depend on our real intentions towards them. It is useless to attempt to conceal these from the cunning Affghan; but straightforward honesty and justice, if habitually exercised in accordance with our real nature, exert irresistible control at all times over all Asiatics, and they will do so in this instance, although we must expect at first to have to undo the evil caused by the impressions left by our proceedings and practices during our former invasion and occupation of Affghanistan. But however well-disposed they may be, or may become, towards us, neither Affghan nor Belooch will obey or live at peace with their equals: the tribes have endless and deadly feuds with each other, and if left to themselves, or only supplied with arms and money by us at a distance, they could not be kept to any combined purpose or long-continued effort. The greatest public considerations would always be postponed to the gratification of private revenge or personal pique. No good effect would be produced by our assistance, and the means supplied would be wasted in unworthy quarrels and intrigues.

The English mind, to whose leading all these wild spirits will bow, must actually be present among them, and a sufficient British force be on the spot to support moral power and dignity and to give tone to the whole.

There is nothing in the arrangements proposed by me in the least degree resembling our first proceedings in Affghanistan. History has now justly decided that the former measure was in itself at the very outset a great crime and a great error; and in carrying it out, the principles of common justice, common honesty, and common sense, were at every turn ignored and offended against.

These proceedings were alike foolish and wicked to that degree which must always appear incredible to those who were not, as I was, partly behind the scenes at the time, and in a position to be acquainted with the whole details of the business after its completion.

In the arrangements now proposed we should act in no respect otherwise than as we might be prepared to justify before all good men in the world, or before the throne of God; and those entrusted with the work should be "men with some conscience in what they do," than which nothing has more influence over Oriental minds. To attempt to compete with them in cunning, as did poor —— and ——, is to ensure failure: we command the Asiatics by high moral power alone.

We should in the present case occupy a position in the undisputed territory of an ally with his most cordial assent and approval and to his great advantage.

We should offend or threaten no one whatever, save those who came to attack and invade our Indian Empire. We should have all the people of the country with us.

Our worst enemies could not reasonably object to such a move on our part. Russia, it may be said, might on our move found an assertion of right or necessity of advancing on her side to Khiva or elsewhere. Be it so! I would not make the smallest objection.

Those know but little of Russian policy who imagine that most plausible pretexts would ever be wanting when she thought that she could move with advantage.

If Russia bring with her advance a better civilisation and a higher moral tone, if she introduced European honesty, European ideas, and European commerce into Central Asia, the better for us. All that tends to good must ultimately be for our advantage, for the advantage of free England. But can Russia do this?

Will she, can she, make known to the clever Asiatics a better, nobler, and higher moral power than they are now acquainted with? I much doubt this.

If

If Russia attempt to proceed by violence, injustice, and falsehood, she will exasperate the whole people against her, and will entirely fail or will, at all events, be powerless against us with the people on our side.

In any point of view, and under any circumstances whatever, the arrangement on the frontier of India can never be wise or safe while, as at present, the undisturbed tranquillity of this vast empire is dependent, not on its own mighty internal strength, but on the forbearance of our enemies or neighbours outside.

I would remedy this at once, effectually and permanently, by establishing ourselves firmly and in sufficient force in a position the mere possession of which would preclude all possibility of successful invasion, which would give us, by moral influence, a full control over Affghanistan, establish the most friendly relations with us throughout the country, and which would ere long bring down a full stream of valuable commerce from all Central Asia to the sea.

Supposing these views to be approved, and that it were intended to carry the proposed measure into effect, I should propose to arrange the details as mentioned in a separate paper accompanying this letter.

Enclosure 4, in No. 1.

MEMORANDUM of proposed Arrangements in case of a British Force being stationed at Quetta, or any other convenient spot above the Bolan Pass.

IN the first instance, to enable the Sind Irregular Horse, now forming the frontier force, and the officers there employed to be advanced, some permanent arrangement should be made for the administration of the frontier district of Upper Sind.

This should be constituted, as at present, an entirely separate charge, under an officer in subordination to the Commissioner in Sind, with orders to communicate with the Political Commissioner at Quetta on the political business of the frontier, and to attend to his instructions; this officer to be styled "Superintendent of the Frontier Districts of Upper Sind," and to receive a salary of 1,500 rupees per mensem, with travelling allowance of 10 rupees per diem.

A Lieutenant of Police to be appointed for the Sind Frontier District on the same scale of allowances as the other lieutenants of police in Sind; this officer and the Sind Frontier Police to be under the orders of the Political Superintendent, and quite distinct from the general police of the province. The Mounted Police now employed in the frontier district to be increased to 400 men, and 300 foot police to be raised, and to be armed and equipped like the rural police of Sind, to complete the Frontier Police Force.

A civil surgeon and an assistant surgeon, in charge of the police, to be appointed on the usual allowances. An ample establishment of medical subordinates should be allowed.

No troops to be stationed on the frontier, which would become a purely civil and political charge. No troops to be quartered in Upper Sind at all.

The military stations of Shikarpore and Hyderabad, together with the arsenal at the latter place, to be abolished.

A Political Commissioner on the frontier of India to be appointed with full powers, civil and military, over all departments, &c., to have his head-quarters at Quetta, or any convenient spot above the Bolan Pass, with a staff of—

One Military Secretary.	One Assistant Secretary.
One Political Secretary.	One Private Secretary and Aide-de-camp.

Under the orders of the Political Commissioner it is proposed that there should be a field force organised as follows:—

FRONTIER FIELD FORCE.

Cavalry.

The whole of the Sind Irregular Horse to be moved to Quetta, with 2,000 Belooch Irregular Cavalry, armed, equipped, and officered after the fashion of the troops of Khelat, attached to form the Cavalry Brigade of the proposed frontier field force. Each regiment of horse, with 1,000 Belooch attached, to be under its own regimental commander.

This Cavalry Brigade to be commanded by a brigadier, with a major of brigade and a quartermaster and interpreter of brigade as his staff.

Infantry.

Two regiments armed with Jacob's rifles, each 1,000 strong, with 1,000 Belooch Irregular Infantry attached, formed into one brigade, commanded by a brigadier, with staff, as mentioned for the cavalry.

Artillery.

Two troops of Horse Artillery.	Brigadier and staff as above.
Two horse field batteries.	Ordnance depôt as for a division.

The Artillery to be raised for the purpose, not forming part of the Indian Artillery, or in any way under the authority of the Indian Army.

Engineers.

One executive engineer.
Two assistant executive engineers.

The whole field force to be commanded, under the Political Commissioner, by a brigadier general, with the usual staff of a division.

In case of war or other circumstances occurring to render the proceeding advisable, any number of regular troops might be stationed and accommodated at Quetta.

But in the first instance, the irregular field force above detailed should alone be established above the Bolan Pass. This force should form the solid nucleus of, and give strength and tone to, the subsidiary troops of the native powers; and eventually, all arrangements being previously completed, regular troops might follow when required, their numbers being regulated by the position of affairs and the prospects towards the north west. But permanent accommodation need only be provided for the frontier field force of the strength detailed above.

The resources of the Khelat State are considerable. If the chiefs were united, as they formerly were, against us, they could bring 40,000 good men into the field; but their government and nobles generally are very poor, and their whole social framework was dreadfully shaken by our proceedings with regard to their former head.

Much has, however, lately been done to remedy the ill effects of these proceedings; and the great want now in the Khelat State is an able man to guide the councils of the Khan.

Were we established at Quetta as I have proposed, all the resources of Beloochistan would be completely at our disposal, while none would be wasted. And though assistance in arms and money from us may, and probably will, enable the Khelat people for a time to prevent the Persians from overrunning or establishing themselves in their country, yet I am quite convinced that Beloochistan, if seriously invaded by a regular army of Persians under Russian guidance, will not be able successfully to resist without the aid of European minds from our side to direct its force.

Jalk, or Julluck, is close to the Khelat frontier.

This frontier, wherever the country is inhabited, is sufficiently well recognised; but it is not very definitely marked: the country itself is mostly wild, desolate hills and sands without water; the fertile spots being at long intervals and of small extent.

Nooskee is the nearest place to the frontier where the Khan of Khelat maintains any troops. Even this is a very miserable place; a little fertile plain three or four miles long and of about half that breadth, surrounded by barren rocky hills and drift-sand. There is, however, a good stream of water there, and the spot is well adapted for the first place of assembly of the Khelat troops to resist attack from the north west.

It is quite clear to me that the occupation of the Persian seaports, however valuable a measure as a diversion in aid of other operations, will not suffice really to protect our Indian frontier from insult, even if such proceedings should suffice, as seems to be thought doubtful, to relieve us of the immediate pressure now commencing on the side of Beloochistan.

It is evidently not merely Persia with whom we have now to deal, but Persia guided, moved, and aided by Russia; and from this circumstance the proceedings near our frontier now appear to be of a much more serious nature than any mere Persian occupation or threatenings of Herat, which have been so often made or attempted during the last 20 years. Wherefore, our demonstrations by sea, if no simultaneous proceedings be undertaken by land on our north west frontier, will, it seems to me, have no effect but to make Russia push Persia on the more vigorously in this direction while we are still unprepared.

A descent on the coast of Persia would not now cause such consternation as did our first demonstration in that quarter. The Persians have learned to regard such attacks at their real worth. If an invasion in force of the interior of Persia were not contemplated, the Persians would possibly not regard the capture of a seaport with special dread; and the Russian officers would not fail to perceive (when such is really the case) that our proceedings by sea are really demonstrations only. They would also explain to the Persians that, even if we were to attempt a real advance into the heart of Persia, our movements must be slow and inconsequential compared to the mighty effect of a rapid but steady advance in force on our unprotected north western frontier, whereby the Persians would be able to place themselves in firm and secure possession of Candahar. Such a move, they would argue (and, I think, justly argue, if we did not meditate permanent conquest in Persia), would soon compel us to withdraw our forces from Persia, to concentrate them for a severe struggle with a Russo-Persian army on the plains of northern India; and the Russian argument would be sound and just in proportion as the temporary occupation of Lahore or Delhi by an enemy would be more injurious to us than the like occupation of Ispahan would be to Persia.

I would occupy Quetta, not merely as a sudden move consequent on the hostile demonstrations of Persia, but permanently, as a peaceful arrangement necessary for our fixed repose.

I am convinced that no other measures than such as I have proposed can possibly secure our Indian frontier, and that some such measures must of necessity be ultimately adopted.

Unless we do advance in the direction indicated, it is doubtful whether ultimately even Beloochistan may not fall under Persian and Russian influence. And with regard to Affghanistan, if we do not so advance, there can be no reasonable doubt whatever but that Candahar must ere very long become a Persian—that is a Russian—province. The cleverness, activity, watchfulness, and steady perseverance of Russia in such matters are well known; but these powers will fail before us if we proceed with open honesty and wisdom.

Success is now in our own hands, and may be commanded with ease. Our position may be permanently secured with perfect safety and with comparatively trifling labour and cost.

But if we remain idly looking on from the valley of the Indus at the movements going on above the Bolan, we shall, it seems to me, be throwing away the fairest possible opportunity of settling for ever the question of the invasion of India by Russia; and the results will be, it seems to me, ultimately such as no English statesman would like to contemplate.

We should not view this question with the eyes of men who served in Affghanistan during the Affghan war. My own service and consequent personal knowledge of the statistics of these countries and people on our frontier have been continuous from our first entrance into Affghanistan to the present time. I am thus well acquainted with the very great changes which have taken place during the last ten years, and which are such as to render altogether inapplicable to the present state of affairs most of the supposed drawbacks to the advantages of the plan of operations on which I propose now to act, however just the objections urged might have been under the conditions formerly existing.

There is as much difference between the question of posting troops above the Bolan at present and formerly, as there would be between now moving troops up the Bhore Ghaut, and doing so under the conditions of the road being as it was up to 1829, and the country above being occupied by a hostile Maratha army and population. The Bolan Pass presents no difficulties for the party which holds it, and we should hold it securely at Quetta.

The road through this pass I would improve, so as to make it the easiest mountain road possible for us; but I would make such arrangements that the force at Quetta could by occupying the pass itself, if necessary, hold it against all the world.

I would connect the foot of the pass at once by a good road with Sind, and ultimately by a railroad, and by means of the subsidised troops of Khelat acting as police, I would maintain the most perfect security along the whole line.

The British camp at Quetta would not then be in any way isolated; it would, indeed, be as little isolated in reality as are the camp and town of Kurrachee at present, which, owing to the want of connection by canal with the Indus, are still chiefly supplied, even with such things as grass, grain, and firewood, by sea.

As regards the tribes which hang about Quetta, I may observe that for many years past the frontier districts of Sind and the whole plain of Kutchee have been as quiet and peaceable as our old province of Guzerat, or even more so.

The most formidable and most famous of the robber chiefs and their tribes have quietlysettled down into the condition of contented, happy, and most industrious agriculturists.

The former exploits of the old plunderers are fast becoming forgotten, and as the last generation of border riders is passing away, no others are being formed to take their places.

The tribes which formerly overran all Cutchee and Northern Sind, the Boogtees, Doombkees, Jekranees, &c., so far from being now under little control, are, almost to a man, ready to obey my orders to the uttermost. They are our most obedient, humble servants, and have been brought to this state without any loss of self-respect or manliness on their part. The men have actually been reformed, and now feel themselves stronger, better and happier than before. The Kakurs of the Bolan have for years past been perfectly quiet and submissive, while the great mass of Brahoee subjects of the Khan of Khelat, to the westward of Cutchee and the Bolan, are as quiet and peaceable a race with respect to their conduct towards Government as any in the East, although they are by no means unwarlike in their own fashion and under their own chiefs.

The country intervening between our proposed camp at Quetta and Sind would be perfectly occupied and governed for us by the Khelat authorities; more perfectly so, indeed, than it could probably be by our own officers and police; not only without our incurring any odium as foreign rulers, but while we should be looked on as the best of friends.

For the last seven years, in fact, the Khelat territory from the Bolan to Sind has been as much under our influence and real control, for just and useful purposes, as any part of our own provinces.

With regard to the capability of Shawl to support the force which I propose to entertain there, this point was certainly not overlooked by me; for I have always been in the habit of considering such arrangements to be the most important of all in military operations, tions, and I have had to attend continually to such matters on a sufficiently large scale during a long course of years. . . .

Yet, by acting on what seemed to me to be just principles, I have found that all difficulties disappeared; and, under the steady action of such principles, some hundreds of square miles, even of the desert itself, have been converted into fertile fields, while a town sprang up spontaneously adjoining our camp in a wild desolate region, and contains already more than 6,000 inhabitants quite independent of the troops and camp followers, with a flourishing bazar of some hundreds of shops. This town now affords supplies sufficient for an army, and is still rapidly increasing in size and importance.

I would apply similar principles to those which have been acted on here, with a certainty of the like effect, to my proposed advance to Quetta.

The pecuniary cost of supporting the troops after the first outlay on account of quarters and public buildings would be absolutely nothing beyond their regular pay. The proposed roads and the other arrangements for the forward move, generally, would ultimately be a source of commercial profit; while, as to the other considerations, I may observe that such civil government as we already exert in Cutchee, through the Political Superintendent on the frontier, we should continue to exert; but it would not be at all necessary or advisable to assume in these respects greater power, either in nature or extent, than we now virtually possess and exercise.

Indeed, it seems very probable that it would not be found necessary that any other troops should be permanently posted there; for, with the means of communication and transport which I propose to establish, any force of regular troops which circumstances might call for, could, with ease and rapidity, be sent from Sindh or the old provinces of India to Quetta, where every species of provision would be ready for their accommodation, and which place would then form the point from which military operations would commence.

The road from the frontier of Sind to the head of the Bolan being improved and made available at all times and seasons, and a body of the Khelat troops being subsidised, as I propose, by us, no further public arrangements would be necessary for supplying the irregular field force in Shawl, and no extra cost need be incurred on that head.

The valleys of Moostung, Pesheen, and Shawl produce large quantities of excellent wheat and lucern; sheep are procurable by millions, and all that the neighbouring country could supply would assuredly flow into our camp; while grain and cattle from Cutchee (where the prices are generally very much lower than in Sind itself) would be brought up the Bolan by private traders in any quantities required to meet the demand.

Provision must undoubtedly be made for consumption during the winter season, as is habitually done by all the inhabitants of that country. But no Government commissariat arrangements would be requisite; while, in case of unforeseen accident or any emergent necessity arising, the cavalry, who require the greatest provision, could, during the winter, when the ground is covered with snow, and military operations are necessarily suspended, be moved in a march of six days to Dadur, where supplies are at all times abundant.

However, I consider it to be certain that the establishment of the field force at Quetta would result in the growth of a large commercial town at that place, the resources of which would, as in the instance of Jacobabad, suffice for the wants of an army.

In a financial point of view, as I have already observed, the cost of the proposed measures when compared with the results would be positively trifling; and, in considering the cost of these arrangements, it may be well to bear in mind, also, the cost of such expeditions as that now being undertaken against Persia by sea, and the value of the stake which the arrangements proposed by me are intended to secure to us. This value is, I am fully convinced, commensurate with that of our Indian Empire.

You wish the red line of England on the map to advance no further. But to enable this red line to retain its present position, to prevent its being driven back or erased from the map, it is, it appears to me, absolutely necessary to occupy posts in advance of it. I cannot see how, consistently with safety, it can ever be otherwise with regard to a great empire held by a foreign government as we hold India.

If our deeds be true and just, no consequences whatever need be feared. But supineness on our part now would, it seems to me, be most unjust towards India.

A war within our own territory, with a European enemy, might be ruinous to our reputation, and might entirely undermine our strength, although that strength might have sufficed successfully to meet a world in arms in a field beyond our own boundary.

The evils even of successful war are terrible, and such evils are undoubtedly most severely felt, are most intolerable, in fact, in those countries the most accustomed to regular civilization and uniform undeviating routine of civil administration.

A severe struggle within our own established and long-settled limits with a powerful invader, although attended with immediate success to us, might shake our power in India to its very foundation; might certainly for a while overturn all our civil arrangements, destroy our revenue, and render it necessary to maintain large armies in the field in the interior of our dominions for a protracted period in order to restore that internal tranquillity which might not be in the least disturbed even by many battles fought beyond our frontier, and which would be completely preserved by the arrangements which I have contemplated.

Enclosure 5, in No. 1.

MINUTE by His Excellency the Governor, concurred in by the Honourable Mr. Erskine; dated the 26th November 1866.

I HAVE been favoured by Sir H. Green with a perusal of a confidential memorandum which he has drawn up on the subject of Quetta.

Late events have given great additional force to the opinions which Sir H. Green and the late General John Jacob have so long and so consistently urged as to the necessity of taking care that Quetta should never fall into other than friendly hands. I have always considered those opinions as essentially sound, and I feel assured that every day increases the risk of our being forestalled, and of our hearing that some power less friendly than that of Khelat had secured a footing in that position.

It might have been, and was, objected to General Jacob's former suggestions on this subject, that they would have placed a large permanent British cantonment beyond the boundary of British India, and committed us to share in all the purely internal politics of Affghanistan.

No such objection can be raised to Sir H. Green's present suggestions. He would simply secure the power which, with the entire good will of the Khan of Khelat, he has more than once temporarily exercised during the last eight years, of having an outpost above the Bolan Pass in a position which should admit of its being quickly reinforced in case of need, and which will render any hostile occupation of Quetta difficult, if not impossible.

As a preliminary, he would assist the Khan of Khelat to extend to Cutchee and the districts near the Bolan the same system of protection to cultivation and trade which has proved so efficacious in his Highness's districts which immediately adjoin our own border.

Sir H. Green considers that a great deal may be done in this way if 50,000 rupees per annum were placed at his disposal, to be disbursed either through the Khan or in any other way the Political Superintendent may think preferable, for the improvement of this part of his Highness' territory. I would leave the mode in which the money is to be expended to the discretion of the Political Superintendent for the next two years, and would merely require a report on the result before any further grant is made.

This proposition, if concurred in by the honourable Board, might be submitted for the sanction of the Government of India.

(signed) H. B. E. Frere.
C. J. Erskine.

Enclosure 6, in No. 1.

MINUTE by His Excellency the Commander in Chief; dated the 6th December 1866.

WHILST distinctly guarding myself from any concurrence in General Jacob's opinions and plan, which would have thrown a British brigade beyond the Bolan Pass, and have removed all supports from it by abolishing the Sind force, I see no objection, and much possible good, by establishing a Political Officer at Quetta, with the full concurrence and good will of the Khan, with power to disburse such a moderate sum as Government may please to allow in benefiting and conciliating the people, provided he keeps clear of being entangled in any domestic quarrels.

No more force should accompany him than a good personal escort.

(signed) R. Napier.

Enclosure 7, in No. 1.

From the Officiating Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, to the Secretary to Government of Bombay, No. 69; dated Fort William, the 17th January 1867.

I HAVE had the honour to submit to the Governor General in Council your letter, dated 26th ultimo, No. 62, forwarding a copy of a confidential memorandum by Lieutenant Colonel Sir Henry Green, K.C.S.I., entitled "Suggestions for the protection of the North-West Frontier of Sinde, with reference to the advance of the Russians in Central Asia." I have also laid before His Excellency in Council the Minutes recorded on that memorandum by their Excellencies the Governor and Commander in Chief of Bombay respectively, which formed an additional Enclosure of the same communication.

2. The ultimate aim of Sir Henry Green, and (as this Government is led to infer) of the Governor of Bombay also, is the occupation of Quetta at the northern entrance of the Bolan Pass by a British force.

3. The steps towards this end which Sir Henry Green desires immediately to take are—

(I.) The grant of service to 200 of the best horsemen of the Murree tribe, who, at a cost to the British Government of 60,000 rupees per annum, are to be employed as police in the Khan of Khelat's Province of Cutchee;

(II.) The addition of 50,000 rupees per annum to the subsidy of the same amount, which the Khan of Khelat already draws from the British Government under Article VII. of the Treaty of 1854; and (III.) An increase to the strength of the Sinde Horse at a cost of 60,000 rupees per annum.

4. The total annual expenditure involved in these proposals amounts to 1,70,000 rupees.

5. His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, though prepared apparently to adopt Sir Henry Green's views in full, limits the actual demand upon the public funds to a sum of 50,000 rupees. Omitting the proposals for giving service to the Murree horsemen and for increasing the strength of the Sinde Horse, Sir Bartle Frere looks at present only to giving such assistance to the Khan of Khelat as may enable His Highness "to extend to Cutchee and the districts near the Bolan the same system of protection to cultivation and trade which has proved so efficacious in His Highness' districts which immediately adjoin our own border." And for this purpose His Excellency advises that Sir Henry Green may, for the next two years, be allowed the sum of 50,000 rupees per annum, to be spent either through the Khan of Khelat or in any other way that Sir Henry may think preferable. At the end of two years Sir Henry Green, in His Excellency's opinion, should be required to submit a report on the result before the grant could be continued.

6. On the other hand, His Excellency the Commander in Chief of the Bombay Army is altogether opposed to the idea of throwing a British brigade beyond the Bolan Pass, but thinks there would be no objection to the establishment at Quetta of a Political Agent, attended only by a small personal escort, and empowered to disburse a moderate sum in benefiting and conciliating the people.

7. The subject thus submitted for the consideration of the Government of India may be divided, I am to remark, under the two following heads:—

Firstly. Is the occupation of Quetta so desirable on strategical grounds that preliminary arrangements should now be made for the measure?

Secondly. In case the first question be decided in the negative, is there for other reasons any advantage in spending an additional half lakh annually on the Khan of Khelat?

8. The Right Honourable the Viceroy and Governor General has for years been familiar with all the arguments that can be advanced for and against the first question. In particular the reasonings of the late General Jacob in favour of an advance beyond the Bolan Pass, which Sir Henry Green has appended at length to his memorandum, were fully considered by His Excellency at the time of their original publication, and have not been lost sight of in the subsequent interval. His Excellency has deliberately decided in Council that an advance to Quetta is not desirable, and there is nothing in Sir Henry Green's present statements which would lead the Government of India to modify that conclusion. The measure would create considerable alarm both in Persia and at Cabul, and would eventually lead to further requisitions for troops; for, as pointed out by Sir Robert Napier, it would be a false move to advance troops from Jacobabad to Quetta without supports at the former place. I am to point out, moreover, that it will be open to the British Government to occupy Quetta and subsidise the Beloochees at any future period when the imminence of a real danger to the Indian Empire may render such a step expedient. In the meantime the Governor General in Council is absolutely opposed to the scheme.

9. Sir Henry Green represents that if a British force were stationed at Quetta, we should obtain immediate information of "any movement inimical to us occurring in almost any part of Central Asia." The Governor General in Council admits that what happens at Candahar would be sooner known in India than is now the case; and His Excellency in Council will even concede that from Herat, and the country between Herat and Candahar, more accurate accounts would be received than we now obtain through Cabul and Meshed. But this is all. Of events north of the Oxus, or, perhaps, even north of Ghuznee, the only tidings that the British force at Quetta would receive would be later and more distorted than those which the Government of India now regularly commands through St. Petersburgh and Peshawur. At the present moment the course and issue of the recent Russian war with Bokhara and of the intestine struggles in Eastern Toorkistan, are probably better known to the Governor General in Council at Calcutta than they are to the Sirdars Ufzul and Azim Khan at Cabul, or to the Ameer Shere Ali at Candahar. The information, in fact, which the Government of India obtains under existing arrangements is as full and recent as our political position demands, and as trustworthy as if it emanated from British officers at Cabul and Candahar.

10. Sir Henry Green dilates on the dangers to be apprehended "should we still continue tinue to close our eyes to all that is taking place beyond our border." The contingency which he apparently means to denote by this expression is that of continuing within the line of our present cantonments; for events beyond the border can be watched, and are, in fact, very carefully watched, by the Government of India, notwithstanding that the Governor General in Council disallows the expediency of Sir H. Green's propositions.

11. Sir H. Green speaks of the effect which the Russian advance in Central Asia has had upon the minds of the people living beyond our Indian limits. This circumstance is perfectly known to the Governor General in Council, as also that "neighbouring States have long been discussing the question on which side" (English or Russian) "they should range themselves." But His Excellency in Council believes that, if the course of events should ever bring us to a struggle with the Northern Power on our India frontier, the winning side will be the one which refrains from entangling itself in the barren mountains which now separate the two Empires, and that the Affghans themselves, foreseeing this result, are likely in the end to throw their weight on the same side.

12. Sir H. Green speaks of the probability that Ufzul Khan may possess himself of Beloochistan and hold Quetta in the interests of Russia. The mention of such a contingency, I am to observe, does not argue much acquaintance with the politics of Affghanistan. Ufzul Khan, so far from being the man of enterprise and ability depicted by Sir H. Green, is in reality a mere tool in the hands of Azim Khan. And neither of the two brothers is "master of Affghanistan from Candahar to Balkh;" on the contrary, they hold nothing but a precarious footing, from which they may be any day dislodged, in and about the cities of Cabul and Ghuznee: all the rest of Affghanistan is in arms against them. Whether they win, however, or lose in the coming struggle is, after all, a matter of no moment; in either case one thing seems certain, namely, that for years to come all Affghanistan will continue divided against itself, and that, consequently, no party in it will have either the means or leisure for foreign aggression against Beloochistan, or in any other direction whatever.

13. In fine, the present state of affairs in Central Asia offers no feature which the Governor General in Council can recognise as any sufficient ground for regarding the occupation of Quetta as a question open to consideration.

14. The second question now remains to be discussed, viz., whether apart from any proximate intention of occupying Quetta, it is desirable that we should double the Khan of Khelat's subsidy. The Government of India, I am to observe, has already had some experience as to the advantages of such a measure, for the half lakh now asked for was, at Sir Henry Green's urgent solicitation, granted to the Khan in 1859, and continued for four successive years. The ground on which the Government of India was induced to make the grant in 1859 was that the Khan might be enabled "to support a good, just, and legitimate Government in Beloochistan, and to reduce to order such of its tribes as may obstinately persist in predatory habits, as, for instance, the Murrees." In February 1862 these very Murrees made a raid into British territory in the Dehra Ghazee Khan District, and when the Government of India called on the Bombay Government to explain how the Khan of Khelat could have allowed his subjects to commit such an outrage, Sir Henry (then Major) Green declared that the Khan was powerless to coerce them, but that the grant had been faithfully applied by the Khan to the maintenance of a police force for the protection of the caravan route to Shikarpore. On the 18th August 1862 a party of plundering Boogtees made an attack upon the British outpost of Kusmore in Sinde, in which several lives were lost. When the news of this second outrage reached the Government of India orders were issued, dated 30th June 1863, directing that "all payments of subsidy, whether ordinary or extraordinary, to the Khelat State be discontinued."

15. About the same time the Khan of Khelat was driven from his throne by an insurrection, which lasted till May 1864. On the 5th November 1864 the British Government recognised his return to the throne, and resumed the former Treaty relations which subsisted with him. By the latter act the payment of the half lakh provided for by the Treaty was revived, but special orders were at the same time issued that the other half lakh, beyond and above the requirements of the Treaty, would not again be granted.

16. Sir Henry Green, in his present memorandum, gives his opinion that the withdrawal of the additional amount under the circumstances above detailed was "most impolitic." The ground on which he now begs that the grant may be resuscitated is the improvement of the province of Cutchee, and he omits to speak of any condition as to the pacification of Murrees or Boogtees.

17. The Governor General in Council has no hesitation in disallowing the proposal. So long as the British Government is hard pressed to find the means wherewith to develop the resources of its own territory and to complete the lines of interior communication throughout the Empire, His Excellency in Council cannot think of expending funds on a project the advantages of which are regarded by the Government of India as inappreciable, if not altogether visionary.

— No. 2. —

(Foreign Department.—Political.—No. 28.)

To the Right Honourable Viscount Cranborne, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord, Fort William, 8 February 1867.

We beg to transmit herewith copies of Minutes recorded by His Excellency the Commander in Chief in India and the Honourable Colonel Durand on the projected occupation of Quetta, as promised in paragraph 3 of our Despatch, No. 15, dated 23rd ultimo.

We have, &c.

(signed) John Lawrence.
W. R. Mansfield.
H. S. Maine.
W. Grey.
G. N. Taylor.
W. N. Massey.
H. M. Durand.

Enclosure 1, in No. 2.

MINUTE by His Excellency Sir W. R. Mansfield, K.C.B., G.C.S.I., Commander in Chief in India, on the occupation of Quetta, as proposed by Lieutenant Colonel Sir H. R. Green, K.C.S.I.

THE Despatch from this Government to that of Bombay is so conclusive in its argument against entertaining the proposals made by Sir H. Green in his confidential memorandum of 16th August 1866, which had been recommended to our favourable consideration by the Governor of Bombay in Council, that I have a difficulty in adding to what has been already so well said.

As, however, His Excellency the Governor General is desirous that the answer to Sir H. Green's political and military views with regard to the occupation of Quetta, which, as mentioned by this officer, are a revival of what the late General Jacob made familiar to us, may be supported by such arguments as occur to me, I overcome my hesitation to offer a few remarks.

I observe with great satisfaction that the Commander in Chief in Bombay indicates a most decided dissent from General Jacob's plan, which would have thrown a British brigade beyond the Bolan Pass, and have removed all support from it.

It may, perhaps, be well to draw attention to the military grounds for such an opinion, although Sir Robert Napier has probably considered them so obvious and well-known, as not to have demanded reiteration from him.

The distance from* Sukkur to Quetta was performed in 20 marches by the columns which advanced under the command of the late Sir Willoughby Cotton and Lord Keane in 1839.

The distance amounts to 257 miles, there being twelve marches from Sukkur to Dadur, a desert being passed before the latter is reached, and eight marches from Dadur to Quetta.

I would here quote two extracts from "The War in Affghanistan" by the late Sir Henry Havelock, who accompanied Sir Willoughby Cotton as aide de camp :—

"Narrative of the War in Affghanistan by Captain Henry Havelock, p. 40, vol. i.

"This is the Bolan Pass, to which we now come in due order. It was the plan of the Supreme Government of India to cause their armies to advance by this durru from Sukkur, which they were to constitute their place of strength and great depôt on the Indus. Shikarpore, which is the next important post, is only two marches further to the northward, and one short stage beyond this the boundary line of Cutchee, or Cutch Gundava, is crossed. There succeeds a considerable tract of desert, but as some wells were always to be found in it, and the number was greatly increased by the British at the villages of Rojhan, Burshoree, Meerpore, and Oostar, there is no insurmountable obstacle to the† passage of a large army by small detachments at a time in the cooler months. After April the desert is swept by a pestilential simoom, and the heat becomes too

---

* See Hough's Expedition to Affghanistan.

† Note.—With regard to the subsequent argument, I invite special attention to the conditions of the passage of an army across the desert tracts, as stated by Sir H. Havelock. (signed) W. R. M.

too great for any troops to keep the field in Cutchee; nor is the salubrity increased when the descent of rain converts the low level of the whole province into a swamp of salt marshes. From Oostar there is one march only to Bhag, where the brother of Mihrab Khan holds his Court, and thence again one more to the village of Muhesir, on the Bolan River. This place stands without the first defiles of the Brahoik, or Hala range. They can easily be turned, and are passed when a force reaches Noushuhra. Hence it will have to make but one march more to Dadur.

"The towns of Bhag and Dadur, as well as Shikarpore, are naturally to be reckoned successive places of arms; and an advancing force ought, with a view of securing its water as well as its communications, to establish small posts in the mud fortresses of the villages of Taneedera, Rojhan, Burshoree, and Meerpore. At Dadur commences the labour of passing the mountain range, but the ascent through the durru of Bolan, following the meanderings of its river, is not painful, until the columns approach Siri Bolan, that streamlet's source, and thence one day's effort brings them into the table-land called the Dusht-i-bee-Doulut, or 'poverty-stricken plain.' An army passes easily over that level to Kwote, or Kwetta in Shawl, another excellent place of arms, which boasts a wall of curtains and round towers, a ditch and a citadel, and from it descends to the lower valleys of Koochlak and Peesheen, crosses the Lora, and the range of mountains called Khojah Amran, into the plains beyond, and choosing its road through the not difficult passes of the Gantee hills, reaches the rivers Dooree and Urghesan, the latter of which it may find filled with water, or dry, according to the season; and lastly the plain on which stands Candahar."

Second extract from same work, p. 240, vol. i.

"Let us look back at the Pass, the whole acclivity of which the main portion of the Bengal column has been seen to surmount. The most exact calculations fix the spot on the Put or Dusht on which the force was encamped near Siriab, at 5,300 feet above the level of the sea, and this might be a few hundred feet lower than the top of the Pass itself. The exertions which had brought our soldiers thither may be generally summed up by stating that each column in succession marched on the first day up a narrow but level valley, 10½ miles to Kohun Dulan; on the second up a wider vale, 11⅛ more to Kirtah, the ascent being still scarcely perceptible, and that the acclivity on the third day was not found much steeper, whilst the troops imperceptibly ascended and traversed yet broader valleys to the distance of ten miles more, until they reached the remarkable Pass of Bebee Nanee. The rise was greater as the columns advanced another 10 miles, whilst loftier mountains closed around them to Abigoom; and the pull up hill had become a very serious matter for artillery horses, as they toiled up to the picturesque spot named Siri Bolan, where are found the gushing and pellucid fountains of the Kanhee. These springs are 11 miles from Abigoom. Two more miles of the same kind of road had to be climbed up on the following day; but then our regiments and batteries plunged at once into the narrow and winding defile of 10½ miles, the ascent of which is, however, very gradual, and which our engineers had shortened to eight miles by cutting a well chosen route into the Dusht, instead of leaving us to make our way by the usual road to the Munzilgah, or resting place of trading kafilas. According to the above recapitulation, the whole distance from Dadur to our first encampment in the 'unhappy plain,' including three miles from the top of the Pass to our tents on the Put, is to be estimated at 66 miles. Thus, then, by tracing up the Bolan stream through the windings of its natural valley to its source, our Bengal force had been carried from the plains of Cutch Gundava into the heart of the Brahoik range, and had passed onward at the foot of a lofty ridge, which runs transverse to that barrier up to the high table land of the Dusht, and near the opening of the valley of Shawl we had passed the great mountain ridge, which appeared to fence us out from Affghanistan. Difficulties of another nature now beset our path. It has been related that we had not more than one month's provision in hand when we reached Dadur. There and in the country around we had collected next to nothing; at Kwetta we had the promise of very little; and as our instructions prohibited our advancing for the present beyond that point, we could not hope to get hold of the resources of the valleys of Koochlah and Peshing, which were represented to be eminently productive. A painful crisis, therefore, appeared to be approaching. More than half a month had elapsed, and no source presented itself from which fresh supplies could be derived. Our depôts of Sukkur and Shikarpore were now separated from us by the whole breadth of the dangerous tract of Cutch Gundava, as well as the depth of the mountain range, and we well knew that before the contingent of the Shah and the Bombay force could prosecute their advance they must not only draw largely on the supplies in our rear, but absorb a great proportion of the means of transport which might otherwise have been employed to bring up successive convoys of provisions to Dadur and the valley of Shawl."

Consequently, if we assume the force now at Jacobabad to be thrown forward to Quetta, the same being strengthened as proposed by General Jacob, we should have the spectacle of a British force separated by such ground as that described by Sir H. Havelock from the nearest point on the Indus, and a distance equivalent in time to 20 days without a halt on the part of an advancing force, or to 257 miles.

In addition we must consider the time required to bring reinforcements either from Kurrachee in the south, or from Mooltan in the north, to collect carriage, and to put such reinforcements in movement from Sukkur. A month for the joint purpose, wherever conducted from, is certainly not too much.

Thus, according to a favourable view, the station of Quetta would be removed by not less than 50 days in time from reinforcement in the event of its being threatened from Candahar, or of its communications with Hindostan being seriously interrupted. I have said a favourable view, because it will occur to every one that amid references and correspondence between Governments and military authorities as forming part of necessary consultation, and with regard to the purveyance of steamers to carry the troops, the 50 days would infallibly swell to two months, and perhaps a longer period, however active the authorities might be. During the hot season it would be almost impossible to march a force from Sukkur to Quetta. It will be recollected that when General Jacob first established himself at Khangurh, since styled by him Jacobabad, he was supported at an easy distance by a brigade at Shikarpore, Sinde being besides very strongly held by Sir Charles Napier, as was required by the facts of recent conquest and of our disturbed relations with the Punjaub, then possessing a Government and a standing army alike hostile to us.

The country between Shikarpore and Jacobabad presents no difficulties.

Now, as shown by Sir H. Havelock, and as is well known to numerous officers in the Bengal and Bombay armies, the tract stretching from Jacobabad to Quetta presents formidable obstacles of insalubrity at certain seasons, of want of water, of desert, of a very long though on the whole not difficult mountain pass, and what is perhaps of more consequence than anything else, of want of cultivation, the hope of local supplies being thus likely to be precluded at many of the halting stations.

We must also recollect that if the force at Quetta were seriously threatened or attacked in front, it is but reasonable to expect that the Pass would be closed in rear by the predatory tribes, whose habits, it is safe to assume, do not differ from those of the generation which gave so much annoyance to Lord Keane.

But, further, Khangurh was a parcel of our own territory when it was occupied, whereas our boundary is passed soon after we begin to advance towards Dadur. Consequently, the analogy drawn by Sir H. Green between General Jacob's operations in former times and those of his successors more recently, and what he would now propose to do beyond our frontier, seems to be entirely erroneous, both in a military and a political sense.

It appears to me, then, that if we were to accede to the measure of a military occupation of Quetta, the force there must not only be sufficient for self protection, but that we must maintain the communication with the Indus by posts at Dadur and Jacobabad, and probably at some intermediate places.

The most ordinary prudence would therefore compel us, with regard to the three requirements, to double the estimate of troops demanded by General Jacob for the cantonment of Quetta.

There is another consideration which did not occur to General Jacob, who wished, I believe, to have an army of his own, without acknowledging the authority of a Commander in Chief, and wrote his letters before the war of the Mutiny.

After our experience of 1857–58, which led to our present military policy, we decline to permit the existence of any considerable force of which the most important element shall not be British proper. Consequently, according to that policy, the force at Quetta and in the supporting posts would demand not less than three British infantry regiments, and four British field batteries, viz., two regiments and three batteries at Quetta, and one regiment and one battery in support.

I think it is clear that such projects would involve an addition to the Army Estimates in the departments, Military and Public Works, which would deter even Sir Henry Green from further pressing these projects on our notice.

I should imagine that they could not be executed with safety with less than 3,000 British infantry and artillery, 4,000 native infantry, and 2,000 cavalry, including a regiment of dragoons, 9,000 in all, or 7,000 in excess of the force which is now found to be more than ample for the defence of the Sind frontier, the same being all native, and therefore comparatively of a cheap description.

Besides the troops cantoned at Quetta, a fort would be required at that place to cover the magazine and treasure, and to be a point d'appui in case of accident, when reinforcements were in course of being called up.

It is very questionable whether the outlay would be worth while if the Russians were at Cabul and Candahar, so long as there is peace between Great Britain and Russia, when we consider the defences afforded on our side the Bolan Pass by the difficulties of ground. I should think not myself, as a civilised power does not to my mind present difficulties of management and obstructions to peace, which occur to us in our dealings with the predatory tribes of Beloochistan and Affghanistan.

But it is surely premature to rush into the expense of military occupation of such a country as that described in the foregoing extracts, because the Russians are now involved in the troubles of political extension in Central Asia, which is probably forced on them in spite of themselves.

It appears to me that a point of importance escapes all Russophobists, viz., that if ever the Russians come into contact with our frontiers, the policy of their viceroys and generals will be guided entirely by the relations between the Cabinets of London and Petersburg. The conduct of Russia in dealing with Kokan and Bokhara, or even Persia, is entirely different from the conduct of Russia when she meets European powers in the field of negotiation and international comity.

is

This fact is little appreciated by those who argue like Sir H. Green, and cite as an authority, on which we should act seriously, the gossip of Indian bazaars, or of the Durbars of savage tribes, which can only understand the policy applied to themselves, or to populations and governments as barbarous as they are.

Assuming, however, the worst in the sense of Sir H. Green's argument, I should be inclined to say that the side whence to defend the Bolan Pass is not the western extremity, where the British cantonment would be cut off by a defile 66 miles long through which its supports would have to advance after a painful and exhausting march from the Indus and across a desert, but rather at the eastern extremity. For there a hostile force could be struck on the head before it could have time to deploy, with the heavy material without which a modern army cannot move or hope to move against such forces as we should array against it on any field we might choose between Shikarpore and Dadur. The desert would be in this manner turned into our most useful ally, instead of being a formidable difficulty. The latter would be the case if General Jacob's plan were adopted.

If we dismiss the Russians and turn our attention to what has some reality, viz., the effect on our policy with Affghanistan of such a movement as that proposed, it may, I think, be taken for granted that it could not but entail the occupation of Candahar at no distant date. I do not see how such a consequence could ultimately be avoided with the further final result of an obligation, which would at length come to comprehend the entire country ruled by the late Dost Mahomed.

This was probably General Jacob's intention. It might be asked if Sir H. Green has ever permitted himself to weigh the consequences of the movement he proposes, and the certainty that those consequences would at once present themselves to the Affghan mind, and the minds of Persia, Bokhara, and Russia beyond.

With respect to the establishment of a political agent at Quetta with a personal escort, I am unable to see any possible advantage which can result from it. Such a measure would seem not improbably to lead to a state of things which might compel the Government of India, however unwillingly, to entertain the larger project of military occupation at a subsequent date. It appears to me to be the thin end of the wedge, and that it is intended to be so by the projector.

The further plans of Sir H. Green, as described by himself, are all to a like effect, viz., to commence an occupation insidiously as it were which should creep over the country like a mist, unobserved by the public or those affected by its proceeding.

To show that this description is no exaggeration, I must quote his own words—"no particular notice would then be taken of our proceeding either within India or beyond it; we might then firmly establish ourselves."

Seeing that the country and people thus proposed to be operated on do not belong to us, I would only add that the proposals do not complete my notions of an honourable British policy. I can only hope, therefore, they may never be entertained by a British Government.

If it be necessary to extend British dominion for 250 miles beyond our present boundaries on the west of Sinde, our honour demands that such extension should take place openly and on its merits, without blinding either our own public or the Governments of other nations.

The value of Sir H. Green's suggestion that if his plans were executed, Quetta would afford us a post of infallible political observation of Central Asia, and so forth, may be accurately tested by a reference to the correspondence between Sir W. Cotton and Sir W. Nott, when the former was at Jellalabad and the latter at Candahar in April 1840.

Sir W. Cotton, while expressing his fears of the Russian advance on Khiva, talks of the vague rumours he has long heard, and then announces his real information in the matter, which had reached Sir W. McNaghten from Calcutta, the same having come by the Overland Mail.

In reply, Sir W. Nott says he has no means of getting information on the subject, but that of conversing with merchants, horse-dealers, &c., * "and perhaps much reliance cannot be placed on their accounts."

Now this correspondence took place when Sir W. McNaghten was the virtual ruler in Affghanistan, and had been for some time established at Cabul.

The like may be seen in the present day. Our real news about Russian doings against Bokhara comes from Europe, and not from the despatches of our native envoy at Cabul, who nevertheless reports all that is known about the Russians to Afzul Khan and Azim Khan.

31 January 1867. (signed) W. R. Mansfield.

---

* Memoirs of Sir W. Nott, vol. i.

Enclosure 2, in No. 2.

NOTE on Projected Occupation of Quetta.

THE Despatch to the Bombay Government, No. 69, of the 17th January 1867, has, I hope, disposed effectually for the present of the projected occupation of Quetta, and from the unanimity of the Members of Government on this subject it may be anticipated that any future attempt to revive the proposal will hardly be seriously entertained unless much stronger reasons can be adduced than have as yet been urged in favour of advancing our frontier.

If it ever became advisable or necessary to occupy Affghanistan, there can be no doubt that we are now in a position to execute such a movement with far greater facility and security than when we advanced in 1838, with Scinde in the hands of Ameers, and the Punjab a compact military power under Runjeet Sing, both interposing between the small column launched into Affghanistan and its base of operations. With the Indus frontier from Kurrachee to Peshawur under our rule, we are otherwise circumstanced than was the case when we marched to put Shah Shooja on the throne of Cabul, and we have only to accomplish that which I have always urged to be commercially as well as politically and militarily expedient, namely, the completion of what I have elsewhere termed the Indus group of railways, in order to secure to ourselves such a thorough command of that line of frontier as shall leave it entirely in our own discretion to operate below or above the Passes as might be judged at the time most advisable. As a general rule, I concur in the opinion expressed by His Excellency Sir W. Mansfield in his able Minute with regard to the defence of the Bolan Pass (page 19), but at the same time it is easy to conceive circumstances which might combine to render the partial or the entire occupation of Affghanistan necessary as a theatre for offensive operations on our part in aid of Affghan resistance to invasion from the westward: it is a country admirably adapted for giving the fullest effect to the destructive warfare which Affghans, thus supported, could wage with small loss to themselves against hostile columns. This is one contingency, and a variety of others might be quoted as possible inducements to an advance beyond the Indus frontier. I shall not enter into an estimate of the probability of such remote contingencies, but admitting their future possibility, it will, I think, be all that political and military considerations demand if our lines of rail and river communication on the Indus frontier are rendered as perfect as it is easily in our power to make them, so that without our at present incurring the risk of complications with Affghan or Belooch tribes and politics, it may yet be in our power rapidly to mass and securely to feed and support our forces, whether intended for operations above or below the Passes, wherever they may be sent on that frontier. The bare fact that such was the position of the British Government on the Indus frontier would not only prove a sedative to the turbulence of frontier tribes, but render any aggressive movements upon Affghanistan from the westward, or any hostile attitude on the part of the Affghans towards ourselves, dangerous to those who chose to provoke our power and means of striking.

Whilst, however, I am very strongly in favour of thus securing our position on the Indus frontier, I am as much opposed to the occupation of Quetta now as I was when the late Lord Canning did me the honour to consult me on the same subject when war with Persia was inevitable. At that time General Jacob pressed on the Governor General the expediency of occupying Quetta in force as a demonstration against Persia, and it was hardly concealed that the demonstration might with advantage be turned into something more than a demonstration, inasmuch as General Jacob pronounced that the occupation of the Persian sea-ports was only valuable as a diversion in aid of other operations, and that our demonstrations by sea, if no simultaneous proceedings were undertaken by land on our north-western frontier, would have no effect but to make Russia push Persia on the more vigorously in the direction of India. These arguments had produced some impression, not only on Lord Canning's mind, but on the minds of some of his Council, and there was a manifest disposition to adopt General Jacob's suggestion and to detach a force to Quetta. I opposed this strenuously on the ground that, as a demonstration, it would prove inoperative as against Persia, though very effectual in embroiling us with the Belooch and the Affghan; and that if more than a demonstration were purposed, there must be a corresponding development of means, which would be costly in men, money, carriage, and supplies, even though the force had little else to endure than the friction of operations in so poor and difficult a country, and must necessarily divert a large and valuable part of our force from the more direct and effective operations in the Gulf. With the sea for our base and the command of shipping at our disposal, it was manifestly much more certain of effect to concentrate exertion on a landing in such force in the Gulf as to establish ourselves securely at a point which should make a good base for further operations if the Shah of Persia were not brought to reason by the opening successes against his sea-port and littoral provinces, than to reverse the plan of the campaign by making Quetta the real base of operations against Persia, and the action in the Gulf a mere diversion. Lord Canning finally rejected the suggested movement on Quetta, concentrated his efforts on the Gulf, and coerced Persia easily and at once. He thus avoided frittering away his force by detaching troops to Quetta, and avoided the drain on men and resources which would have been as protracted as utterly inevitable had he been led into tedious operations across the breadth of the countries which intervene between our Indus and the Persian frontier ; a drain which would have stripped him of the European troops with which he met the events of 1857, and would have imperilled his position in that eventful year even more than was the case, for troops engaged on the projected line of operations from Quetta to Herat and onwards could never have been recovered in time for his necessities in India as were those set free from the successful operations in the Gulf of Persia.

resources

It will be observed by those who have followed during the last 10 years the series of events in Affghanistan that none of General Jacob's prognostications have as to the consequences of the non-occupation of Quetta had effect. On the contrary, had Dost Mahomed lived, he would have consolidated an Affghan kingdom hostile to Persia, holding Herat, and as jealous of Russian as of British influence or control. His death threw Affghanistan into the anarchy of a civil war, but as the competitors for power are thinned off in this fratricidal contest, we may expect the reins to fall into the hands of some one chief of the family who is capable of maintaining himself from Herat to Candahar and Cabul, and will be all the stronger and more fit for his position by the struggle he has had to go through. Be he who he may, the instincts of his race and position will impose upon him the policy of Dost Mahomed, and we shall gain nothing by an aggressive policy on the Indus frontier whether in Scinde or Peshawur calculated to irritate the jealousy of the Belooch and the Affghan. Any intervention now would be ill-timed, and is wholly uncalled for, and the restless longing of the Scinde frontier officers to escape into active life beyond their own proper boundaries must be firmly curbed.

If our position on the Indus frontier be one of unmistakeable strength, it will long paralyze aggressive presumption. I know that we could again seize Affghanistan if it were advisable or necessary, and that with our Indus frontier complete in its communications, parallel and perpendicular, no power on earth could shake us out of that country. I know, too, that, with the Affghans, friendly and cordial, we could, without the actual seizure of the country for ourselves, organise its defence in a most destructive manner against hostile invasions ; but neither alternative is at present imposed upon us as of the smallest necessity, and I am absolutely opposed to precipitating complications and plunging into certain difficulties out of respect for nervous apprehensions, the realization of which is, if it ever take place, remote, and can be met when the time comes whichever way may be most advisable, provided, in the meantime, we so perfect our position on the Indus frontier that offensive or defensive operations, whether above or below the passes, are alike at our command.

Neither the people nor the country have altered since 1838, and any one who knows Affghanistan will not hastily or partially compromise troops in that country or in Beloochistan without any adequate motive, and on purely restless and visionary anticipations, which have in one case been signally falsified, and will, in all probability, be the same in the present instance.

5 February 1867. (signed) H. M. Durand.

— No. 3. —

(Foreign Department.—Political.—No. 42.)

To the Right Honourable Viscount Cranborne, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord, Fort William, 23 February 1867.

We have the honour to transmit, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copies of a correspondence with the Bombay Government on the subject of Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan's proceedings at Quetta, and the measures necessary to prevent him from compromising the neutrality observed by the Khan of Khelat and the British Government towards the factions contending in Affghanistan.

2. Your Lordship will perceive that we authorised the Bombay Government to require of the Khan of Khelat the immediate extrusion of Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan from Khelat territory ; but that we at the same time expressed a belief that the recent victory of the Cabul troops over the Ameer Shere Ali Khan would tempt the Sirdar to return spontaneously into Affghanistan. Later intelligence from the frontier shows that our anticipations have been realised, and that the Sirdar, immediately on hearing of the Ameer's defeat and flight, marched back to Candahar and occupied that city, in the interests of the victorious party.

 3. The

3. The Political Superintendent on the Scinde frontier was desirous to make Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan's presence at Quetta a pretext for our undertaking a military promenade in Beloochistan. We summarily disallowed so unnecessary and impolitic a project.

We have, &c.
(signed) John Lawrence.
W. R. Mansfield.
H. S. Maine.
W. Grey.
G. N. Taylor.
W. N. Massey.
H. M. Durand.

Enclosure 1, in No. 3.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to Government, Bombay, to the Secretary to the Government of India, in the Foreign Department, Fort William (No. 28); dated 25th January 1867.

Memorandum from the Commissioner in Scinde, No. 21; dated the 15th January 1867.

Letter from the Political Superintendent on the Frontier to the Commissioner in Scinde, No. 1326; dated the 28th December 1866.

Letter from the Political Agent in Beloochistan to the Superintendent, Upper Scinde Frontier, No. 1324; dated the 28th December 1866.

I AM directed to forward, for the early instructions of the Government of India, the enclosed copy of correspondence from the Political Superintendent on the frontier of Upper Scinde regarding the proceedings of Mahomed Shureef Khan since his arrival in Beloochistan.

2. In forwarding this correspondence, I am desired to state that the Bombay Government agree in the views expressed by the Commissioner in Scinde in his memorandum* submitting this correspondence, except that they would not give Mahomed Shureef Khan the option of remaining at Kurrachee.

* No. 21, of the 15th January 1867.

3. He should, his Excellency the Governor in Council thinks, be requested either to return to Affghanistan, or to proceed to Mecca, or, if he wishes to live in India, to select some residence away from the Affghan or Belooch frontier.

4. I am directed to request that the instructions of the Government of India may be sent, if possible, by telegraph.

Enclosure 2, in No. 3.

From Lieutenant Colonel M. S. Green, C.B., Political Agent, Beloochistan, to Lieutenant Colonel Sir H. W. R. Green, K.S.I., C.B., Political Superintendent, Frontier, Upper Scinde (No. 1324); dated Jacobabad, 28th December 1866.

I HAVE the honour to bring to your notice that about two months since a quarrel took place between the Ameer of Affghanistan, Shere Ali Khan, and his brother, Mahomed Shureef Khan, which resulted in the departure of the latter from Candahar, and encamping in the valley of Shalkote (Quetta), the frontier town of Beloochistan towards Candahar, he brought with him about 100 horsemen, and has up to this time been treated as a guest by his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

2. On the first arrival of Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan in Quetta the Khan wrote to the Ameer Shere Ali Khan informing him of the fact, and requesting to be intimated with his wishes regarding him. Mahomed Shureef Khan had, in the first instance, stated that his intention was to proceed to Mecca, viâ Khelat and Scinde.

3. The answer from the Ameer to this letter dated from Candahar, 1st December, to the address of the Khan, states that his brother (Mahomed Shureef Khan) was the origin of all the misfortunes which had befallen him, and is a universal mischief-maker throughout Affghanistan; that he was a man of little sense and untrustworthy in every respect.

4. A few days subsequent to the receipt of the above answer at Khelat, Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan writes from Quetta to his Highness the Khan, forwarding two horses as presents and inviting his advice under the present circumstances.

5. His Highness declined to receive the presents on the plea that it was contrary to the custom of Beloochistan to do so when the parties offering them were guests in the country, but he recommended the Sirdar to be reconciled to the Ameer; but should he fail to do so, suggested his carrying out his original intention of proceeding to Mecca.

6. There is now little doubt but that Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan has abandoned the project of a journey to Mecca, if he ever held such an intention, and that his presence in the Quetta valley is for the purpose of intriguing with the rulers at Cabul, to the detriment of the Ameer Shere Ali Khan. Recent intelligence from Candahar shows that letters from Cabul to the address of the Sirdar fully approved of his having taken up his residence at Quetta, and directed him to afford every information for the furtherance of the views of the Cabul rulers with regard to the Ameer Shere Ali Khan.

in

7. Intelligence of a more recent date distinctly states that the Sirdar Mahomed Shureef, although himself a guest in neutral territory, is now attempting to raise a force in the interest of the Cabul rulers from amongst the tribes in the hills immediately adjoining the Khelat frontier, the object being to establish this force for offensive purposes in the rear of the Ameer Shere Ali Khan, whilst the latter should be employed in defending himself against the Cabul rulers in his front.

1. Vernacular letter from His Highness the Khan of Khelat's Naib, in charge of the Quetta district; dated 10th December 1866, to the address of the Khan.
2. Letter from the Khan to the Ameer Shere Ali Khan; dated 17th December 1866.

8. The above state of affairs, together with the continued presence of the Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan at Quetta under other circumstances than that of a fugitive, places his Highness the Khan of Khelat in a somewhat difficult position; this prince has hitherto received and treated fugitives from both sides in Affghanistan with the utmost impartiality, and in all cases becoming the ruler of a neutral State, and the fact of an influential chief notoriously disaffected to the Ameer Shere Ali Khan and in direct communication with his enemies now taking up a position on the very frontier of his country is not improbable to lead to differences between his Highness and whoever may ultimately be ruler in Affghanistan, for, should Mahomed Shureef Khan continue to carry out his intrigues from Quetta for any length of time, the place will soon, in spite of the Khan's endeavours to prevent it, become a centre to which all the disaffected spirits of Affghanistan will be drawn, besides rendering it probable that Beloochistan itself may become a field for the operations of the belligerent forces, which, I need not say, could not well happen without endangering the peace on the British frontier.

Enclosure 3, in No. 3.

From Lieutenant Colonel Sir H. W. R. Green, K.S.I., C.B., Political Superintendent, Frontier, Upper Scinde, to S. Mansfield, Esq., C.S.I., Commissioner in Scinde (No. 1326); dated Jacobabad, the 28th December 1866.

I HAVE the honour to forward a letter* received from Lieutenant Colonel Malcolm Green, C.B., Political Agent in Beloochistan, and bringing current of events now passing in Affghanistan up to the most recent date that intelligence has been received.

* No. 1324, dated this day.

2. I would now most earnestly bring to your notice the proceedings of Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan and the manner in which they are likely to compromise his Highness the Khan of Khelat, unless the British Government exerts its influence with the contending chiefs of Affghanistan, or openly supports the Ruler of Khelat in carrying out its policy of non-intervention in Affghan affairs. Should neither course be adopted, I should fear that the field of contention between the rival chiefs of Affghanistan will be gradually transferred to Beloochistan, in which case our ally the Khan will become most assuredly involved, while it will be almost impossible for the British Government to remain any longer neutral.

3. The difficulty of the position of the Khan of Khelat will be apparent to you. If he drives Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan from within his territory, he will make an enemy of the Ruler of Cabul, who will not fail, in the event of his becoming supreme in Affghanistan, to revenge himself upon his Highness the Khan on the first opportunity; while, should his Highness permit Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan to remain in his present position at Quetta, making it a base of operations against the Ameer Shere Ali Khan, he will in a like manner bring on himself the enmity and vengeance of that Sirdar should he succeed in re-instating himself as Ruler of the Affghans.

4. I would further point out that the presence of Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan so near our border, and within the territory of a Prince over whom our influence is known to exert great power, will most assuredly cause suspicion in the mind of Sirdar Shere Ali Khan as to our good faith in maintaining the strict neutrality we have hitherto done between the rival powers of Affghanistan.

5. To obviate the difficulties, present and prospective, which are likely to accrue both to the British Government and Belooch State from the existing situation of affairs, I would respectfully make the following suggestions:—

6. That the Supreme Government be moved to communicate to Sirdar Mahomed Affzul Khan of Cabul that it will not allow Beloochistan, being situated contingent to the British border, and with which it has so close relations, to be made a base of operations either for intriguing or open war for any party now contending for power in Affghanistan, and that his Highness the Khan has been requested to cause the extradition of Mahomed Shureef Khan from within his territory.

 7. I would

7. I would further most strongly urge the employment of a small British detachment in Beloochistan, in the form of the Political Agent's escort, and which might patrol, accompanied by him, the mountain country between the head of the Gundava and Bolan Passes. The presence of such a force would materially strengthen the Khan in maintaining his neutrality, and those beyond his territory would at once perceive the impossibility of attempting to use it to further their own views, and would in all probability turn their attention towards Herat and Persia.

8. The presence of such a detachment would meet with the support of the Khan and of every Chief in Beloochistan, while the great influence exerted in the country by Lieutenant Colonel Malcolm Green, C.B., combined with his thorough knowledge of the Chief and people, his long experience, and high character, would prevent the possibility of involving the British Government in political complications with either State.

9. The strength of the detachment proposed should consist of a complete squadron of Scinde Horse, four companies of Rifles, and a mountain train, and could be detached from the present frontier field force, provided it were replaced by other troops, as a reduction to the already slender force in Upper Scinde at my disposal would be most impolitic at the present time.

10. To supply the place of the above detachment, and supposing that the exigencies of the State render unavailable an equal number of cavalry from other stations of the Bombay Presidency for service in Upper Scinde, I might be permitted to raise the three corps of Scinde Horse from 500 to 600 each regiment, while one of the Belooch regiments now stationed in Scinde might be ordered to the frontier to occupy the place of the infantry detached. I may here state that there are vacant lines for a complete native infantry regiment at Jacobabad.

11. By the above arrangement the only extra cost to the State would be the raising of 300 cavalry, which I feel convinced would be fully compensated for by the increased security afforded to the frontier and the removal of the chance of being forced to abandon our present position of neutrality towards the contending powers in Affghanistan.

12. In conclusion, I would most strongly bring to the notice of Government the excellent conduct of his Highness the Khan of Khelat; he has never failed to give the frontier political authorities notice on any subject affecting its welfare, and has and does all in his power to loyally meet its wishes and carry out its policy; and I consider that an expression of opinion on the part of the Government of India to the effect that his Highness's conduct meets with its approval, combined with some more substantial mark in the shape of a present of Arab horses, would have a most beneficial effect in encouraging his Highness to continue his present line of conduct, a deviation from which might cause much inconvenience to the State.

Enclosure 4, in No. 3.

MEMORANDUM No. 21.

TRUE copies submitted for the orders of Government.

2. The Commissioner in Scinde is of opinion that the Political Superintendent on the frontier should desire the Khan of Khelat to intimate to Mahomed Shureef Khan that the British Government are anxious that the anarchy that now prevails in Affghanistan should not extend to Beloochistan, and that they are therefore desirous that he should leave Quetta and return to Cabul, or, if he prefers it, take up his residence at Kurrachee.

3. Should Mahomed Shureef Khan refuse to leave Quetta, Colonel Malcolm Green might proceed to Khelat with a small force to assist the Khan in expelling him from his territory.

4. Should this latter contingency arise, the Commissioner in Scinde is of opinion that it will be unnecessary to replace Colonel Malcolm Green's force at Jacobabad with other troops or fresh levies. He believes the frontier was never quieter than at present, and he sees no probability of disturbances on it.

(signed) S. Mansfield,
Commissioner in Scinde.

Camp Bukkur, 15 January 1867.

No. 21.

SUBMITS, for orders, correspondence from the Political Superintendent, Frontier, Upper Scinde, respecting the proceedings of Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan.

Enclosure 5, in No. 3.

SERVICE MESSAGE.

From Calcutta, dated the 2nd February 1867.—From Officiating Foreign Secretary.

To Bombay.—To Political Secretary to Government.

"YOUR letter, No. 28, dated 25th January, received.

"The Khan of Khelat should require Mahomed Shureef to leave the Khan's territory. If the Khan is as sincerely attached to the British Government as he is represented to be, the mere expression of his wish will cause Mahomed Shureef to depart without difficulty.

"If Mahomed Shureef desires to enter British territory, he must be given distinctly to understand that he will not be allowed to reside anywhere in Scinde or the Punjab, and that he had better pass through to Mecca. The Viceroy, however, thinks it probable that Azim Khan's recent success against the Ameer will induce the Sirdar to return northwards with the view of joining the Cabul party.

"Beyond advising, and, if necessary, remonstrating with the Khan of Khelat, the British Agent should take no active part in Mahomed Shureef's expulsion from Khelat territory.

"Neither should the Agent stir from his proper station. The Government of India is entirely opposed to the military measures recommended by Sir Henry Green."

Enclosure 6, in No 3.

From J. W. S. Wyllie, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to the Acting Secretary to Government, Bombay (No. 129); dated Fort William, the 6th February 1867.

I HAVE received and laid before the Governor General in Council your letter, No. 28, dated 25th ultimo, forwarding a copy of communications from the Political Agent in Beloochistan, the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Upper Scinde, and the Commissioner in Scinde, on the subject of Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan's proceedings at Quetta, and the measures necessary to prevent his compromising the neutrality which the Khan of Khelat and the British Government have hitherto observed towards both of the contending parties in Affghanistan.

2. Lieutenant Colonel Sir Henry Green recommends that the Government of India inform Sirdar Mahomed Ufzul Khan at Cabul of its having called on the Khan of Khelat to expel Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan from Khelat territory; that Lieutenant Colonel Malcolm Green be granted one squadron of Scinde Horse, four companies of Rifles, and a Mountain Train wherewith to patrol the mountain country between the head of the Gundava and Bolan Passes; that to supply the place of this detachment at Jacobabad, the three regiments of Scinde Horse be each raised from a strengh of 500 sabres to 600, and a Belooch regiment be ordered to the frontier; and, lastly, that a present of some Arab horses be made by the Government of India to the Khan of Khelat.

3. The Commissioner in Scinde suggests that the Khan of Khelat should be required to give Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan the option of returning to Cabul or living at Kurrachee; and, in the event of the Sirdar's refusing either alternative, that Lieutenant Colonel Malcolm Green might proceed to Khelat with a small force to assist the Khan in expelling him. The Commissioner, however, does not think it would be necessary to replace Lieutenant Colonel Malcolm Green's force with other troops.

4. The Government of Bombay agrees generally with Mr. Mansfield, but would insist on Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan's either proceeding to Mecca or residing at some place much further distant from the Affghan or Belooch frontier than Kurrachee.

5. I have already conveyed to you by telegram the orders of the Government of India intimating that the Governor General in Council approves of the Bombay Government's opinions as to the expulsion of Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan from Khelat territory, and the limitation which should be imposed on his choice of residence in India; but that his Excellency in Council cannot sanction any steps of active interference being taken by our officers in Beloochistan. I am now to lay down the views of the Government of India in greater detail.

6. On the general question of policy, the Right Honourable the Governor General in Council fully admits the inexpediency of allowing Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan, or any other Affghan chiefs, to find an asylum in Beloochistan, and there to organise measures for the assistance of either of the contending parties in Affghanistan. Such permission would no doubt lead to complications between the Khan of Khelat and the Affghan factions. But his Excellency in Council, as the Government of Bombay will have already learned from my recent Despatch regarding the proposed occupation of Quetta, wholly disallows the policy advocated by Lieutenant Colonel Sir Henry Green.

7. The Government of India sees no necessity for any military promenade in Beloochistan. On the contrary, it considers that such a proceeding would have an injurious effect in Affghanistan, and lead to the supposition that we were desirous of interfering in the intestine struggles to which that country is a prey.

8. The Government of India cannot hear of any proposals for an increase in the strength of the Scinde Horse, or for an addition to the force on the frontier of Upper Scinde.

9. Neither can the Government of India recognise the advantage of entering into any communication at present with the Sirdars in power at Cabul.

The Governor General in Council carefully watches the progress of events in Affghanistan, and is prepared to take, with reference to the affairs of that country, whatever step his judgment may approve.

10. Lastly, his Excellency in Council declines, for the present at any rate, to make any such communication or despatch any such presents to the Khan of Khelat as Sir H. Green advises. The point may be reserved for consideration until the Khan of Khelat shall have carried out the wishes of the British Government in regard to Sirdar Mahomed Shureef Khan.

Enclosure 7, in No. 3.

SERVICE MESSAGE.

From Bombay, dated the 14th February 1867.—From Secretary to Government.

To Calcutta.—To Secretary, Foreign Department.

"DOES your telegram of 2nd and letter, No. 129, of 6th instant, on Beloochistan affairs, prohibit Colonel Malcolm Green returning to Quetta with escort of Scinde Horse on the same footing as before he assumed charge at Jacobabad during Sir Henry Green's absence?"

Enclosure 8, in No. 3.

SERVICE MESSAGE.

From Calcutta, dated the 16th February 1867.—From Officiating Foreign Secretary.

To Bombay.—To Political Secretary to Government.

"THE recent orders of the Government of India do not preclude the return of Colonel Malcolm Green to Quetta in his former position."

— No. 4. —

(Foreign Department.—Political.—No. 162.)

To the Right Honourable Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart., Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

Sir, Simla, 23 October 1867.

IN continuation of our letters No. 15, dated 23rd January last, on the projected occupation of Quetta, and our political relations on the North West Frontier, and No. 3, dated 3rd ultimo (Secret), on the policy to be pursued in reference to the present state of parties in Affghanistan, we beg to forward printed copies of a paper submitted by Lieutenant Colonel P. Lumsden, Deputy Quartermaster General, Bengal Army, and by Colonel H. Norman, C.B., at the request of the Viceroy.

2. We have taken the opportunity of reviewing generally our position towards Cabul, and ulteriorly Russia. Copies of the Minutes which we have recorded on the subject are transmitted with this Despatch.

3. You

3. You will observe that we are unanimously and strongly of opinion that the prosperity of the country would be placed in jeopardy by any advance beyond our present boundary.

4. The subject has attracted so much attention from the public press, and opinions of a different character are put forth with such confidence and persistency, that we submit to Her Majesty's Government whether it might not be advantageous to give publicity to the present and former papers bearing on this question.

5. The question of giving precedence to railway works, whether by way of the Indus, or between Lahore and Peshawur, will be reviewed in the Department Public Works, in reference to the opinions which have been expressed in these Minutes regarding it.

We have, &c.
(signed) John Lawrence.
W. Mansfield.
G. N. Taylor.
W. N. Massey.
H. M. Durand.
G. U. Yule.

Enclosure 1, in No. 4.

NOTE by Lieutenant Colonel Lumsden, Deputy Quartermaster General, Bengal Army.

CENTRAL ASIA.

JUST 80 years ago the first Muscovite project for an invasion of India was laid before Catharine of Russia; and although Nassau Siegin's conception has never been executed, it has borne extraordinary fruits in the shape of successive Russophobian panics.

At the commencement of this century, when 40,000 French troops invaded Egypt, our Eastern rulers first turned their attention to the strengthening of our hold on India by alliances, subsidies, &c., and Sir J. Malcolm appeared as our first envoy at Teheran.

A decade of years later, when Napoleon's prospective views embraced the project of subjugating Russia, and following in the steps of the Macedonian Alexander over Persia to India, Malcolm again appeared on the stage of Persian diplomacy, but found that within that time a vast change had occurred in the boundaries of the empire. Russia in one step had encroached 400 miles from the north of the Caucasus to the banks of the Araxes.

Following on this came the knowledge of the secret treaty at Tilsit between Napoleon and the Emperor Alexander, having for its object the invasion of India by 70,000 French and Russian troops, and immediately Elphinstone was despatched to Affghanistan to contract an alliance with that country to assist India in case of invasion from France or Russia. We had but shortly before entered into a like alliance with Persia to assist us in case of an Affghan invasion.

Malcolm, in Persia in 1810, was the first to initiate that lavish expenditure which had for its apparent object the extension of England's political and commercial influence in Asia, but in reality was intended to counteract the growing ascendancy of Russian counsels at the court of the Shah. In the 12 years preceding 1828 no less than 5,300,000 l. had been actually expended on this project.

This sum, 5,600,000 l., is taken from Hough's Invasion of India and Army of the Indus, page 14; also see Kaye, vol. I, chap. 8.

In 1837, when some 3,000,000 l. more had been invested in the same speculation, India was suddenly startled by the announcement that a Persian army of 45,000 men, accompanied by a Russian Officer, besieged Herat.

Ditto. Hough gives total amount expended up to 1838 at eight or nine millions.

Alexander Burnes now appeared at Cabul, not alone, for almost simultaneously the Russian Vickovich challenged his diplomacy on the same stage. Panic, like an electric shock, ran through our Indian Empire. Upwards of 50,000 troops at once mustered in Scinde and the Punjab, 19,000 were thrown through the defiles of Affghanistan; Persia evacuated Herat, and after a calamitous disaster, but little retrieved by future success, Britain retired crestfallen from the Affghan field, where, in addition to hundreds of her bravest officers and men, India had sunk upwards of 17 millions of treasure.

See Hough's Army of the Indus, pages 5 and 6.

Another decade of years and the confines of our dominion had advanced 400 miles, and embraced the Punjab bordering on Affghanistan. In 1856 a Persian army once more besieged Herat. Attacked from the seaboard, the Shah of Persia again withdrew, and Herat stood nominally independent at a further cost of 3,000,000 l. to the Indian exchequer.

Vide House of Commons Papers, ordered to be printed. Estimate, Extraordinary Expenses of Persian War, 2,195,000 l., irrespective of ordinary pay and allowances to troops, and charges on account of company's ships, &c., &c.

One thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven finds Russia across the Syr, in possession of Kokan, at war with Bokhara, and requiring from her positions for the location of cantonments on the line of the Oxus. At the same time a large Persian force is concentrating trating at Mushud with its ultimate object still undeveloped, and a growing distrust of Russia is showing itself by appeals through that mighty organ, the press of England, to the Governments of England and India to repeat a policy tested by half a century's experience, and hitherto productive of no result beyond a financial burden on our Indian exchequer of some 30,000,000*l.*

See page 27 of Observations on Affghanistan, Vigne's Cashmere, vol. 1.

Authorities, both at home and in India, urge on the State vast projects with chimerical issues, such as Lord Auckland conceived when, in August 1838, he thus addressed the Secret Committee on the subject of the proposed invasion of Affghanistan:—

"The operations which we are about to undertake will doubtless be attended with much expense; but this consideration must, I feel assured, be held comparatively light when contrasted with the magnitude of the object to be gained, which is no less than to raise up a barrier from all encroachments from the westward."

Policy demands that we should not leave to haphazard the protection of our frontier. India is not England, guarded by her insular locality, and having no independent kingdoms immediately alongside to watch and manœuvre against, but, by the approach of Russia, has become a power in her position not dissimilar to Austria or Prussia.

It is therefore incumbent on us to study the examples of defence developed after all past experience by the great Continental powers, ever bearing in mind our peculiar position in India of conquerors alienated by creed and the advancement of our civilisation from the races subject to us.

This peculiarity renders it necessary that any system of operation in India should involve the double consideration of protection from invasion, as well as defence from interior discontent or disturbance. The difficulty of the problem to be solved is greatly increased by our Indian Government having to meet contingencies unsurpassed by any European Continental complications, with its mainstay on a numerically uncertain body of British troops liable to reduction on any emergency, considered at home to be of more vital importance to England than her Indian interests.

Again, from the impossibility of obtaining a sufficient number of British troops for all our requirements, and the ruinous expense which would ensue, could we procure them, the great numerical strength of our Indian army must ever depend on the native troops. Policy demands that, not only the number of our native troops should be limited, but also that too great a preponderance of the military element should not exist amongst the different populations. The Government of India is, by this consideration, deprived of the great expansive resources available on emergencies to all European Continental powers, viz., conscription; and, therefore, in deliberating on the protection of her frontier, we must limit ourselves to such military forces as the finances and policy of the State can ordinarily supply, and to the theatre in which such forces can be most effectually developed. I do not mean to say that if threatened with invasion, or if the result to be gained could be shown to materially strengthen our position, that the Government should not strain its utmost resources and entail every expenditure, however extraordinary, but that nothing could justify such a policy without some more definite guarantee of positive danger, or certain result, than the problematical issue of an advance from our Scinde Frontier to Herat, or to any other position in front of our present mountain boundary, which seems the course immediately advocated by some politicians.

At such a time our rulers may well profit by the experience of the past, and not forget the prophetic voice of military experience and wisdom as issued from the late Duke of Wellington, before urged by like incitements. Lord Auckland's Government plunged headlong into the last Affghan war. The present Prime Minister of England thus quoted it in his speech on the Income Tax, 11th April 1842:—

Extracted from Vigne's Cashmere. See Observations on Affghanistan, page xx, and foot note.

"Triumph you may; confident you may be, as I am, in the gallantry of your troops; but when through your gallantries the victory has been gained, and you have succeeded, then will come your embarrassments."

See this further corroborated in Notes to Kaye's Affghanistan, vol. 1, page 363.

Before the intricacies of the Central Asiatic question can be understood, it is necessary,—

1st. To investigate the probable objects of Russia's advance;

2nd. To understand the strategical geography of the regions separating us, and which must form the theatre of operations;

3rd. To lay down the positive object desired to be obtained.

We have no right to suppose that the onward progress of Russia in Asia has been instigated by any different policy than guided the British Government on the same continent.

Extension of her commerce was the primary inducement to England to establish factories in India, and the necessary protection of mercantile development has resulted in the gradual absorption of the whole country.

In like manner the ablest of our own and of Russia's agents have always attributed every advance of the Muscovite power to the desire of extension and protection to her commerce, and there is every reason to believe that, as from the dusky chambers of Leadenhall-street, order succeeded order not to extend our Indian dominions, so from the bureaus

bureaus of St. Petersburg, edict has followed edict to prevent further addition to Russia's colossal domains.

But there is the fact that, although a Nesselrode in Europe ignored their actions, yet a Vickovich at Cabul, and Semonich at Herat, were Russian agents acting in political antagonism to the rival interests of England in Central Asia, and that while, on the one side, British India has advanced its frontier from the Ganges to Nepal, and the Sutlej to Affghanistan, so Russia has absorbed Georgia and Circassia, and pushed her frontier southwards to Yarkund and Bokhara.

In looking at this question from Russian points of view, we find that Mouravief, when sent to Khiva in 1819, thus sketched his ideas on the subject:—

"If we possessed Khiva, the people of the heart of Asia would believe in our power, and would establish a road for commerce by Scinde and the Amu Darya as far as Russia.

"Instead of an advanced post which shuts out our commerce, Khiva would become a safeguard which would defend it against the attacks of the tribes scattered over Central Asia.

"This island, in the midst of an ocean of sand, would become the emporium of Asiatic commerce.

"The establishment of a post at Khiva would have shaken to its centre the commercial superiority of these 'masters of the sea,' even in their own Indian possessions."

In extracts of Russian travels, and the views of Valikhanoff, Golubieff, Boutakoff, &c., translated to us by Michell, we learn that, "since the days of Peter the Great, Russia has diligently advanced, and at great sacrifice, through the steppes that barred her progress; she has now passed them and reached the basin of two great rivers, two important water-ways, whose sources flow through fertile and densely-populated countries; she is fully justified in seeking to be rewarded here for her labours and losses extending over a hundred years, and in endeavouring to secure her frontiers by pushing them forward to that snow-capped summit of the Himalayas, the natural conterminous boundary of England and Russia."

And again,—

"With regard to India, the navigation of the Amu Darya (Oxus) must not be considered as a route for the conquest of India; it is time to abandon such an illusion. But it will be advantageous for Russia to meet England on the Indian frontier, to establish a direct and necessary trade with her, and, in case such a trade be impossible, to endeavour at least to procure the transit of Indian goods to Europe by means of Russian iron and water-ways.

"With respect to a military expedition to India, the Amu Darya (Oxus) may be used for despatching a small force to its upper source, not with an idea of conquest, but for making a demonstration with the object of alarming the enemy and diverting his attention from other points. The close proximity of the Anglo-Indian Empire in these parts need not be feared, as it is no easy matter to penetrate to or from Russia from this quarter. From this standpoint, Russia can calmly look at the consolidation and development of British power in India; and these considerations lead me to hope that, should a line of telegraph from Europe to India ever pass through these countries, it will be entirely Russian."

Again, in the instructions given to Butenef, the Russian agent sent to Bokhara in 1839 to watch the effect in that quarter of the British occupation of Affghanistan, the gist of his directions was to convince the Khan of Bokhara of the good intentions of Russia, to abolish slavery in her dominions, and to protect trade to and from Bokhara territory.

From Michell's translations we further derive an insight to the Russian ideas of what, in 1852, was deemed necessary for the protection of trade in these regions:—

1st. To occupy the upper course of the Syr Darya (Jaxartes) by a military force, so as to ensure the free navigation of the whole river, by which means the struggle carried on between Kokan and Bokhara would be stopped.

2nd. To secure a firm footing on the Amu Darya (Oxus) in order to put a stop to the traffic in slaves, and subdue the Turkman tribes camping on the eastern shores of the Caspian.

3rd. To connect the Syr Darya and Kirghiz Siberian lines by a series of forts.

4th. To transfer the Orenbourgh and Siberian frontier lines to the above new military boundaries.

5th. To establish regular steam communication on the Syr Darya.

6th. To dispatch Consuls to those Central Asiatic countries with which Russia maintains commercial relations, and to endeavour to establish Russian factories in those places.

7th. To encourage agriculture among the Kirghiz. When we find the above policy corroborated in the travels of the Hungarian Hadjee Vambery, the latest of European authorities on Central Asia; and, further, when the motives of Russia herself herself are revealed by the advancement and occupation of Kokan, coupled with the enlistments going on among the Khivan Turkmans, the concentration of a Persian army at Mushud, and the requirements from Bokhara of permission to locate cantonments at Samarkund and Charjooe, the surmises of Burnes, as written at Cabul just 20 years ago on 1st February 1838, seem almost prophetic, and very applicable to the apparent policy of Russia at the present time :—

A Burnes to W. H. Macnaghten, Esq., Secretary to Governor General, dated Cabul, 1st February 1838, paragraphs 9 and 10.

"There is much, however, to lead to the belief that Russia's views at Kokan include political as well as commercial ends. A single glance at the map exhibits the importance of Kokan among the States of Turkistan. It is, in fact, the key of the country, and history distinctly informs us that the different conquerors who subdued Central Asia emanated from this locality.

"But Kokan is not only the key of Turkistan, it is on the high road to the Chinese settlements of Cashgar, Yarkund, and Koten, with which it carries on a very considerable traffic, and where the Khan exercises much influence.

"The value of Herat as an emporium, further to the south and west, has been already described, as well as the designs of Russia to convert it to its own purposes. The site of Kokan, if examined, will appear not less useful, and account for the anxieties which have been likewise here displayed in establishing Russian supremacy. Herat has been stated to be the entrepôt of Persia, Turkistan, Cabul, and India.

"Kokan will be found to be an emporium of Tartary and China, of Russia and the northern frontiers of Hindoostan. Attached to Kokan, it will be thus seen, that there is a political influence subsidiary to commerce.

"Russia also seems to conciliate Persia, whose subjects are enslaved in thousands in Khiva, so that anything done against that petty State must be gratifying to the Court of Teheran, the ends of both being, in this instance, very identical."

From Corr., p. 194, as extracted from Vigne's Cashmere.

Sir J. McNeil records on this subject, "Russia becomes, by the possession of Herat, indisputable mistress of the destinies, political and commercial, of all Central Asia, Great Britain having been forced back to the Indus. Khiva and Bokhara must submit; if they are attacked, Persia and Affghanistan will already be entirely at her disposal."

Sir W. Napier's Life of Sir Charles Napier.

Finally, Sir C. Napier, after his Asiatic experience, states: "The north western nations of India have a shorter line for mercantile operations with Europe by the Oxus, which will beat the Indus, and leave us only the north-eastern trade. Persia and Russia, with their great inland waters, will carry off all the rest."

Vambery thus speaks of Russia's political relations with the Khanats of Kokan, Bokhara, and Oorgunj:

Vambery's Travels in Central Asia, page 437.

"The very obstacles which nature has interposed have rendered, indeed, the progress of Russia slow, but perhaps her progress is only on that account the more certain. The three Khanats are the only members now wanting to that immense Tartar kingdom that Ivan Vasilyewitch (1462-1505), imagined, and which he began actually to incorporate with his Russian dominions, and which, since the time of Peter the Great, has been the earnest though silent object of his successors.

Page 442.

"Without plunging into any deep considerations of policy, I may remark that it seems very probable that the Court of St. Petersburgh, in return for her persevering policy of sacrifices pursued across deserts for years and years, at great expense and labour, will seek some richer compensation than is to be found in the oasis of Turkistan. I should like, indeed, to see the politician who would venture to affirm that Russia, once in possession of Turkistan, would be able to withstand the temptation of advancing, either personally or by her representatives, into Affghanistan and Northern India, where political intrigues are said to find always a fruitful soil.

"At the time when the Russian columns under the orders of Peroffsky threw their ominous shadow from the west shore of the Aral Sea as far as Cabul, at the time when the spectre of Vickovich appeared in that city and in Kandahar, the possibility of such complications as those alluded to was foreseen, and cannot that which has once occurred, when the necessity arises, occur a second time?"

From the authorities and evidence adduced it may, I think, be allowed that the object of Russian advance is primarily to consolidate her Empire by the annexation of rich countries, compensating for the immense tracts of desert steppes, as also by the protection or annexation of Khiva and Bokhara, with the possession of Kokan, Yarkund, and Herat, to secure the great highway of inland Asiatic communication, and to unite her Asiatic and European possessions by the command of that route along which the Scythians of old and Hunns of later periods carried the terror of their name to the remotest regions; or, in other words, to make the watershed between the Indian Ocean and the Seas of Aral and Caspian the boundary between Russia and India, to develope its communications, and thereby secure the lines of commerce from Eastern to Western Asia and Europe. Such a frontier, contiguous to India, would also save her commerce from predatory attacks, the bane of all commercial speculation on the Central Asiatic steppes; and in case of European complication with England, on the eastern or any other question, afford her a convenient field from which to attack or threaten our Indian Empire, and thereby lock up a considerable amount of England's available military resources.

Now let us dwell on the second subject for consideration; namely, supposing the object of Russia to be defined, what is the nature of the country now separating us, and which, under any system, must form the theatre of operations, political or military, offensive or defensive?

under

Ili-Yuldja, or the post of Vernoe north of the Lake of Issikool, and of the Mustagh Mountains, may be considered the left of the Russian line facing the British front, stretching from Kurrachee to Peshawur, with a continuation of the same thrown back to Rawul Pindee, Sealkote, &c. But Fort Vernoé being only a connecting link of a long chain of frontier posts, the later acquisition of Kokan may perhaps be now more appropriately considered as the true left of the Russian position confronting India.

Capt. A. Golubef's Sketch of the Result of the Issyk-kul Expedition, R.G.S. Journal, vol. 31st., 1861.

From Kokan direct to India, except by Bokhara, Balkh, and Cabul, the regions to be traversed are so lofty and offer such difficulties to the advance of an army that, had not Mirza Hyder with Sekunder Khan of Kashgur, in A.D. 1543, invaded and successfully taken possession of Cashmere from Ladakh by the Karakoorum and Leh route, the consideration of it might entirely have been omitted, and our right flank declared impregnable, notwithstanding Mons. Veniukoff's MS. of this mysterious German, George Ludwig Von ——, who took camels and soldiers from Cashmere to Kashgar in 25 days, and the still unfixed highway of commerce said to have existed between north-eastern Asia and Hindoostan, coming direct from Kulja by the Mustagh Pass to Aksu, and skirting the Khotan River by Bostang, Togarak to Khotan, and through Tak to Cashmere or India.

From Kokan to India caravans take three distinct routes,—

1st. Viâ Bokhara, Balkh, and Cabul, to Peshawur, a distance of 1,136 miles, on a road in most places traversable by wheeled carriage and camels, but crossing the Hindoo Koosh, which is difficult and closed by snow for seven or eight months of every year. This route, leading to the centre of our line, will be more fully treated of hereafter.

2nd. By Sumarkund, Buduckshan, Pamir, and Cabul to Peshawur, or from Pamir through Chitral Dhyr and Swatt to Peshawur, distances of 1,593 and 1,340 miles respectively. This route is only practicable for lightly laden ponies, and which even have in some of the most difficult passes to be unladen and their loads carried over by men. It crosses over the Pamir steppes at a general elevation of 17,000 feet above the sea, and its character is of so rugged and difficult a nature as to render its further consideration unnecessary.

3rd. By the Terek Pass (practicable for laden camels) through the Mustagh range to Yarkund, the capital of the province of the same name, a distance of about 450 miles, so far of this route is a portion of the direct road to China, of which Yarkund, until last year, formed an outlying province, and has direct communication with Pekin, which is distant a five months' march for regular caravans, and from 17 to 35 days by post and express communication. Yarkund contains a Mahomedan population, until lately held in subjection by a Chinese garrison of 25,000 men quartered in the different towns. Kashgar, Yarkund, and Khotan, all in Yarkund proper, are the most populous, prosperous, and fertile provinces in Turkish China. Each of these three provinces contain extensive tracts of both mountainous and plain level country. The mountainous portion is interspersed with rich valleys, flanked by snowy ranges. Some idea of the wealth of this tract may be formed from its imperial annual tribute alone to the Celestial Empire having consisted, in addition to one-tenth of the whole agricultural produce in kind, of 200,000 pieces of cloth, and an amount in cash equal to 160,032 rupees. The whole country is now in a state of anarchy, having thrown off the Chinese yoke, but not having yet any established government.

Vide Huc's Travels, and Davies' Trade and Resources of Countries on North West Boundary, British India.

From Yarkund to Ladakh there are two routes across the Karakoorum range,—the one known as Zymustanee, or cold weather road, by Kokiar and the Shayok River; and the other summer route, or Tabistanee, which is the shortest and best by Kilian and Susur, both cross over the Karakoorum range at an elevation of 18,600 feet. Provisions with fodder have to be carried on ponies for many marches, as frequently neither water, grass, or fuel are procurable. The distances are 575 and 458 miles, approximately, by these roads to Ladakh, and from thence to Cashmere through a comparatively sterile Alpine tract, a further journey of 243 miles by the Zyogi La, passable only for seven months—from May to November—for laden animals, and from thence to Goojerat, 147 miles, by the Bhimbur route, likewise traversing lofty mountains. Thus, from Kokan to India to threaten our right flank, Russia would have to march 1,300 miles.

From the above descriptions it may be allowed that east of Bamean and the adjacent passes over the Hindoo Coosh, there is no route which an army from the north could traverse for the invasion of India, and our field is therefore confined to the two great highways, namely, through the Hindoo Coosh by the Bamean route, or to Scinde, viâ Herat and Candahar, which include in their zones the different minor routes and passes converging on the same lines.

By the former, which has been successively used by different invading armies, the countries of Kokan, Khiva, and Bokhara form the granaries to supply the advancing force with its base resting on the Oxus, and its main depôt at Balkh. Cabul might be considered its first object, and from it an army might have for a final objective either to advance on India by the Khyber or Gooleree routes, or simply, owing to the very great difficulty of maintaining an extended line of communication through such a difficult country and amongst such a plundering population to occupy this position, threatening such an advance as a demonstration to cover a real attack from the right, as also to protect the flank of an army advancing southwards from Herat or Kurrachee, and cover the communications of the same from the Ghuzni or Cabul direction.

Quartermaster General's Route Book.

The centrical position of Cabul, the capital of Affghanistan, is very convenient for such a disposition; it is 357 miles from Balkh by the Bamean route; 190 from Peshawur by the Khyber Pass; 319 from Candahar by Ghuzni; 491 from Khelat, in Beloochistan, by Ghuznee, Toba, and Quetta; 374 from Dera Ismail Khan by the Gooleree Pass; and 230 miles from Kohat by the Koorum route.

The road from the Caspian to India by Herat, Candahar, and the Bolan is undoubtedly the only one which affords facilities of supply and convenient position for the depôts of an advancing army. Conolly, Ferrier, and other authorities have reported on it in detail, and no one, I think, questions its practicability. This route has especially attracted attention from the fact of its being the one proposed by Napoleon (had he succeeded in his Russian expedition of 1812) for the invasion of India by a combined force of 70,000 French and Russian troops augmented by Toorkiman, Cossack, and other irregular subsidiary allies. The project is thus translated from Mr. de Warren's L'Inde Anglaise, Volume 6, page 129:—

"A land expedition to India ought to take place after the happy issue of the Russian campaign; 35,000 Russians will descend the Volga as far as Astrakhan; they will disembark at this city and occupy Asterabad, where they will await the French army."

"Thirty-five thousand French will descend the Danube in boats as far as its mouth, from thence they will be transported to Taganrog in ships furnished by Russia. They will then ascend the course of the Don by land as far as Paitisliouskaia, from whence they will proceed to Toorilsur on the Volga, and descend that river in boats to Astrakhan. There they will finally embark to join the Russians at Asterabad."

"Thus the French army will arrive unfatigued and fresh at Asterabad, and united with the Russians, advance to the Indus."

"From Asterabad to Herat, by the lovely and fertile valley of Heri Rood, the route offers no difficulty either for water or for provisioning troops; and as far as difficulties of the two routes of the Khyber and Deyra Ismail Khan for the passage, subsistence, and transport of the material of an army of 70,000 Russians and 15,000 irregular horse are concerned, one dare not certainly consider these unsurmountable."

Supposing this line to be the one adopted, Asterabad on the Caspian would doubtless be the base of primary operations, and arsenal for concentration of munitions of war and supply to be pushed forward 380 miles to Mushud and 200 more to Herat, the latter city being the first objective of the advance.

The previous possession of Khiva, and establishment of a Russian cantonment at Charjooe, would materially facilitate such a design by the subjugation of the Turkimans and securement of the nearest line of communication with Bokhara, Kokan, and the troops on the Syr by the Shirrukhs and Merve route. But Herat in possession, some period must elapse before any further movement southwards could safely be undertaken; for Turkistan and the Uzbeg States contain a most restless and marauding population, which would have either to be settled down, or else launched like their ancestors, the ancient Scythians, in hordes on India, a flight of locusts eating up all before them, and leaving a desert in rear. Against such a barbarous host India has nothing to fear; for, smitten by artillery and musketry on its first debouchment from the passes, this mass would recoil, crowd up in rear, surge to and fro, and then scatter and melt, becoming a prey to hunger, and the knife of the bloodthirsty "Affghan," who, from his mountain top, would hover over the host like the vulture thirsting for an approaching feast. That Uzbegistan is a difficult task Persia can testify, and so do the records of Ahmed Shah Douranee, who, on his death-bed, admonished his sons to leave that hive alone, as in it there was no honey, and from it issued nothing but swarms of the most venomous wasps; and such probably would Russia find when she began to meddle with the countries south of the Oxus. However, the task to her would only be one of time, for diplomacy and power would doubtless gradually attach and settle the Uzbeg States from Herat to Balkh and Koondooz. Along this frontier line there is already a well-frequented caravan route connecting Herat with Maimunna and Balkh, a distance of 370 miles, or a month's march for an army.

Affghanistan would, under such circumstances, be the only State dividing Russia from England; but the chess-board is still open before us, and Herat equally distant from India and Russia. Is it desirable then for Britain to make a push for Herat and cry "check"? After mature deliberation of this strategical question, the late Sir C. Napier pronounced that, "As to holding Affghanistan, it would be folly equalling that of the attempt to conquer it"; and such must be the opinion of any judgment founded on the study of the principles of war, or the political economy of States craft. Russia, in advancing at all events as far as Herat, increases her power, wealth, and influence, secures a safer frontier, completes the possession of great lines of water communication by which to convey the agricultural and mineral products of her existing provinces, and of the countries at the head of the Syr and Oxus to the Aral and Caspian, and from thence to the centres of her Empire. Very different is the case with India; every step beyond our present present frontier only plunges her deeper into irremunerative regions, and involves additional burdens on her already heavily taxed exchequer; it forces her into military strategical difficulties of the gravest nature, entailing at once a permanent increase of at least 20,000 or 30,000 men to the regular army.

Vide Sir Charles Napier to Sir W. Napier. Life of Sir Charles Napier, vol. 2, page 183.

Major H. B. Lumsden's Kandahar Mission.

Again, Affghanistan, in its entirety, as held by the late Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, and which, including Balkh, has a population of about 2,450,000, is a very poor country, the resources of which, even in the Dost's time, under the ablest management, could never be made to meet the requirements. With an annual revenue of 350,000 l., there was an invariable deficit of from 20,000 l. to 40,000 l. a year.

In October 1841, the support of Shah Shujah was costing one million and a quarter a year. See Kaye, vol. 1, page 619.

With the cost of the addition to the army, and considering the comparative cheapness of Native administration, the most sanguine of the advocates for annexation could not reduce the probable annual budget of the cost of such a measure to less than 1,000,000 l. sterling, or very nearly double the amount of the present annual average increase of Indian expenditure.

A very material point in this question is the character of the nation proposed to be embraced into the arms of perpetual friendship and amalgamation. However much mixture and contact with other races may have obliterated the Jewish characteristics of these Affghans, proudly denominating themselves the sons of Israel, they certainly retain in its full pristine development the proverbial Jewish love for "filthy lucre."

Kaye, vol. 1, page 624.

This peculiarity, if we may so term it, was the primary cause of the former reverse to our arms in Affghanistan. The envoy at Cabul, being pressed by the Government of India to retrench expenditure, had recourse to the reduction of subsidiary allowances granted to different chiefs and tribes, and the first touch of that application ignited a spark among the Ghilzies which spread to the whole country, and produced a flame which took all the might of our Indian Empire to extinguish.

Major H. B. Lumsden's Kandahar Mission Report, page 29.

The state of the Affghans in 1857 was thus described by Lumsden: "Quiet and industrious communities are ground to the dust, and their rich and once cultivated lands fast turning to wilderness, while more turbulent races hold their own by sheer force, mercantile classes are ruinously and arbitrarily taxed, and citizens, under the cloak of municipal legislation, are fleeced of their substance without gaining security in their homes. Add to this the fact of all classes being blindly priest-ridden by crafty, bigotted and supercilious ecclesiastics, and a true picture is drawn of the present condition of the Affghan fixed population." Such was Affghanistan in her prosperity under the ablest and best of her rulers; what must now be her state with opposite factions contending for supremacy, and hostile masses continually passing to and fro on every line of her communication. Doubtless, may exclaim the philanthropist, now is the time for England to act and extend her protecting care and nourishing hand to assist this unhappy country; but pause, thou good Samaritan, ere thou recommend a step never to be retraced, and one which, while immediately serving the few, may eventually rend to its core the empire of England's creation.

In the extension of our Indian rule it has invariably happened that the conquered generation have appreciated British Government far more fully than their descendants. The race immediately relieved from the tyrannical thraldom of Native rule appreciate by comparison the certainty and evenness of British legislation, and the impartiality of their newly acquired governors. It is different with their descendants; they have no comparisons with the past, and can only grieve over the shortcomings of the present. Besides, with all due deference to the laws of England, unfathomable in their intricacies even to initiated expounders, perhaps common sense may allow that, to the primitive Asiatic, the application by honest men of rude and impartial though prompt justice, such as applied by a Napier in Scinde, and Edwardes, Nicholson, and Abbott in the Punjab, is much more consonant than the interminable wheels of maturer enactments, which, in addition to learned and wily expounders, require to be greased with expensive fees before law can be delivered.

Hence, although the blessing of a strong government would certainly at first be fully appreciated in Affghanistan, a reaction would ensue, and not many years would elapse before the horrors of anarchy and the oppression of chiefs would be lost in oblivion, and the restless Affghan, recalling only the heroic deeds of Pathan ancestors, like the Highlanders of Scotland, would long for any alliance or power to enable them to shake off a foreign yoke. Should Russia have found it convenient at this critical epoch, common to all subdued races, to push forward her advances, we should indeed find it no easy matter to extricate our armies from a precarious position, with Russia and Persia on front and flank, and a rising Affghan population hovering on our flanks and rear.

The occupation of Herat, and the line connecting it with Hindoostan, would entail a very difficult and anxious military development; for, supposing Herat to be fortified and held in strength, the line of communication to the head of the Bolan, a distance of 430 miles, is exposed throughout its entire left flank. A force of observation being left before Herat, the enemy has open to his choice the different routes from Kirman, Nyband, Birjin, and Yezd, to Kandahar or Furrah, all of which have been at times traversed by invading armies.

Again, in considering this question defensively from our present position, it is evident that a force advancing from Herat without Cabul in possession has its line of communication threatened at Subzwar and Ghirisk direct from Cabul, through Hazara; at Kandahar from Ghuzni; and Quetta from Tobah and the Abistadah route; and that to cover the two latter it would be necessary to detach a large force either to Kilat-i-Ghilzie or Mookur.

"Saturday Review" Article, Russia and India.

"It would be a step in the right direction to go half way and occupy Quetta," say the disciples of the Jacobean principle, who unhesitatingly propose to locate an outpost, 250 miles in advance of its nearest support, with the Bolan Pass and a desert, the heat of which after April is too great for troops to keep the field, between it and that support, through a country which, on our advance to Kandahar, never at any one place supplied one day's subsistence for even the Bengal column, and where, from scarcity, the force had all to be put upon half rations, and the less daring of its leaders actually suggested a retrograde movement.

Vide Havelock's War in Affghanistan, chap. 6 and 7.

What then is the positive object of our Indian Policy?

Is it to compete with Russia in annexing Asiatic steppes, or to enter the field as her antagonist, opposed to all further progress, and a rival for the supremacy of a vast Anglo-Asiatic empire stretching from the confines of Japan to the banks of the Bosphorus? If so, an Alexander or Napoleon must rise equal to the occasion, and advance with legions of the warlike races bordering on our confines to strike at the centres of Russian power, while, at the same time, the iron clads of England try their might in the Pacific, Black Sea, and Baltic, while Europe is summoned to support the rights of contending powers.

It cannot be denied that there is a definite object in such a scheme, and, moreover, that an advance on Herat, with its necessary accompanying policy towards Persia, might, and with justice, be construed by Russia into a threatened invasion of her empire, or to the development of some such project as above set forth.

Be it remembered that when we last stood temporary masters of Affghanistan, our Envoy there, and who himself was one of the great advocates for frustrating Russia's supposed designs, no sooner mastered the position than he thus immediately projected further advances:—

Vide Kaye's Affghanistan, vol. 1; also chap, 1, book 4 (1840-41).

"Herat may be said to be the pivot of all operations affecting the safety of our possessions and our interests in the East, and thence Balkh and Bokhara would be at all times accessible."

When the object of England is declared to be "the raising up of a barrier against all encroachments from the West" by the occupation of Affghanistan and immediate seizure of Herat, with the construction of a railway from India, 700 miles, to that position, certainly the scheme is so vague and the result so problematical, that, to the uninitiated, it appears to be nothing more than one of those wild mercantile speculations, the conception of which, according to that astute French observer, Monsieur V. Fontanier, can always be traced to the western shores of India. Truly the wildest of Bombay reclamation schemes, or most crushing of her mercantile panics, is a pigmy to the vast ramifications of a project, not of private companies, but of imperial kingdoms.

V. Fontanier, Narrative of Mission to India, vol. 1.

Life of Sir Charles Napier, vol. 2, page 160.

"It was a scheme of money-seeking merchants that caused the war, and we have caught a Tartar," wrote the late Sir C. Napier on the 23rd June 1842, when the news of our Cabul disasters had just reached Scinde, and verily the projectors of this scheme seem to desire nothing else but to repeat the experiment.

Again, another common object adduced is "the extension of our commercial and political influence in Central Asia," and this, at first sight, is a high sounding and great interest, especially affecting mercantile England. The extension of commerce was the ostensible object of Burnes' first mission, despatched from Bombay to Cabul; it was the seed sown in Affghan soil which produced nothing but disaster, and now again the cry is to re-sow the crop, regardless of the report of the last result as given by Burnes himself, who, before his death, when standing on the field, and looking at the harvest of his labours, emphatically declared "that man to be an enemy to his country who recommends a soldier to be stationed west of the Indus." The mythical nature of this Central Asian commercial influence, when compared with the vastness of the projects under review, cannot be better exemplified than by stating the average of the total exports and imports through all the north west passes which, by the latest returns, only amounted to the value of 502,869 l. and 527,503 l. respectively.

Kaye, vol. 1, pages 500 and 501.

Davies' Trade and Resources of Countries on North West Boundary, British India, page 1, 1862.

It is dangerous, therefore, to allow any delusive fallacy, founded on merely ephemeral opinions, to swerve for a moment the political course of Indian Government.

Granted that no successful policy can be maintained in a passive state, yet active defence may be pursued with equal vigour and greater strength on a principle directly opposed to aggression.

Jomini's Art of War, chap. iii., article 28, page 162.

Thus, why advance beyond the mountains forming our present strong frontier, and make the difficult accessory zones in advance the principal field of operations, thereby complicating our strategic difficulties and doubling the extent of our theatre of operations? This, according to Jomini, was the mistake of the French Directory when, with fatal results, they invaded Switzerland, regardless of the wise policy acknowledged by both France and Austria, which for three centuries had maintained the neutrality of that country.

To maintain the neutrality of Affghanistan, and to secure the natural strategic points of our line of defence, is the only safe policy now to be pursued.

From Copy of Treaty; Aitchison.

This policy requires of us the fulfilment, in its full integrity, of the treaty between the Government of India and the late Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, Walee of Cabul, and the heirs of the said Ameer as entered into on the 30th March 1855, by which we bound ourselves

ourselves to respect those territories of Affghanistan, then in his Highness' possession, and never to interefere therein. Towards Persia it necessitates a thorough understanding, that so far as we are concerned, the Government will oppose in every way every attempt at eastward extension, and that persistence in such extension will entail on her, not only the loss of possessions at the mouth of the Euphrates and Tigris and on the Persian Gulf, but also, should Affghanistan solicit our aid, a direct assistance towards the maintenance of Affghan independence.

Towards Russia we have but to pursue a dignified path becoming a civilised nation, and not allow imaginary projects or panics to carry us into undertakings proved to be diametrically opposed to our own interests, and only justified by the dog-in-the-manger policy of rushing at them, because Russia may avail herself of them. It has already been shown that if Russia has advanced, so have we. No Russian army ever appeared on the banks of the Oxus until we had occupied Affghanistan and thrust our agents into Herat, Oorgunj, and Bokhara, when self-preservation required of her a counter movement towards Khiva, which resulted in disaster equal to our own. Russia, like India, requires peace and development, and to secure from her a compact, guaranteeing the independence of Affghanistan and Herat, should be an initiatory measure to further combination for the development of communications, and a general understanding on an Asiatic policy which may be mutually advantageous.

Speaking of policy, our great weakness has hitherto been want of a systematic object and of unity in action. Thus, the diplomatic reins of Persia are guided from England, Scinde speaks the mind of Bombay, and the Punjab that of the Indian Supreme Government. It may be alleged that, after all, the whole must be and is guided by the views of our Home Government; theoretically, this is the case; but practically, there is a mighty difference, and little jealousies, the natural result of divided authority, produce the very worst effect. Thus, what system could tend to create greater distrust than one which from which different channels conveys the views of Government to adjacent states in directly opposite terms, when a Brydges and a Malcolm can be at the same Court, one signing treaties of perpetual friendship, and the other demanding terms on the threat of war; or, to instance a more recent case, what could be more difficult for our officers in Affghanistan in 1857 than to explain delicate questions when the ruler of the state to which they were deputed produced very different versions of the same subject from the political agents variously situated.

As one political channel should convey the views of Government, so one military control should exist along our whole frontier from Peshawur to Kurrachee.

An aggressive policy being condemned as inapplicable to the prosperity of the empire, so in the most emphatic manner must be any defensive system which leaves to chance or time the necessary development of our position and communications. The completion of the Lahore and Peshawur, and Indus lines of railway, should be considered a matter of the most urgent and vital importance, as referring to the military defence of our frontier.

When we inspect that frontier, covered by the very difficult mountainous countries in its front, through which armies must file and bodies can only be deployed in the valleys of the Cabul and Urghundab rivers; and, moreover, when we reflect that armies in eastern Affghanistan during the winter cannot move to support each other, or be strengthened from any reserve north of the Hindoo Coosh, we may rest satisfied with our position; provided we command the strategical key of that country so as to prevent an enemy getting possession of it, and forcing us to detach bodies which might be required to add to our concentrated deployed strength to meet an army debouching from the great western pass into the plains of Scinde.

The key of Affghanistan is Cabul, which is also the great strategical point of the country, the centre of its power and of all its communications.

The present weakness of our frontier, politically and strategically, is that we are not in a position to bring our direct influence to bear, for weal or for woe, in support or otherwise of the de facto Government ruling at Cabul.

While protesting against any deviation from the existing terms of our friendship with Cabul, it is incumbent on us, should opportunity offer, to avail ourselves of that friendship to complete, not only our own defensive system, but the only real support without direct interference which we can give to the Cabul Government, and without which, in the present divided state of her ruling powers, it seems impossible that that Government can exist or maintain its independence.

This, it is maintained, can be secured with the greatest possible addition to our frontier development by the Government of India taking over from Cabul the Koorum and Khost valleys, and locating there a force of 4,000 or 5,000 men.

In suggesting such a project, it is allowed that nothing but a perfect demonstration of its primary importance to the existence of Affghanistan itself, and its inestimable strategical advantage to the defence of our North Western frontier, could justify the State in adopting it.

With regard to the first object, it has been already stated that the revenues of Affghanistan in its entirety, as ruled by the late Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, were found quite inadequate to meet the expenses of its government and maintenance. Consequently, that State being now rent in twain by the division of the rival factions of Mahomed Ufzul Khan and Shere Ali Khan, and Balkh, Koondooz, and Herat severed from the control of the de facto ruler, it follows that continued anarchy must reduce the country either to an uninhabited desert, or to a dependency of Persia, or other power whose exchequer will support the cause of the contending faction most friendly to it.

Such a result, it is evident, must terminate adversely to our interests; for the installed power would naturally look to the friendly hand which supported it in its adversity, and view with suspicion all advances from a neighbour which came forward only to support and own it in the hour of its triumph.

To directly subsidise the State without any power to control the granted aid, has already proved useless, and would result in an increase to the family jaghirdaree allowance of the Barukzie, or other members of the ruling family, without adding to the permanent strength of the Government.

Sir H. B. Edwardes' Koorum Report, 7th February 1857.

Taking upon ourselves the charge of Khost and Koorum, we could afford to pay the revenues of the same to support Cabul, and also relieve that State of the present burden of keeping up the military force required for Koorum's retention. The actual annual amount payable would be about 1,500 l., of which, according to our more moderate system of taxation, we would recover from revenue about 1,000 l., leaving an actual loss of 500 l. per annum, with the cost of civil government and military occupation, to be met by the Indian Government.

The result of such an occupation would place us, supposing our cantonment to be located about the centre of the valley, and our border to be defined by the present limits of Bungush and Tooree lands, just nine marches from Cabul, the first four of which would be in our own territory, and last three along the fertile and cultivated lands of Logur. It would give us possession of the Peywar and Shootur Gurdun Passes, the ascent to which from the Koorum side is comparatively nothing, though the descent into Logur, in Affghanistan, is long and very steep.

From such a position we master Cabul, our presence in alliance with the existing Government gives an immense moral and physical strength to it. Without crossing any chain of mountains, we secure a position which would prevent any power from ever contemplating the advance of an army, the flanks and rear of which would be directly exposed by either the Khyber or Gooleree routes.

This is attained by an advance of only four marches along a valley from our present frontier. The country occupied is inhabited by the Bungush and Tooree tribes, the remainder of the former of which are entirely our own peaceful subjects, inhabiting Kohat and Hunjoo. The latter are a tribe of "Koochees" from Neelab on the Indus, of the "Sheeah" sect of Mahomedans. This fact is a perpetual source of discontent between them and their Soonee Douranee rulers.

Koorum is a valley about eight miles broad, laying along the southern base of the Sufeid Koh range which separates it from Cabul; it drains into a river of the same name, and has a general elevation of 4,500 feet above the sea. Edwardes thus graphically describes the country:—

"We were now in Upper Koorum, and the scene was a grand one. Beneath our camp, at the foot of the Durwazah Pass, ran the deep blue river rushing on as if it knew that it had 200 miles of cultivation yet to fertilize before it rested in the Indus. Before us lay the valley, about eight miles in breadth, shelving upwards to the base of the 'Sufeid Koh,' or white mountain, which here springs abruptly from the plain, and rises to a height of 15,000 feet. The distance was shut in by a spur running down from the mountain at right angles to the river, and we learnt that this was the Peywar Pass to Cabul, of which we had so often heard. The plain was dotted here and there with Chenar trees, which once must have been noble, but the Douranee soldiers in the fort had lopped most of them for fire-wood; still they were a new and picturesque feature to eyes accustomed to Indian foliage, and the bracing cold of the climate with the thermometer below freezing point at night, and seldom reaching summer heat at noon, gave us a sense of European enjoyment." Such then would be the position of our frontier station of Koorum, 119 miles from Cabul, 110 from Kohat, and 90 from Bunnoo.

Quartermaster General's Route Book.

The communication with Bunnoo and Kohat respectively would be along the Koorum River to the former, and by Meerwanzie and Hungoo to the latter, while a third line would converge through Terec to Luttummur. All these would diverge from each other at Thull, our present frontier village, and which would form a connecting post 48 miles in rear of Koorum.

In conclusion, admitting that this proposition entails a certain deviation from the existing policy which admits of no interference with the country of Affghanistan, its rulers or its people, yet, when the safety of that kingdom is imperilled and its neutrality threatened, it is urged that no other course is open to us, but to strenghten Affghan rule without involving ourselves in the direct occupation and administration of the country.

As in her prosperity we unjustly invaded Affghanistan, let us not shrink to strengthen her in adversity; to secure for her oppressed subjects the benefits of a stronger administration; and, in acting faithfully in all our dealings, show by example that our Christian precepts are something more than the selfish hankerings of mercantile adventurers.

In Bokhara the Affghan Government used to be upbraided for its Feringhee alliance; let us now, by strengthening that Government, give the Affghan nation cause to be thankful for it, and, by our dealings with the people, associate them more and more with ourselves by a bond of mutual alliance which may, in the hour of need, prove the greatest gain our Indian Government has yet acquired.

With Affghanistan independent and her capital secured and connected with our internal lines, lines of communication, our right is safe, and an aggressive power could only attack our left.

Moreover, the extreme heat of the climate of Scinde, would prevent such an attack being made, except during the cold season. With our communications perfected, and our base on the sea, there is no reason why we should not be able to concentrate from 70,000 to 150,000 men on the line of the Indus, prepared to prevent the deployment of any columns from the passes in front; and bold indeed would that invader be, who, with hostile Affghanistan in his rear, dared to attack our Anglo-Indian Empire.

(signed) P. S. Lumsden, Lieutenant Colonel,
Simla, 15 September 1867. Deputy Quartermaster General.

Enclosure 2, in No. 4.

MINUTE by His Excellency the Governor General; dated Simla, 3rd October 1867.

THE annexed Memorandum on Central Asia has been drawn up at my request by Lieutenant Colonel Peter Lumsden, the Deputy Quartermaster General of the Bengal Army. Lieutenant Colonel Lumsden has paid great attention to the subject on which he has written. He is well acquainted with the geography and history of the countries which form the most important portion of Central Asia, and is aware of the gradual progress of Russia in them. He has served for some years at Peshawur; he has borne a part in several of the expeditions which, from time to time, have been carried out against the adjacent hill tribes; and he has travelled over a considerable part of the border. He was one of the members of the mission which, under the instructions of Lord Dalhousie, I sent to Candahar early in 1857, after the completion of the treaty with Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, of Cabul. He is well acquainted with Pushtoo, the language of the Affghans; and from all these advantages, as well as from frequent conversation with his brother, Brigadier General Henry Lumsden (who also possesses extensive knowledge on these subjects, and great experience of the border), is well qualified to form a sound opinion on the question.

2. Nothing which I have read or heard has ever shaken my opinion that the policy which the British Government adopted in 1838–39 in invading Affghanistan, was very unwise and uncalled for. The pretext of the siege of Herat no longer remained in force; for the Persian army had retired, baffled and discomfited from before its walls. Northern India was never more quiet, nor the Mahomedan population more contented than at that time. I was present at Delhi when a portion of our army, destined for Cabul, marched through the city. I can well recall the pleasure which many of the officers expressed at forming a part of the expedition, the general enthusiasm with which the movement on Affghanistan was hailed by the English in India. I talked with some of the native officers and men, mostly Mahomedans, who were recruited from the district in which I was the magistrate, for one of the newly raised corps of cavalry, which composed part of the expedition; and was consulted by some of their relations as to the character and probable permanence of the service which was then available. But I never heard a word uttered of doubt as to our success, or of anxiety as to the movements of Russia.

3. On the other hand, it has always appeared to me that, however confident our officers in those days were of the sound policy which led to the expedition, the large majority of those who survived that expedition, or who have studied that question, since the war in Affghanistan, since we have obtained a more complete knowledge of its circumstances and resources, of its chiefs and its people, have deprecated very strongly an advance into that country, or any very intimate interference in its affairs. It has been generally said that a large army of foreigners cannot exist in Affghanistan; and that a small one could not hold its own securely. That country could not supply the food for such an army as we should require there, and therefore its supplies must come from a distance. The country can, indeed, scarcely feed its own population, however hardy and abstemious it is known to be. One, perhaps the main, cause of the constant internecine wars which prevail among the chiefs, arises from the circumstance that they cannot subsist themselves in a suitable manner, even though they monopolise so much of the means of subsistence from the population. It is a constant struggle with them to unseat one or other as the heads of tribes and clans, or the rulers of sections of the country. For this, very terrible crimes are often perpetrated even among near kinsmen. The normal condition of the army is in a state of semi-starvation: they are habitually cheated out of a large portion of their scanty pay; and the agriculturists and mass of the people obtain the bare means of existence. A rise of the price of food, to all but the proprietors of the land, becomes a very serious misfortune; and this was one of the various causes which rendered our occupation of the country so unpopular. Ameer Dost Mahomed, when at Peshawur at the end of 1856, speaking of his resources, remarked, "We have men and we have rocks in plenty; but we have nothing else."

4. To endeavour to hold such a country firmly, to try to control such a people, is to court misfortune and calamity. The Affghan will bear poverty, insecurity of life; but he will not tolerate foreign rule. The moment he has a chance, he will rebel. His nature, his religion, the habits of his life, all tend to foster feelings of independence and hardihood.

5. Whether we advanced into Affghanistan as friends or as foes, would, in the end, make little difference; the final result would be the same. The Affghans do not want us; they dread our appearance in their country. The circumstances connected with the last Affghan war, have created in their hearts a deadly hatred to us as a people; and their feelings are fostered and strengthened by their priests and chiefs.

6. In 1856, during the Persian War when, by the instructions of the Government of India, I was negotiating with Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, and making the arrangements by which the British Government gave his Highness a large monthly subsidy, and a considerable number of arms and accoutrements, one of the points for which I was directed to stipulate was, that we should be allowed to have a mission composed of British officers at Cabul. Hungering, as I may say the Ameer was for our subsidy, he started back at the very mention of such an arrangement. He asked for time to consider the matter, and to consult his chief adherents. On the second day he sent me a message by one of his sons, that it was impossible to concede to this proposal; and when I subsequently saw him, he said that he dared not consent to it. According to my instructions, I pressed the matter, intimating that a refusal would probably lead to my breaking off negotiations and withholding the subsidy. After much hesitation and evident dislike to the arrangement, the Ameer at last consented to the deputation of a mission to Candahar, on the condition that our officers did not take the Cabul route. The Ameer either really feared, or affected to fear, for their lives if they were seen in Cabul. He frequently remarked, "If we are to be friends do not force British officers on me. I have no objection to the presence of a Native Agent at Cabul.

7. Our mission was some months at Candahar, during which time, and for some time afterwards, the Ameer was drawing his subsidy of 10,000 l. per mensem. Our officers were all this time in a most precarious position; scarcely for a day were their lives safe, as the news of the progress of the mutiny reached Candahar. Under plea of taking care of them, from their first arrival they were surrounded by spies, and could not move a stone's throw from their residence without an escort, who watched and denounced any man who might speak to them. At last matters got so bad that they were glad to leave Candahar.

8. Brigadier General H. Lumsden, who was at the head of this mission, more than once assured me, after his return, that he had better means of gaining information on Affghan and Central Asian affairs at Peshawur, than when at Candahar; for, at the former city, merchants of all these countries abound, and all will speak freely with an officer who lays himself out for information, whereas at Candahar no one would come near him who had any regard for his life.

9. An opinion frequently advocated by the press in India is that if British officers were deputed simply as commercial agents, and not as our political representatives, they would be readily received at the different courts of Cabul, Merve, Bokhara, Yarkund, &c. But this is wholly a delusion. There would be no security for their good treatment; no guarantee that they might not be insulted, probably murdered at any time. Unsupported by material power, and that so close at hand as to be apparent to all observers, such officers could never be safe. They never would be in so secure a position as to be able to take an impartial and dispassionate view of affairs. They would possess little means of feeling public opinion; no opportunity of hearing the real state of affairs. They would be pressed from time to time to obtain aid of one kind or the other from the British Government; and insulted and even maltreated if they refused or failed to procure it. The wealth and resources of the British Government are considered to be inexhaustible in these barbarous countries; and, in the opinion of their leading men, surely some portion of it might well be placed at the disposal of such trusty allies!

10. I would point to the fate of Colonel Stoddart and Captain Connolly, in Bokhara, as illustrative of the soundness of my views. I might also instance the present condition of our countrymen in Abyssinia, and the expedition that England is now undertaking into that remote country to rescue them, as evidence of the mischief which results from sending officers to barbarous chiefs in territories which are quite beyond our influence. If, under such circumstances, we do not stretch out our hands to assist our representatives, if we do not exert the power of Her Majesty to rescue them, if, in fact, we leave them to their fate, we are lowered in our own estimation and that of others; our prestige is overshadowed, and England's power is called in question. On the other hand, if we determine on decisive action, how many lives and how much treasure must be lavished in the attempt to save them, and how possible it is that the attempt after all may fail.

11. I can well recall to mind the stories I have heard from the late Major D'Arcy Todd and Sir John Login of their treatment by the people of Herat. So long as they had large sums of money to scatter among them, to expend on the fortifications of the city, on anything and everything, and they certainly showed no stint in this way, the

Heratees

Heratees were their humble servants, ready to obey their bidding, to kiss the very dust off their feet. But from the day these supplies ceased, the tone of the people changed. It was then, "What brings you among us? Can't you stay in your own country? What mischief are you hatching now?" And so on. Like the Lumsdens in later days at Candahar, they were only too glad to leave Herat, where their advent had been received with so much honour.

12. In the winter of 1853, if I recollect right, a deputation was received from the Chief of Kokan, headed by one of the Suddozai Chiefs of Cabul, sending some presents for the Governor General, and asking for supplies of arms, guns, and ammunition, and, above all, for English officers to train and discipline his soldiers, and enable them to contend successfully with the Russians. I was at Peshawur when the mission arrived, and had long conversations with the Suddozai Chief, a man of some ability and shrewdness, who had a general idea of our power and resources in India. The conclusion I came to was, that the Khan of Kokan had no army, and no adequate means of forming one; that his troops consisted of the mere militia of the country, badly armed and equipped, with no organization, under little control, and quite unable to meet the Russians in the field. In short, that it was only owing to the physical difficulties of the country, and the long distance of the Russians from their own base of operations, that Kokan had, to a certain extent, maintained its independence. I at once saw that it would, in all probability, be a fatal error sending British officers to such a country, where it was quite impossible that they could be of the slightest service. Lord Dalhousie, however, took a different view of the matter, and instructed me to select a certain number of British officers, with a due proportion of native officers, to proceed to Kokan with the mission. I remonstrated very strongly, pointing out all the objections to the plan, and expressing my conviction that it would certainly lead to the sacrifice of English lives. On this his Lordship was good enough to accept my views, but desired that the native officers should be at liberty to take service with the Khan. On sending for them, however, and asking them what they really wished, not one would consent to go to Kokan. Their idea was, that where British officers were to be sent, it was safe for them to go also; but that if the former were to be kept back, no good would come from native officers accepting such service.

13. Since then the Chiefs of Yarkund and Khotan have made similar overtures, and with like success. Indeed it is only a few months ago that the latter chief, expatiating on the resources at his command, pressed for assistance. And now we have just heard that he and one of his sons, with many of his chief officers, have been murdered by the Khan of Yarkund, and the country taken possession of. Should not such evidence of the utter insecurity of those countries in Central Asia convince the most sceptical of the folly of trusting our officers on such missions. Our officers, however, are burning with impatience, and pining from inaction; and any enterprise which opens a door to distinction and preferment, is acceptable to many of them. Our merchants also are naturally eager to find new marts for their goods, and look with prejudiced eyes on the counsels of prudence and caution, however founded on experience and foresight.

14. The tendency in India also among the English community is to attribute such policy as I have described to parsimony, to a narrow and even mean love of economy. But such opinions are really opposed to the facts of the case. The paramount consideration, in my mind, has always been, and still is, a regard for the true interests of the State. I am convinced that we can gain nothing, but are pretty sure to lose a great deal of prestige, in honour, in the valuable lives of our officers and soldiers, by interfering actively in the affairs of Central Asia; and that so far from strengthening our tenure of India, we may thus shake it to its very foundations. Nor am I insensible, I admit, to the financial aspect of the question. I know well what are the wants of India; how infinite are the material requirements of this country; how limited is the accumulation of capital; how obnoxious is every description of new taxation to all classes of the people. I am, therefore, most desirous not to throw away the public money on expeditions and wars, which may be honourably avoided, and in this view I decline to be led away to engage in a course of policy which too surely ends in such results.

15. Lieutenant Colonel Lumsden has brought together in his Memorandum much valuable information, and a considerable weight of authority connected with our expedition to Candahar and Cabul. He shows the difficulties of the way from Shikarpore, in Scinde, to the gates of Candahar. The heat of the climate, the scarcity of food, and the consequent privations of the army on the march; the character of the adjacent population; the condition of the troops when they arrived at Candahar, and their capacity at that time, if opposed, to have met a really resolute enemy. I recollect the account of an officer who was present with that army. He told me that the cavalry brigade of the Bengal column, which left Meerut with 1,500 sabres, all well equipped horsemen, mounted on the best class of horses which India could yield, could not have mustered 500 mounted men on the approach to Candahar, and could not have got out of their horses a canter of half a mile to have saved their own lives. The army took three months at that city to recruit their strength, and supply their losses of animals of one kind or the other.

16. It may be urged that the occupation of Scinde, and the improvements and extended cultivation since then in that Province, have changed all these things. No doubt some change has taken place; but much of this must depend on the maintenance of peace and security;

security; and how little would the resources of the country yield for the support of a large army, its numerous camp followers, and tens of thousands of animals. The climate of the country cannot have altered, nor the character of the population, in any essential degree.

17. Hough, in his account of the Cabul expedition of 1838-39, tells us that in the first year of the campaign the army lost upwards of 30,000 camels. For years afterwards the scarcity of these animals throughout Upper India and Rajpootana, was well known. The war from first to last cost some 13 millions of money; the lives of hundreds of English officers and soldiers; the lives of thousands of native soldiers and camp followers. It destroyed the belief in our invincibility, and rendered our military service among the natives of India much less popular than it had ever been before. But, above all, it created among the Affghans a hatred to our race, which a generation will fail to obliterate.

18. We went to Affghanistan under the assurance that a little aid from us would reinstate a fallen and exiled dynasty, which had still a strong hold on the hearts of the people. But we found, to our cost, that its representative had no real influence in the country, and no capacity for reconciling its jarring interests and rival factions; in a word, no power to maintain himself unsupported by ourselves. Hence we were compelled to continue in that country, until the incurable defects of our position, and the incompetency of our commanders, ended in the ruin of that policy and the destruction of the larger portion of the army of occupancy.

19. Are we then in essentials to repeat that series of errors? Those who advocate an advance into Affghanistan, or, which is really the same thing, are in favour of measures intended to lead to that result, say that we have learnt a lesson from the errors of those days, and would for the future avoid their repetition. But whatever may have been the minor mistakes of that time, the fundamental one consisted in occupying Affghanistan at all. There was no escaping the evils which flowed from that policy.

20. But independent of this circumstance, which, however, should not be forgotten, I myself believe that we cannot advance a force permanently beyond our present frontier, in the direction of Candahar and Cabul, without the Affghans believing that it is intended to be the forerunner of the occupation of their country. Indeed this is the very object which those who encourage such a movement openly avow. Thus the formation of a cantonment at Quetta, a lease of the vallies of Khost and Koorum, are in view to a forward movement. The idea is that in the event of an advance by Russia, we should move on ourselves, and hold Herat and Cabul as important strategical positions. I admit at once that such is a correct description of these places. But I question whether, in the event of such a movement by Russia, it would be our true interest to take the steps indicated. Possibly the day may come when the Affghans may ask us to do so. At any rate, now, they have no apprehension of danger which would induce them to call on us for aid. A response to such a call, if ever made, may well be left to the statesmen and soldiers of the day, when a decision on such a question may be necessary. But, judging from past events and present feelings, I should be decidedly opposed to such a policy.

21. In a political or military point of view, I do not think that we could occupy Herat and Cabul, with any real degree of security, without constructing fortifications for the preservation of our own people, and to overawe the population of those cities. We should also have to hold Candahar and Jellalabad in like manner. Wherever we placed our troops, indeed, as links in the chain of communication, or for the purpose of commanding the country, we should have to construct fortifications of some kind or other.

22. Neither Herat nor Cabul, unless held in great strength, are positions which cannot be turned, or which may not be blockaded by an invading army. To garrison them efficiently, and yet to have a force free to operate in the field and threaten the flanks of the invaders, with the possibility, nay the strong probability, of the people of the country turning against us in the event of a disaster, would require a considerable army; how large, military officers of experience and ability can alone tell. But taking a general view of the circumstances in which the troops would be placed, I do not think that less than 30,000 men, half of whom ought at least to be British soldiers, would be an unreasonable estimate. Let us only then consider what would be the cost of such an army, with its followers and carriage, much of which would have to be kept up ready for field service. If the first invasion of Affghanistan was a strain on the finances of India, what would be the pressure of the second movement into that country.

23. The difficulties and complications which would follow from an advance beyond the passes of the mountains, forming at present the western frontier of British India, are such as no man can foresee, though any one may make a shrewd guess at them. Every particle of ammunition, all the bulk of the supplies for the troops, would have to be sent from India, and at its cost. All, or nearly all, the troops so employed would be in addition to those now garrisoning India. It has been over and over again affirmed, after careful consideration by officers who know the country, that the force in India is barely sufficient for its security. There is little difference of opinion on this point. The troops then to hold Affghanistan must be in excess of this number, and form an additional drain on England.

24. The

24. The composition of such a body of native troops for service in Affghanistan, as would give reasonable grounds for trusting to their fidelity in the event of great difficulties, would be a serious matter. Affghans in any numbers would be out of the question. Ghorkas, beyond the five regiments now on the Bengal establishment, could not be maintained; even those we now have are kept up with some difficulty. Hindostanees and Sikhs would not like such service.

25. I do not pretend to know what is the policy of Russia in Central Asia; what may be her views hereafter in India. But it seems to me that common sense suggests that her primary interest is to consolidate her hold on those vast regions now in her possession, in which there must be "room and scope enough" for the exercise of all her energies and all her resources. Russia has indeed a task before her in which she may fail, and which must occupy her for generations. To attempt to advance until her power is firmly established, is to imperil all she has hitherto accomplished.

26. If we proceed to meet Russia in order to prevent her approach to India, we give her so much vantage ground; for we lessen the distance she has to march her armies, while we increase the interval between our own troops and their true base of operations. Instead then of advancing as the allies and supporters of the Affghans, if we should ever deem it necessary to do so, we should be the party against whom they would seek deliverance. The shoe pinches the wearer only. The side which held Affghanistan is the one against whom that people would probably join.

27. May not also the advance of England into, or even towards, Affghanistan, be looked on as a challenge to Russia? May it not bring on the collision we desire to avoid?

28. I am not myself at all certain that Russia might not prove a safer ally; a better neighbour than the Mahomedan races of Central Asia and Cabul. She would introduce civilisation; she would abate the fanaticism and ferocity of Mahomedanism, which still exercises so powerful an influence on India.

29. But, supposing that Russia has the desire, and possesses the means of making a formidable attack on India—assuming that she can at once place her affairs in Central Asia on so secure a basis, as to justify her rulers in contending with us for supremacy in India—all of which appears to me to be very problematical, is it our true policy to go forward to meet her armies? I should say not. In that case let them undergo the long and tiresome marches which lie between the Oxus and the Indus, let them wend their way through difficult and poor countries, among a fanatic and courageous population, where, in many places, every mile can be converted into a defensible position; then they will come to the conflict, on which the fate of India will depend, toilworn, with an exhausted infantry, a broken down cavalry, and a defective artillery. Our troops would have the option of meeting them either in the defiles of the mountains, or as they debouched from the passes, or at the passage of the Indus; wherever, in short, the genius of our commanders might dictate.

30. If, on the other hand, the invaders do not move by rapid marches, they must occupy the intervening countries on their route; they must forbear drawing any revenue from the people; they must feed their armies and camp followers from their rear; or they must turn the inhabitants against them; and under the most favourable circumstances they must endure much privation from want of adequate supplies.

31. It has been said that to allow Russia to occupy the countries adjacent to our western border, is to give her the opportunity, of which she will assuredly avail herself, of stirring up strife and hatred against us among all the mountain tribes. But will this be her true interest? And if so, will she be able to do us more harm than we can inflict on her in such a struggle? The further she extends her power the greater area she must occupy; the more vulnerable points she must expose; the greater the danger she must incur of insurrection; and the larger must be her expenditure. The major part of the mountain country between our border and Afghanistan consists of narrow valleys and rugged hills, inhabited by races who, though Mahomedan, are as ill-disposed to subject themselves to one master as to another. They have no desire to be ruled by the chiefs of Cabul. There is, perhaps, not one of these tribes who would not earnestly seek our aid against any invader if their leading men found themselves likely to be overmatched. Which party would be best able under such circumstances to win them to its side, we or the Russians?

32. Further it has been urged that the extension of Russian power to our frontier would lead to insurrection in the interior of India. I do not think that this would happen to any serious extent; perhaps it would not occur at all. Much would, of course, depend on the Government of the day, and the contentment of the people. But, at the worst, our troops massed along the border, ready to meet the invaders, would have a greater influence on the discontented people of India than the same troops locked up beyond the mountains in Affghanistan.

33. Or, if formidable insurrection should arise in India, with which the British and Native troops in the country could not cope, what would be the proper action of the rulers in India? Would it not be to recall the army beyond the passes? If, on the other hand, misfortune befell the distant force, we would have only the choice to reinforce it from India, which might be most inconvenient, or to recall it to India; and what would, in all likelihood, be the fate of that army, encumbered with women and children and numerous camp followers, retreating before a Russian army, and attacked on all sides by the people of the country, for the sake of plunder, if for no other motive?

34. Taking every view then of this great question,—the progress of Russia in Central Asia, the effect it will in course of time have on India, the arrangements which we should make to meet it, I am firmly of opinion that our proper course is not to advance our troops beyond our present border, not to send English officers into the different States of Central Asia; but to put our own house in order by giving the people of India the best government in our power, by conciliating, as far as practicable, all classes, and by consolidating our resources. I am greatly in favour of opening up lines of communication of every kind which, on full consideration, are likely to prove useful, so far as the means will permit; but I strongly deprecate additional taxation to any important extent; and I am equally averse to increasing the burden of our debt on unproductive works.

35. It is said that there is great force in repetition; and no doubt this is the case. People hope by constant reiteration of the evils of non-interference in Central Asia, that the British Government may be stirred up to action. My own belief is that there is even more power in being still and watching events, particularly under such circumstances as those of the present day. We have very good information of what goes on in Central Asia through our own channels of information. I do not recollect anything of importance which has occurred there of which we have not heard in very reasonable time; and we have all which we do hear in due course confirmed, sometimes through Persia, at other times, from Europe itself.

Simla,
3rd October 1867. } (signed) John Lawrence.

Enclosure 3, in No. 4.

MEMORANDUM on the Subject of our Policy with respect to Central Asia.

THOUGHTFUL minds of our countrymen in India are much disturbed at present by the constant endeavours made through the press, and in other ways, to bring public opinion to bear on those in authority in view to our again entangling ourselves in Affghanistan, under the idea that by doing so we shall best meet Russian encroachments in the direction of India. Those who write on this subject might probably be counted on the fingers, but they are plausible and persevering. Great personal objects are to be gained by our thrusting forward an army into Affghanistan, and the real cause of the agitation going on is what may be styled Brevet-mania or K.C.B.-mania, rather than Russophobia.

The public, however, naturally not well acquainted with the subject, seeing all these arguments about danger to India if we remain inactive within our frontier reiterated time after time, may come to believe in their truth, and a pressure be brought to bear on the executive Government which may in time be irresistible.

I do not admit the likelihood of Russia ever invading India, and I think she will have plenty to do to consolidate her present Central Asian possessions for generations to come. Moreover, Russia and England are great European powers, and any really menacing advance by the former towards India would call forth strong remonstrance, and possibly a good deal more, in Europe; but taking the view of those who are so constantly parading their opinions that Russia has serious intentions of assailing India, and that an invasion of India either before or after a regular occupation of Affghanistan by Russia, is a matter of no very difficult accomplishment, what should we do?

The "Saturday Review" says, occupy Herat, and this, of course, involves the occupation of certain other points in Affghanistan.

Now would this be an improvement on our present policy, admitting, which I do not, that Russia is likely to assail us? I consider that if Russia has strong aggressive tendencies towards our Indian Empire, the policy propounded by these writers is that which would most surely add to all our difficulties and play into the hands of Russia.

I will discuss the matter in its bearings with respect to finance, politics, and military considerations, each of which has an importance of its own; but the one greater than the other in the reverse of the order in which I have written them.

As to finance, it is well known that our Indian revenue is barely kept equal to our growing expenditure. In every department the outlay is increasing. Improved administration means a greater cost for education, for courts of justice, for roads, railroads, canals, &c., and in all these much is now being done.

In the army, better barracks, improved sanitary arrangements, and many measures to ameliorate the condition of the soldier, are yearly adding to the cost; even though, year by year, the actual fighting strength of that army is diminished.

In fact, every year expenditure increases, and the problem of how to increase the revenue has not as yet been very satisfactorily solved by any of the various financiers who have followed each other from England to this country. Indeed, it is most undesirable to increase taxation in a country held as we hold India, and nothing but the most dire necessity should lead us to plunge into a course from which its advocates well know we could could never withdraw ourselves without disaster, and which would add a permanent heavy charge on our finances.

At a moderate estimate, what would the measure advocated by the "Saturday Review" cost us?

I take it that if we occupied Herat we should have to add at least 30,000 men to our army at once, and I should think even then we were weak beyond the border.

Once there, we would doubtless find it necessary to occupy places not thought of at first, and 50,000 men would come before long to be thought a small and weak force, as, indeed, it would be, holding such a country in face of the power of Russia.

But assuming that we limited our first force to 30,000 men, what cost would be entailed upon us?

An army for such a service would have certainly more than a third of its numbers British, and I will assume that it was composed as follows, allowing each corps to be about 15 per cent. under its complement, a moderate calculation, considering the time it would take for recruits to reach, &c.

British.		Native.
5 Batteries Horse Artillery - -	650	3 Mountain Batteries - - -	300
8 Field Batteries - - - -	1,040	6 Companies Sappers and Miners -	600
4 Garrison Batteries - - -	260	9 Regiments Cavalry - - -	3,600
3 Regiments Dragoons - - -	1,200	21 Regiments Native Infantry - -	13,240
12 Regiments Infantry - - -	9,000		17,740
	12,150

Total 29,890 men, and 70 guns.

The cost of this force, exclusive of staff, would be in Bengal about 2,062,657 l. per annum. To this we may fairly add 50 per cent. as the additional cost of such a force in Affghanistan, for not only would the cost of all stores, &c., be much higher than in India, but the expense of moving recruits and invalids over such a long distance would be great, and the pay of the 17,740 native soldiers would have to be largely augmented.

At least 500,000 l. would, I should assume, be absorbed in civil charges, subsidies, &c.; and thus we should have a permanent charge on the Indian revenue of 3,500,000 l. per annum, or rather commencing I should say at that sum, for no one can doubt that we should find ourselves drawn on by circumstances to extend our sphere, until the whole collapsed with some disaster, which might extend to the heart of our Indian Empire.

A first outlay of, probably, two millions would be needed for barracks, cantonments, arsenals, forts, &c.

To obtain revenue in the country that would pay us the cost of collection, or would compensate for the irritation we should cause, is, I think, out of the question, and where would our Indian financiers obtain their 3,500,000 l. annually?

* No one has as yet devised any scheme by which our revenue could be increased by this sum, and if it was possible to raise it, would not the measure be certain to produce the greatest possible irritation, at what the people of India would conceive to be a grievous injustice, especially considering the object with which the tax was levied, viz., to thrust ourselves forward into Central Asia, on a plea of its being necessary to meet Russian designs against ourselves.

Nothing but the direst necessity could ever justify our incurring any large charge on India for the purpose of maintaining troops permanently beyond our Indian frontier, and I think we may confidently say that there is not the shadow of such a necessity.

Looking at the proposals from a political point of view, there seems the strongest grounds for condemning them.

It is well that the people of India should see that we are contented with our present frontier. Aggressions have ceased on our part for several years; and though, to our minds, our former successive annexations of territory might seem forced on us, this was not the impression on the minds of Native Chiefs or the intelligent native people, who often deemed us grasping and ready to snatch at the slightest excuse for seizing the territory of others. This led to a suspicious feeling, which it is hoped is now passing away. Let us not revive this feeling, either within or beyond India, by stepping over the border on the flimsy pretext of meeting Russia more advantageously there than we can within our admirable line of frontier.

As respects the tribes among whom we would thrust ourselves, the measure would be sure to provoke jealousy and hostility, even if made with the avowed approval of their rulers, which might not, however, be accorded. We may depend on it they like us far better out of their country than in it. Once occupying it with our forces, constant sources of irritation would arise with those wild, touchy, vindictive people. Our lines of communication would be sure to furnish a frequent source of quarrel with the robber tribes lying along them. Quarrels would arise between our troops and the natives on innumerable matters, and those who know the Affghans will well understand that blood would often be shed.

In fact, if the Russians came on after we had been four or five years in occupation of our false forward position, they would have the satisfaction of finding us in military occupation of certain posts in the midst of a people hating us, and who would be ready to make common cause against us.

If we remain within our frontier we avoid all these evils, and may from time to time have the opportunity of encouraging friendly relations with the various peoples lying between us and the advanced Russian posts, and information can always be obtained on essential matters as well from within our frontier as from beyond it.

If Russia, in despite of remonstrances, pressed her course towards our frontier in a manner that was menacing, these people would have no grievance to revenge on us, and they would have no object in desiring Russian conquest; while we then could bring to bear the great power at our command of influencing all the tribes to do their utmost to harass and to hinder her advance. Why, the expenditure that would arise from one year's occupation of Herat, &c., would suffice to keep half Central Asia in our pay for a generation; 10,000*l.* would induce the largest tribe to espouse our cause, especially if accompanied by the assurance of another 10,000*l.* as soon as they had given proof of their active sincerity by the performance of some signal service against Russia.

In fact, the position of Russia thus advancing might be made even more difficult by an active use of the Affghan tribes than ours would be, awaiting the advent of Russia at Herat, though that would be bad enough.

I will say nothing of the possible difficulties that might arise in Europe from our thrusting ourselves forward towards Russia and Persia, but, looking at the question solely from the Asiatic point of view, I think it must be clear that the political result of going forward would be disadvantageous in the highest degree rather than desirable.

I now arrive at the consideration of the question in a military point of view, and I will try to disembarrass myself as much as possible of a use of technical expressions often freely used by military writers without much meaning, and very calculated to confuse or to mislead the non-professional reader, who, not understanding the exact scope of what is written, thinks it must be correct, while in reality military considerations are simply founded on common sense, and should be therefore easily explained to all.

The first military objection that I see to the onward movement proposed is, that it would entail an increase to our army in India.

The presence of 30,000 men in Affghanistan would not enable us to reduce a single soldier in India; I think this would be universally admitted by those who have studied the subject. Looking to distant points, how could our holding certain positions in Affghanistan reduce the possibility of trouble in Burmah or at Hyderabad, or lessen the chances of great calls on India for foreign expeditions, such as that of 1860 to China, or of 1867 to Abyssinia? But even going to our very north-west border, the presence of 30,000 men at Herat, &c., would in no way obviate the difficulties of our frontier from Hazara to Scinde, for how could that body of troops so posted influence the Wuzeerees, Afreedees, Momunds, &c.?

I assume, therefore, that whatever force goes to Affghanistan is so much added to our army.

As respects the native troops, I think this would be an evil, for we would have to add largely to one description of our forces, which is, perhaps, quite as numerous now as can be considered desirable (I mean our northern troops, whether Mahomedans or Sikhs), for the troops from Southern India are unfit physically to cope with either the climate or the people of Affghanistan, and the Hindoostani, though rather more fit, is hardly the man for such service.

But an addition to our British forces is, perhaps, still more unadvisable. We are told that already India is draining England too much for recruits, and dangerous endeavours are made on this ground to produce a belief that reductions can be effected. We have fallen to 60,000 men in India, or less, an exceedingly small army for the service it may any day have to perform, and I trust no further reductions will take place; but to have to add 13,000 or 14,000 men to the Indian establishment would be very inconvenient and, perhaps, exceedingly difficult. Indeed, it appears to me that it would be necessary to add to our forces to a greater extent than might be necessary for the actual occupation of places in Affghanistan; for, once committed in that country, we must be prepared with a reserve to move up in support, in case of need, equal at least to the force in Affghanistan, and if we had to do this, India would require to be held with a strong hand and with not less troops than now form its garrison.

Suppose, for instance, we had 30,000 men at Herat, Quetta, &c., could we dare to be content with 13 companies of British infantry in Scinde, or to leave it, as the Bombay Government has now arranged, with but six such companies, for several weeks? Certainly not. We should have to keep at least a strong division of all arms (exclusive of garrisons) in constant readiness to move through the Bolan Pass.

Probably the course advocated by these writers would entail a permanent addition of 25,000 British troops to our army in India. Would this be convenient? Would it be possible?

The necessary increase of force, therefore, whether of Europeans or natives, would be an evil and a difficulty to be avoided, save as a last extreme.

But there remains the larger and most important military consideration.

Do we best meet an enemy by remaining within our frontier, or by going forward to anticipate him?

To this, I, for one, unhesitatingly say we should remain within our frontier.

Placed as we are now, if India is not weakened by withdrawal of more troops, we seem, seem, humanly speaking, almost unassailable along our line of North-Western frontier. On that frontier, or within 100 miles of it, we have as the usual force,—

8 Batteries of British horse or field artillery,	12 Mountain guns,
1 Heavy field battery,	1 Regiment dragoons,
2 Garrison batteries,	13⅔ Regiments of native cavalry,
3 Punjab field batteries,	7 3/10 Regiments British infantry,
	23 Regiments native infantry,

a force of about 7,000 effective British, and perhaps double that number of native soldiers, say 21,000 men, with 72 horsed or mountain guns.

This body of troops has always proved ample to repel any incursions of the border tribes, and often to enter their hills and punish them.

Indeed, save in an expedition of a very formidable nature, such as that of Umbeyla in 1863, it has rarely been necessary to bring up any troops but those ordinarily on the line of frontier or immediately behind it, as just enumerated. Indeed, I question whether much more serious inroads than have ever yet been made could not be with ease repelled with the force now there. Those who are experienced in mountain warfare, or warfare with mountaineers (which, I may observe, has not been seen in its reality by those officers in Scinde who advocate an advance), know how small a force of our troops in the plains, provided cavalry and horsed guns form part of it, can with ease repulse and disperse a horde of the bravest Afreedees, Momunds, or other hill men, when they venture out of their mountains, and few officers who know this branch of their professional work would hesitate, with 3,000 good infantry, 1,000 good cavalry, and 12 horsed guns, to meet within our border any army that Affghanistan could send down. Such a British force, I may remark, en passant, might be very seriously harassed and crippled in the mountains by one-half of its own numbers of Affghan mountaineers.

But, supposing necessity arose from a very extensive action against us all along the frontier at one time, our 21,000 men and 72 guns could very rapidly be reinforced by sea from Bombay and Poona (as respects Scinde), and from the Lower Punjab and hill stations (as respects the Punjab frontier), by 9 or 10,000 men, 5 or 6,000 of which might be British, and 40 or 50 horsed guns.

With such a force the armies of Central Asia (which, after all, could never be very numerous, owing to scarcity of food beyond our frontier, and impossibility of carrying more than a few days' provision for a multitude) could make no impression whatever, even if aided by Russian gold and directed by Russian officers.

Supposing all along the line we were to be menaced and attacked, there could be no communication between the different bodies in the mountains. To convey intelligence from the left flank to the right through rugged mountains, extending over 800 or 900 miles, and possibly through tracts held by tribes in our pay, would be a work of a month, while the telegraph along our line of plain country would flash the necessary intelligence and orders throughout our line hour by hour.

Placed in our own territory, with our own posts, forts, and magazines, and with abundance of all resources, such an attempt would, I believe, strengthen us in India; for, without endangering us, it would incontestably prove our power, while, I am quite certain, a few weeks of such operations would sicken the Russian officers of the whole affair, and probably end in their destruction by the people they were assisting.

I am imagining what it is almost impossible should occur, viz., that Russia, conciliating all the countries beyond our border, managed by great exertions to bring forward, say a hundred thousand men or more with a good sprinkling of their best officers, and perhaps some Cossacks to assail us simultaneously at various points, and to keep them together for a time, which I should say is out of the question. If the hundred thousand men or so were brought at one point, which would probably be more difficult than to bring them down at several, our task would be easier.

But in any case, I think, without weakening India to any appreciable extent, we are quite prepared any day (though we could not be without a warning of some months) for such an onslaught by Russia, which, of course, would lead to a European war, and would not therefore (apart from its own difficulties and small prospects of success) be lightly undertaken by Russia.

I have discussed one portion; first, if the Affghans and border tribes assail us of their own accord; and secondly, if they do so, instigated and backed by Russia, and reinforced by many thousand Tartars, &c.; and lastly, I will refer to the possibility of an army of Russians, aided by Affghans or Tartars, coming to our frontier in view to conquer India.

To produce a real impression on us, a less force than 40,000 to 50,000 Russians would hardly be used, and this might be aided more or less by native tribes; now, would it be better for us to meet these 50,000 Russians at Herat, or at any other place far from support, or within our own frontier, say, at Peshawur or in Scinde? To discuss the possibility of such a force reaching India at all, considering the difficulties of the country, and its want of resources, seems almost a work of supererogation. Indeed, such an operation could hardly be effected unless Russia had been established in Affghanistan itself for years; but if the wonderful feat was accomplished of bringing an army through Affghanistan to India, we may imagine the plight in which it would reach our frontier, from knowing what the army of the Indus suffered before it reached Candahar, with all the resources of India at its back, and numbering barely a tenth of what I should conceive a Russian army must be to venture to attack us.

With ample notice, and with our annual reliefs from England, which give India the ability always, with warning, to retain six regiments that may be relieved, and possibly with a still larger force from home, a very formidable army could be collected on our frontier, unfatigued and not having suffered from privation, which would have every prospect of encountering this worn-out Russian army with success.

Thirty thousand men placed at Herat and elsewhere in Affghanistan would have every disadvantage, and we would have spared the Russians several hundred miles of marching and consequent diminution of effective numbers before they reached us; while our reinforcements would have a long, weary march, and probably harassed, before they could aid our advanced troops.

Within our frontier the troops would to the very last exercise a sensible influence over the ill-disposed in India; beyond it they would be taken little account of.

Arguments against placing troops in so false a position as that advocated might be repeated ad infinitum, but it is time to end this Memorandum.

It is impossible, however, not to feel that no course that is possible to us seems so likely to lose us our Indian Empire as pushing forward our armies into Central Asia.

In protesting against the views I so strenuously oppose, I beg to be guarded against saying that circumstances might not render an expedition into Affghanistan proper, and perfectly feasible. For instance, to dislodge a body of Russians who might have come to Candahar or Cabul, and be engaged in organising measures for the advance of a further force. If, on full consideration, it seemed desirable to drive them out, I do not see why it should not be done; but this should only be done when the necessity actually arises, and be made no pretext for a permanent occupation.

In the foregoing remarks I have not alluded to a modified proposal greatly advocated of late by Sir H. Green, viz., to occupy Quetta. This would be, in fact, simply a commencement of greater and more mischievous proceedings. Our having a brigade at Quetta could in no way check Russia, would embroil us with those we need have nothing to do with, would be very expensive, and would place troops in a position of notorious insalubrity, as was proved during the Affghan war.

Any occupation of places in Affghanistan, apart from what has already been said, offers great objections. I will allude to one, and then conclude. What would be done with the wives of the officers and 12 or 13,000 British soldiers sent into Affghanistan? I presume it would not be proposed to send them into that country; and if not, we should have in depôts in India perhaps 2,000 women separated for three or four years at a time from their husbands—a state of affairs, as is well known, not conducive to the welfare of either party.

(signed) H. W. Norman.

5th October 1867.

Enclosure 4, in No. 4.

MINUTE by Major General the Honourable Sir H. M. Durand, C.B., K.C.S.I.; dated Simla, the 5th October 1867.

SINCE my Minute of the 5th February 1867, on the projected occupation of Quetta, was written, nothing has occurred to lead me to modify the opinions therein expressed. Certainly the clamour of the press, or rather of a part of the press, both in England and in India, has in no degree shaken my conviction of the soundness of the views I then expressed. I say this without at all shutting my eyes to the military successes and rapid progress of Russia in Central Asia, and the unexplained assembly by Persia of a considerable force at Meshed, and of a smaller one in Seistan, cotemporaneously with the negotiations which have passed between Ameer Shere Ali's son, his deputy at Herat, with the Persian authorities.

I do not pretend to believe that the advance of Russia through poor and difficult countries along the line it has taken has no other significance than that of commercial enterprise in Central Asia regions. As little do I believe that Persia has ceased to covet the possession of Herat. Nor do I ignore the fact that the progress of Russia, the known subordination of Persia to Russian dictation, and the alleged overtures of Ameer Shere Ali to Russia and Persia, have made a considerable impression on the minds of our native subjects in almost every part of India, not excepting our native troops. But, provided we do not defer the obviously necessary precautionary measures which I have persistently and repeatedly urged, I view the attitude of Russia and Persia with respect to India without fear or mistrust of our ability to cope with future contingencies.

We are, however, losing time, and also a favourable opportunity, in neglecting to take advantage of the present for the completion of the Indus frontier group of railways. I think it a mistake to have preferred the Rajpootana line of railway to the completion of the rail communication between Mooltan and Kurrachee, and between Lahore and Attock. I think both might be carried on; but if we are to restrict ourselves to one of the two out of financial considerations, then, instead of throwing upon either the Baroda or the Great India Peninsula lines, whose permanent works and ways do not enjoy enjoy the confidence of the public, heavy additional traffic, I would, on every ground, except immediate returns, prefer that the Indus lines be not left in a state of disconnection and comparative inutility.

At the same time the river communication should be perfected.

Under existing circumstances, it is impossible to foresee when, or how, we may be called upon to act upon the Indus frontier or beyond it. The important thing is to have prepared, before that time overtake us, every means that can insure rapid and effective action either on or beyond the Indus.

Meanwhile the true policy for us to observe is, to avoid all aggressive occupation of posts in advance of our present frontiers, and to cultivate as good an understanding with Affghan and Belooch rulers as possible. In a word, we should do nothing to excite their jealous suspicion of our power and motives, nor allow them to play on any weak apprehensions of Russia or Persia, in order to engage us as partisans in their fratricidal struggles for power.

Without disturbing the details of administration, Scinde should be subject to the Punjab Government, and thus come under the more direct control of the Government of India. I have elsewhere stated that it is anomalous that, on so important a frontier, we should be liable to have a different policy advocated in Scinde from that pursued at Peshawur; still more anomalous that the military force on the Lower Indus should be under the Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, whilst the troops on the Upper Indus and its affluents are under the Commander-in-Chief in Bengal. One Government, one policy, and one command should watch over the frontier from the sea-board to Peshawur. There should, in these respects, be no more disconnection or isolation than in its railways.

(signed) H. M. Durand.

Enclosure 5, in No. 4.

MINUTE by the Honourable Sir G. U. Yule, C.B. and K.C.S.I.; dated Simla, the 7th October 1867.

I ENTIRELY agree in his Excellency's views as to our policy in Affghanistan, so far as this paper gives expression to them. I am thoroughly convinced that any advance, or attempt to advance, beyond the present frontier could have but bad results for us; and that employing officers at present on missions of any kind to Affghanistan can do but little good, while it is pretty certain to put us in the dilemma either of advancing or submitting to disgrace. But where two nations have it in their power to confer such immense benefits on each other, as the Affghans and we have, surely there must be some means of clearing the field for the free operation of our mutual interests, bringing wealth to them, peace to us. And I should have been glad to see his Excellency, who is so well acquainted with Affghanistan, sketch some plan towards the end I have mentioned, to be carried out patiently, perseveringly, and continuously along the border. It is not invasion, either by Affghans or Russians, I think, that is to be dreaded.

So long as we keep to our present border we must have the upper hand of any invader.

It is the excitement and restlessness within our own territories which would be caused by even a pretence of invasion that we have to fear. Much would of course depend, as his Excellency says, in the event of such an occurrence, on the Government of the day, and the contentment of the people. But I believe it perfectly hopeless to expect on the part of any people conquered and ruled by a foreign race, such a degree of contentment as would deter them from availing themselves of any fair opportunity of freeing themselves; and preparations for an invasion from Affghanistan demanding that the greater part of our strength should be assembled on the border, would afford such an opportunity, and a most favourable one, to our subjects in Hindostan. But how are we to prevent the occurrence of such an opportunity? I do not, I must say, see how it can be prevented; but it may be postponed, and postponement is gain in every way to us, and means may be taken to render it less favourable to our enemies, when it does come, than it would otherwise be.

The present system of watching events without making any preparation for them (I am not aware of any special preparation to this end), the plan of saying "Good morning, Sir, how do you do," to each successive leader who gets to the top, must disgust all the leading men, and prolong indefinitely the ill-will which the nation already entertains towards us. The policy in question has done us very serious injury already, and must continue to do us much more, unless its evil effects are obviated by other measures; for it is not to the policy itself, so far as it goes, that I object, but to its being the whole, instead of only a part of our policy.

Our chief object, it seems to me, should be the conciliation of the nation, of the tribes at large, or as many of them as are within our influence. We have tried the Chiefs; one we have placed on the throne, another we have subsidised; others we welcome in words. By none of these means has our permanent influence been increased; by none of them do I see how it can be increased with such a nation as the Affghans. We have not, so far as I know, ever tried at all, or at least in any systematic way, to get the people on our side, and until we do get them we are working on sand. Doubtless it will take a long time, much perseverance, much careful attention, to turn the ill-will which our past doings have excited into a friendly feeling, such a feeling as would induce some of the tribes at least to prefer helping to injuring us; but that it can be done, that a poor and proud but very greedy race can be made to entertain friendly feelings towards its wealthy neighbour, in spite of all temptations to the contrary, is surely not impossible. It is not for one so ignorant as I am of the nation to say what steps are best adapted to this end; but the utmost freedom of trade and the greatest encouragement to it by establishing fairs, opening communications, &c., are obviously main agents; and, with this object in view, the construction of a railway from Lahore to Peshawur, as I remarked in my note on that subject, ought to be immediately undertaken and carried out with the greatest speed. At the same time frequent and regular communication between Mooltan and Kurrachee by steamboats should be established and kept up, whether paying or not, until a railway is substituted. Friendly intercourse between our officers and the chiefs should be encouraged; the former should be amply supplied with presents for the chiefs and their people, consisting, not only of those things which the latter may now prefer, but also of those for which we wish them to acquire a taste. These presents should be most liberally distributed in any cases of good conduct, sparingly on ceremonious visits.

The chiefs should be invited to visit Lahore and received in such manner as to induce them to repeat and extend their visits.

Dispensaries should be established along the border at the places where they are most likely to be useful. Medical men, Europeans and gentlemen, should be placed in charge of these dispensaries, and permitted to attend Affghan patients in their own villages when solicited to do so.

But while pressing forward these or such other measures as may be deemed best fitted for the purpose, I would not propose entirely to neglect the leaders, Ameers or Wallees, or whatever title they may assume.

I would not be in a hurry to recognise a man who had ousted his predecessor and seated himself on the throne; but when once recognised something more than words should be given to each man according to his character and condition; little comparatively to one not likely to rule well or long, much to one who promised better.

A great effect might, I venture to think, be produced by discriminating, and occasional assistance in money and even arms, without incurring ill-will or heavy expenditure. If by any payment we could secure light duties and protection to traders passing through any portion of Affghanistan, then economy should be disregarded; but for no other object should regular subsidies be granted. Lastly, a brief description of our policy should be drawn up and widely circulated, and strict adherence to the line of conduct prescribed should be enforced on officers all along the frontier, from the sea upwards. It should be clearly and distinctly stated that we have no intention whatever of advancing beyond our present frontier, that any encroachment on us will be punished summarily and with rigorous severity, that we wish to be friends with our neighbours, and that the surest way of gaining our favour is to assist in forwarding our wish, that friendship improves the welfare of both sides, while enmity only increases poverty, &c. I have written this under the belief that, besides the words of welcome to the new leader, we are doing nothing to improve our position with the Affghans. If this is a mistake, it is one under which I do not alone labour, and its public correction would have a most beneficial effect.

(signed) G. U. Yule.

Enclosure 6, in No. 4.

NOTE by the Honourable W. N. Massey; dated the 8th October 1867.

As these papers are marked "Urgent," I will not detain them; but why they are so marked, I do not understand.

I cannot conceive of any question less urgent, or more worthy of deliberate consideration, than the question opened in Colonel Lumsden's able paper, and so fully commented on in the Minute of his Excellency the Governor General.

I should like to have time to study that Minute, so full of information of the greatest value, and setting forth views of policy in the soundness of which I cannot too strongly express my concurrence.

At the same time, I incline very strongly to the opinions expressed by my colleagues, Sir H. Durand and Sir G. Yule, as to the expediency of pressing forward the line of railway to Peshawur; and, I think, in connection with this subject, the Secretary of State should be urged to reconsider his decision to postpone this work sine die.

I hope to have another opportunity of considering this subject before it is dismissed by the Governor General in Council.

(signed) W. N. M.

Enclosure 7, in No. 4.

MINUTE by His Excellency the Commander in Chief; dated the 14th October 1867.

AT the commencement of this year, on the request of his Excellency the Viceroy, I examined the proposal of Lieutenant Colonel Sir Henry Green, regarding the occupation of Quetta.*

*See Minute, dated 31 January 1867.

It did not seem to me difficult to show that the policy involved in the proposal entailed military movements false in principle, a lavish expenditure which should not be incurred, and great danger to our relations with Affghanistan, and, perhaps, the powers beyond, viz., Persia and Russia.

The Viceroy now desires that we should consider the larger proposition, which was clearly in Sir H. Green's mind when he wrote his Memorandum advocating the occupation of Quetta, and finds favour with certain public writers in England.

I allude to a British advance in force into Affghanistan, with a view to the annexation of that country.

Such a measure, as being one which, under certain contingencies, might possibly be forced on us, has naturally formed the subject of speculation with men engaged in the military and political affairs of India, since the conquest of the Punjab in 1849.

I believe my opinions about it are known; but, in accordance with his Excellency's wishes, I will once more give expression to them.

It has then ever appeared to me that, in the discussion of such proposals, sound argument has always lain on one side; whilst a popular wish, without any foundation of knowledge or truth, but supported by a good deal of clamour and the vociferation of interested parties, might be discerned on the other. I have thought that the popular wish has sprung, in the first instance, from the hardly disguised military ambition of one or two distinguished officers, and the impatience of inaction which reveals the military spirit, not only of our Anglo-Indian armies, but also of the people of England. We know how easy it is to touch the sensitive points of the latter, and to cause an ignorant excitement accordingly. To this has to be added the eagerness of speculators in trade and other enterprises, which is ever ready to rush in where responsible administrators and statesmen fear to tread.

The question we have then to consider admits of serious investigation from four points of view—the moral, the political, the administrative, and the military.

With regard to the first, viz., the moral aspect of the proposition, I would enquire how English gentlemen, who constantly have justice and truth in their mouths, can reconcile a proposal to themselves involving the gratuitous invasion of an unoffending country with which we are at peace and have been at peace for a long term of years. It is true that a civil war has existed in Affghanistan for some time. But the contending parties, so far from any open tendency to break the peace with us, have been alike desirous of remaining on terms of amity with the British Government.

This desire on both sides has stood the test of the extreme coldness of absolute neutrality, the character of which they cannot but conceive to be indifference to the fate of either one or the other.

The test must be held to be very severe, if the keenness of the civil war be recollected, and the great advantage which would be gained by one party from the semblance of real favour from the British Government in preference to the other.

It is, I think, sufficiently obvious that the existance of civil war in Affghanistan affords a much less reason for interference, than the troubles of Poland in the north of Europe, or of Crete in the south.

But if those who urge us to aggression and interference in the east will sometimes look to European analogy, they cannot fail to recollect that we not only do not interfere because of civil war in Europe, but that we abstain from interference in the jostling of rival powers, unless there be a serious disturbance of the general European arrangement, which is comprehended in the phrase "balance of power," such, for instance, as we saw in the case of Russia in 1853-54.

The hope of territorial acquisition, of adding to our commercial advantages, and the possible advance of other powers at future dates, have long ago been dismissed as reasons insufficient for the commencement of aggressive policy, with its consequences of diplomatic rupture, war, and bloodshed.

It has thus come to be held a principle of British policy that, on moral grounds, we should not commit ourselves to the invasion of neighbouring powers, or to armed interference, except in defence of interests clearly affecting ourselves, whether such interests be concerned with our own possessions, or with the larger questions of international defence of the peace of the Continent of Europe. We may flatter ourselves, perhaps, that other nations have not embraced this principle so securely as we have, but it is certainly undeniable that we stand committed to it.

We may surely then ask if this great moral principle, which may, perhaps, be termed a modern one in the history of England, whilst maintained by the British Government with undeviating firmness in the affairs of Europe and America, is to be set aside in Asia. Are we to have one set of principles in the west, where we are controlled and affected by the power and diplomacy of other nations, and another in the east, where we happen to be all powerful?

It may be true that this principle was little thought of, and rarely acted on, in the Anglo-Indian proceedings of the last century. But, on the other hand, a close investigation of the means and causes of the British advance from the old coast factories to our existing frontiers beyond the Indus and the Ganges, may show that that advance was at least as much due to the force of circumstances, to the necessity of self-preservation, and to the configuration of the Peninsula of Hindoostan, as to any moral want in the succession of statesmen who gave the initiative, and finally carried the advance to its conclusion.

But I would submit that all such causes are now non-existent, by which, according to the moral aspect, forgetfulness of our duty towards another people could be atoned.

Thus it cannot be said that Affghanistan presents any dangers to the British power. Secondly, there is no force of circumstances impelling us to move forward, as we saw in the case of the Punjab in 1845–46 and 1848–49; and again, with respect to Oudh and Burmah, in the immediately subsequent years. Thirdly, the configuration of the country, that is to say, of the great chains of mountains which have been called, and properly so, the natural boundary of India, and constitute the British frontier, takes away all ground for forgetfulness of the moral principle, whereas it is well known from the lessons of history that, when a superior energetic race sets foot in a plain country such as India, it is difficult to repress the tendency to its spread of dominion, which may be likened to the flood of one of the great rivers of the country.

If, in modern times, we look for another example of this tendency, we find it in the Russian advance from the west over Central Asia, just as ours proceeded in India from the east, in the absence of natural obstacles in the form of vast mountain barriers.

This brings me then to the political view, viz., whether it be expedient to pass those barriers in the search of new enemies, or to make use of the natural defence thus afforded us by nature, since our advance has been completed to the boundary of India.

This point has been so well put by his Excellency the Viceroy, that to dilate on it further, would appear to be needless repetition on my part. But, perhaps, I may say without presumption, that every word uttered by His Excellency has my full and cordial concurrence.

I can conceive no greater political mistake than a course which would unite the whole population of Affghanistan in the most active hostility towards us, and which would compel us further to meet that hostility on ground most favourable to those we should contend against, with a great waste of our resources.

I believe that nothing can be more true than the proposition, that putting the case hypothetically, that Russia and England must at some future time engage for Asiatic dominion, that party will enter on the contest with great advantages which has abstained from forestalling events by the invasion and annexation of Affghanistan.

If we assume that Russia wishes to invade India through Affghanistan, it will become necessary for her to hold that country very strongly when she advances; for otherwise, the population would rise invincibly, and cut off her invading army from its communications. Thus would Russia have to divide her resources in the most dangerous manner, while committed to meeting all the strength of British India on ground very favourable to ourselves.

In this manner would Affghanistan be a cause of weakness to Russia and would become our best ally, whereas in the contrary case, viz., of an invasion of Affghanistan by ourselves, as before stated, she would be our worst enemy. The problem would then be exactly reversed, and all the natural advantages of position having been wantonly sacrificed, we should have to hold Affghanistan with from 40,000 to 50,000 men, and, at the same time, to meet Russia at a great distance from our own resources, and therefore, in a scene most favourable to her and most difficult for ourselves.

It can hardly be doubted that a single defeat in the field, under such circumstances, would cause the most lamentable consequences; in short, it would be to represent over again, on an immensely large scale, that fatal calamity at Cabul, which shook our Indian rule in a manner previously believed impossible, and of which it is not difficult to trace the train of results through the wars of the Punjab, even to the great domestic mutiny of 1856–57.

We may besides recollect with advantage that a British advance into Affghanistan, with a view to the seizure of the fortresses of Cabul and Herat and the final occupation of the country, will more than anything else provoke the conflict with Russia which, even should it prove inevitable for dominion in Asia, according to the views of certain politicians, can hardly take place in less time than a generation, if we credit her with all the ambitious designs so freely laid to her charge, and with absolute success in giving effect to them.

The positive political results therefore to be considered, are a long and deadly war of occupation with the people of Affghanistan, and a great probability of early conflict with Russian power in aid of that country, that power first acting secretly and afterwards openly and in force.

I now come to the Indian administrative point of view. As explained by Colonel Norman in his memorandum, the additional drain on the Indian revenues, caused by the military occupation of Affghanistan, would probably not fall short of three millions and a half sterling per annum. As has been seen in the previous argument this enormous expenditure expenditure would take place for the purpose of placing us in a dangerous position towards Affghanistan, and a most doubtful one towards Russia.

I make no doubt that if we choose to incur such an expenditure, in support of an aggressive policy, that policy would succeed for a time. I do not believe in the existence of any such powers of resistance in the people of Affghanistan, as would prevent us from fully succeeding in the first aggression, and the first occupation of the country.

But be it remembered that, as we saw before, the real difficulty would commence after the policy of aggression had been completed, and we should be compelled to maintain our occupation of the country by such means of force as the people would alone understand. The expenditure would then be a lasting one, and, so far as we are informed, but very little revenue, probably not more than (300,000 l.) three hundred thousand pounds per annum could be expected from the country, with which, in some slight degree, to lessen the vast demand on the revenues of India.

Surely those who have to administer those revenues, must recollect what difficulty we experience in meeting the demands of India herself. Our annual estimates but rarely show a surplus. From year to year our ingenuity is tried in devising resources, or in striking out new schemes of taxation, which shall add to the revenue without creating universal discontent. It is felt that a true policy lies in stretching the demands on the people as little as possible, whilst we afford them the means of modern material development which were unknown to all Native Governments.

In this manner we hope gradually to expand the revenue, notwithstanding that revenue expansion, in the sense understood by a British Chancellor of the Exchequer, is a thing we are precluded from looking for in India.

Nevertheless, we may fairly say that great success has attended this financial policy, and that the administration of the country, the vast modern public works, including railways and canals, as well as the systems of Imperial and local roads in the several Presidencies, the consequent material development of the people at large, the rise of the wages of labour, the enormous increase of trade, domestic and foreign, do afford us the most undeniable testimony that, notwithstanding partial shortcomings, the Government of India has adopted the right course towards the people, and is able to claim the regard of civilized governments for its administration.

Now is this all to be abandoned; is the people to be overwhelmed with taxation; is the debt to be immeasurably increased, to meet an annual drain of more than three millions of money to carry out the occupation of Affghanistan? Are discontent and disloyalty to be spread over the whole land for the purpose of furthering such chimerical schemes as those indulged in by the late General Jacob, and the school of politicians originally called into existence by his writings?

It cannot be too often repeated that the occupation of Affghanistan is, on account of the financial difficulty, in other words, the stoppage of progress in India, and therefore a reversal of the policy towards the people which has been pursued with more or less activity since the series of wars has come to an end, which brought us to the natural boundaries of the country.

The fourth, or the military point of view, includes many important topics, besides the necessary arrangement of the troops in the annexed country, and the incidental professional details.

Thus the Government will have carefully to consider the mode in which our armies will be affected by the execution of the proposal now, and, further, the military effect in India herself hereafter.

It is stated by Colonel Norman that about 30,000 men, including one-third British, or possibly one-half, would be required for the aggression and for holding the country after the operation had been successful. I do not think the figures are overstated in the gross, or that we could do with less than the larger proportion of British troops.

Thus an increase of 15,000 men of the British Army in the several arms would be required from England, and a similar one of the Native Army, and the increase would be a lasting one. It would be for ministers in England to determine, whether such an increase of the British Army in India could be permanently afforded without inconvenience at home. We are hardly in a position to judge of this point out here in India.

I have shown on various occasions, I believe not without success, that the British Army now holding India, the strength being slightly above 60,000* men, does not admit of further diminution. This conclusion has been finally adopted by the Government of India, and apparently acquiesced in by Parliament at Home. I have no doubt in my own mind that the conclusion is correct.

*61,000 men is the number stated in the Adjutant General's letter of 18 March 1867.

But, further, if the public mind were to be agitated for a series of years by a long and wasting war in Affghanistan, we should have another powerful reason for maintaining the British garrisons at their present strength.

It is well known that the Native Army is now at a minimum. The detachment of some 8 or 10,000 troops to Abyssinia has, on this account, been deemed sufficient cause for the Government of India to add 80 rank and file to the several regiments respectively in the armies of Bengal and Bombay, to compensate for the absence of those temporarily removed from India.

This being so, it is clear that every man sent across our border into Affghanistan must be an addition to our existing forces and, therefore, to present military expenditure. We should have no difficulty in finding the recruits at first; but it must be recollected that foreign service beyond the Indus is probably as distasteful to men recruited in India, as the coast of Guinea would be to British soldiers.

It would, therefore, not only be impolitic to rely too much on these resources for a permanent policy of occupation, but we should find ourselves at length unable to do so without producing serious results amongst those classes of the population of Northern India from which we are in the habit of looking for recruits, and without causing the greatest distaste for the service among the troops themselves.

It seems to be me incontestible that we should then be compelled to rely, for the most part, on troops raised in Affghanistan itself, in addition to the British troops. In short, to attempt to hold the country we had invaded and conquered by an army raised in it.

This might, and probably would, succeed for a time, until domestic insurrection made its appearance, or the intrigues of a foreign power began to be felt. But it will be admitted that the success of our Sepoy armies in India is by no means a measure by which to gauge the probability of a similar organisation answering in such a country as Affghanistan.

Even with all the advantages of the character of the Indian populations, and of the isolation of British dominion in India, unaffected as the latter is by neighbouring powers or foreign policy, we have seen how the experiment of holding a conquered country by a Native Army could break down, and we can hardly forget the near approach of the extermination which threatened us accordingly but ten years ago.

That politician would surely be a bold one who would trust to such means in a mountainous country, filled with the most warlike tribes, where every man is armed and trained to war from his infancy; a country, besides, which has the foreign powers of Persia and Russia to the west and north, and is therefore ever liable to excitement, owing to causes from which India, under the later years of our rule, has been entirely free.

We therefore have to contemplate, not only the enormous increase of expenditure consequent on the occupation, but the failure of the means by which alone the occupation can be maintained, if we except the single element of the British troops, as distinguished from the Native Army raised in India, and such forces as we might enlist in Affghanistan.

But it is clear that the whole difficulty of the problem has been by no means stated as yet.

The object of those who propose the occupation of Affghanistan, is to forestall Persia and Russia at Herat and Cabul; in short, as they put it, to be prepared for a conflict with the latter power beyond the borders of India, instead of awaiting that conflict inside.

If then this conflict is to come, which we are told is inevitable, we must, according to the views of such thinkers, be prepared to move at least two-thirds of the army of Bengal from the stations, where we consider the presence of the corps necessary for the safety and the peace of India, in aid of the distant army occupying Affghanistan, at any moment when the advance from the distant Russian stations in Central Asia might be threatened. We should in such case have to dispose the military forces of the Empire, for the defence of the western and north-western frontiers of Affghanistan, as we should now have to do for the north-western frontier of India.

Consequently, according to these views, it might happen that the whole available military resources of Upper India would be separated from India by the mountain defiles of Affghanistan, and the breadth of that country, all real communication being put in extreme jeopardy.

It may be submitted that our hold of India is not of the nature which would thus allow of the wholesale alienation of our military resources, the spirit of the people towards those who administer to its wants being that of a conquered and subject, though individually free, population.

Therefore, according to the simplest military considerations, we cannot afford to depart from a military policy which keeps our means of defence generally stationed for the purposes of India herself. It is an enormous error to look upon India as a solid base of operations, from whence to pour an army of 100,000 men, as we should do from England in an European emergency, while trusting to the spirit of the people to redeem the difficulties of the Government.

And here it is that, I think, the great mistake is made by those who advocate the proposals I am engaged in combating.

Owing to the profound peace which India generally enjoys and the admirable docility of the people, they forget that she is but a recently conquered country, with much of the feelings and many of the conditions of such a state. It is not for her to rise in defence of her conquerors, or in support of an aggressive policy, though we habitually use her resources for her own peace and defence as well as for our own purposes, including occasional petty invasion of other countries in pursuance of a broad Asiatic policy. Hence all our military arrangements are those of strangers in the land. Accordingly, and it is well to have the truth of this matter constantly present to our minds, we depend solely on the art of administration and on military arrangements, and not on the national feeling and spirit of the people, as a Government may do in a country to which it belongs, as springing from the native population.

Being thus encamped in a foreign country, the commonest prudence forbids us to treat the foreign country as if it were England, for the purpose of invading another, and of sustaining a great conflict with a third power of great strength and prestige at a long distance from its border.

I would

I would therefore again repeat that all the circumstances of India prescribe that that conflict, if come it must in future times, can alone be prosecuted to a successful conclusion by us on our side of the mountain barriers of India.

Such is the broad view I take of the military part of the question, a small part of which I examined in detail in the paper written on the occupation of Quetta. For the purely professional argument I would refer to that paper.

Whilst coinciding with His Excellency the Governor General in his view, that it is inexpedient to expose British agents at Cabul, I am of opinion that so soon as the state of the civil war permit of it, we should by all legitimate means place our relations with the Cabul Court on a substantial and friendly footing.

The measure lately carried through of sending a native envoy to Cabul, seems to me to be an excellent one. It would be well to instruct him, when the proper time comes, to cause it to be well known that the British Government is absolutely opposed to the schemes directed against Affghanistan, which are ventilated in Indian and English newspapers.

I would say one word more. That is, that I trust this discussion may lead to the reconsideration of the construction of the Lahore and Peshawur Railway.

I have strenuously urged this before as a means of the greatest political and military importance to India, and I deplore that other views have prevailed at home.

I would ask leave to repeat the words used by me in a Railway Minute.*

" I need hardly dilate on the additional strength it would give us on the Peshawur frontier, if we had a railway stretching from Lahore to our great garrison of Peshawur, and so connecting the latter with our system of military stations in the North-West Provinces. This additional strength would be felt in Cabul and in Central Asia beyond. It is certainly required for our general system of defence."

*Dated 2 Novem ber 1866.

For the reasons stated in the Minute from which I have quoted, I do not consider the Indus Valley Line of equal importance, whether on military, political, or commercial grounds.

As I have said elsewhere, I can see no advantage, but, on the contrary, great harm, in making a disposition of Scinde different from that which has been attended by marked success. This Province has, under the Bombay Government, been administered separately, as it were, by a succession of able men from the time of Sir Charles Napier to the present day.

The border of Scinde is fairly peaceful, and gives no trouble whatever. The progress of the Province is, I believe, in all respects satisfactory.

The Political Agents as superintendents of the Scinde frontier, have, in truth, nothing to do with Affghan politics, our relation with regard to which can alone be directed by the Viceroy himself. If there should be any improper interference or initiative on their part for the purpose of forwarding individual views, the remedy is of course a simple one, and in our own hands. But I cannot believe in the probability of such an occurrence on the part of experienced British officers.

(signed) W. R. Mansfield.

14th October 1867.

Enclosure 8, in No. 4.

MINUTE by the Honourable G. N. Taylor; dated Simla, 19th October 1867.

IF anything were wanting to complete the argument so clearly and forcibly set forth by the Governor General in favour of our policy in reference to Affghanistan and Central Asia, it is abundantly supplied by Colonel Norman's Memorandum, and by the admirable Minute of the Commander in Chief.

These papers show, in the clearest and most convincing terms, that, from whatever point of view the question is considered, nothing could be more wrong, nothing more impolitic, or more disastrous to our position and prestige in India, than a military advance into Affghanistan with a view to occupy the country, or any of its prominent posts.

Such a movement, besides being an act of injustice and hostility towards our allies, the de facto rulers of Affghanistan, would very naturally and justly be resented by Russia as the deliberate assumption of an attitude of menace intended to counteract supposed designs on her part, for which, I feel persuaded, there is no real foundation whatever.

No one who considers the subject from a clear common-sense point of view, and who is not determined to cherish the delusion of a Russian invasion, could read what is written by the Governor General and by Sir W. Mansfield without being convinced that the military difficulties of such an advance are almost insuperable. A Russian force would be utterly demoralised and so miserably weakened before it could approach our frontier, as to become a really contemptible foe, easy of defeat, and even of annihilation. We may be quite sure that a nation so intelligent and civilised as Russia, however enterprising she may be, and whatever may be her ultimate aim with respect to the regions she has subdued, knows full well that any attempt of the kind would bring serious and irretrievable disaster upon herself.

Within our own formidable border we are almost unassailable. Our true policy, therefore is to consolidate British power by improved internal administration, by completing and perfecting our railway communication to and along the frontier, and by so distributing our military force as to provide the best possible protection to our Government, and the people under our rule.

(signed) G. N. Taylor.

— No. 5. —

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH to the Government of India, dated 26th December 1867. No. 15, Secret.

* * * * *

Para. 11. "WITH reference to a particular question which is mentioned in some of the papers which you have transmitted to me,* viz., the occupation of Quettah, I have only to say that Her Majesty's Government entirely concur with your Excellency, that such a measure would be inexpedient both on political and on military grounds, and that in no case should it be taken without their precise instructions."

*The various letters above printed.

* * * * *

(signed) S. H. Northcote.

CENTRAL ASIA AND QUETTA.

COPIES of DESPATCHES from the Governor Gener of India in Council to the Secretary of State, dte 23 January 1867, No, 15; 8 February 1867, No. 28 23 February 1867, No. 42; and 23 October 186 No. 162, with MINUTES enclosed, on CENTRAL ASI and QUETTA; and, of the REPLY of the Secretar of State, dated 26 December 1867.

(Mr. Grant Duff.)

Ordered, by The House of Commons, to be Printed, 25 February 1879.

Under 6 oz.

BILUCHISTAN, No. 1.

PAPERS

RELATING TO THE AFFAIRS OF KHELAT.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY GEORGE EDWARD EYRE AND WILLIAM SPOTTISWOODE, PRINTERS TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.
FOR HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE.

1877.

[C.—1807.] Price 5*s.* 8*d.*

LIST OF PAPERS.

No.	—	From	To	Date.	Subject.	Page.
				1870.
1	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	7 February	Conduct of relations with the hill tribes.	1
2	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Punjab Secretary -	11 May	Proposed conference between Sind and Punjab officials.	7
3	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 14 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	16 July	Future management of hill tribes. Position of the Khan of Khelat and his relations with his Sirdars.	7
4	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	8 September	Case of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee.	73
5	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	6 December	Orders of Government respecting Khelat affairs generally.	75
				1871.
6	Letter -	Punjab Secretary -	Foreign Secretary -	4 February	Results of the Mittunkote Conference	76
7	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	24 February	Enquiry as to opinion of Bombay Government on proposals made at the Mittunkote Conference.	80
8	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	14 June	Minute by the Governor on Khelat affairs. Case of the Sirdars.	82
9	Letter -	Bombay Secretary -	Foreign Secretary -	28 June	Case of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee.	86
10	Letter -	Bombay Secretary -	Foreign Secretary -	15 July	Management of hill tribes. Subsidy to chiefs, &c.	86
11	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	24 August	Murree raids on Kutchee - -	88
12	Resolution -	Government of India	(Foreign Department).	19 October	Sanctioning expenditure for one year of 32,040 Rs., on entertainment of hill levies. Capt. Sandeman placed under Political Superintendent Sind frontier.	90
13	Resolution -	Government of India	(Financial Department).	21 October	Sanctioning expenditure above alluded to.	91
14	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	27 October	Requesting Bombay Government to take into consideration general question of payments to hill tribes.	91
15	Political Letter.	Government of India	Secretary of State -	31 October (No. 185.)	Forwarding papers on Khelat affairs -	91
16	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 6 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	31 October	Disturbances in Mustung and Quetta	92
17	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 16 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	12 December	Disturbances in Mustung and Quetta	95
18	Diary -	- - -	- - -	23 to 29 October.	Khelat Diary - - -	105
19	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	13 December	Terms accorded to the rebel Sirdars by Nawab Moolla Mahomed Khan.	105
20	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	20 December	Probable departure of the Khan for Kutchee.	106
21	Diary -	- - -	- - -	30 October to 5 November.	Khelat Diary - - -	108
22	Diary -	- - -	- - -	20 to 26 November.	Khelat Diary - - -	108
23	Diary -	- - -	- - -	27 November to 3 December.	Khelat Diary - - -	110
24	Diary -	- - -	- - -	4 to 10 December.	Khelat Diary - - -	113
25	Diary -	- - -	- - -	11 to 17 December.	Khelat Diary - - -	114
				1872.
26	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	8 January	Flight of inhabitants from before the Brahooee marauders.	114
27	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	11 January	Instructions of Government - -	116
28	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	15 January	Proceedings of Sir W. Merewether at Jacobabad. Views of that officer, &c.	117
29	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	24 January	Instructions of Government - -	126
30	Political Letter.	Government of India	Secretary of State -	24 January	Forwarding papers on Khelat -	128
31	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	20 January	Affairs at Lus Beyla - -	128

No.	——	From	To	Date	Subject.	Page.
				1872.
32	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 6 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	22 January	Affairs at Khelat - - -	129
33	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 7 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	24 January	Disturbances in Mekran. Khelat Diary.	131
34	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 8 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	24 January	Rebellion in Khelat. Sir W. Merewether's policy supported.	136
35	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with 6 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	24 January	Proceedings with the Khan - -	142
36	Letter	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	25 January	Engagement between the Khan's troops and those of Brahooee Sirdars. Khelat Diary.	146
37	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 4 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	5 February	Khelat Diary - - -	148
38	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 4 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	6 February	Disturbances in Khelat. Proceedings of Sir W. Merewether.	150
39	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	10 February	Khelat Diary - - -	153
40	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	13 February	Affairs at Khelat. Syed Ali Mahomed.	155
41	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	13 February	Affairs at Khelat - -	157
42	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	19 February	Affairs at Khelat - - -	159
43	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	24 February	Affairs at Khelat - - -	160
44	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	26 February	Summary of news from Khelat -	161
45	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 5 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	26 February	Wish of the Khan that Col. Merewether should act in his behalf in putting an end to disturbances.	162
46	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	6 March	Diary of Asst. Surgeon, Khelat -	163
47	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	13 March	Diary of Asst. Surgeon, Khelat -	165
48	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	13 March	Khelat Diary - - -	166
49	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	13 March	Khelat Diary - - -	167
50	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	18 March	Hope expressed that Col. Merewether will succeed in effecting a satisfactory settlement.	168
51	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	19 March	Movements of Sirdar Noordeen -	168
52	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	15 April	Claims of the Sirdars of Beluchistan	169
53	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 14 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	20 April	Claims of the Sirdars of Beluchistan. Proceedings of Sir W. Merewether.	170
54	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	27 April	Claims of the Sirdars of Beluchistan. Proceedings of Sir W. Merewether.	230
55	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	10 May	News Reports from Capt. Sandeman	232
56	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	20 May	Enclosing Memorandum by Sir W. Merewether on state of affairs in Khelat.	234
57	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	26 May	Attack by Muzerani Chief on a Kafila in the Bolan Pass.	238
58	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	27 May	Khelat Diary - - -	238
59	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	30 May	Instructions of Government. Thanks to Sir W. Merewether for effecting a settlement.	239
60	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	30 May	News Report from Commissioner in Sind.	240
61	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	4 June	Instructions of Government - -	241
62	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	6 June	Khelat Diary - - -	241
63	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	6 June	Khelat Diary - - -	245
64	Secret Letter	Government of India	Secretary of State -	24 June (No. 44.)	Submitting Papers relating to Khelat, and the settlement effected by the Commissioner in Sind.	246
65	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary	12 June	Khelat Diary - - -	246

No.	——	From	To	Date.	Subject.	Page.
				1872.
66	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 11 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	18 June	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman with regard to the Murree tribe.	247
67	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	21 June	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman with regard to the Murree tribe.	250
68	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	25 June	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman with regard to the Murrees.	250
69	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	26 June	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman. Report from that officer.	252
70	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	26 June	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman -	260
71	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Punjab Secretary -	27 June	Instructions of Government - -	261
72	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	27 June	Instructions of Government - -	261
73	Letter -	Adjutant-General -	Military Secretary -	29 June	Inexpediency of presenting the Khan with 2,000 stand of arms.	262
74	Letter -	Punjab Secretary -	Foreign Secretary -	29 June	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman. Views of Punjab Government.	262
75	Memo -	Commissioner in Sind with 19 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	4 July	Report from Sir W. Merewether as to affairs of Khelat.	263
76	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	5 July	Proceedings of Naib of Dadur -	282
77	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	5 July	Proceedings of Sumalanee Minguls -	283
78	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	5 July	Syud Aurung Shah and Naib of Dadur	284
79	Memo -	Commissioner in Sind with 4 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	5 July	Proceedings of Capt. Harrison -	285
80	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	5 July	Khelat Diary - - -	286
81	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	6 July	Claims of Murree and Boogtee tribes	287
82	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	6 July	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman -	287
83	Letter -	Bombay Secretary -	Foreign Secretary -	8 July	Outrage by Minguls - - -	288
84	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	8 July	Khelat Diaries - - -	289
85	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	10 July	Khelat Diaries - - -	290
86	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 4 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	10 July	Miscellaneous news - - -	291
87	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	22 July	Grant of arms for the Khan refused -	294
88	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	22 July	Outrage by Murrees near the Bolan -	294
89	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	22 July	Khelat Diary - - -	295
90	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	5 August	Khelat Diary - - -	297
91	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	7 August	Khelat Diary - - -	299
92	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	7 August	Raid by Loharani Murrees on the village of Chota Bala.	300
93	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 5 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	16 August	Views of Sir W. Merewether -	301
94	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	22 August	Khelat Diary - - -	308
95	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	22 August	News Report from Commissioner in Sind.	311
96	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	4 September	Khelat Diary - - -	311
97	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	5 September	Instructions of Government -	313
98	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	7 September	Khelat Diary - - -	314
99	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 5 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	11 September	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman with regard to the Murree tribe.	315
100	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	17 September	Khelat Diary - - - -	324
101	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	24 September	Instructions of Government -	325
102	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	27 September	Withdrawal of Capt. Harrison from Khelat.	326
103	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	28 September	News Report from Commissioner in Sind.	329
104	I. -	Bombay Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	28 September	Khelat Diary - - -	329

No.	—	From	To	Date.	Subject.	Page.
105	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	1872. 2 October	Khelat Diary - - -	333
106	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	2 October	Proceedings of Capt. Harrison -	334
107	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	7 October	Proceedings of Capt. Harrison -	336
108	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	22 October	Misconduct of the Murrees. Views of Sir W. Merewether.	338
109	Memorandum of Conversation betwen Viceroy and Khan of Khelat.			5 November	Affairs of Khelat - - -	343
110	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 6 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	6 November	Settlement of difficulties at Khelat	344
111	Letter -	Foreign Secretary .	Commissioner in Sind	7 November	Conversation between the Viceroy and the Khan of Khelat.	347
112	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	10 November	Instructions of Government -	347
113	Government Resolution.	- - -	- - -	21 November	Policy as regards Khelat - -	348
114	Secret Letter	Government of India	Secretary of State -	20 December (No. 83.)	Forwarding papers on Khelat -	349
115	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	28 December	Removal of Col. Phayre. Instructions of Government.	350
116	Secret Letter	Government of India	Secretary of State -	1873. 3 January (No. 2.)	Removal of Col. Phayre - -	351
117	Secret Despatch.	Secretary of State -	Government of India	21 March (No. 1.)	Deferring Instructions - -	351
118	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	1872. 5 November	Khelat Diary - - -	351
119	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	23 November	Khelat Diaries - - -	353
120	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	6 December	Khelat Diaries - - -	355
121	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	12 December	Khelat Diary - - -	356
122	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	16 December	Khelat Diary - - -	357
123	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	26 December	Khelat Diary - - -	358
124	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	31 December	Khelat Diary - - -	359
125	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	1873. 4 January	Instructions of Government -	360
126	Letter -	Afghan Commissioner	To Officiating Under Secretary, Govermt.	—	Property plundered from Afghan subjects.	361
127	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 4 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	11 January	Negotiations between Shere Dil Mazarani and Khan of Khelat.	361
128	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	18 January	Instructions of Government - -	362
129	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	21 January	Khelat Diary - - -	363
130	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	23 January	Khelat Diary - - -	363
131	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	25 January	Khelat Diary - - -	364
132	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	25 January	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman -	366
133	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	27 January	Khelat Diary - - -	367
134	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	1 February	Khelat Diary - - -	368
135	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	1 February	Khelat Diary - - -	369
136	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with enclosure.	Governmt. of Bombay	3 February	Outrage by Brahooees of Mustang. Conduct of Khan.	370
137	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	6 February	Khelat Diary - - -	372
138	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	5 February	News Report from Commissioner in Sind.	372
139	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	13 February	Khelat Diary - - -	373

No.	—	From	To	Date.	Subject.	Page.
140	Diary -	- -	- -	1873. Week ending 15 February	Khelat Diary - - -	374
141	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	26 February	News Report from Commissioner in Sind.	375
142	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	12 March	Instructions of Government - -	376
143	Political Letter.	Government, India -	Secretary of State -	28 March (No. 52)	Forwarding papers on Khelat -	376
144	Letter -	Bombay Secretary - with 8 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	15 March	Detention of certain advisers of the Khan.	377
145	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	2 April	Khelat Diary - - -	379
146	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	8 April	Khelat Diary - - -	381
147	Letter -	Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier. with 2 enclosures.	Commissioner in Sind	9 April	Outrage at Mundai - -	381
148	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	10 April	Instructions of Government - -	382
149	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	16 April	Khelat Diary - - -	383
150	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	18 April	News Report from Commissioner in Sind.	384
151	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	30 April	Instructions of Government - -	385
152	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	2 May	Instructions of Government - -	385
153	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	2 May	Instructions of Government - -	385
154	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with 7 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	3 May	Report on events in Khelat. Views, &c.	385
155	Letter -	Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.	Commissioner in Sind	9 May	News Report from Major Harrison -	417
156	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	19 May	Report from Col. Loch - -	417
157	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with 17 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	19 May	Proceedings of Sir W. Merewether -	424
158	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	19 May	News Report from Major Harrison -	430
159	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	21 May	Proposed grant of personal allowance to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.	430
160	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	23 May	Outrages on Kafilas between Kurrachee and Khelat.	432
161	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with 6 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	23 May	Khelat Diaries - - -	433
162	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	5 June	Khelat Diary - - -	438
163	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	6 June	Khelat Diary - - -	439
164	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	12 June	Khelat Diary - - -	440
165	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	17 June	Khelat Diary - - -	440
166	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	23 June	Khelat Diary - - -	441
167	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	9 July	Grant of personal allowance to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.	441
168	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	10 July	Confiscation of lands belonging to the Raisanee tribe.	441
169	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	11 July	Instructions of Government - -	442
170	Political Letter.	Government of India	Secretary of State -	28 July (No. 129.)	Forwarding papers relating to Khelat	448
171	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	1874. 8 Feb.	Reporting his views - - -	443
172	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with 10 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	17 Feb.	Reporting his views - - -	447
173	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with 13 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	10 March	Reporting his views - - -	454
174	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	12 March	Question as to translation of a word in the Khan of Khelat's letter.	463
175	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind with 4 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	16 March	Proceedings of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee.	463
176	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	17 March	Instructions of Government - -	465
177	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Secretary, Punjab Government.	21 March	Instructions of Government - -	465
178	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	28 March	Reporting his views - - -	466
179	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 3 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	29 April	Murree and Boogtee tribes - -	468

No.	——	From	To	Date.	Subject.	Page.
				1874.
180	Letter -	Punjab Secretary - with 4 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	1 May	Murree and Boogtee tribes - -	471
181	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with enclosure.	Foreign Secretary -	19 May	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman. Views of Sir W. Merewether.	479
182	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	25 July	Proposal that compensation be granted to members of Kafilas plundered at Lus Beyla, and amount deducted from Khelat subsidy.	485
183	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	27 August	Instructions on above - -	485
184	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	9 October	Instructions of Government -	486
185	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	15 October	Proposed abolition of Khelat Agency	488
186	Letter -	Bombay Secretary -	Foreign Secretary -	30 October	Proposed abolition of Khelat Agency	488
187	Letter -	Punjab Secretary -	Foreign Secretary -	30 October	Deputation of Capt. Sandeman to Jacobabad.	488
188	Endorsement	Commissioner in Sind	Foreign Secretary -	5 November	Kandahar News Letter - -	489
189	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with 2 enclosures.	Foreign Secretary -	5 November	Reporting his views - - -	490
190	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	24 November	Instructions of Government - -	505
191	Letter -	Commissioner in Sind with 3 enclosures.	Punjab Government	28 November	Reports by Col. Loch and Capt. Sandeman.	505
192	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	5 December	Instructions of Government - -	520
193	Letter -	Punjab Secretary	Foreign Secretary -	9 December	Proceedings of Capt. Sandeman in regard to the Murrees.	520
194	Letter -	Punjab Secretary -	Foreign Secretary -	14 December	Views of Lieut.-Governor - -	523
				1875.
195	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Commissioner in Sind	5 January	Instructions of Government - -	524
196	Letter -	Foreign Secretary -	Bombay Secretary -	5 January	Instructions of Government - -	527
197	Political Letter.	Government of India	Secretary of State -	22 January (No. 13.)	Policy towards the Khan. Forwarding papers.	528
198	Political Despatch.	Secretary of State -	Government of India	8 July (No. 91.)	Instructions - - -	530

PAPERS RELATING TO THE AFFAIRS OF KHELAT.

No. 1.

No. 57–170, dated Lahore, 7th February 1870.

From T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Secretary to Government Punjab and its Dependencies. To C. U. Aitchison, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

Referring to previous correspondence ending with your letter No. 1928 P., dated 24th December 1869, regarding the despatch of an exploring expedition to the Shum Plain, I am desired to forward, for the information of the Government of India, copies of a letter and its enclosures from the Commissioner of the Derajat Division, No. 8, dated 11th ultimo, concerning the present state of affairs in the territory of the Khan of Khelat bordering on British territory.

2. The Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor desires me to say that this correspondence is not forwarded with immediate reference to the question recently discussed of locating posts amongst the hill tribes, as that is a matter which can only now be disposed of after the complete local inquiries shall have been made, which have been, for the present, unavoidably postponed; and some portions of the remarks contained in this correspondence might, perhaps, as well have been omitted. But as a reference has, it is believed, been made from Sind through the Bombay Government, as to the course which it may be best for our Government to pursue in regard to the Khelat State, with a view to its tranquillization, his Honor thinks it right thus to place before the Supreme Government the views of the Punjab officials in immediate contact with the hill tribes subordinate to Khelat, the more especially as it may be deemed certain that, if the present state of matters be not speedily brought to a close, the Punjab Frontier, as well as that of Sind, will again become disturbed as in times past.

3. The Lieutenant-Governor has every reason to believe that the opinion of these officers is in accord, for the most part, with that of the Political Superintendent of the Sind Frontier, and if this be the case, the fact that officers of different Governments, viewing the matter from different points, have come to the same conclusion, appears to be deserving of notice.

Enclosure 1 in No. 1.

No. 8, dated 11th January 1870.

From Lieutenant-Colonel S. F. Graham, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division. To T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Secretary to the Government of Punjab.

In connexion with the exploring expedition to the Shum Plain, sanctioned by the Supreme Government in its Secretary's letter No. 879, dated the 25th June 1869 (since postponed), I have the honour to forward copy of a docket No. 420, dated the 14th December 1869, addressed from this office to Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, and of his reply, No. 482, dated the same day, explaining the manner in which the late and present disturbances in his Highness the Khan of Khelat's territories, on the Sind border, affect our relations with his Highness' subjects bordering on Punjab territory.

2. From my own information and inquiries, I am able to corroborate the account given by Captain Sandeman in his 3rd and 4th paragraphs of the vigorous trade which formerly existed between Central Asia and British India, not only through the Bolan Pass, by Dadar, to Shikarpoor, in Sind, but also by the more direct route, by Tull-Chotiali to Sukki-Surwur and Hurrund, in the Punjab, and of its decline and for many years utter cessation by the latter route.

3. I would especially draw attention to the fact alluded to by Captain Sandeman in the concluding portion of his 4th paragraph as containing, probably, the true reason why the Punjab route has been neglected since British rule.

4. In paragraphs 6–12 Captain Sandeman gives "a brief history of Khelat affairs since the accession of the present Khan," which being taken, for the most part, from the public records, may be regarded as authentic.

5. In paragraphs 13 to 17 Captain Sandeman proceeds to an exposition of our political relations with the above Khanate, which the proximity of his charge to the scene in question, as well as his frequent intercourse with the Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier adjoining enables him to do, but upon which I do not consider myself called upon to comment, especially as Colonel Phayre, the present Political Superintendent, has just addressed a full report on the subject to his Government, which I have perused, and which certainly confirms Captain Sandeman's account.

6. In his paragraphs 18–20 Captain Sandeman justifies the establishing of a British post in the Shum Plain by referring to the fact of a similar post having already been established at Kutch-Gundawa, in the Boogtee (Khelat) territory, from the Sind side, and by presuming that the Shum Plain is a portion of the Khelat territory.

7. There is no doubt about the fact that the country called Dajil-Hurrund, in the plains, which is situated at the point where the trade from Central Asia debouched (and for the protection of which the Fort at Hurrund was erected), has alternately belonged to the Brahooee State of Khelat, or to one or other of the local Governments on this side, whether Mahomedan or Sikh, according as the then paramount powers of Cabul or Lahore obtained supremacy; but as regards the Shum Plain, I am inclined to believe that, though the caravan routes may have partly led by this plain, and the possession of it is also important from other considerations, the degree of authority exercised by any of the neighbouring powers over this tract, situated among lawless tribes, owing, or at least paying little or no allegiance to any power, must have been proportionately slight.

8. Still there is the fact (alluded to in the memorandum accompanying this office report No. 125, of 11th October 1869, paragraphs 3 to 5) that the Shum Plain belongs chiefly to the Murrees and Boogtees (nominal subjects of the Khan of Khelat), and to the Goorchanies (mostly British subjects), and that consequently the control over it thus lies between us; and likewise the fact (which was also alluded to in the above memorandum, paragraph 8) that military posts on the Sind side "are already established in Boogtee territory."

9. Besides the Gundawa, there are the Sooee and other Sind outposts, established actually within Boogtee territory, and I believe an attempt was made by General Jacob to establish a colony at Poolagee, still further into Boogtee territory, with the same object; and there is the additional fact (which I was not till lately aware of) that these posts have been established in accordance with our treaty with the Khan.

10. The post proposed by me at Barkam, in the Khetran country, is not alluded to by Captain Sandeman, and it is right I should mention that he is not in favour of it, but chiefly, I believe, on account of the supposed difficulty to be encountered in the fact of this tract, at least being clearly foreign territory.

11. My own opinion is that Barkam is a strategic point which, as being the only vulnerable one in the event of taking up an advanced position, it is especially necessary to occupy; while the matter of its being foreign territory is, in reality, almost nominal in the one case as in the other; the Murrees and Boogtees being, to all intents and purposes independent of the suzerainty of the Khan of Khelat, as of any other power: in point of fact it may be said that the Khetran territory would be far easier of control, in the manner proposed, than any portion of the Boogtee or Murree country, or even the neutral, or, more properly speaking, common ground of the Shum Plain.

12. For the above reasons, probably, this point was selected by Bhawul Khan, as mentioned in paragraph 7 of this office report before alluded to; while, on political, commercial, and administrative grounds, the advantage of our control over this tract cannot, in my opinion, be questioned, when it is considered that the Khetran tribe, from its peculiar position and circumstances, forms, as it were, a link between the Pathan and Belooch tribes; that it is the wealthiest and therefore most reliable of the tribes around; that it is in alliance with the most powerful, wealthy, and influential of our subject tribes, a portion of which has a footing in the country; and that the country itself may be said to be crossed by the routes by which the Central Asian trade reaches our plains.

13. To the above has to be added the disadvantage of excluding these tribes from the advantages conferred on the others by the occupation, leading to jealousies and secret thwartings which it would be wiser to avoid.

14. That the Khetrans, besides being the covert foe to the peace of the border described in paragraphs 12, 13, and 15 of this Office Report, No. 125, can also act openly against us, was unmistakeably shown on the occasion of the Hurrund raid in 1866, when to our surprise, about a fourth (50) of the raiders left dead on the field were found to be our quiet friends the Khetrans.

15. Captain Sandeman concludes with a warm expression of sympathy with the chiefs and people composing the Khanate of Khelat, whom he describes as "discontented, and suffering from anarchy and misrule."

15. I should not have encouraged Captain Sandeman to express such opinions, nor have submitted them to Government, with this expression of my own, did I not know that a difference of opinion on the subject of the policy pursued on the Upper Sind frontier in regard to Khelat affairs, exists on that frontier itself, and has been lately brought to the notice of the Supreme Government through that of Bombay; and did I not consider it my duty to represent the injurious effects produced by such policy on the Punjab border, where his Highness' territory also adjoins, and where the success of administrative measures and improved political relations with the same tribes (which have been approved by the highest authorities) are constantly exposed to the risk of failure and disruption.

17. Thus, while the best understanding exists between the Punjab officers and the Belooch subjects of his Highness of Khelat, as evidenced by their continuous good conduct, reported from time to time, and ending in the unconditional surrender, only a month or two since, of the Jemadar Khuttoo Khan, absconded from our service, and since a raider into our territory, to be dealt with by our laws, on the Sind side, it would appear that his Highness' chiefs and subjects are in open revolt against his Highness, in which the Murree tribe, possessing the greatest powers for mischief, both on the Sind and Punjab borders, and for molesting the trade by the Bolan, had become naturally involved—the chief noble of the Khelat state having rebelled, and taken refuge with the Bijarani section of the Murrees, an important and troublesome section of that tribe, which we had only just succeeded in conciliating.

18. I believe that the responsibility deduced by Captain Sandeman in his 5th paragraph as resulting from the change of position among the ruling powers of that part of the country, as regards the restoration of the former trade routes by Hurrund-Dajil, will be gladly accepted by the British Government.

19. But I would again draw attention to the 4th paragraph of Captain Sandeman's letter, in which he not only attributes the neglect of this trade by the Punjab routes, to the decline of the Khelat rule, under the successors of Nusseer Khan, and to the fact of the Punjab having remained under the Government of the Sikhs after the annexation of Sind, but also ascribes the direction of Khelat affairs, under our political superintendence, with sole reference to its effect on Sind, to the same cause.

20. I venture most respectfully to suggest that the time has come to apply the same system to the same tribes, occupying the same country on the Punjab-Sind frontier.

21. For many years after the annexation of the Punjab, this joint frontier suffered from the want of accord, on the part of the political officers in charge, produced by the attempt to carry on two different systems, under two separate Governments, on virtually the same frontier.

22. Of late years, the most thorough accord has been established between the officers of Government, but the difference of systems still thwarts their efforts, and the policy pursued on one border is found to act prejudicially on the other.

23. A prominent feature on this frontier is the Khanate of Khelat, the political superintendence of which rests with Sind, though the tribes composing the Khanate occupy the hills adjoining both borders.

24. Formerly no political relations whatever, on the part of the Punjab authorities, with these tribes, was permitted by the authorities of Sind, but of late, in the common effort to preserve the peace of the frontier, this political barrier has given way, with the greatest generosity on the part of the Sind authorities, and relations have sprung up on the Punjab side (with the entire consent of Sind), which have led to our subsidising the hill Belooch portion of his Highness of Khelat's subjects on this side, with results which have received the approbation of the Supreme Government and of Her Majesty's Secretary of State.

25. But the incongruity of the present double system is still apparent in the fact that, while the best results continue to flow from our improved relations on the Punjab side, it has just been found necessary to withdraw a subsidy lately granted to the same tribes on the Sind side for misconduct.

26. In regard to the new relations on the Punjab side, it may be remarked that it was scarcely possible to avoid them, considering that the Belooch tribes occupy upwards of 200 miles of the Punjab border, hill and plain, our relations with all of whom are on an excellent footing down to the border of Sind.

27. I will only further remark, in regard to the present and past state of the Khelat Government, that it seems to me in the highest degree impolitic to maintain, by means of the moral and material support afforded by the British Government, a whole people, who from their natural good disposition and amenability, should form an important element of strength, in a state of dangerous discontent on this portion of our north-west frontier.

Enclosure 2 in No. 1.

No. 420, dated 14th December 1869.

From Lieutenant-Colonel S. F. Graham, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division to Captain R. G. Sandeman, Officiating Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan.

Requests that he will submit at as early a date as possible, a brief account of our relations with the different tribes on his border, subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, showing in what way the present disturbances in Khelat affect such relations, and consequently the administration of that portion of the Punjab frontier.

Enclosure 3 in No. 1.

No. 482, dated 14th December 1869.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Officiating Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan to Lieutenant-Colonel S. F. Graham, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

I desire to acknowledge receipt of your No. 420, dated 14th December 1869 (this day), calling upon me for certain information regarding the political state of that portion of the Punjab border under my charge; more especially with reference to the present disturbed state of Khelat, and the effect it has on the Khan's hill subjects, the Murrees, Boogtees, &c., I have the honor to reply as follows, and will endeavour as briefly as possible, consistent with lucidness, to place before you the present state of affairs:—

2. To do this I must first divide the subject into two heads, and treat of each separately: (1) The present state of the Murree, Boogtee, and other clans, with regard to their connexion with Khelat, and the entire British border. (2) The present position and state of the Punjab and Sind posts with regard to Khelat and each other.

3. But before going further, I desire to recall to your remembrance that at one time (not very long prior to British rule), the whole of Beloochistan, from Hurrund (a town of Dera Ghazee Khan) to the sea, was under the sway of Nusseer Khan of Khelat, a chief noted for his justice and prowess. He kept the Murrees, Boogtees, and other tribes resident along the Kafila route from Central Asia, in as good order as he did the people of the plains; the consequence was that a very much larger traffic than at present exists, at that time came through the Bolan pass into Hindostan. This traffic not only came viâ Kutch Gundawa to Shikarpoor and Kurrachee, but I am assured that the greater portion of it passed from Candahar viâ Thull Chotiali, and thence through the passes of Sukki, Surwur, and the Chachur, to Hurrund, Dajul, Mooltan, &c. Indeed, it is said that the route viâ Hurrund, (the Government of that day erected the Hurrund Fort for the protection of this trade), is the most central, shortest, as well as the most natural route from British India, through the Bolan Pass, to the countries beyond.

4. I further believe that a review of the question from the foundation, will show that this route was abandoned simply on account of the misrule and anarchy which followed shortly after the death of the before-mentioned Nusseer Khan, and also from the fact that none of his successors have for any length of time been able to keep their hill subjects along the route under proper control. Another reason may be traced to the fact that, since the entire border, as well as Khelat itself, came under British influence, and in a measure control also, the value of this Kafila route, through the Cachur Pass, from Dadur and Candahar to the Punjab, has never formed a subject of inquiry or been recognized. A reason for this may also be found from the fact that when the Sind portion of the border came under British control, Hurrund was a Sikh town, and that part of the present Punjab border was then under Sikh management. Besides, since the entire border came under the British Government, Khelat has never been managed with regard to the effect such management might have on the Punjab, but solely with reference to what would result to Sind. This was at one time unavoidable, and I only mention it here, as such ought not, in considering the question, to be forgotten.

5. The contents of the last paragraph being kept steadily in view, I will now call your attention to the present state of Nusseer Khan's kingdom. It is again once more, as in his day, to a greater or lesser extent under one Government, viz., the British. A British officer is stationed at Khelat; Punjab and Sind officers control, to some extent, Khelat hill subjects, the Boogtees and Murrees, while the Khelat district of Hurrund Dajul is Punjab territory. Such being the case, it will now be my endeavour to show that it is a duty incumbent on the British Government to accept the full responsibility of its present position towards Khelat, by placing the Government of that State on a similar footing to the one it enjoyed during the days of the great Nusseer Khan. I believe the Khelat confederacy, by which the State was ruled prior to British interference, view matters very much in the above light, and that they even now in a measure hold the British Government, with what justice it is not for me to say, responsible for the present unsatisfactory state of Khelat affairs. To do this, a brief history of Khelat affairs since the accession of the present Khan to the throne is necessary.

6. Khodadad Khan, the present Chief of Khelat, was elected as head of the Brahooee confederacy on the death of his brother. At the time of his election he was a mere boy, (about 16 years of age), and had been until the date of his election solely in charge of the women of the palace. As to his character nothing was known.

7. It will be observed that, in talking of Khodadad succeeding his brother, I use the word "election." I do so purposely, for the Brahooee confederacy, by which the Khanate has hitherto been ruled, claim the right, however nominal such may be, to elect their chief. It is also worthy of note in considering this, to mention here, that when Khodadad Khan was replaced on the throne after the death of Sherdil Khan, who had for a time usurped the throne, it was accomplished by Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan, the first chief of the confederacy, with the approval of the second chief, Taj Mahomed of Jalawan, and others.

8. During the life time of Khodadad's brother, our officers in Sinde, very wisely it seems to me, endeavoured, in the interests of all concerned, to control and direct the affairs of Khelat, by making British influence in the State paramount. They set about it in this way:—

9. A treaty was entered into between our Government and the Khelat State, by which the British agreed to subsidise the State on condition of certain commercial and other privileges being conceded to us. The treaty was ratified in the presence of the chiefs of the confederacy, and I believe their consent to it was asked for and obtained. The Khan on his part agreed that a British officer should reside at his Court, to watch British interests, and aid him with advice in the administration of the State.

10. It will also be found on inquiry, that efforts were made, in pursuance of the above arrangement, to conciliate the hill subjects of the Khanate, the Boogtees, and Murrees, and that this was done for a time with success. On the Murree clan an estate in Khelat was bestowed. Police stations for the protection of trade coming from Afghanistan were established at Kahan and Boogtee Dehra, while the Murrees gave hostages for the fulfilment of their part of the agreement. Peace was thus for a time secured to hill and plain.

11. Such, however, did not last long; the hill hostages, from bad treatment, and the want of faith being kept with them (it is said), fled. The confederacy of chiefs expressed loudly their dissatisfaction, and an appeal was made by some of them to arms. Raids into Khelat, the Punjab, and Sind, were once more the order of the day, the result being that the British Government, finding that the terms of the treaty were not attended to, reduced the subsidy by half. I believe the second Rupees 50,000 of it, were granted to enable the Khan himself to protect the Kafila trade, by means of the hill clans, &c.

12. Affairs since then, as far as I can discover, have gone on from bad to worse. The confederacy of Nobles, have at different times appeared in arms against Khodadad, but without success. Once they suffered a real defeat when Taj Mahomed, the Jalawan Sirdar, was taken prisoner and died in confinement. The voice of the country declares he was poisoned. Lately the Jam of Beyla and Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan have both been in arms, and it is said they attribute their want of success in asserting their rights to British interference.

13. Be this as it may, there is no doubt of the fact that the Khanate of Khelat is in a state of anarchy, and it behoves our Government fairly to inquire into the cause. I have endeavoured to discover it, and I will now place before you the result of my inquiries.

14. It is asserted that the treaty our Government made with the State of Khelat was entered into with the Khan and his nobles, i.e., the Brahooee confederacy, but that this was merely in theory; for in practice we failed to carry it out in accordance with the constitution of the Khelat State.

15. For instance, I understand that such nobles as those of Sarawan and Jalawan, declare that in our arrangement for the reduction of the fees taken on Kafilas, the incomes of the chiefs were reduced; while no arrangements were come to for the subsidy being distributed according to the loss each had sustained by such reduction. They further declare that the money thus granted, so far from being employed for the benefit of the Khanate, is spent by the Khan on mercenary troops, who are a standing menace to them; this being contrary to the constitution of the State. They affirm that these and other like causes have driven them into rebellion.

16. With the above state of affairs before us, it is obvious that our present policy has not succeeded, and that, however much we may desire to act solely with the Khan, treating him as a despot, the constitution of the State does not admit of our doing so. I will now proceed to show how doing so is not a safe policy, and that it has already shook our present successful arrangements with the Murrees to the foundation.

17. I have already mentioned the defeat of the first noble of the state, Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan, and his brother confederate. Since then he has made several attempts to renew the war, but from various causes has desisted. He is described as a chief of excellent disposition, and to have great influence in the Khanate. Since commencing this Report I have heard that he has left Seebee and joined the Bijaranee Murrees, who reside near the Bolan Pass. What will be the result the future will determine. Were he an evil-disposed man, from his well-known influence over this tribe, the results would certainly be very serious. His being a well-disposed amiable chief of high position in the Khanate, makes it all the more essential that his case should be inquired into. It is surely time for our Government to interfere when we find that the Khan of Khelat's mismanagement of his Khanate has led to the peace and administration of that part of the Punjab border being placed in much jeopardy; for such is truly the case.

18. I now come to the second part of my subject, viz., the placing of British posts in Khelat territory, and I trust from what has been already stated, as well as from what I am about to state, it will be apparent that the question is not one of that importance it would at first, without a fair consideration of the real position of affairs, appear to be.

19. By a reference to the treaty with Khelat already alluded to, it will be found that the Khelat State agreed to British posts being established in Khelat territory, should it be necessary to place them within it.

20. If a map showing the Punjab and Sind border is referred to, it will be found that this clause of the treaty has already been acted on from Sind, as the posts on that border are already far into the Boogtee hills. In fact, I believe it would be found on inquiry that the Sind "Gundoe post" is as far into Khelat territory as would be the proposed Shum post from the Punjab were it erected. In fact, this was one reason for my wishing to bring the Punjab posts into Khelat territory, as they would be then more in line with the Sind post, and at about the same elevation above the plains. As it is, the Punjab posts, at present, are in rear of the Sind posts. I would desire to note here that the Shum Plain, and in fact, I believe, all that part of the country, was bestowed on the Khan of Khelat by the conqueror Ahmed Shah.

21. I believe that the advance of the Sind post of Gundoe into the Boogtee hills was made to suit local plans and for the better military defence of the Sind border. Also that as a military post it has succeeded. Like causes make it desirable that on the Punjab side a similar post, or posts, should be established at about an equal distance into Khelat (Goorchanie) territory. The advantages and disadvantages of the one are equally applicable to the other, while the advance is made as much in the interest of the Khanate of Khelat as in those of the British Government. In fact, as I have endeavoured to show, the interests of the two Governments are identical and inseparable the one from the other, and this is as applicable to the advance of these posts as it is with regard to the general administration of the two countries.

22. In conclusion, I will merely add that the whole state of affairs, as placed before you, has deeply interested me and obtained my full and earnest consideration; and that I am of opinion, which I desire to give with great diffidence, that they require equally your own and that of the Government. I can see no reason why the affairs of Khelat, if directed with courage, discretion, and determination, after being placed on a sure foundation, should not be directed as much to the advantage of the Khanate as to those of the British. There seems to me no just cause why a happy and contented people, well ruled according to the old State constitution, should not take the place of a discontented people, suffering from anarchy and misrule.

No. 2.

No. 748 P., dated Simla, 11th May 1870.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., Officiating Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, with Governor-General, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Secretary to the Government of Punjab.

With reference to your letter No. 57-170, dated 7th February, on the subject of our policy in Khelat, I am directed to state that His Excellency the Viceroy learned from Captain Sandeman, whom he had the pleasure of meeting at Lahore, that it was proposed that a conference between Sir W. Merewether, Colonel Phayre, and himself should take place, at which a joint memorandum on the subject should be prepared and submitted for the consideration of the Government of India. Under these circumstances, his Excellency in Council thinks it preferable to await receipt of the memorandum before passing any orders on the reference made in your letter of 7th February.

No. 749 P.

Copy of correspondence to Bombay Government for information.

No. 3.

No. 249, dated Bombay Castle, 16th July 1870.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., Officiating Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, with Governor-General.

I am directed to forward to you, for the purpose of being placed before his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, the accompanying copy of letters as per margin, from the Commissioner in Sind, submitting for consideration in connexion with recent events in Beloochistan, the questions of (1) the future management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes on the Upper Sind Frontier, and (2) the position of the Khan of Khelat and his relations to his Sirdars.

1. Letter No. 52, dated the 26th January 1870, with accompaniments.
2. Letter No. 337, dated the 17th June 1870.

2. In forwarding these documents, I am desired to state that this Government, while fully approving the policy proposed by Sir William Merewether, are not satisfied that the experiment of enlisting these tribes on the side of law and order might not be efficiently initiated at a less cost than that estimated by the local authorities.

3. The enclosed copy of Resolution No. 1,712, of the 3rd ultimo, will show the general view of the scheme taken by this Government. If the Government of India concur in this view and will sanction the experiment being tried, his Excellency in Council will take care that the arrangements are carried out with the least possible expense to the State.

4. I am to add, with reference to the last paragraph of his letter, No. 337, of the 17th ultimo, that Sir W. Merewether has been informed that this Government did not consider a special and formal conference with his Highness the Khan necessary in order to carry out the measures proposed, but that they in no way object to Colonel Phayre meeting his Highness and conferring generally with him on any matter in which his Highness' co-operation is required.

5. In accordance with a desire expressed by the Honourable Mr. Mansfield, I am desired to enclose copy of a minute recorded by him on these papers dated the 24th May last.

Enclosure 1 in No. 3.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. & C.B. Commissioner in Sind, to the Governor and President in Council, Bombay.—(No. 52, dated 26th January 1870.)

In submitting the accompanying copies of "Outline of Khelat affairs from 1857 to 1869" received from Colonel Phayre, Political Superintendent of Upper Sind, on which he appears to have devoted much care and labour, I have only considered it necessary to add marginal notes, where required, to the narrative part thereof, as the chief portion is on the records of Government, and will have already received full consideration.

With regard to his concluding remarks, and the opinions he puts forth, they require somewhat closer reviewing, and more extended notice.

2. Colonel Phayre appears to attribute all the ills existing, or said to exist, in Khelat territory chiefly to what he terms the "Khanazad" system of government. It will be as well, therefore, in the first instance to have a clear exposition of what that consists. It is not of recent establishment, as the correspondence now submitted might lead to be inferred, but dates back from the earliest dates of Brahooee rule. The most prominent character in modern days—the Darogha Gool Mahomed—was in service in the time of the great Nusseer Khan, and was one of Mehrab Khan's most trusted and most faithful servants. The dislike to the British which he held to nearly the last days of his life, was due to the very strong feeling he had of the injustice done to his master, Mehrab Khan. He went into exile with his master's son, Nusseer Khan, just before Khelat was captured by the British in November 1839; returning with him when that young Prince was placed on the throne by the British Government in 1840; and serving him to the best of his abilities, and according to his light until the horrible tragedy, which is reported by Sir H. Green to have ended that young Prince's most promising career. Whether Gool Mahomed really caused poison to be administered to Nusseer Khan because he was getting too wedded to British interests, will probably never be satisfactorily cleared up; but his well-known and deep-seated hatred to our power gives weight to the tale, and renders it probable that the events happened as told to Sir H. Green.

3. The other Khanazadees who surrounded Mehrab Khan where the four Shahgassee's brothers, one of whom, Noor Mahomed, was killed by Mehab Khan's side in the breach at the Storm of Khelat. The remaining three, Wullee Mahomed, Goolam Jan and Taj Mahomed, were given offices round Nusseer Khan on his ascending the throne. Of these the only one living and holding power now is the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, one of the most true and honest men in Beloochistan; staunchly faithful to his master, and at the same time most sincere and earnest in his desire to, on all occasions, further and promote the wishes of the British Government. He was selected Wuzeer by His Highness the Khan, at Jacobadad in January 1858, in the presence of the Commissioner Sir Bartle Frere and the late General Jacob, who approved the selection; and he was afterwards formally installed by the Khan at Gundava in presence of all the chiefs of Beloochistan. Sir Henry Green, who worked with him for many years afterwards, invariably stated that no better selection could possibly be made.

4. The present Khan, Meer Khodadad Khan, was, on the death of his brother Meer Nusseer Khan in June 1857, elected ruler by the Chiefs of Beloochistan, the Puggree at the installation being tied on his head by the Chief of Jalawan, Sirdar Taj Mahomed. That the Darogah Gool Mahomed was exerting pernicious influence over the young Khan soon became apparent, and his causing the attack on the Sirdars in September 1857, undoubtedly promoted the unfortunate division which has ever since existed between the Khan and leading chiefs of his country. But that the Sirdars were not entirely free from blame then even is shown by Sir Bartle Frere in his letter No. 64 of 19th February 1858: writing about this attack as follows:—"At that time, he (the "Jam of Beyla) joined other chiefs of influence (these had come to Khelat under pretence "of doing homage to the new Khan) who appear to have thought the occasion pro- "pitious for pressing claims upon the Khan, some of which appear to have been "reasonable and well founded, while others were the reverse; but they were urged "in a manner which induced the Khan's advisers to resort to force, to dislodge the "remonstrant chiefs from the garden near Khelat, where they were encamped. They "retired to a short distance from the capital, and thence addressed petitions for redress "to the British authorities, assembling at the same time their own followers with a "view to enforce the Khan's attention to their claims."

5. At the time of the above circumstances there was another counsellor at the side of the young Khan, not a Khanazada, but a Bunniah named Gungaram, who, though never apparently appointed, was virtually Wuzzeer, and who shared with the Darogah an undisguised enmity to the British Government. One general cause of complaint and dissatisfaction was the power usurped by this Bunniah.

6. On Sir Henry Green, at the conclusion of the Persian war, rejoining his appointment as Political Agent at Khelat in 1858, he found it necessary to exert his whole influence with the Khan, backed by the support of General Jacob and Sir Bartle Frere, to check the proceedings of these two men, and to obtain their removal from office. The Bunniah Gungaram was sent away to Sind by the Khan, but the Darogah remained at Khelat, though relieved from his duties. He for some time continued to exercise some indirect influence over the Khan for evil, but it was much, if not entirely, nullified by the firm and straightforward bearing of Sir Henry Green, who in a measure succeeded in making a friend of the Darogah before death brought the latter's troublesome career to an end.

7. It was hoped then that matters would run more smoothly, and that the divisions that had been caused might be settled favourably. Sir H. Green was able on occasions to report more favourably of the young Khan, but the unfortunately uncertain character of this young Prince, made still worse by his wretched rearing in the seclusion of the harem and immediate difficulties on his first entering public life led to repeated contre-temps. This capriciousness also, each time that it was shown, naturally increased the ill-feeling amongst the principal Sirdars, and on each recurrence of a difference the attitude assumed by the chiefs becoming more objectionable, the breach could not but be widened in spite of all Sir H. Green's efforts to the contrary. That officer reporting on 29th January 1863 writes thus in reference to this point:—"Much of the ill-feeling "towards the Khan is doubtless caused by his capricious and unstable character, but his "chiefs by the unreasonableness of their demands and insolence of their conduct towards "him, render any permanent settlement of their differences most difficult: his power "over them is slight, and although their lands are held by feudal tenure, any attempt "made by his Highness to enforce even the extradition of a culprit, leads to their banding "together and defying his authority."

8. This capriciousness was most infortuitously displayed in one particular case of the grave insult passed by the Khan on Sirdar Taj Mahomed, the principal Chief of Jalawan, in the year before the above was written. The betrothal of the Khan to the daughter of Taj Mahomed had been formally executed before, but in a hasty moment he suddenly married the Sirdar's sister, widow of his brother, the late Khan, and a determined enemy of her brother. This marriage was perfectly justifiable according to Brahooee law, but under the circumstances was a direct affront to the Sirdar. This act materially assisted in bringing about the revolution which caused the attack on the Khan in 1863, and his deposition for the time. At first Sir H. Green was favorably impressed with Taj Mahomed, but further acquaintance caused him to change his opinion, and after his death he wrote of him:—"One thing is however beyond a doubt "that a more desperate intriguer, or a greater traitor, did not exist in any native court "in Asia, and so long as he remained at large, his Highness the Khan's position could "never have been safe."

9. It should be here pointed out that even during the late Khan's reign, and incessantly from the commencement of that of the present one, there have been elements of disorder always at hand in the shape of the ambitious projects of Azaad Khan of Kharan and of the Jam of Beyla. Azaad Khan though once a dependent of Khelat is now a quasi-independent chief, sometimes owning allegiance to Kandahar, sometimes acknowledging the authority of Persia. He was also father-in-law of the late Khan, Nusseer Khan, and after the accession of that Prince formed, and steadily followed out, the intention of obtaining the Khanate for himself. The Jam of Beyla, Meer Khan, is not a Brahooee, but belongs to a Sindee tribe. His father's sister, however, was married to Mehrab Khan, and he himself is married to a full sister of the late Khan, and half sister of the present one. He is a feudatory of the Khelat ruler holding the territory of Lus Beyla, under the proviso that when called on he should furnish a quota of horse and foot for the service of the Khan.

10. These two chiefs are both well-known aspirants to the Khanate, and have been ever ready to take advantage of any quarrels between the Khan and his nobles, to give their assistance to the latter in hopes of the destruction of the former, thereby furthering their own ends. And it is undoubtedly greatly owing to their intrigues and evil advice that the breach between the Khan and his principal chiefs became greater and greater until it is now almost impossible to readjust on any ancient footing.

11. In March 1863 the chiefs broke out into open rebellion; the Khan was suddenly attacked in his camp at Gundava, and cut down by his own cousin, Shere Dil Khan, who was then put on the throne by the chiefs. Khodadad Khan fled, and after some wanderings, accompanied by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, who then stood staunchly by him, he in November following took up his residence in Kutchee at Nusseerabad, close to the border of British territory. Here he remained until May 1864, when Shere Dil Khan having been assassinated by the commandant of the body of troops used as personal guard by the Khans of Khelat, Khodadad Khan was recalled and reinstated Khan, mainly, it should be said, through the support and good offices of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee. Major (now Lieutenant-Colonel) Malcolm Green, who was at that time Political Agent at Khelat, in reporting on this revolution, brought to notice "the loyalty towards the British Government which has characterised the proceedings of all parties in Beloochistan," and further that "although the VI. Article "of the treaty between the British Government and Khelat has been for some months "suspended on the part of the former, no instance has occurred or attempt made to use "this fact as an excuse for departing from the original terms of the treaty; and by "increasing the transit dues on merchandise passing through the country to India, to "raise the revenue to the same amount as it was previous to the treaty being entered "into, and thus save the country from the state of bankruptcy to which the late "disturbances have almost reduced it." This was written in January 1864, and speaks highly for the good feeling generally entertained towards the British Government.

12. For nearly a year after Meer Khodadad's re-accession, affairs remained tolerably quiet and his Highness was engaged trying to settle the affairs of his country after the confusion of the previous year. But in March 1865, Sirdars Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and Taj Mahomed Zehree made common cause, for what exact reason is not clearly shown, doubtless offence taken at some injurious act of the Khan, real or imagined, and attempted an insurrection in Kutchee against his Highness the Khan, having for its object the assassination of Meer Khodadad Khan, and putting his infant son on the throne,—vide Captain Harrison's demi-official letter, dated 27th May 1869, submitted to Government under Memo. No. 361 of 7th June. The former was made prisoner, the latter fled to Kandahar. Taj Mahomed died at Khelat in confinement in August 1867. Sir Henry Green in reporting this said, "common bazaar report gave out that he had "been poisoned, but as it is seldom a chief of any note dies, either in Beloochistan or "Affghanistan, without such reports being spread, and as no inquiries that I have been "able to make can prove the truth of the report, I place little faith in it;" and again, "from the time of the present Khan's elevation to the throne, I can state on the best "authority that not a single chief of any description has been put to death by his order, "or by that of any of his people in authority, although few princes have had the provo-"cation he has had to put up with." He further reported with regard to Moolla Mahomed, that from the time "Sirdar Taj Mahomed was secured, and Sirdar Moolla "Mahomed had fled, the most perfect tranquillity reigned throughout Beloochistan, "which was only disturbed by the return of the latter chief from Kandahar during last "month,* with the intention of again creating an insurrection; but no "efforts that he could make gained him any support beyond that of a "few chiefs of minor note, and the vigorous efforts of his Highness the Khan and his "officers, after a few insignificant skirmishes, resulting in the loss of a few men on either "side, entirely quelled the attempt, and most of the principal offenders surrendered "themselves with their wives and families to his Highness' officers; while Sirda Moolla "Mahomed again fled with a few followers to the Murree hills, from whence he will "doubtless soon find his position most inconvenient and sue for pardon."

* October 1867.

13. In July 1865 disturbances were recommenced by the Jam of Beyla in concert with Noordeen, the chief of the Mingul tribe. Their forces were met and defeated by those of his Highness, and the Jam and Noordeen were made prisoners, but pardoned some little time afterwards by the Khan.

14. In January 1868 a messenger came to Sir Henry Green from Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and the other chiefs with him, requesting that Sir Henry Green would intercede in their behalf with their master. He very properly declined to interfere in any way, except at the request of his Highness the Khan, and then only on the condition that both sides should abide by his decision. They agreed to this, so also did his Highness the Khan, and the Sirdars were told to reside quietly at Seebee, a small province in the north-east corner of Kutchee belonging to Kandahar, where they would be unmolested until leisure admitted of their case being taken up. This happened on the 10th of April, when the Wuzzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee both came to Jacobabad. Sir Henry Green after hearing the statements of both sides, made a temporary adjustment of the differences such as would prevent any renewal of hostilities, leaving a more permanent arrangement to be carried out the following cold season when his Highness should come down to the plains.

15. Sir Henry Green's departure from the frontier in May 1868 prevented his carrying out the latter part of his programme. Colonel Phayre succeeded him in August of that year, and shortly after his arrival in October was waited on by Mahomed Khan, the Wukeel of his Highness the Khan, with letters from the latter, "to the effect that, "in consequence of the great scarcity amounting to partial famine that now prevails in "Kutchee from want of rain, his Highness had no intention of leaving Khelat this "winter, unless particularly requested to do so, in which case he expressed his willing-"ness to come into Kutchee at once for an interview. The cases of the principal " Sarawan Chief, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and of many others referred to in Colonel " Sir H. Green's last annual report, will thus remain unsettled, unless some steps are " taken to bring them under his Highness the Khan's consideration." In reference to this, I wrote to Colonel Phayre that "I think under the present circumstances of the " very great scarcity in Kutchee, it would be advisable not to press his Highness the " Khan to descend into the plains this season. It would be not only putting him to " very great inconvenience, but as he must bring a considerable number of people with " him, it would only add to the existing distress. With regard to the cases of Moolla " Mahomed Raisanee and the other chiefs of Sarawan, I regret that nothing can be " done for them at present, their business must stand over until an officer is again " appointed to Khelat." The above will show that the Khan offered to come to Kutchee, if desired, and that his not doing so was approved of by me.

16. There were other reasons also, and very strong ones, which were alleged at the time, why he should not leave his capital. These were that the Jam of Beyla was again plotting insurrection, and was communicating with the Sarawan Chiefs in Seebee with the view of getting them to join him. The latter wisely attended to the advice given them by Colonel Phayre, in which I entirely concurred, to keep quiet where they were, and leave the question of their differences with his Highness to be settled according to the promise of Sir H. Green, when they could be discussed personally by the frontier authorities with that Prince. The Jam of Beyla with Noordeen Mingul and others assembled their forces in Wudd in the end of December to press their claims on the Khan; Balooch Khan, nephew of Azaad Khan of Kharan joined with 400 horse and 1,000 foot. Azaad Khan, who had returned from Kandahar where he had been for some time residing, announced his attention of joining the rebels. His Highness the Khan moved from Khelat with all his available forces and met the rebels in Baghwana, some skirmishing took place, but negotiations were entered upon, and the chiefs ultimately retired with their forces to their respective homes. They stated in letters to Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, sent by that Sirdar to Colonel Phayre, that the Khan promised them what they asked, to be given in two months time, and on these assurances they went to their homes. Nothing however of this sort is mentioned by the Khan in letters from him to his Wukeel with Colonel Phayre, which were delivered to that officer. The outbreak was checked for a time, I believe, in consequence of Moolla Mahomed not having joined it, but it was clear the cessation of disturbances would be only temporary.

Vide Commissioner's letter No. 534, dated 23rd November 1868.

17. Captain Harrison was appointed Political Agent at Khelat under orders received by telegram from your Excellency in February 1869. After my visit to the frontier districts in that month, and March, Colonel Phayre with my concurrence summoned Moolla Mahomed to Jacobabad. He arrived about the 16th of March. Alla Dina Khoord, another of the discontented nobles, was also present, and the two submitted the following statement of their grievances, which were taken down by Captain Harrison and afterwards forwarded to me with a demi-official letter by Colonel Phayre:—

STATEMENT of MOOLLA MAHOMED RAISANEE.

" In former Years, the Khan and his ancestors used to consult with his Sirdars, and act on their advice. We Sirdars between us held about half the territory, and the Khans from their own lands used to give us pay in the following proportions:—

	Rs.
" Sirdar Moolla Mahomed - - - -	1,000
Sirdar Taj Mahomed - - - - -	1,000
Sirdar Noordeen - - - - -	1,000
Sirdar Mahomed Khan - - - -	1,000

" The minor chiefs used to get allowances at what rate I don't remember.

" After the way Sirdar Taj Mahomed was treated by the Khan, I went to Kandahar,* the Khan then withdrew and confiscated my lands. Three years have elapsed since I left. The Khan confiscated all my property, about 700 camels and 80 mares.

* First joining in an unsuccessful attempt at rebellion with Taj Mahomed as before described. —W. L. M.

" The Khan has just released my brother, Hybut Khan, after a captivity of three years. He came with a message from the Khan's mother that if I did not come myself, to send my son to make his salaam, and all my paternal estates would be then restored. I did not place any confidence in these promises and preferred that any thing that could be done for me should be done through the English Government. I don't wish to be too profuse in my complaints, and will therefore briefly state what redress I think I am entitled to.

" 1st.—The restoration of all my paternal estates.

" 2nd—Restoration of property.
" 3rd—The grant of lands which the Khan gave me at Tehree, Mushkab and Kalora.
" 4th.—Compensation for the death of the following people—
Sirdar Taj Mahomed Jalawan.
Kamal Khan Mahomed Hussaino ka Sirdar—
Hubeeb Khan Roostumzai.
Rawut Khan Roostumzai, and his son Meeah Khan.
Mahomed Lehree and Mahomed Khan Lehree.
" 5th.—The right of river water at Dadur.

" In conclusion, I would beg to state that we are discontented at the influence of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and that the revenue is devoted to keeping up mercenaries.

ALLA DINA KHOORD'S STATEMENT.

" About five years ago, owing to a difference with Shahgassee Wallee Mahomed, I " fell under the displeasure of the Khan. I hold my ancestral property, Murrow and " Dusht, in Khorasan " (that is above the Bolan), " as also one near Shawl, which I purchased for Rs. 1,000 from Ashlum Khan Patan ; also an estate in Mustoong purchased for Rs. 400.

" I claim in Kutchee the following lands which the Khan took from me when I left his service on account of the way he treated Sirdar Taj Mahomed :

" Nowshera, purchased by Wuderah Adam Khan Bungoolzye and myself for Rs. 6,200 ; we drew the revenue from the land for five years.

" Four of us claim Bahooer, it having been presented to us by the Khan :—
Wuderah Adam Khan Bungoolzye,
Alla Dina Khoord.
Syud Khan and Mahomed Shah Jehangeer Lehree.
" We four were also allowed right of river water at Dadur."

18. In addition to the above statement officially recorded, Moolla Mahomed informed Colonel Phayre in the course of conversation that when the Khan was in exile in 1863, he wrote a declaration in a Koran to the following effect dated Nusseerabad, 9th October 1863 :—

" At this time, I, Meer Khodadad Khan of Khelat Ahmedzye, swear upon this holy Koran, and declare to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, and his family, that you are free from blame in the injury that has happened to me,* and that by the favor of God you have done well. Nothing of what has happened is on your head, because I did not listen to your advice, and was separate from you. Now you must exert yourself for me with all your heart and life, and if you do so, the original lands which you have enjoyed in Kutchee and Kohistan shall be yours, and in addition to these, I grant you in perpetuity the towns of Kullora, Mushkab and Tehree; also I promise that the son of Naib Moolla Mahomed Hussein,† and the son of Moola Mahomed Ameen (brother of Mahomed Hussein) shall continue to enjoy as much land as they have received in Enam from the Government, and I agree to give them any service that may appear to you, Moolla Mahomed, to be proper.

	Rs.
Kullora worth about in good season -	2,000
Mushkab - - - - -	4,000 or 5,000
Tehree - - - - -	2,000
	R. P.

" I also promise that I will not transact the civil and military business of the country without your consent and advice.

" Whoever is my enemy is yours, and do you regard him as your enemy ; and I will regard any enemy of yours to be my enemy.

" After writing the words of this oath, if you do not support me with your heart and life, you violate this Koran, and if I do not carry out the words of this oath, I shall violate it.

O Seal of Khodadad Khan."

* This refers to his dethronement by Shere Dil Khan.—W. L. M.

† The traitorous Wuzzeer of the young Nusseer Khan.—W. L. M.

19. In no official document does Moolla Mahomed say that the Khan broke this agreement, or that the lands given him were withdrawn until after he fled to Kandahar, and then the reason assigned by the Sirdar for " leaving the Khan " was on account of the latter's treatment of Sirdar Taj Mahomed. The lands were confiscated by the Khan because Moolla Mahomed projected a rebellion in concert with Taj Mahomed, having for its object the assassination of the Khan, and when detected fled to Kandahar.

20. In addition to the statements officially taken down from Moolla Mahomed and Alla Dina Khoord, Colonel Phayre gathered from the former that the following were points which the chiefs generally wished to settle with the Khan. For convenience my remarks are given opposite each point raised :—

"1*st*. They claim that the Khanate shall be constituted, as to laws and government, as it was in the days of the first Nusseer Khan."

1*st*. This has become more and more difficult, owing, in a great measure, to the unreasonable proceedings of the principal chiefs themselves, and the intrigues and designs of the ambitious ruler of Beyla and the Khan of Kharan.

W. L. M.

"2*nd*. They complain of the entertainment of a large body of mercenaries, who are fed from the proceeds of lands and other sources of revenue of which they and their children are deprived."

2*nd*. This has become a necessary sequence of the Khan not having the feudal services of his barons. The sources from which the mercenaries are paid have yet to be truly shown; as, however, these troops supply the place of the barons and their retainers, it might not be considered altogether unjust if a portion of the revenues they received for feudal services were appropriated to the payment of their substitutes.

W. L. M.

"3*rd*. They claim compensation for the murder of Taj Mahomed, the Chief of Jalawan."

3*rd*. This is tantamount to demanding that their Khan should declare himself, if not actually implicated in, responsible for the murder.

W. L. M.

"4*th*. They object to the innovation of the Khan's appointing his own infant son as heir to the chieftainship of Jalawan, the appointment being by right and ancient privilege in the hands of the Jalawan Sirdars themselves, subject to confirmation by the Khan; and that a son of the ruler is not eligible to the position; and, that such a measure cannot fail to perpetuate the present divided condition of the Khanate."

4*th*. This, if ever entertained by him, was a hasty and unwise act of the Khan, said to have been done in the beginning of March 1869. The death of the infant soon after settled the point however it was, and Captain Harrison in his demi-official dated 27th May (submitted to Government) reported "the future Jalawan chief is to be the next of kin, Taj Mahomed's cousin."

W. L. M.

"5*th*. They claim the right of appointing their own Wuzzeer, and want a change of ministry."

5*th*. This was never the case. From the earliest times the Khans selected their own Wuzzeer, and never from among the nobles but from some outside party. At first it was hereditary in the family of the Tajiks, a race well known in Affghan history, usurped for a while in the time of Mehrab Khan by a low born Ghilzie, who was murdered and succeeded by Moolla Mahomed Hussein, son of the previous Tajik minister, and who was removed in the reign of the young Nusseer Khan for treachery, and died in confinement. Gungaram, the Bunniah, then acted as Wuzzeer for a short interval, after which the present Wuzzeer, the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, was appointed.

W. L. M.

"6*th*. They claim to have a voice as of old in the civil and military councils of the Khanate."

6*th*. This is fair enough and would be assented to by the Khan, if the chiefs would be reasonable and not grasp at too much power.

W. L. M.

"7*th*. They say that the treaty of the British Government is with the Khan as ruler of Beloochistan, as the head of the Brahooee confederacy, not with the individual Khodadad Khan, who they say has become their enemy by departing from the rules and laws of their confederacy."

7*th*. The treaty is undoubtedly with the Khan as responsible ruler of Beloochistan, and not merely as head of a confederacy. This is one of the unfortunate errors the chiefs will persist in.

W. L. M.

20. Having heard from Colonel Phayre on the 22nd March that Moolla Mahomed purposed going to Beyla before proceeding to Khelat, I telegraphed as follows:—"It would be better if Moolla Mahomed Raisanee went direct to Khelat and not by Beyla. He will learn nothing good there, and his visiting the Jam first will not tend to improve his position with the Khan. If it can be so arranged, Moolla Mahomed should follow Captain Harrison direct." And again on the 25th idem, "I am still strongly of opinion Moolla Mahomed should not go to Beyla, his doing so would seem like a sanction from us of combination by nobles against the Khan. Moolla Mahomed has behaved most wisely and excellently* hitherto, it would be a pity to lose him that position. They have undoubtedly much just cause of complaint, but we cannot countenance combination to extort concession from the Khan. Our advice to the Khan to act justly will not be wanting. If he fails to listen, we should then withdraw, and leave matters to take their course. The Khan knows what the result would be."

* Alluding to his having remained quiet at Seebee and not joining the Jam's rebellion in October 1868.

21. It ended in Colonel Phayre, at the earnest request of the Sirdars, consenting to their going viâ Baghwana to Khelat, their object being to have an interview with the Jalawan Sirdars there before they passed on. This also had better have been avoided, but before any steps could be adopted, the Sirdars had left Jacobabad, and proceeded on their way. No sooner, however, had they started than, disregarding Colonel Phayre's instructions, they proceeded straight to Beyla. After arrival there, the murderous attack on Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord and his sons took place, which the Sirdars hastened to declare was prompted by the Khan. My opinion of this assertion, and how it should be received by the British authorities on the frontier, is given in my letter No. 266 of 1st May 1869, and quoted in Colonel Phayre's statement of events, so need not be re-stated. Conceiving that Colonel Phayre was attaching too much weight to the statement made to him by the disaffected chiefs, and that he was unintentionally drifting into unsuitable interference on their behalf with the Khan, I warned him against such a course. To this he replied in his quoted letter of the 4th of May, but has not given my reply thereto, dated 7th May which, though it was forwarded to your Excellency in my letter No. 35 of 5th June, it may be as well to re-produce here. It was to the following effect:—

"In acknowledging the receipt, to-day, of your letter of the 4th instant, I have the honour to observe that the whole tenor of your letter No. 703, of the 27th ultimo, seemed to convey that you were so impressed with the necessity of some more decided measures being adopted in behalf of the Sirdars of Beloochistan, in respect to their differences with their Sovereign, and that you were so disposed to consider we were bound to interfere more directly for them than had hitherto been the case, that I felt it incumbent on me to point out to you that our relations with the Khan rested with him alone, and that we had no right to accept any of the assertions of his chiefs as to how they considered the treaty to bear, or what they reckoned their rights to be. We have only to deal with the government for the time being, the mode of conducting that abides with the head. We may endeavour indirectly to improve his position and benefit the country generally by proffering good advice, but it should be most carefully done, so that it may not be supposed that we are siding with those who are in opposition to the ruling power, or intending to interfere with the internal government of the country.

"Every little act of ours is watched so closely by these people, and significance attached often in a way least intended, that it is of the first importance to be most guarded against any demonstration of a leaning one way or the other. I am therefore glad of your assurance that your views are not as I supposed, and certainly consider that in the present stage no further communications received from the Sirdars should be acted upon by you, the only reply to any that may occur being that the matter is in the hands of their sovereign, the Khan, who would doubtless act in the manner best suited to the interest of his country generally, and with that justice which should guide all rulers."

22. The events which occurred at and near Khelat in May, the very offensive attitude assumed by the Sirdars, and the liberal, moderate procedure of the Khan, are fully described in the accompaniments to my letter No. 439 of the 30th June to your Excellency. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee obstinately rejecting the favourable conditions allowed him by the Khan, left abruptly with the intention of going to Jacobabad, but Colonel Phayre hearing of his approach, very properly refused to allow him to enter that place. These matters were reported in the letters from Captain Harrison and Colonel Phayre, forwarded under my endorsement No. 414 of 22nd June 1869. I would call attention especially to Captain Harrison's remarks on Moolla Mahomed, and his proceedings as given in his letter No. 10 of the 10th June, quoted in extenso hereafter in para. 29. The Sirdar then passed on to Seebee, where he continued to reside till a short time back, when hearing of the defeat and flight of the Jam of Beyla, he fled into the Murree hills, pretending that he did not consider himself safe at Seebee. Of the other Sarawen Sirdars, Alla Dina Khoord, Wuderah Adam Khan Bungoolzye, and the Raisanee, next in rank to Moolla Mahomed, separated from the Jam and showed themselves ready to take gratefully what the Khan would give them. Azaad Khan of Kharan was present in the camp of the chiefs, and did all in his power to bring on hostilities which he trusted would assist his plans. The Jam and Noordeen Mingul returned to their respective homes, but only to prepare for what they hoped would prove a more successful rising in the following cold season. Further correspondence on the subject of procedure with respect to Khelat affairs took place with Colonel Phayre, which was forwarded under endorsement No. 416 of 22nd June, and the course laid down by me for adoption was approved by your Excellency and the Government of India.

23. The Jam purposely kept one point of dispute between him and the Khan open, to work when it suited his purpose. This was the question of the ownership of the Kemal Khan property in Baghwana. Captain Harrison's letters on this subject, with accompaniments, were forwarded to Government with my letter No. 757, of 13th November last. From the Jam's proceedings it was clear he intended to make one more most desperate effort to overthrow the Khan and his Government, and to spare no means of trying to induce others to join. Of the Khan's wise promptitude in this crisis, despatching his trusted Wuzzeer with forces on the 25th September; of the latter's rapid advances to Wudd, taking the Minguls by surprise before they were ready for action; of his subsequent defeat of the combined forces of the Jam and Noordeen Mingul, and final occupation of Beyla; as well as of the flight of the Jam into Sind, your Excellency has been informed. Since then, the Wuzzeer in a letter recently received, translation of which is appended, informs me of his having quitted the district of Lus, induced the people to return who had fled from Beyla and other places, in consequence of the Jam's followers having taken to plunder (on being deserted by their leader), and of his having been able to cause the restoration of a good deal of the plundered property, after which he was about to proceed to Mekran to reinforce his Highness' Naib at Kedj, who was alarmed at reported aggressive movements from the Persian side.

24. Captain Harrison, thinking that his presence with the Khan during the above operations might possibly lead to complications which it was well to avoid, very judiciously took the opportunity of visiting the districts of Moostung and Shawl, and descended by the Bolan Pass into Kutchee, where, or at Jacobabad, he has since remained. His reports on his Highness the Khan's proceedings and the Shahgassee's movements, Nos. 42, 44, and 48, were forwarded to Government under No. 789 of the 27th November 1869.

25. The above completes the narrative of events down to the present time. I have endeavoured to treat on them as briefly as possible, and to avoid as much as I could repetitions of what appears in Colonel Phayre's statement, but in some places the latter has been unavoidable with a due regard to clear exposition of what has really passed. The Khanazada (literally "sons of the house") government which the chiefs prominently bring forward in their complaints as the main cause of the evils existing in the country—and this statement Colonel Phayre appears fully to have accepted—has been shown to have existed long previous to the reign of the present Khan (who has the sole credit of the remaining portion of the evils); and a careful review of the events which have occurred during that reign will point to the fact that the Khanazada administration has, except for a very short time at the commencement, been conducted in a far less objectionable manner, and by less objectionable people, than was the case before. The present Khan came to the throne in 1857. The most powerful person at Khelat then, as before in the late Khan's reign, was Daroga Gool Mahomed, but through the manly and firm bearing of Major (now Sir Henry) Green, this man's evil designs were successfully defeated, and early in 1858 he was removed from the councils of the Khan, dying not long after. Before his death even, his hitherto unrelenting hatred to everything British gave way before the uprightness of the English gentleman, for though deprived of his former power, he expressed himself in friendly terms to Major Green. The next in influence and with equal dislike to us left to the new Khan by his predecessor, was not a Khanazada, but the Bunnia Gungaram, who had been employed as de-facto Wuzzeer and Treasurer by the late Nusseer Khan, after the deposition of Moola Mahomed Hussein, whose treachery to his master had been exposed by General Jacob. Gungaram was removed from his post and the country after the interview of the Khan with Sir Bartle Frere and General Jacob, at Jacobabad in December 1857, on which occasion the Khan fixed his choice on Wullee Mahomed Shahgassee as Wuzzeer, and his selection was fully approved by those two representatives of Government. For the character and conduct of Wullee Mahomed since then I cannot do better than to call attention to Sir Henry Green's last report, written in April 1868, before leaving the frontier. Nothing could be higher than the terms in which that officer spoke of the Shahgassee, who had then served the present Khan as Wuzzeer faithfully and most ably for ten years. Having held charge of the frontier during General Jacob's absence in 1856 and 1857, and again after his death from the beginning of 1859 to the middle of 1862, during which time I had the best opportunities of judging of the character and conduct of the Shahgassee, I can most fully endorse all that was said of him by Sir Henry Green, and would add my opinion that no sovereign ever had a more trusty servant, or one who had the interests of his master and country more sincerely at heart. Besides the Shahgassee, the only other Khanazadas holding offices about the Khan, are the two sons of the Daroga Gool Mahomed, but these have neither the talent, influence, nor venom of the old man, and may be said to take no prominent part in the administration. The real working is by his Highness the Khan and the Wuzzeer.

26. With regard to his Highness the Khan, the defects in his character have been repeatedly brought to the notice of Government, some of them are such as are particularly unfortunate in a Prince called on to rule over proud and headstrong nobles, and a wild race of people. Capricious, and occasionally vindictive, as he has displayed himself to be, he has also shown that he could act with firmness and generosity, as was evinced in the several rebellions of the Jam of Beyla and the various outbreaks headed by Moolla Mahomed Raisanee. He met all these boldly and vigorously, defeating each attempt as it was made, and afterwards treating each with almost undue leniency. He twice pardoned the Jam of Beyla and his confederate Noordeen Mingul, and last spring of his own accord gave to Moolla Mahomed Raisanee most favourable terms, in spite of the hostile attitude assumed by that Sirdar, and of his leaguing with the Khan's most inveterate enemies, the Jam of Beyla and Azaad Khan of Kharan.

27. On his first ascending the throne, the Khan was styled "a lad of weak intellect." The real fact is, little or nothing was known of him at that time, his existence had never before been officially notified, and confined strictly to the seclusion of the harem, he was not likely to have much chance of displaying intellect, or having any natural manly powers at all developed. The question of weak intellect may be dismissed, for he has since shown that, whatever may have been the first opinion formed, he has displayed on occasions much shrewdness and aptitude for public business. There can be no doubt, however, that his early education among only women and slaves, had a most injurious effect on his character, while the reputation he came first on the public scene with, led others to suppose that a creature was given to them to be moulded to the will of the party having the greatest power in the State. Hence came the scramble for that power, which took place from the very first, between the Daroga with Gungaram, and the chief Sirdars of the country. On the two former being removed, it was continued directly against the Khan himself by the Jam and Azaad Khan, and afterwards openly joined in by Taj Mahomed, the leading chief of the southern portion of Beloochistan, and Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, head of the northern part. That the Khan failed to draw his barons around and to him, and by his own conduct helped to increase the differences that had arisen between him and them, is indisputable, but it must be recollected at the same time that his position was an exceedingly difficult one, unusually so, for even the head of the wild clans of Beloochistan, and some credit may be accorded to him that he has not entirely failed in all respects. In January 1863, it was recorded "much of the "ill-feeling towards the Khan is doubtless caused by his capricious unstable character, "but his chiefs by the unreasonableness of their demands render any permanent settle-"ment of their differences most difficult." Such it was from the first, and such, owing to the infusibility of the materials, it has continued to the last. In one respect his Highness the Khan has never changed, and that is, his sincere desire to act to the best of his ability and power in accordance with the wishes of the British Government, and with the treaty made with his brother and continued with him. This has been proved in many ways, and reported on many occasions, and being the main point with which we are concerned, he has received the support of the British officers politically connected with him.

28. Of Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, the Chief, who Colonel Phayre still seems to think has been oppressively and unjustly treated, I can only say that like Sir Henry Green (and Colonel Phayre now), I had originally formed a high opinion of him, and considered him quite as likely to prove the most stable pillar of the State. My first acquaintance with him was in the beginning of 1854, when he accompanied the late Khan, Meer Nusseer Khan, to Jacobabad. He was then quite a young man, just passed 20, handsome, frank, and of most gentlemanly demeanour. The last time was in 1860, on his own estate in Kutchee, at Mittree near Dadur. The impression left then was still most favourable, but judging from recent events, it would appear that increase in years and the bad example of others have led to a great change for the worse in him, and to the entertainment of ambitious ideas and greed for power which was incompatible with his position as a noble and with his loyalty as a subject of the ruler of the Khelat State. Captain Harrison's demi-official and official reports on what occurred at Khelat in May last, show clearly how fully he was convinced, by the facts adduced by the Khan and the Sirdar's own demeanour, of the wrong course the latter was pressing, and of the mistaken view that had been entertained of his present character and designs.

29. I would here quote a portion of Captain Harrison's letter, No. 9, of the 9th June last, which is not given in Colonel Phayre's statement, but which is of great importance when the character and action of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed are being considered. Captain Harrison's local experience of eleven years' work on the frontier of Upper Sind gives his opinion much weight.

"With reference to the 6th para. of letter No. 266 from the Commissioner, it will be only necessary to allude to two or three statements of the Sirdars put forward by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and by comparing them with what actually occurred, a fair idea of their truthfulness or otherwise may be arrived at.

"The chief statement is that they, the Sirdars, had not done anything to warrant the treatment they had received at the Khan's hands. That he was jealous of their power and influence, and that he was persuaded by Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed that he would never have a strong government until he drove them out of the country.

"Against this are the following facts:—Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, aided by Sirdar Taj Mahomed and other chiefs, organised the rebellion in which the present Khan was wounded and had to fly for his life. Shere Dil Khan was then elected Khan in his place, and was tolerated so long as he had money and land to give away. These turbulent Sirdars then murdered him, and reinstated Khodadad Khan, and virtually became the rulers of Beloochistan. Their greed and oppressive acts at last aroused the anger of the well-disposed Sirdars, and they insisted on the Khan asserting his authority. The Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Taj Mahomed then organised another conspiracy to murder his Highness, and place his infant son on the Khanate. This being discovered just in time, the Sirdars, with the exception of Taj Mahomed, managed to escape; subsequently Taj Mahomed died in confinement.

"A second statement of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's calculated to mislead is, that owing to his being exiled, 20,000 of his followers have also shared his fate, and are in actual want.

"The Sarawans are composed of several tribes, of which the Shawanees and Raisanees have at one time or another been the head. The late Nusseer Khan, for an act of rebellion on the part of the Shawanees, took away their standard and gave it to the Raisanees. The total strength of this latter tribe is only about 200, of which number 150 are with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. The rest of the Sarawans are loyally disposed, and his Highness, taking into consideration the treacherous character of the Raisanee chief, has once more elected the Shawanees as head of the Sarawans.

"The Sirdars have talked rather freely regarding Taj Mahomed's mother being kept a prisoner by the Khan.

"This is not the case; she lives in a neighbouring village and constantly goes to call upon his Highness. She has no sympathy whatever with the Jam's party, and states that her son's ruin was entirely owing to the evil influence of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed.

"From the above there can be no doubt of the utter want of truth in Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's statements, furthermore that they were only made to bring the Khan into disrepute. His unparalleled treachery can only elicit one opinion, that any hardship or any privation he may have undergone is only what he deserved. As regards the minor chiefs who have been in exile, they preferred conspiring with Moolla Mahomed against their sovereign to remaining loyal and true, and have therefore no one but themselves to thank for the sufferings they may have endured during the past three or four years.

"Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's behaviour, since I met him at Baghwana, convinces me that his previous history has not been overdrawn or exaggerated, and I look upon his having refused to take up his hereditary lands as a fortunate circumstance for the Khan and his country.

* * * * * *

"The latter part of this report will, I trust, show that the Sirdars were not exiled without very good reason, and that their character is not quite what they would wish people to believe."

Again, on the 10th June, Captain Harrison wrote :—

" I have the honor to report for your information that I have just received a letter from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, stating that he is en route to Jacobabad, with the view of giving of giving you his version of the policy that has been followed in connexion with himself and other Sirdars.

" I would most respectfully urge that the opinion of his character recorded in my report was not written without due consideration and a perfect conviction of its truth; it may add to the strength of my present opinion to state that until recent events no one was more favourably impressed than myself with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. This Sirdar's character is dishonest and untruthful in the extreme, and I think the way he perverted your* instructions will convince you that such is the case. Instead of using his influence to persuade the other Sirdars to meet me in a friendly spirit, it was at his instigation than the Jam marched an armed force to within a few miles of Khelat, and it was this Sirdar that told me in Durbar that if they did not get what they wanted they would fight for it.

* Colonel Phayre's.

" It may perhaps be thought that the late trouble I have had with the Sirdars may have prejudiced me against Moolla Mahomed : such is not the case, and this Sirdar's character may be appreciated at its real value when his late allies and confederates, Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord, Wuderah Adam Khan, and others, say that they regret the day they allowed him to be their guide and counsellor.

" Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord, who is by no means a scrupulous person, stigmatizes the Sirdar's having come with an armed force as a most disgraceful proceeding.

" I am most anxious to do the best I can for this country and so far solicit your support that when Sirdar Moolla Mahomed presents himself you will let him know that instead of representing the true feelings of the Sirdars and people in Beloochistan, he is simply looked upon as a discontented exile with a few followers, and that as he has refused the fair and equitable terms that were offered to him by his Highness, he cannot possibly expect further aid or sympathy.

" I was aware three weeks ago that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed would be likely to pay you a visit. My moonshee was discovered writing to the Sirdars and advising them that if they did not get what they wanted, to report me to you and the Commissioner in Sind, and that everything would then be made right.

" It is with this idea that some of them refused the Khan's terms."

Colonel Phayre very properly, and in accordance with the instructions conveyed to him in May, refused to see the Sirdar, and in positively declining either interview or further intercourse, added " that I had fulfilled my promise when I first came to Jacobabad in continuation of Sir Henry Green's, that I would use my good offices with the Khan on his behalf, that he had declined the Khan's offer, and therefore that I did not see what more could be done for him."

30. Captain Harrison, in his annual report now being submitted, writes in further reference to Moolla Mahomed :—

" His Highness, whilst occupied in punishing those who for years past had been trying to subvert his authority, was not forgetful of those who were anxious to return to their allegiance. Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord and Sirdar Adam Khan Wuderah went to Seebee after they had parted with the Jam, and gave as their reason that no one would believe they had been forgiven. His Highness hearing this sent them a written order sealed by him, stating that they might return to their country and live amongst their own people, and that if their conduct was such as met with his approval, that he would look upon them as his Sirdars. The whole of the Raisanee tribe sent Hybut Khan, the elder brother of their Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, to Nawab Mahomed Khan,* saying that they did not wish to join in any intrigues that might be got up against the Khan, and only wished to be allowed to remain quietly at Mittree. His Highness wrote two very kind letters to Hybut Khan, saying that he had no wish to interfere with them, and that no one should harm them so long as they adhered to their present good intentions.

Moolla Mahomed is with the Bijaranee Murrees, and it has been reported from the Boogtee Hills that these Sirdars fled after him. Inquiries will be made.—R. PHAYRE.

* His Highness's Wukkeel at Jacobabad.—W. L. M.

" Directly Sirdar Moolla Mahomed heard of the defeat of the Jam of Beyla and of Sirdar Noordeen, he fled with six followers to Kahun† (only one of whom was a Raisanee). The rest of the tribe elected to remain quietly at Mittree under Hybut Khan."

† Headquarters of the Murrees.—W. L. M.

31. The fears expressed by Moolla Mahomed were, I am certain, quite unfounded, and given out merely as a reason for his going to the Murrees, and with the hope of enlisting their sympathies. The district of Seebee is foreign to Beloochistan, and belongs to Kandahar; the Khan would not therefore venture to molest the Sirdar there, even if he troubled himself about him at all now, which is very doubtful. There was another object which struck me immediately I heard of the flight as the most likely thing the Sirdar had in view, and that was hearing an expeditionary trip was about to be made from the British frontier into the Hills, and that the Murree chiefs would be summoned to meet it, he hoped through them to get an opportunity of being again received and listened to by the British authorities. I at once cautioned Colonel Phayre against this. Very recently the surmise has been shown not to have been incorrect, for I have heard from Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, that he had received a communication from the Murree chiefs, in which they asked permission to bring the Sirdar to him. I have informed Captain Sandeman by telegram that this should not be allowed, and that no communication should be held with the Sirdar.

32. I have entered at length into the facts relating to the Khan and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, that the whole circumstances may be before your Excellency without the necessity of reference to numerous documents. With reference to the other rebellious chiefs, I need only repeat that the Jam is now with his son and ladies of his family an exile at Kurrachee, Sirdar Noordeen is said to have fled to Kandahar, but his younger brother is with the Jam. Alla Dina Khoord and Wuddera Adam Khan Bungoolzye have been told they may return to their own lands, and probably have done so. To show the exact state of the present relations between his Highness the Khan and his chiefs, I requested Colonel Phayre to obtain from Captain Harrison lists showing those who were well- and those who were ill-disposed towards his Highness. These lists are appended. From them it will appear that there are 51 of the former to 12 of the latter, not counting the Murrees and Boogtees, whose position is peculiar, and who have had little to do ever with the course of events going on at Khelat. Of the 12, six belong to the one tribe of Minguls, who have for years past given themselves entirely over to the direction of the Jam of Beyla.

33. The last on the list is Azaad Khan of Kharan, the never-ceasing fomenter of disturbances in Beloochistan for more than 20 years past. Finding his objects could not be obtained through the Jam and Moolla Mahomed, he left them in June last and went back to Kandahar, where he endeavoured to interest the Ameer, and Sirdar Shere Ali Khan, Governor of Kandahar, in his behalf. Captain Harrison reports: "A lengthy "correspondence received on this subject between the Khelat and Affghanistan Governments. His Highness' replies were dignified and appropriate, viz., that he should be "most happy to restore Azaad Khan the land that he held for doing his Highness' "service, when he chose to account to him for having plundered the village of "Punchgoor, and other aggressive acts."

34. At the same time that the list of Sirdars was called for, I requested also that a report might be submitted on the numbers, composition, and behaviour of the force of mercenaries, so freely abused by the discontented Sirdars, and so constantly referred to by Colonel Phayre, but about which no precise information was given, or indeed anything beyond hearsay statements. Copy of Captain Harrison's report is appended, also of Colonel Phayre's forwarding letter.

The numbers shown are:—

Artillery	78
Cavalry	200
Body Guard Infantry	400
Regiment of Infantry	800
Total	1,478

Colonel Phayre points to a further body of household cavalry mounted on the Khan's horses, and styled the Khan's Umlah. The numbers of these are not given, but Colonel Phayre concludes they make up the 2,000, or 522 more. This could scarcely be; the Khan would hardly have at his disposal that number of horses. But whether it is so or not, is a matter of little importance to the general question, that it is unnecessary to delay over it. This force of "regulars" as it was called at first, consisted only of 400 in the time of Meer Nusseer Khan, the late Khan. He found such a body necessary, and probably judged so from what he had seen in his early youth of the advantages gained by our regular paid soldiery. His selection of material does not, from Sir Henry Green's account, appear to have been happy. The severe discipline, however, recommended by that officer, and seen to have been put in force, may have had a good effect on even such a band of roughs. The 400 was increased since 1856 to nearly four times that number, for reasons which need no elaborate description, being simple, and the natural consequence of events described above. Cavalry and artillery were added. Of the whole Captain Harrison speaks in more favourable terms than was said of the ancient 400, and I should be inclined to think justly, for if so much larger a body had not some approach to good order and discipline, and were not made to behave decently, it must have fallen to pieces long ere this, or been utterly destroyed, when scattered about in small detachments amongst a population every male of which nearly bears arms. Colonel Phayre takes exception to the favourable report, and quotes an instance under his own knowledge of gross insolence on the part of a captain, which he accepts as conclusive proof that the whole are bad. With regard to payment of these levies, Captain Harrison distinctly denies the statement brought forward by the discontented chiefs that it was made from confiscated lands. He says, " I am in a position to state that such is not the " case, his Highness has sufficient revenue from his lands at Baghwana, Khelat, Mus- " toong, Kutchee, and other places, besides the transit dues, to support his small force. " the only Sirdaree lands estranged are those of the Raisanee chief, and I showed in my " letter of the 10th June that his Highness was quite willing to restore them. The " actual income of this Sirdar, taking everything into consideration, used to be about " Rs. 6,000 per annum."

The monthly cost of his Highness the Khan's force is Rs. 9,583, or annually Rs. 1,14,996.

35. With regard to maintaining this force, the Khan is I conclude the best judge as to its necessity, and considering his life was once nearly taken, and he was violently deposed by the very barons it is recommended he should call again to his side without any new power of control over them, it is not surprising that the Khan should desire to keep by him some support, in which he has at all events some confidence. Exactly the same course of events that occurred in Beloochistan is now passing in Affghanistan. His Highness the Ameer finding it impossible to trust any longer to the doubtful support of his nobles, and their treacherous levies, is putting an end to the feudal system, and forming a regular paid army, and I hold we have no more right or reason to interfere with the proceedings of his Highness the Khan of Khelat in this way, than we have with his Highness the Ameer of Cabool.

36. Colonel Phayre, however, in spite of the views of Government communicated to him by order of your Excellency last summer, and in spite of the clear evidence of the gross misconduct of the chiefs of Beloochistan, which was laid before him by the Political Agent, Captain Harrison, still conceives that some further interference than has hitherto been exerted should be employed, and that the chiefs being a grievously ill-used set of people, measures should be adopted to compel his Highness the Khan to treat them in a different manner. I need hardly say that I entirely differ with Colonel Phayre in his estimation of the state of affairs in Beloochistan, and particularly so in regard to the light in which he holds our relations with that State. It is not quite clear what course exactly he would pursue, but it would seem that his first move would be to address his Highness the Khan on the part of Government with a threat that, unless he behaved better to his nobles, and gave them the share of power in his kingdom which they thought they should have, the British officer at his court would be withdrawn, and he would be left to his own devices. Colonel Phayre lays stress on this being the policy of Lord Elphinstone's Government in 1858, but that was only enunciated on a very adverse report on the Khan's personal character, and it was never considered requisite to carry it into effect.

37. It is scarcely necessary to point out that this would now be a style of interference totally opposed to the orders of Government, and unjust to his Highness the Khan himself, who has ever staunchly adhered to that part of the treaty under which he bound himself " to act in subordinate co-operation with the British Government, and to enter " into no negotiation with other States without its consent," and has steadily endeavoured in spite of great difficulties and most adverse circumstances, to carry out to the best of his ability and power the other terms of the treaty. It would also be a very false move, for it would be setting ourselves in direct antagonism to the Khan. It would destroy his power for good as a ruler of the country, and it would infallibly lead to greater dissensions than had ever occurred before, a scramble for power, ending in the country being parcelled out amongst a number of rival chieftains, jealous of and hostile to each other, and ready to hand their services over to the highest bidder who looked for them. It was with such a result in view that I wrote as I did in January 1861, when it was proposed to withdraw the political officer from Khelat.

38. I will not take up your Excellency's time with further remarks on Colonel Phayre's proposal, but will now briefly allude to what I consider the exact state of affairs in Beloochistan, and the course I would recommend for adoption.

39. With regard to the former, there can be no question that the present position of his Highness the Khan is stronger now than it has ever been before. By his moderation and judgment displayed last May, aided by the good advice and countenance of the Political Agent, he defeated the designs of the combined assemblage of the few discontented Sarawan and Jalawan chiefs with Azaad Khan, and their separation followed. He acted with suitable promptitude and energy when the Jam of Beyla again broke into open rebellion in September, and his forces defeating the Jam and his associates, drove them from the country. All the chiefs of Beloochistan—with the exception of 12, of which five are of the same tribe—have given in their allegiance to him, and he has shown himself disposed to be lenient to the latter, in spite of their rebellious and ungrateful behaviour. At the same time he is most willing and ready to act on judicious advice when offered to him, or given on his asking, thus proving that he has the desire at least to rule well. After the plan for subsidising the Murrees fell through, owing chiefly, I believe, to its too limited scope, his Highness caused excellent arrangements to be made, at considerable expense, for the protection of merchants traversing Kutchee, and though more than usual have passed down the Bolan this season, I have heard of no instance of outrage having been committed since these arrangements were established.

40. As to the course that should be adopted for the future, there is no one who feels more than I do the value and necessity of having a strong and friendly power in Beloochistan, a country that covers so large a tract of our western frontier, and that is likely at any time to be of such vital importance to us. It is for that very reason that I would recommend that no change should be allowed in the policy hitherto followed towards the Khelat state, that the same instructions should be given to our Political Agent at that court to abstain from all direct interference in the affairs of the internal government of that country, though at the same time to be ever ready to give such advice to his Highness as will assist him in his endeavours to place his rule on a solid basis, and to give his moral support to all such acts of his Highness as may be conducive to that object. I would also recommend strongly that an early interview should take place between his Highness the Khan and Colonel Phayre, at such place as may be most suitable, with a view to a better understanding of the real state of affairs being arrived at, and at which Colonel Phayre would be able personally to explain to his Highness the present desires and wishes of Government.

41. On this occasion the question also of the future management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes might be fully discussed, and a sound plan inaugurated, less liable to the fluctuations and mishaps that have attended those hitherto devised. The only injury to trade, and only jeopardy to the Punjab frontier, arises from the restless and lawless habits of these two tribes, who reside in the hills immediately adjacent to the southern Punjab line. A portion of both these tribes has been taken into the service of Government under the officers on that frontier, and since then plundering has in a measure, if not entirely, ceased. There is, however, one defect in this arrangement which I think should be remedied, as it is otherwise likely to prove troublesome,* and that is, that it is carried on direct with these tribes, who are subjects of his Highness the Khan, and not through the officer to whom political relations with that court are entrusted. This is apt to lead to complications which had better be avoided, and I would therefore recommend that in whatever new plan is proposed, the Punjab arrangements should be embodied in their integrity, and their carrying out be entrusted to the Political Superintendent on the frontier of Upper Sind, who acting in cordial co-operation with the officers on the Punjab side, would at once cause to be corrected any faults complained of, or attend to any suggestions offered.

* Uncivilised tribes like the Murrees and Boogtees are apt to consider that when they can refer to different authorities, that the influence of one may be used to counteract the policy of the other. This of course would not be the case, the respective officials being in strict accord, but the idea would nevertheless be entertained by the tribe as has been lately exemplified. Communication with Moolla Mahomed Raisanee having been broken off by the Political Superintendent on the Sind frontier, that Chief resorts to the Murrees, and gets them to address the Deputy-Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, in his behalf.

W. L. M.

42. Instructions were issued not long ago by his Excellency the Viceroy for an expedition to go into the hills north of the Sind and west of the Punjab frontier, to examine and report on the country, as well as on certain propositions that had been suggested by the Punjab Government. Colonel Phayre submitted a letter to me putting forth his ideas as to the best means of carrying out those propositions, to which I replied, and have now the honour of appending both letters for your Excellency's consideration. It will be observed that I consider advancing our frontier line into the Boogtee Hills a mistake. It would protect the Boogtees certainly, who are now more tractable than they used to be, but it would have little or no effect on the Murrees, whose hills lie beyond the Boogtees, and who are in reality the only people near us who continue to follow freebooting habits. Occupying the Boogtee Hills would give nothing, while it would be placing our posts in a less favourable position than they have at present. There is less objection to advancing a post from the Punjab frontier into the Shum plain, if it was found desirable, as that would not be far in advance of the supports, and would be in a locality where the troops could readily act.

43. A simpler plan by far, one that would be less expensive, and one that would involve us in no new complications, would be that at the interview with his Highness the Khan, Colonel Phayre should be instructed to consult with him as to the best and surest means of inducing the Murrees and Boogtees to give up plundering entirely, and that Colonel Phayre should then submit a project accordingly. As a basis to work upon, I would suggest that the plan, which has so far succeeded well on the Punjab frontier, should be taken, viz., that the principal chiefs and certain members of the Murree and Boogtee tribes should be taken into pay. This, however, should be done in the name of the Khan, and whatever money had to be paid to these tribes should be disbursed through the Khan's officers at Jacobabad, in presence of the Political Superintendent or his assistant (should the Political Agent at Khelat not be there, as would probably be the case), the chiefs coming in themselves, or deputing suitable substitutes to receive their stipends each month. A certain number of each tribe should also always remain at Jacobabad to keep up communications, being occasionally relieved. The object of this is, that it would instil habits of regularity and order into these wild people, would give them a feeling of confidence in the arrangement, and help gradually to civilise and improve them. All this, and the regular payment of hard cash distributed amongst these two tribes, would assist most materially (if it did not at once produce it) in bringing about their pacification and settlement, which has ever been a matter of anxious desire and consideration. One long existing cause of difference between the British and Khelat Governments would be put an end to, and the trade traffic from and to Affghanistan would be free from all molestation, from the top of the Bolan Pass to the sea.

44. To effect this, the following might be taken as a scale for guidance. The Boogtees have already some of their tribe employed in the service of Government on the Sind and the Punjab frontier, the Murrees only on the latter. I would propose that in addition to the above, Goolam Murteza, chief of the Boogtees, should receive Rs. 100 per mensem personal pay, and provide—

2 Jemadars, at Rs. 20 each - - -	Rs.	40	0 0
50 Sowars, at Rs. 15 each - - - -	„	750	0 0
Total per mensem,	Rs.	890	0 0

The Murrees being now divided into two distinct bodies, residing respectively at Kahun and Kote Moondaie, and the breakdown of the late plan being owing chiefly to its having been carried out with only one branch, that at Kahun, I would recommend that a quota should be taken from each of these divisions of the same strength and on the same principle as from Goolam Murteza Boogtee.

Thus to Guzzun Murree, Chief at Kahun, personal allowance - - - - -	Rs.	100	0 0
2 Jemadars, at Rs. 20 each - - -	„	40	0 0
50 Sowars, at Rs. 15 each - - - -	„	750	0 0
Total	Rs.	890	0 0
To Kurreem Khan Murree, Chief at Kote Moondaie, personal allowance - - - -	Rs.	100	0 0
2 Jemadars, at Rs. 20 each - - -	„	40	0 0
50 Sowars, at Rs. 15 each - - - -	„	750	0 0
Total	Rs.	890	0 0
Making a monthly total of - -	Rs.	2,670	0 0
Annually - - - - -	„	32,040	0 0

I take the rates of Rs. 20 and 15, because those now prevail for Belooch jemadars and sowars on the Sind frontier, and any difference would cause discontent. On the Punjab frontier there are 20 Murrees and 20 Boogtees engaged, but at Rs. 20 per mensem. These might be assimilated to the others, and by giving a slight increase and introducing the rank of Jemadar, discontent would be avoided here too. They might be from the Murrees at Kahun, to which the Punjab is nearest, and not of Kote Moondaie.

1 Jemadar - - - - -	Rs.	20	0 0
30 Sowars, at Rs. 15 each - - - - -	„	450	0 0
Total	Rs.	470	0 0

From the Boogtees—

1 Jemadar - - - - -	Rs.	20	0 0
30 Sowars, at Rs. 15 each - - - - -	„	450	0 0
Total	Rs.	470	0 0

Total of both per mensem - - -	Rs.	940	0 0
Total per annum - - - -	„	11,280	0 0
Add charges on the Sind frontier - -	„	32,040	0 0
	Rs.	43,320	0 0

or, given in round numbers, Rs. 44,000 per annum.

45. Were the above arrangements approved and sanctioned, I am confident that the best results will follow. There would be uninterrupted peace on the Punjab frontier, from Sind to Dera Ghazee Khan, and opportunity given for the resources of that part of the country being developed undisturbed. On the western side of the Murree and Boogtee Hills the country would be freed from the harassing attacks of the hitherto inveterate marauders occupying those hills; while the trade line down the Bolan Pass and across the plains of Kutchee into Sind would be free from molestation, and the British provinces to the south would largely benefit by the trade which would annually increase, and follow that line to the sea.

46. I have before expressed my opinion that Rs. 50,000 per annum paid to his Highness the Khan under the Treaty, in lieu of the higher duties formerly levied from merchants passing through his territory, does not reimburse that sovereign for the loss he sustains in the reduction of the transit dues as collected under that Treaty. It should also be borne in mind that under the 5th article, in addition to the fixed duty, his Highness " binds himself, his heirs, and successors, to prevent all plundering or other " outrage by his subjects, within or in the neighbourhood of British Territory, to protect " the passage of merchants to and fro between the British dominions and Affghanistan, " whether by way of Sind or by the seaports of Mekran;" and that to aid in the fulfilment of these obligations, the grant of Rs. 50,000 was to be applied as well as to the other stipulation. I trust, therefore, I shall not be considered presumptuous or unreasonable in earnestly recommending that the further sum above mentioned of Rs. 44,000 may be annually granted to aid the Khan in acting up to his engagements. Applied, as suggested, it will check cattle lifting and intertribal quarrels, for any party offending in either of these respects would have its subsidy withheld from it, until restitution and reparation were made; it would afford the protection to trade which does not exist now, or when it does, it is at such an outlay on the Khan's part that he is unable effectually to maintain it; and it would enable his Highness to turn his undivided attention to the consolidation of his power and the good government of his country, at a time too when affairs look more promising for his success in this respect than has ever been the case before.

Enclosure 2 in No. 3.

From Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Upper Sind to the Commissioner in Sind,—(No. 1579, dated 8th November 1869.)

The time having nearly arrived for carrying out the orders of his Excellency the Viceroy in Council, as directed in the Government of India's letter, No. 879, dated 25th June last, I have the honour to submit for consideration the following views as to the aim and scope of the proposed alterations in our arrangements on this part of the frontier, in connexion with the objects detailed in the 8th paragraph of Mr. Seton Karr's letter.

2. The accompanying sketch map shows the tract of country under reference, viz., the hilly area included between Dera Ghazee Khan and Dadur (at the foot of the Bolan Pass) by route of Barkhan and Mundahee on the north, the Sind frontier districts on the south, Kutchee on the west, and Dera Ghazee Khan districts on the east.

NOTE.—The Kandahar territory of Seebee and Kujjuck is of course excepted.

3. I would submit that the geographical position of this tract with reference to our border interests, as well as our communication with the Affghan highlands, either by the Bolan, or direct from Dera Ghazee Khan, establishes its political and strategical importance; more particularly the northern and western portions of it, inhabited by the Mundahee Murrees.

4. In time of war it might be necessary to use the direct route from Dera Ghazee Khan to Dadur through Barkhan, Tull, Chotiali, &c.; at all events it is highly desirable that we should know more of that tract than we do; and as the Mundahee Murrees are by far the most troublesome section of that tribe, any political and military arrangements that failed to provide for civilizing, and if necessary, coercing them, would, I submit, be faulty and liable to break down.

5. The boundaries of the Goorchanees, Lasharees, Khetranees, Murrees, and Boogtees are roughly shown. Their accuracy or otherwise, however, must be verified by local inquiry.

6. Kutchee is the extensive plain tract lying to the westward of the Murrees and Boogtees. It is the eastern portion of it, extending from Dadur to Shahpoor, that is so frequently overrun with impunity by the Mundahee Murrees and other plunderers, caravans travelling from Affghanistan are generally plundered in the northern part of it between Bagh and Dadur.

7. Nominally the Murrees and Boogtees are within the scope of his Highness the Khan of Khelat's rule, but so far from his exercising any real power over them, he has hitherto been unable to protect his own territory in Eastern Kutchee from their murderous and predatory attacks.

8. I would respectfully submit that there are equally urgent political, military, and commercial reasons for our using every effort to civilize and reform these restless neighbours.

9. I use the expression civilize, because it has been shown in former reports that they are quite prepared to accept civilizing influences; the chiefs and headmen themselves, of both the Murrees and Boogtees, having asked us to advance our outposts into their territory for the purpose of putting a stop to their internecine feuds, and thus to afford each tribe an opportunity of cultivating its own excellent lands. Moreover, as tribal rulers, each asks for countenance and support in coercing sections of their own followers who may insist upon disturbing the general peace by misconduct.

10. The fact is that these Murrees and Boogtee chiefs, the former particularly, are placed in a very delicate position, which well deserves our favourable consideration.

11. They see plainly that eastward as regards the Punjab, and westward as regard Kutchee and the Bolan Pass, they have naturally incurred relations and responsibilities towards the British Government, which they cannot avoid if they would, and they foresee that, sooner or latter, their lawless followers must cease to be obnoxious not only to ourselves, but to our neighbours and allies, or else they will assuredly draw down severe measures upon the tribes collectively; hence their expressed desire, through our aid, to establish firm tribal Government so as to avoid giving offence to us.

12. Other reasons also have promoted this desire. They have witnessed the improved condition of the Belooch, who have lived under our border administration for the last 20 years; and being well aware of the thriving and steadily increasing trade in cattle and grain that exists between the Punjab, Upper Sind and Kutchee, they begin to understand the value of such highly fertile tracts as the Shum, Murrow and Pat plains, &c., which conjointly offer to their industry a rich culturable area of about 700 square miles.

13. Their urgency therefore in seeking through our aid to enjoy the same privileges of peace and quietness that their brethren within our border do, in order that they may cultivate these valuable lands, is not to be wondered at; particularly as they know the boon to be beyond their reach without the actual presence of troops to overawe the unruly, and of an English officer to advise them how to lay the foundations of, and carry out, their work of reform.

14. I would here explain that our Upper Sind Belooch, just alluded to, viz., Boogtees, Dhoombkees, Jekrannes, Joomalees, Kosas, Boordees, Oomranees, and Mazarees, are the same warlike race as of old; the only difference in them being that they are now under control, and have no reason for plundering, being well off. Without constant care, however, they would soon relapse into their old habits, and will, I think, continue liable to do so during the present generation, if neglected.

15. For this reason I could not, in connexion with the objects under discussion, recommend the withdrawal of any of the outposts noted in the margin, which have in their rear the dense jungles of Boordeka, extending from Kusmore for some 50 miles south-west to the right bank of the Beagaree Canal, and are inhabited by portions of the Belooch tribes above named. In their immediate front those outposts have the Boogtee hills, where the greater part of that tribe still live. So long as the latter behave themselves properly (which they generally do), free intercourse between them and their brethren inside our border is permitted, but at the beginning of this year, I found it quite necessary to order the outposts to patrol to their rear in the Boordeka jungles, as well as to their front, in order to remind all of the actual presence of troops, and that some cattle-lifting and acts of criminal violence that had taken place must cease. These measures, combined with a few convictions at the Quarter Sessions have, I am happy to say, had the desired effect.

Soonee.
Kusmore.
Toj.
Sunree.
Goranaree.

16. I trust it may appear clear from this that though, in order to advance a line of posts, I might reduce and convert the present outposts into supports, I could not withdraw them altogether, without endangering the peace and good order of the whole border, inside as well as outside our territory. This point will be referred to when discussing the detailed military arrangements which it is proposed to make.

17. Similarly, with regard to the Murrees, they will not obey their chiefs properly, until they see that the latter have it in their power to punish them. They are at present at peace with the Boogtees, owing to our influence and advice; one case of cattle-lifting however may bring that to a sudden end and cost a score of lives. This truce, moreover, has not admitted of either side cultivating their extensive outlying lands.

18. Under all the circumstances brought forward, I would submit that a conciliatory policy towards them is preferable to either a neutral or an intimidatory one, so long as it will answer the object sought. The latter was tried about 11 years ago, when Colonel Sir Henry Green arranged for a force of Brahooées under his Highness the Khan of Khelat, in person to march into the Murree hills for the purpose of punishing the tribe. The Murrees never faced this force, but fled before it into the distant northern ranges. They were severely punished and impoverished by a large quantity of their grain, and about 8,000 head of their cattle being captured. The chiefs eventually came into the camp, and tendered their allegiance to his Highness the Khan, begging for mercy, which was extended to them on promise of good behaviour. The entire force was then withdrawn, and the result was that the tribe being left to itself soon forgot its severe lesson, and relapsed into former excesses, the chiefs being quite unable to restrain their starving followers.

19. My object in quoting this instance, is to show that the effect of even a successful campaign soon wears off with these tribes, unless constantly reminded of it by the actual presence of troops against them; and that even a conciliatory and highly liberal policy, such as we have under contemplation, would utterly fail without that support, because the greater part of each tribe, being under little or no moral control, would soon succeed in re-opening old feuds.

20. I have thus endeavoured to state what I submit may be fairly urged in favour of the proposed measure in a civil and political point of view. Resting upon the broad basis of a desire to serve the real interests of others as well as our own, I venture to hope for its successful issue if carefully carried out. The concurrence of his Highness the Khan of Khelat will, I feel sure, be readily accorded to the independent arrangements, should the Government be pleased to sanction them. Indeed, they will tend to promote his Highness' interests and those of his subjects in Kutchee, quite as much as they will those of the hill tribes themselves. It will, however, be carefully explained to his Highness that any arrangements we may make will not supersede the necessity for his taking precautionary measures for the safety of Eastern Kutchee, which, if not defended by a line of outposts may prove too great a temptation for the Mundahee Murrees, and lead to excesses which would defeat the whole plan.

21. With regard to the Military arrangements which it has from time to time been proposed to make, both by the Punjab and Sind Frontier Officers, in support of the above object, I would summarise them by stating that they aim at establishing a cordon of posts on the east, south and west sides of the tract in question, as shown by the dotted red line in the map.

22. The positions proposed to be held are—

The necessity for each will form a part of the inquiry about to take place.

1st.—Luggaree Barkhan.
2nd.—A central point in the Shum plain.
3rd.—Deyrah Beebruk.
4th.—Sungseela.
5th.—Phoolajee, or any point near it.

For the remaining fifty or sixty miles between Phoolajee and Dadur, his Highness the Khan of Khelat would be requested to provide a line of posts, about 10 miles apart.

23. The principal and most important post of all would be that in the Shum plain, where, and on the neighbouring Murree mountain, during the hot season, a political officer would reside.

24. It would be premature to enter into further details at present. I beg, however, respectfully to assure the Government that every point noted for inquiry shall be thoroughly sifted, and a full report made thereon.

25. I shall be quite ready to march when the present Sessions at Jacobabad are concluded, which will be towards the close of the present month. I mention an early date for the march, owing to the necessity of my having to attend at the High Court in Bombay, probably in February next, or whenever the spring Sessions may take place, in connexion with the trial of the European public servants in Upper Sind, who stand accused of having committed criminal breach of trust as such.

26. As one of the charges against John Barron is for stealing my Toshakhana allowance of this year, amounting to Rs. 2,000, which sum in currency notes has been traced by the numbers of the notes to his banker's account, I would solicit that I may be allowed to expend a similar amount in presents to chiefs during the exploring expedition under report. I know of no other expenses likely to be incurred, except it be for feeding such chiefs with a few followers who will of necessity accompany us.

27. A copy of this letter will be forwarded to the Secretary to Government in the Punjab, and as soon as I have, in communication with the Punjab Government, and Colonel Graham, the Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, fixed a date that will be mutually convenient, we will proceed to carry out the orders with which we are charged.

Enclosure 3 in No. 3.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., & C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.—(No. 785, dated Camp Mora, the 25th November 1869.)

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter No 1579 of the 8th instant, I have the honour to call your attention to the following points:—

1st.—The line you propose to adopt for the advanced posts is a continuation in a westerly direction of the suggested post from the Punjab Frontier in the Shum plain. It will be within the Boogtee Hills. will protect to a certain extent and control that tribe, but it places us in no better position for holding in check the Murrees than we possess at present.

2nd.—That by placing advanced posts at Deyra and Sungseela, we take upon ourselves new responsibilities and establish our troops in a confined country more unsuited to cavalry than they are now in, and where they will be separated from their supports by a hilly tract only penetrable by difficult passes, or by crossing a mountain some 3,000 feet above the level of the plain.

3rd.—That while it is undoubtedly a most desirable object to civilize the Boogtees and Murrees, and reclaim them for their long existing habits of plunder and inter-tribal sanguinary quarrelling, will the plan you propose have that effect beyond the limited extent of enabling the Boogtees to cultivate in peace the small portion of arable land near Deyra and Sungseela, with perhaps a portion of the Murrow plain, and to complete the civilizing process?—will it not be necessary to occupy the Murree country as well, establishing posts at Kahun and Kote Moondaie, for the protection and management of that tribe also?

4th.—The safety of the Sind border being already amply provided for will the presence of a post at Phoolajee improve the position as regards the protection of the road taken by merchants coming from Affghanistan through Kutchee into Sind?—or must we depend, as now, on arrangements to be made by the Khan of Khelat for that purpose?

5th.—Can the advanced posts of Deyra, Sungseela and Phoolajee be given from the existing Frontier Force, or will an increase of strength be required, which is pronounced in the 5th part of the 8th paragraph of Mr. Seton-Karr's letter as considered by his Excellency in Council to be highly undesirable?

6th.—The effect on the power of his Highness the Khan of Khelat which our presence in his country and direct interference with the affairs of a portion of the inhabitants thereof, his subjects, will have.

2. The above points will give you a general idea of the views I hold on the question under consideration, but I will, to explain myself more fully, discuss each separately.

3. 1st.—By going into the valley of Deyra we bring ourselves into close contact with the Murrees, who hitherto have been at a far distance, and excepting in concert with the Boogtees have never attempted to interfere with the British possessions. The concert of Boogtees would be prevented it is true, but our presence at Deyra would be a constant menace to the Murrees, without our being able to act effectually against them, in consequence of the hilly and difficult nature of their country. They might if they chose bid us defiance, harass our posts and our protegés, and continue to plunder as they have hitherto done in Kutchee. To resent and put an end to such a state of affairs, an expedition on a large and expensive scale into the Murree territory would sooner or later be rendered compulsory.

4. 2nd.—By occupying Deyra and Sungseela, we accept the new responsibilities of protecting the Boogtee tribe from their hereditary enemies, the Murrees, and of insisting on the good behaviour of the Boogtees, performing in fact the Police duties to that tribe, any dissatisfied member of which has only to slip into the Murree country to swell the ranks of the unruly there and laugh at our attempts to recover him. This is a situation which I hold would be neither dignified nor satisfactory. The Boogtees no doubt would in the main highly approve of it, as it would certainly be to their benefit. But it would be a false position to place disciplined troops, whether in a strategical or any other point of view. We hold now an admirable line for our frontier posts, on the edge of an extensive plain, where cavalry can act to the best advantage. Should any band of plunderers attempt to enter Sind, they must pass within this line of outposts, and subject themselves to the almost certainty of being intercepted on their return. In 1845 a post was placed at Shahpoor, more to protect the Kyberees, a tribe replaced by us on their own lands at Chuttur, Tahar-ka-Gote, Phoolajee and Koonree, when the Jekranees were removed from the same locality by Sir C. Napier, as also because it was considered a good advanced point from which to check attempts by the Boogtees to maraud in Sind. In June 1848, however, when experience proved this outpost was unnecessary, and it was found more expedient to have the posts only along the Sind border, it was withdrawn, and detachments were placed to the eastward of Jacobabad, at Dil Morad-ka-Ghurree, Hassan-ka-Ghurree, Tungwanee, Kund-Kote Koomree, and Kusmore, with a small party of Belooch guides at Mittree. The post of Belooch guides at Gundooee was added afterwards. This was all sufficient then. Everything was kept safe within this line, and in front was an open plain extending for miles, on which cavalry could act with the greatest advantage against any parties of robbers who ventured to leave the hills. In course of time, and owing to the security enjoyed within the line of outposts, cultivation extended outside, and it became necessary to advance. A new line was ably selected by Sir H. Green, and at his recommendation was adopted. The Kusmore post was taken 4 miles to the north and lessened in strength. The Koomree post was strengthened and advanced 20 miles to Sooee, an admirable position, at a point where a river (dry, excepting after rain in the hills, and then only flooded for a few hours) which had always been a favourite way of exit for plunderers, passed out of a low range of hills into the plain. This forms a most complete check to any attempts against Sind. The Kund-Kote post which was located in the thick jungles of Boordeka, was changed to Toj, 10 miles to the front, and in the plain outside the jungle, and where cultivation had extended to. The Tungwanee and Hassan-ka-Ghurree posts were changed to Sunree and Goranaree, respectively 13 and 11 miles forward, and across the plain, and at the southern edge of the low and insignificant range of hills, which lies between the desert tract and the Mutt plain. Dil Moorad had been abandoned as a post some years before. For the protection of the Sind frontier nothing could be better than this line, and no Boogtees, or Boogtees and Murrees combined, would ever dream of running such a clear risk of capture or destruction, as must be theirs, if they ventured to pass to inside of it. By leaving this and moving into the Deyra valley, we abandon the plain country, go beyond the small range of hills above mentioned, the Mutt plain, and put the high mountain, called the Zeen, between our advanced posts and their nearest supports at Sooee, Sunree and Goranaree. To reach the Deyra valley, there are only two ways of even tolerable approach from the south for horsemen, viz., by the River Pass at Doodza Khoostuck, or over the Zeen from Gundava by Mund. From Kutchee there are two other means of reaching the valley, one from Phoolajee by the Tejwagh and the "Suggaree-ke-Ganta," a very difficult pass, quite impracticable for horsemen if defended by only a few men, the road for three miles being only the bed of a water-course, wide enough for but four horsemen abreast, with perpendicular cliffs on either side several hundred feet high; clearing this, there is immediately a most awkward and steep ascent; afterwards the road is fair enough. The other entrance is by the Ghoree river, a little to the north of Phoolajee. This turns and avoids the "Suggaree-ke-Ganta," but has the Murree country on the left flank. Being in the Deyra valley, then we do not prevent the Boogtees and Murrees from plundering in Sind one bit better than we do from our present position. But we take our troops into worse ground for using successfully such as are at our disposal, and we have to afford protection to a wild tribe, which begins to find itself unable to hold its own against its neighbours, the Murrees.

5. 3rd—With regard to the civilizing process. This undoubtedly is a matter of very great importance, but I question much whether the means proposed will have the desired effect. The extent of arable land at Sungseela and Deyra is not such as to be sufficient for this purpose. Moreover the land is held by the Boogtees under the Khan of Khelat, and all claims in respect to it and its division would have to be settled through his Highness' officers. This would be a delicate matter to manage unless we took the arrangement into our own hands, which I gather is in no way intended by Government. As an instance of the diversity of rights likely to be brought forward, I may mention that the Dhoombkees of Lehree lay claim to a share in the produce of the lands at Sungseela. The Murrow plain might be brought under cultivation, but to render the produce secure from the Murrees, a post would be necessary at Keychee-ke-Ghuree, to which there is a very fair road direct from Kahun, the one which was generally used by the Murrees in passing towards the Punjab territory. But all these arrangements, supposing them to be perfected, merely provide for the civilizing process as regards the Boogtees. The Murrees are still left to their own devices, and to provide for the cultivation of their lands at Kahun, Moondahee, &c. This they can do now if they choose, for no attempts have ever been made to molest them, either by Boogtees or others. But the life of a border rider, with all its attractions of apparent freedom and perilous adventure, has more charms for them, and until all means of engaging therein are completely closed to them, they will preserve their old habits and leave chance cultivation as now to the non-combatants of the tribe. The presence of our troops protecting and favouring the Boogtees, will excite the jealousy and discontent of the Murrees, will be a standing war menace without helping to overawe them, and if it have any effect on them, will, instead of civilizing, cause them to concentrate their power all the more to harass the trade of Central Asia, by making raids on the Kafilahs as they pass through the Bolan and Kutchee, a part of the country which they already among themselves describe as their "Shikargah" or hunting ground. Unless therefore the Murree country is occupied, as well as the Boogtee, the civilizing process will be only half completed, while the main object of protecting the trade will be rendered more distant.

6. The 4th point refers to the proposed post at Phoolajee. Phoolajee is 50 miles nearly due north of Jacobabad. A detachment here would be in the same line nearly as those at Sungseela and Deyra, but it would be of little use to co-operate with the former, the nearest to it, the interval between consisting mainly of ravines, rocks and hills, where a few determined footmen might defy the best cavalry in the world. If it is intended to prevent the Murrees leaving the hills to attack Kafilahs passing down from Dadur, it would be so far from the part of the country where these attacks are usually made, as to be quite useless. The locality called their "Shikargah" by the Murrees, is the low range of hills near Mittree, known in former years to our army as the "Chota Bolan," and from that to Hajee-ke-Shehr, and their line of approach almost always by Mull. To enable the Phoolajee post to act effectively against a body of plunderers that were known to have left the hills, or of whose attack on a Kafilah in the above locality intelligence had been received, it would have to proceed with all speed to Mull, a distance of 39 miles, to find the enemy had regained the hills, for the Murrees knowing the detachment was at Phoolajee would take care not to risk being intercepted. In your letter I observe you propose leaving the protection of the Mittree and Hajee-ke-Shehr line of road to the Khelat authorities. This might equally be done without our having a post at Phoolajee. I believe arrangements have been made this season by his Highness the Khan for this purpose, and levies placed by his officers at Lehree, Mull, and Mittree. This is as it should be, and if the scheme is properly carried out by the Khelat authorities, it will ensure all that is required.

7. The 5th point is, can the new posts be given from the existing force now on the frontier? You state in your letter, and in this opinion I quite concur, that it would not be advisable to withdraw the posts of Kusmore, Sooee, Toj, Sunree, and Goranaree, the new posts then will be so much additional duty imposed on the force, and will certainly require two squadrons or two-thirds of a regiment of cavalry. Knowing as I well do that the reductions in 1862 brought the frontier force to as low a mark as it was possible, and the necessity of regular reliefs in such duty as it has to carry out, I question the possibility of the arrangement being made, and shall be glad of a report from you on this point particularly.

8. The 6th point is a very important one, and one which has, I think, escaped due attention. It has always been, and naturally must ever be, as long as the Khan of Khelat remains a free and independent sovereign, our great object to increase his influence, and strengthen his power within his country as much as we can. To relieve him of constant complaints by us regarding lawless acts committed by certain refractory portions of his subjects would doubtless be in some respect satisfactory; but when that end is only to be gained by so public an acknowledgment of his weakness, one so likely to have the worst effect on the remainder of his subjects, his wisdom in accepting such relief would be most questionable, and for us to recommend it, would be abandoning the policy we know to be right and most sound, the whole subject of the protection of our western frontier being taken into consideration. As long as the Khanate of Khelat is in the hands of one person, and that one as at present only desirous to act in accordance with the wishes of the British Government, we need feel no concern about the safety of our frontier from north to south. But once let his powers be destroyed, and the country fall into the hands of a number of petty chieftains with little control over their followers, then the principle which is proposed for the Boogtee country will have to be carried out the whole way down to the sea.

9. In place then of supporting the advance now under discussion, and which I certainly consider would be a false move, I should be more disposed to urge earnestly on the Government of India the advisability of closely scrutinising the position of the kingdom of Khelat, as it affects us now, and as it will far more a few years hence; and whether in place of assuming to ourselves a portion of the prerogatives of the Khan, we could not more easily, and at a smaller expenditure, so improve his position as to render all direct interference on our part unnecessary, and ensure our territory remaining thoroughly and completely undisturbed.

10. Presuming it to be allowed that the northern frontier of Sind is sufficiently protected by the present line of outposts (and I gather that is not questioned for a moment,) the sole point left for consideration of the Sind authorities is the safety of the merchants passing through the Khan of Khelat's territory from Quetta to Sind. Your proposals involve that the Khan of Khelat should be called upon to provide posts to protect the Kafilahs along the line where they are supposed to be liable to attack by the hill tribes, viz. from Dadur to Phoolajee. Such is all that in reality is required, and our advance to Deyrah would not relieve him from this part of the programme. Most willingly would the Khan undertake this and more, were it not that the impoverished state of his finances renders it impossible for him to do so for a continuance, or in such an effectual manner as to make a successful result certain. What is needed then is that sufficient funds should be at his disposal to enable him to devote them solely to this purpose. Were these granted he would not only place posts at the points mentioned, but he would take portions of the Murree and Boogtee tribes into his pay again, as a bond for their good behaviour, and would place officials on behalf of his own Government at Deyrah, Kahun, and Moondahee, to see that the conduct of the tribes was such as he demanded.

11. The annual cost of this would not amount to more than 50 or 60,000 rupees. It would be a most valuable means of supporting and improving the Khan's authority. It would effectually give safety to merchants passing through the country, and above all, it would not involve us in any new complications, or entail on us any new responsibilities. Further, it would help materially towards the civilisation of the Murrees and Boogtees. The temptation of the hitherto almost unprotected "Shikargah" being taken from the former, and the retention in service of levies from their tribe being dependent on their good behaviour, they would, from a sense of self-interest, gradually give up their old habits and look about for other means of obtaining a livelihood. The Boogtees being restrained by the same powerful bond would try to live at peace with their neighbours; and the presence of the Khan's officers among these tribes would allow of their submitting their grievances to be settled for them instead of resorting to the old plan of adjustment by hostilities. These tribes, with all their wildness and tetchy nature, have a great respect for authority and especially for that of their own rulers. They would themselves prefer and feel more honoured by regular payment through their own Government than through any other.

12. If at the same time that this plan was introduced, increased means* of irrigating the plain between the Sind frontier, the hills, and Kutchee were given, opportunity of peaceful livelihood by cultivation would be afforded to all members of the hill tribes, who had a desire that way, and a healthy civilizing process would be initiated, which could not fail to bear good fruit.

NOTE.—26th January 1870.
* General Jacob's proposed Desert Canal would provide this perfectly.—W. L. M.

13. In the 4th paragraph of your letter you allude to the old trade route from Hurrund to Khelat. This is not a very important one I think, though it did once hold a name a hundred and odd years ago, when the then Khan of Khelat, the great Nusseer Khan, had possession of Hurrund and Dajul, and his sway was undisputed and dreaded throughout the Murree and Boogtee hills. Let the Khan's power be so again established, and this trade line would reopen, if required.

14. The above remarks all refer to the question under review simply as it affects the Sind border. I will now discuss it as it affects the neighbouring frontier of the Punjab. Under the arrangements I propose, the Murrees and Boogtees would be equally bound down to respect the British territory and harmless traders on that side as much as on the side of Sind, and for that purpose the arrangement with them entered into by Captain Sandeman, and which has hitherto answered so well, might be continued, with this difference only that, as it is undoubtedly advisable that all transactions with the subjects of the Khan of Khelat should only be carried on by one responsible person, and that one, the officer who has charge of the political relations with the Khan, viz. the Political Superintendent on the frontier of Sind, it would be best that all payments to the hill tribes, and all references regarding them, should be made through the Political Superintendent. In the full discussion of all these matters which I fortunately had with Captain Sandeman a few days ago at Hydrabad, and from a letter since received from him, it appears to me that he himself would advocate this course. Such being the case, the matter could easily be arranged between you.

15. With regard to placing a post in the Shum plain, to which Captain Sandeman attaches great importance, I see no reason why it should not be done to strengthen that frontier line. The objections against the Deyrah plan do not exist in this case. From what Captain Sandeman said, I understood that the proposed post would be only about 12, at the furthest 15 miles, in advance of the existing frontier posts, close therefore to its supports, and that there was easy intercommunication between these points, the road being good and through no difficult pass. Advancing so far would take in no new tribe or involve the Punjab troops in any way with the hill people. It would give additional power of interception of any bodies breaking the peace, and so reduce the temptation to them to do so. It would be in fact merely establishing on the Punjab side a similar post to the Sind one at Sooee. It could also be placed there without it being necessary to have posts from Sind at Deyrah and Sungseela.

16. The occupation of Barkhan (Lugharee) is a question which I do not feel competent to discuss, having only a very general knowledge of that part of the country. Captain Sandeman urges it, because it will enable the authorities at Dera Ghazee Khan to include a minor branch of the Lugharee tribe, which is now outside our boundary and which occasionally gives trouble from being beyond direct control. Captain Sandeman is the best judge of the necessity of this part of the plan, as also of how far it would involve us with other tribes. The country is beyond the limits of Khelat territory, and this point may be left to his greater experience of those parts for elaboration, while his opinion will deservedly have greatest weight.

17. In conclusion, I have only to add that, while clearly of opinion that the occupation of the advanced line from Sind would be a grave mistake, I am strongly in favour of the trip through the hills being carried out, as desired by the Supreme Government. By means of it the officers of both lines of frontier will be brought together and become personally acquainted, to the advantage of future cordial co-operation, and they will gain useful knowledge of the country and its inhabitants; at the same time the latter will see that we can move about among their hills, and they will learn a useful lesson in watching the movements of disciplined troops, and the power that accompanies orderly procedure.

18. With reference to the last paragraph of your letter, I regret that I am unable to sanction the expenditure of the sum you apply for, as I have no funds left at my disposal. This, however, is not of so much consequence. as taking into consideration the circumstances under which you are going, and your having last January, on your first introduction to the Murree and Boogtee chiefs, liberally treated them with presents, it will be unnecessary to do so again, and as any chiefs who accompany you will be moving through their own country, there will be no necessity for your causing them and their followers to be fed.

Enclosure 4 in No. 3.

From Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Frontier, Upper Sind, to the Commissioner in Sind,—(No. 1725, dated 6th December 1869).

In connexion with the orders of his Excellency the Viceroy in Council conveyed in the Government of India letter No. 879, dated 25th June last, and in continuation of my report as per margin, I have been led to examine closely the records of this Office, in order that before the British Government enters upon any fresh arrangements with the Murrees or other Khelat subjects, it may have before it an historical outline of the principal events which have occurred from the commencement of the present Khan's reign to this time.

No. 1579, dated 8th November 1869.

2. It is solely from a deep sense of the national importance of the questions under discussion that I would thus subject the occurrences of the past year in the Khelat State to the test of previous history, reading them in the light which that history throws upon them as continuous events inseparable from it.

3. The opinions expressed are offered with the greatest deference, in a spirit of fair inquiry. I find that there is nothing new in the generality of them, for though formed from personal observation, and independently of the records quoted from 1858 to 1863–64, which I have only lately seen, they coincide with those expressed in the Commissioner's (Mr. Frere's) letter No. 232, dated 31st May 1858, and the reply of Lord Elphinstone's Government, No. 2265 of 1858, dated 14th June.

Mr. Frere's report of 19th February 1858 alone excepted.

4. As Political Superintendent on this frontier I both have carried out, and will continue to give effect to whatever orders may be issued. I, however, solicit that the evidence of the records now produced may receive consideration.

Enclosure 5 in No. 3.

Abridged Narrative of Events.

Narrative, November 1869.

It being absolutely necessary in connexion with the revision of our arrangements with the Murrees and other tribes on the frontier to review the exact state of our relations with the Khan, his chiefs, and people—

The following abridged narrative of those relations from the commencement of the reign of Khodadad Khan to the present time is drawn up for the information of Government, in order that the causes of the distracted state of the country may be traced with the view to their being remedied.

2. Our original object and intention in entering upon the treaty of the 14th May 1854 will be briefly stated, in order that an opinion may be arrived at as to how far those objects have been realized, or are likely to be so under a continuance of the internal disorders which convulse Beloochistan throughout from the Bolan to the Mekran coast.

3. Public documents only will be quoted, so that if fuller information be required upon any point separately, it may be gathered from perusing the original of any of them.

4. When Brigadier General Jacob offered the treaty of May 1854 for the acceptance of the late Khan of Khelat, he endeavoured amongst other matters to impress the following upon the mind of the Khan :—

Extract from General Jacob's Heads of Conference with the Khan.

"From the first day of my receiving charge of the frontier of Sind, I have exerted every effort in my power to bring about the establishment of order and good government in your Highness' neighbouring dominions. But I laboured to ittle or no purpose, because I was always secretly thwarted by your Highness' officers." * *

Secret hostility of Khelat officials.

"My sole object and that of my Government in this business is that there may be a strong and friendly Government established throughout the dominions of your Highness. To bring this about it is necessary that the officers of your Highness should be faithful, active, and united." * * *

"Justice should be strictly administered to all men. Cultivators and traders should be encouraged and protected, roads made safe and easy, and no private transit or such like exaction should be allowed to either great or small. All this cannot be accomplished without exertion, but if your Highness attend to this advice and act on it, the State of Khelat will, under your Highness' rule, by God's blessing, become rich, powerful, respected; but without some such arrangement and efforts from within, no amount of external assistance alone will make it really strong and flourishing * * Such measures only can lead to the happiness and prosperity of your Highness, your nobles, and your people."

About two years after this Major (now Sir Henry) Green was appointed Political Agent at Khelat, and he commences his report, quoted in the margin, by saying that he formed a very high opinion of his Highness Meer Nusseer Khan, but not of his advisers, one being a merchant by name Faiz Ahmed, and the other a bunyah named Gungaram.

Major Henry Green's report, dated 4th December 1858.

He first joined him in December 1856, but in January 1857 had to leave to join the Persian Expeditionary Force, and did not return to his Khelat appointment until November 1857.

In those few months the old Khanazad Darogah, Gool Mahomed, the bitter enemy of the British Government, being unable to gain over Nusseer Khan to his traitorous designs, conspired with the Beebee Cudjiss, the mother of the present Khan, a woman of low birth and infamous character, to murder his half-brother Nusseer, on the understanding that he (the Darogah) should be confidential adviser of his successor Khodadad.

Sir Henry Green's report of 4th December 1858.

In May 1857 the Meer Nusseer Khan was travelling from Gundava to Khelat; and about the middle of the Moolla Pass was seized with an attack of the malady from which he suffered, viz., stone in the bladder. He was, however, improving in health, and marched on to Angera, where he received a packet of letters from the Darogah Gool Mahomed by the hand of a confidential servant of the Darogah's, a barber by trade, who also brought some medicine for his Highness. This barber administered some of the medicine, when alone with the Khan, after which he left.

Conduct of Khelat Khanazads simultaneously with the outbreak of the mutinies.

Within a very short space of time, however, the poor Khan called in some of his attendants and ordered them to secure the barber, as he felt sure that he had been poisoned. Soon after the Khan expired in great agony, declaring that his intestines were on fire.

Murder of Meer Nusseer Khan.
Sir Henry Green's report of 4th December 1858.

In course of time the chiefs of Beloochistan assembled, and they elected his heir apparent, a youth of 16, of "weak intellect," to succeed his murdered half brother.

Khodadad Khan, the present ruler, ascends the throne.

Attached to the household of the Khans of Khelat are Khanazads or household slaves. The Khan has power of life or death over them. They hold the most confidential and important offices about his person, these offices being hereditary. That of Wuzzeer, however, is not so. Thus it happened that the Darogah Gool Mahomed and his * two sons, Mahomed and Atta Mahomed: Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, the present Wuzzeer, and his two brothers, Taj Mahomed and Goolam Jan; also Abdool Azzeez, Naib of Moostung, being all Khanazads, seized the principal posts about the young Khan's person. The Darogah Gool Mahomed's first object was to sow distrust between the young Khan and his chiefs, who were then encamped outside the walls of the city, and also to set them against each other by means of bribery, &c. This was gradually accomplished, and when the Darogah "considered that everything was ready for a coup d'état, he suddenly and without warning, at daybreak on the morning of the 17th September 1857, sent the Khan's artillery and a body of 400 regular infantry, in the pay of the late Khan, out of the fort, and caused them immediately to open fire on the camp of the chiefs. The chiefs were totally unprepared, and having but few of their retainers with them, could offer but little resistance, and were driven from the valley with loss!

Iniquitous designs of the Khanazads.

* These men still hold office in Khelat.

September 17th, 1857. Colonel Sir Henry Green shows how the chiefs of Beloochistan, including the Jam of Beyla, became rebels.

Sir Henry Green, 4th December 1858.

The Khan's mercenary troops.

"Those who happened at the time to be on the side of the Khan felt themselves bound to remain so. Thus father and son became opposed to each other. The Darogah thus repeated the very same act which he had performed upwards of 40 years before in the days of Mehrab Khan.

"The young Khan (Khodadad) was informed that these men were plotting to dethrone him, and the Chiefs, enraged at their treatment, assembled with their retainers at Sorab, about 40 miles south of Khelat, to the number of 5,000 or 6,000 men; but not finding provisions there, they returned to Khozdar, one of the Khan's granaries, which they plundered, and where they levied taxes on the bunyahs and shopkeepers. They were here also joined by Azaad Khan of Kharan."

It was at this crisis that, on the request of the Vakeel of the Khan residing at Jacobabad, Lieutenant Macauley (now Major) was despatched by Major (now Sir William) Merewether to Khelat.

On his arrival at the top of the Moolla Pass he was met by a messenger of the rebel chiefs, forwarding a petition to the British Government. This messenger Lieutenant Macauley "sent back with an "answer that he would neither receive letters from, nor hold communication with, men in arms against "their King, and if they wished him to receive their petition, it must come through the Khan. "Lieutenant Macauley then proceeded to Khelat and joined the Khan, the rebel chiefs and their "retainers dispersing."

Affairs were at this stage when I joined his Highness in November 1857. I cannot say that I formed a high opinion of his Highness. I had much conversation with Lieutenant Macauley, and requested his Highness to introduce me to the rebel chiefs. Lieutenant Macauley appears to think that they had no alternative but to have acted as they had done, that they were most respectful, and pointed out that none of their lives would be safe, nor could the country ever be quiet, if the young Khan were to retain such advisers as Gool Mahomed and Gungaram.

The chiefs not held to be rebels by British officers on the spot.

Sir Henry Green now turned his attention to the best mode of ridding the Khan of the murderer Gool Mahomed, and Gungaram, as his chief advisers, and it was ultimately arranged that the Khan should proceed to meet the Commissioner, Mr. Frere, who at this time (December 1857) was at Jacobabad.

Sir Henry Green's Report of 4th December 1858.

Paragraphs 40 to 53 of Mr. (now Sir Bartle) Frere's letter to the Bombay Government, No. 64 of 1858, dated 19th February, gives a complete account of all that took place at Jacobabad on that occasion.

The Commissioner, Mr. Frere's report to Government, February 1858.

Notwithstanding the arrangements then made, viz., the exclusion of Darogah Gool Mahomed and Gungaram, and the selection of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed for the post of Wuzzeer which he now holds, Sir Henry Green after his return to the Khan's camp at Gundava, says, "soon after my return, I perceived that the former evil "influence was at work again, and that little advice of mine was "attended to, and that the Khan had taken a personal dislike to "Wullee Mahomed."

February 1858.

Wullee Mahomed was not installed regularly for many months.

By the 27th April (1858) the heat at Gundava became very great, and a move to Khelat was commenced by the Khan, the Political Agent marching to Chutter. That evening Sirdar Taj Mahomed, the chief of Jalawan, who was in rebellion against the Khan for the reason before stated, called upon Sir Henry, and after some conversation said, "if order be not restored in this country, and the rights of the chiefs of Beloochistan "attended to, harm will come to you. I asked if he dared to threaten me, a servant of the British "Government, and told him that he had better lower his tone and leave my tent before harm came "to himself. He immediately apologised, saying he was a rough mountaineer, and meant nothing "wrong."

The Chief Sirdar of Beloochistan.

Sir Henry then proceeded towards Khelat, and the Khan joined him at Sorab on the 13th May. His Highness begged, through Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, that he might be helped in his difficulties, and Sir Henry then addressed Sirdars Taj Mahomed and Moolla Mahomed, reminding them that Khodadad Khan was their legitimate Sovereign, and advising them to tender their allegiance and be true to him.

The Sirdars replied that, notwithstanding their wrongs and the treacherous treatment they had received in the previous September, they would follow Sir Henry's advice, and at once manifested their loyalty by proceeding against some refractory chiefs in Mekran, whom they punished and brought to Khelat to be disposed of by the Khan's Government.

Notwithstanding this obedient conduct on their part, as desired by the Political Agent, the Khanazad Darogah Gool Mahomed, who had re-asserted his influence over the young Khan, succeeded in sowing the seeds of discord between him and his chiefs.

On this subject, Sir Henry says, "It was clear to me that I stood on most treacherous ground; that "while a pretender to the throne was close to the capital, and also that the Khan was disliked by his "chiefs on account of Gool Mahomed, that my proceedings would be most closely and zealously "watched by the Sirdars, the real strength of the country, and that I must be most careful neither to "do injustice to them, by siding with the Khan, nor to him, by taking part with the chiefs against "him."

Associated with Gool Mahomed was a man by name Shere Khan, holding the position of commandant of the Khan's infantry regiment, "a Punjab Mussulman by birth, and who formerly served in "the 4th Punjab Infantry, from which he was dismissed in disgrace, and then proceeded to Candahar,

The character of Shere Khan, the leader of the mercenary troops.

"taking service there, and again dismissed. He then came into "the service of late Nusseer Khan, who kept him at his distance "in his proper position. His men were composed of about 400 scoundrels of sorts, deserters from our "Belooch regiments, Pathans and Affghans, with men from all parts of Central Asia. The Darogah "saw that these men were regularly paid and cared for, they were permitted uncontrolled license, and "were a scourge to the country around.

"These men were ready to commit any crime, and, if necessary, had merely to proceed across the frontier to Affghanistan to escape the consequences. The Darogah's two sons, Atta Mahomed and Mahomed Ali, of course supported their father.

The men are now in power at Khelat.

"Reports now began to spread of something desperate being about to be undertaken by the Darogah. I was warned to be careful. I could see that my men were uneasy. I observed that when I went up to the citadel to visit the Khan, that if I were five minutes later than usual in returning, the men of my escort were assembled in clusters about my tent, and that as soon as they saw me returning they dispersed.

"The Darogah had some time before sent me a plate of apricots, but I was advised not to touch them, and did not. Shere Khan, the commandant of the Khan's Pathan Infantry, I had desired never to be allowed to enter my camp.

"Some few days afterwards I was informed that Shere Khan, the commandant of infantry, had been seen coming at midnight to the lines of my escort for the purpose, as I ascertained, of trying to 'tamper with the men of the Sind Horse." * * * * *

"The chiefs of Beloochistan were now within a couple of marches (on their return from Mekran referred to above), and I strongly advised the Khan now that they had proved their fidelity in his service beyond a doubt, to receive them worthily, to reward them, and to forget that they had ever been in rebellion against him.

"On their arrival I complimented them on their fidelity to the Khan, and before him presented the principal chiefs with slight presents to show my appreciation of their services. This took place with the sanction of, and in presence of, the Khan.

Treatment of the chiefs by the Political Agent.

"I had hoped that he would follow my example, but in this I regret to say I was disappointed. The chiefs, however, behaved very well; they thanked me for what I was trying to do for them, &c., &c.

The treatment by the Khan.

"Generally from the chiefs of Beloochistan I have received the greatest assistance; in fact had it not been so, it would have been impossible to have kept the country quiet. The chiefs are a wild not-headed race, but I found that patiently reasoning with them had its full effect."

In addition to the above facts, which show the present ruler of Khelat and his noble chiefs in their true colours respectively, the following extract from Mr. Frere's report to Government, as per margin, is prophetic of all that has since occurred up to the present time:—

No. 217 of 1858, 21st May.

"With regard to the Khan's character, I fear there can be little doubt that it is unpromising in the extreme. Not that he is without some good traits, probably in an inferior position as the petty chief of half a dozen villages he might pass through life unnoticed and unblamed, but even Major Green, who would gladly have taken the most favourable views of his character, is drawn to the conclusion that he is mean and low-minded, wanting in courage and openness, and totally destitute of that frankness and spirit which are the first requisites in the ruler of so many half-wild tribes, and which would, if he possessed them, atone for a multitude of grave faults.

"I would not have reiterated my opinion on this subject, were it not necessary to explain one of the great difficulties of Major Green's position, and the hopelessness of our getting from his Highness, in return for all that we do for him, any but negative results."

The remainder of this paragraph is most important and sound.—W. L. M.

In 1858 Sir Henry Green described his policy as follows:—"During the time I have been in the "country, my policy has been to distinctly side with neither party, "but to faithfully and scrupulously act for what I considered the "good of the whole. To allow myself to be biassed by no party feeling, or to enter into or acknowledge any intrigue."

No. 712 of 1858, dated 29th December.

Again, at the end of May, Mr. Frere wrote, "My own impression is that our first object should be "to set ourselves right with the chiefs of Beloochistan, and let "them see that it is no part of our wish or policy to support a bad "or deservedly unpopular ruler." * * * * *

H. B. Frere, Esq., to Government, No. 232 of 31st May 1858.

"I need not remark that when left to themselves they have a very summary way of correcting mis-government."

" But my hope of his Highness voluntarily following the good advice given him by Major Green has daily diminished, and though it is even less practicable now than it was six months ago to withdraw our influence which alone preserves some kind of order, and even more impolitic to leave the coast clear for Azaad Khan and his Persian allies, I am convinced that our first care ought to be to obtain some assurance before we further support the Khan, that his future Government shall be such as to give reasonable satisfaction to his chiefs and subjects."

After proposing to assemble the chiefs, Mr. Frere would point out to all in his Highness' presence, " That we have supported his Highness as the lawful heir to the throne, deliberately recognised as " such at his accession by all the great chiefs, and that our only object in all we have done has been " the peace and good government of Beloochistan; that we are prepared further to support his " Highness if we have only reasonable ground for hoping that he will justify our support by governing " well, according to Belooch customs; and I would let the Khan and his chiefs clearly understand " that we will not again be deluded by promises of reformation, to be evaded as soon as the crisis has " passed."

No. 2,265 of 14th January 1859.

Lord Elphinstone's Government replied to the above letter in paragraph 3, &c., as follows:—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is of opinion, and he believes that it is in accordance with that of the Government of India, and of the home authorities, that we should interfere as little as possible " in the concerns of our Belooch " and Affghan neighbours, and that we are more likely to acquire the influence over them which we " wish to possess, if we leave them to settle their domestic affairs to their own liking."

(4.) " In the present case the Right Hon. the Governor in Council fears that we may be going " further than we ought in supporting a ruler who does not appear to possess the respect of his " subjects, and I am desired to state that his Lordship in Council fully agrees with the remark of your " letter of the 31st May, that our first object should be to set ourselves right with the chiefs of " Beloochistan, and let them see that it is no part of our work or policy to support a bad or deservedly " unpopular ruler."

(9.) " If Khodadad Khan is the worthless man that he is represented, the Right Honourable the " Governor in Council considers that the sooner we leave him to his fate, the better, but I am desired to " request that you will have the goodness to instruct Major Green to make a last effort to rouse him to " a sense of his duty, and if this fails, that you will instruct Major Green to return to Jacobabad. The " Right Honourable the Governor in Council cannot think that we should be justified, even in the event of " the Khan's promising reformation, in authorising Major Green to take any measures which seem to him " necessary to defend Khelat, and to defeat the designs of the rebels. His Lordship in Council considers " that this would be in fact identifying ourselves with the cause of Khodadad Khan, and this Government, " I am desired to state, is not prepared to recommend such a measure to the Government of India."

(Part of para. 11.) " The Right Honourable the Governor in Council considers that unless Major " Green can succeed in the very unpromising task of bringing the young Khan to a sense of his duty, " and of rallying the great body of his chiefs around him, the sooner Major Green leaves him the better."

Report for 1859-60, No. 6, dated, 14th June 1860.

In March 1859 Sir Henry Green proceeded with the Khan on his expedition into the Murree Hills, and in April again proceeded viâ the Bolan Pass to Quetta and Moostung, at which last place he arrived at the middle of July 1859.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed.

" During my stay at Kanar I had several Interviews with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, who is the principal Chief of Beloochistan, and a most intelligent young man. He quite agreed with me as to the necessity for the Khan's going to Mekran, stating that unless he did so, the whole of that country would fall into the hands of his enemies,"

The report then goes on to show that, owing to the influence of a Kandahar Vukeel, and some of those by whom the Khan was surrounded, the project of going to Mekran was thwarted, as they " from " selfish and interested motives were greatly opposed to British influence being exerted over the Khan.

" Nothing therefore was done until the winter had set in, when his Highness informed me that the whole of his chiefs had refused either to accompany him, or furnish their contingents, and begged me to assist him.

" Sir Henry Green explained to Sirdar Taj Mahomed, the chief of Jalawan, what was required, and he readily offered every assistance; at the same time explaining that from the Khan's conduct to the chiefs and people, since his receiving the Khanate, he could expect no hope for better assistance from them." Both Sirdar Taj Mahomed and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed obeyed Sir H. Green's summons, and under their help the expedition was carried out.

(Para. 35.) " On our return to Khelat, I seriously pointed out to his Highness the absolute necessity of his earnestly turning his attention to the affairs of his country, and that he must no longer look to me for assistance beyond advice. I only wish I could hold out hopes that he would rule his country as it ought to be ruled."

The following is an extract from the letter which Sir H. Green wrote to his Highness on this occasion:—

Khelat, 6th April 1860.

After Compliments,—In the year 1854, the late General Jacob, in the name of the British Government, made a Treaty with your brother, by which he was to receive for the exemption of certain transit dues, and for securing the safety of the roads and merchants travelling through your dominions to the British frontier, the yearly sum of Rs. 50,000. When I arrived in your country, I soon perceived that this sum of money was the cause of much discontent amongst your chiefs, who believed that they had a right to a certain share of it. After your return from the Murree campaign, I read the Treaty to you and the principal chiefs, and pointed out that this money was solely for your use, and that they had no claim to any part of it. I however wrote to the British Government to place another Rs. 50,000 at my disposal. This was done, and I had hoped that if I also placed the sum at your disposal, you would see the necessity of being generous towards your chiefs, and to come to some satisfactory arrangement with them, without the necessity of my bringing the matter to your notice. You are in the position of a father to a family, and as you prosper and grow rich, so your family hope to share a portion of your riches ; but in this respect you appear to think differently, and that however rich you may become, your people must remain poor and hungry. I have pointed out to you this state of your country. I will now state what steps I consider necessary to remedy the present evils. You are aware that it has been the custom for ages in your country for a register to be kept, in which the name, position, and wages of each chief is distinctly laid down. This book, with many others, was destroyed when Khelat was taken by a British force. I now propose that another should be written out, so that each chief may know the exact position and account of wages, and to assist you in carrying this into effect, I am prepared to place at your disposal from the extra Rs. 50,000 allowed by my Government whatever sum may be deemed requisite for the purpose. This I hope will put an end to the bickering and trouble caused by your chiefs in making constant claims for wages. Whatever remains I will either present to you or dispose as I consider best for your welfare and that of your country. The Rs. 50,000 which you receive by Treaty, you will continue to receive, provided you carry into effect the articles of that Treaty, the substance of which are that the roads between Shawl and the British frontier, both viâ the Bolan and Khelat, be kept clear and safe for traffic, and that only the taxes laid down in that Treaty be allowed to be exacted from merchants.

In arranging the wages for your chiefs, I would recommend the following stipulation being agreed to:—

1st.—That any chief misconducting himself should, after proper inquiry, forfeit the amount of his wages and be otherwise punished as may be deemed suited to his crime.

2nd.—That on their services being required, the wages of those not attending should be forfeited for the year and divided amongst those who do. I would further recommend that you firmly establish Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed as your Wuzzeer, making him the usual present on the occasion; place the collection of your revenues in his hands, and in every way assist him in supporting your authority.

3rd.—That you daily, or not less than three times during the week, sit in open Durbar for the purpose of listening to, and settling, disputes amongst your subjects and dispensing justice.

If you think fit to keep up a small force of regular sepoys as a guard of honor to enforce your orders I see no objection, always bearing in mind that a force of this kind requires the strictest discipline, otherwise it merely becomes a tool for oppression.

You should place over this force a respectable man, and not the disreputable person who has been dismissed in disgrace from the service of the British Government.

I would advise this force to consist of—

29	Native Commissioned, Non-Commissioned Rank and File of Artillery.
100	Cavalry.
267	Infantry.
Total 396

Should you consider the above arrangements for your benefit, I would advise that you at once proceed to carry them into effect. Should you consider otherwise it will then be unnecessary for me to solicit from the British Government the extra Rs. 50,000.

A British officer is not placed in my position merely for the purpose of protecting you against injury from your own subjects, caused by your own mis-government. The friendship of one individual is of little service to the British Government, but that of a contented and well-governed country on its frontier is of the utmost service. * * * *

(Signed) HENRY GREEN.

In March 1861, Major (now Sir William) Merewether wrote to the officer commanding in Sind, paragraph 9—"Having a friendly power steadily growing strong next to us, admits of this frontier "and Upper Sind being held by a weak brigade, instead of a division being required. If that power "become hostile to us, or unmanageable from internal dissensions, we should have to defend the "western frontier of Sind, not against a few hundred Belooch robbers as is sometimes supposed, but "against thousands of most hardy and determined enemies, viz., the whole Brahooee nation. And "again, when they by these quarrels and divisions had fallen to pieces, the Affghans would only too "readily take advantage of their weakness to possess themselves of their country."

In 1861 Sir Henry Green went on leave, and Captain Dickinson replaced him on the 21st of May that year ; the following are extracts from Captain Dickinson's report dated 23rd January 1862:—

"On the 18th June, having made the third march within the Moolla Pass, I received intelligence that Sirdar Taj Mahommed Zehree, the Chief of Jalawan, had assembled his tribe and was intending to plunder the country.

"The character of this chieftain, the second in rank in Beloochistan, had been described to me by Major Green as hasty, headstrong, and inclined to intrigue ; he was one of the Sirdars who rebelled against the Khan shortly after his accession, and has never since been on very good terms with the ruler, but the Khan having demanded his daughter in marriage, it was hoped that by means of this alliance a more happy feeling might be induced. This expectation was however defeated by the act of his Highness, who disregarding his betrothal immediately after his return to the hills, and during the short period that he was separated from the influence of the Political Agent, married the widow of his brother, the late Nusseer Khan, who, although the sister, is inimical to the Jalawan Sirdar.

"This act on the part his of Highness was regarded by the Brahooee tribes as dishonourable and insulting, and several of the chiefs were prepared to take up the quarrel for their compeer ; and even the Khan's personal adherents admitted that their master had by such an act given deep reason for resentment.

"On the 20th June I received a letter from the Khan's brother-in-law, Sirdar Syud Khan informing me that the Jalawan chief was in revolt, and offering to assist me with the force at his disposal. I declined his offer, and requested that such might not be repeated, as I considered it likely to aggravate a matter already sufficiently serious.

Attempt to embroil us with the chiefs.

"On the 21st a messenger from Taj Mahomed arrived in my camp bearing apologies for his master for not personally meeting me, which he was unable to do in consequence of the assembly of the tribes.

"On the following day I received a letter from the Sirdar, a translation of which is appended.

"On arrival at Khelat on the 2nd July, I visited his Highness the Khan and he returned the ceremony on the following day. On the latter occasion I caused Sirdar Taj Mahomed's letter to be read to him. He candidly acknowledged that he had deeply injured the Sirdar, and said that his fate caused him to do so, and with the view of avoiding discussion, he constantly harped on the injury which he considered himself to have received in some of his grain having been plundered by the Sirdar's followers. Ultimately his Highness agreed to concur in any measure I might propose, after consultation with the Wuzzeer and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed the chief of Sarawan.

"Subsequent inquiry convinced me that his Highness' complaints regarding the injury done his granaries by the Sirdar's followers were greatly and designedly exaggerated.

"On the 5th July I had an interview with the Wuzzeer and the Raisanee chief.

"The former is the Khan's best and most trustworthy servant; he said that he deeply deplored the rash step his master had taken.

"Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, the Sarawan Sirdar, also said that so deeply did he feel that his brother chief had been deeply injured, that he felt quite prepared to side with him. After much discussion it was determined that the chief, accompanied by the Akhoond and another officer, should proceed to the Jalawan Sirdar and try to adjust matters amicably.

"They did so; the assembly of the Zehree tribe was broken up, and Taj Mahomed returned to his village, where he has since quietly remained. It cannot however be disguised that a feeling of hatred still exists on the part of His Highness towards the Sirdar, and he openly professes vindictiveness to an extent perhaps incredible to one unacquainted with his character; and so lately as the day before yesterday he declared to me that, were it not for English restraint, he should immediately carry matters to extremity, and to quote his own words, 'by the assistance of God and the Prophet he would quietly exterminate 'an enemy whom he would trace even though they were to meet before 'the judgment seat of their Creator.'"

This was about six months after.

The threat was fulfilled afterwards.

"The Sirdar likewise has not forgotten the injury; his letters display a captious and querulous spirit, and so great is his resentment that, when his Highness on his march down to Kutchee in November last encamped for several days in the vicinity of Zubree, he could be induced by neither persuasion nor advice to pay his respects to the Khan, and now only remains quiet in deference to the Political Agent."

Report No. 60, dated 29th January 1863.

(5.) The relations which have existed between the Government of his Highness the Khan of Khelat and that of the British have been of the same cordial nature as heretofore, every effort has been made by him to meet the wishes in all subjects, and more particularly with regard to the electric telegraph line now in course of construction through his dominions on the coast of Mekran; at the same time I regret to be compelled to state that his relations with his chiefs still remain in an unsatisfactory state and open rebellion is with difficulty prevented by the presence of a British officer at his court, and the personal influence exerted by him over the chiefs and people. Much of the ill-feeling towards the Khan is doubtless caused by his capricious, unstable character, but his chiefs by the unreasonableness of their demands, and insolence of their conduct towards him, render any permanent settlement of their differences most difficult; his power over them is slight, and although their lands are held by feudal tenure, any attempt made by his Highness to enforce even the extradition of a culprit, leads to their banding together and defying his authority. The above has been for years the state of the country; and the position of the Political Agent at the Court of Khelat, situated beyond the British border among barren mountains, and surrounded by so many elements of discord, is a most difficult one; he stands between the Khan and his feudal chiefs, both parties look to him to listen to and redress their grievances, and he must keep a just equilibrium between the two parties, and to his personal influences gained by his reputation among those semi-barbarian tribes for courage, unscrupulous good faith, and justice, much of the tranquillity of this part of the British border depends. I can with pleasure, however, state that the individual character of an Englishman stands so high amongst these wild races, that the life and property of a single officer amongst them is safer than in the most civilized countries in Europe. Within the last few months an European merchant proceeded from our border with several camel loads of valuable silks across Kutchee and through the Gundava Pass to Khelat, he was totally without any guard, and merely held a letter from the political officer on the frontier to the Khan, and one or two chiefs, through whose country he would pass; he met throughout with the greatest civility and kindness, sold his merchandize, and returned through the whole length of Beloochistan to Kurrachee, at the time there was no political officer residing at Khelat.

Neutrality of the Agent.

Report No. 19, dated 4th January 1864.

(8.) My great object has been apparently to interfere as little as possible in the affairs of the Khelat State, and to leave every thing in the hands of the chiefs, at the same time using all my personal influence to guide them in a right course, and maintain peace. I felt and knew that to oppose the popular will at the commencement of the rebellion would have at once placed the British Government in an antagonistic position to the whole of the Belooch nation, I therefore temporarily withdrew the Political Agent from Khelat.

(9.) During the past month an emissary from the Candahar chief arrived at Khelat, and proposed to the present Khan support, on condition that he should make over the valley of Shawl (Quetta) and Mustoong, as well as the town of Dadur to the Affghan nation. This would have given them entire command of the Bolan Pass. The Brahooee chiefs at once refused their consent to such propositions, and the Affghan returned to Candahar.

(10.) It is with great satisfaction that I have to report the great assistance that I have met with from the principal and most influential chiefs in Beloochistan, as well as from Meer Khodadad Khan, the deposed prince. This young man has steadily refused all assistance from foreign powers, and on my pointing out to him that his attempting to maintain a hopeless position with a few followers would be liable to create disorder on the frontier border, he at once dismissed his retainers, and cheerfully accepted a place of residence close to the British frontier, and has never failed to assist me with any influence he may still retain to maintain peace. Shere Dil Khan, who was elected Khan, and who has since his election resided in the strong fortress of Khelat, but with whom I have as yet declined to hold communication, at once left his strong position on hearing that I had expressed a wish to see him.

The present Khan.

(11.) Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, the principal chief in the country, and by far the most intelligent and influential, has been of the greatest possible service, and from the time I entered Beloochistan as Political Agent in 1856, has never failed to render me the greatest assistance, and more particularly when rebellion was raging in our own provinces, and every inducement was held out by the disaffected to induce him and other chiefs to side against us.

Character of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. Eight years good service.

(12.) I am sanguine that within a short period a peaceable solution of the affairs of Beloochistan will be brought about.

Colonel Malcolm Green's report No. 1, dated 1st January 1864.

(2.) You are fully aware that almost from the date of the accession of his Highness Khodadad Khan to the throne of Khelat, constant quarrels and dissensions have taken place between himself and the chiefs of Beloochistan.

(3.) The cause of these quarrels may be traced in a great measure to the Khan himself who, relying on foreign support and the fidelity of a few so-called regular troops, had invariably treated the chiefs of the country with neglect, almost amounting to contempt, and on one occasion committed a very great insult on the family of the powerful Jalawan Sirdar, Taj Mahomed, who would have avenged it at the time, had not the influence of the English officer resident at Khelat prevented him; but the feeling of revenge has never left him, and to this I mainly attribute the disturbance which occurred at the commencement of the year 1863.

The present Khan and the origin of his quarrel with Taj Mahomed who went into rebellion.

(4.) I must here recall to your remembrance the incessant remonstrances of yourself, whilst Political Agent to his Highness, both verbally and in writing, as to his bearing towards the chiefs of the country, and your constant warnings of the catastrophe which, did he not change his conduct towards them, would ultimately lose him the throne.

(10.) At the end of April 1863, having recovered from his wound, Khodadad Khan moved through the Gundava Pass to Kozdar, and there collected a small force from amongst the Southern tribes, and in June advanced towards Khelat; was deserted by the greater portion of the army when within two marches of the place, and finally reached the Mustoong valley, where he was hospitably received and treated, with the few adherents still with him, by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, the principal chief of Beloochistan, under whose guidance the revolution was, and is still progressing.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, the benefactor of the present Khan in his adversity.

(11.) In November last Khodadad Khan, accompanied by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and a few adherents, arrived in Kutchee, and he has since been residing at Nusseerabad, a small village in his Highness' territories, distant about 10 miles from Jacobabad.

(16.) There now remains to show the state of the country at the present time. Although the most influential chiefs and tribes adhere steadily to Shere Dil Khan, there exist a small party who still acknowledge the deposed Prince Khodadad Khan as the proper ruler of the country; it has therefore been proposed by the chiefs, with a view of finally settling and securing the peace of the country, that there shall be a conference held, and that each chief shall give his vote and opinion, and should the majority show themselves in favour of Shere Dil Khan, he should be elected accordingly.

The rights of the chiefs as part of the confederacy.

(17.) I have now the honour to bring to your notice the loyalty towards the British Government which has characterised the proceedings of all parties in Beloochistan, from the time Khodadad Khan was wounded in March last to the instant of his arrival, under the care of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, at your camp at Shahpoor in November, and the deference shown to the wishes of Government in obtaining your concurrence previous to his taking up a position so near the British frontier. You are already aware that, although the VI. Article of the Treaty between the British Government and Khelat has been for some months suspended on the part of the former, no instance has occurred or attempt made to use this fact, as an excuse for departing from the original terms of the Treaty; and by increasing the transit dues on merchandise passing through the country to India, to raise the revenue to the same amount as it was previous to the treaty being entered into, and thus save the country from the state of bankruptcy to which the late disturbances have almost reduced it.

Vide letter in Political department, No. 2304, dated 22nd July 1863.

Government Resolution No. 867 A of 6th April 1865, para. 1.

RESOLUTION.—The continued maintenance of peace in Beloochistan during the past year, marked as it has been by important political changes, is a matter of congratulation. The Honourable the Governor in Council feels sure that this satisfactory result is mainly due to the constant vigilance and judicious tact exercised by the Political Agent at Khelat, in reconciling the conflicting interests of the Belooch chiefs, aided by the advice and experience of the Political Superintendent on the frontier.

Government approves of the Political Agent reconciling conflicting interests.

Report No. 30, dated 1*st January* 1866.

4. His Highness the Khan of Khelat has been employed during the year in settling the affairs of his country after the confusion of the year 1863-64, and for this purpose he remained during the past cold season at Khelat. An attempt to create disturbances was made in July by the Jam of Beyla and Noordeen, the chief of the powerful Mingul tribe, but the forces were met by those of his Highness the Khan near Kozdar in Jalawan and totally defeated; both the Jam and Noordeen were captured in the retreat, and have since resided under surveillance at Khelat.

Report, 14*th April* 1868, from Sir Henry Green.

1. I have the honour to submit a report of the political state of the Sind frontier and adjoining countries for the year 1867-68.

2. As reported by me, in my letter under date the 1st November 1867, No. 1407, disturbances broke out in Beloochistan in October last caused by the return of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, the Raisanee chief to the country from Candahar, where he had been residing in exile since his flight from Beloochistan in 1865. The object of his return was, there can be little doubt, to cause a rebellion in the country, and on his presence being known, he was joined by three of the minor chiefs, by name Adam Khan Bungulzye, Alla Dina Koord, and Mahomed Khan Lehree, with about 200 of their immediate followers; they were however met by his Highness the Khan with most energetic measures, he having at once despatched Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed with the small regular force which his Highness has at his disposal, and the different tribes as they were collected. The Shahgassee at once attacked and dispersed the rebels wherever assembled, and after a few efforts to maintain their position in which they were not joined by the people of the country, they fled for refuge to the Murree Tribe, begging from them an asylum and assistance; the former was afforded according to the ideas of honour entertained by all semi-barbarians, but all assistance in prosecuting these rebellious intentions was refused.

3. During the month of January last, I proceeded patrolling, accompanied by the 2nd Sind Horse, and skirted the Murree mountains, visiting the province of Kutch-Gundava in the territory of his Highness the Khan of Khelat; while there I received a message from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the chiefs who were with him begging me to intercede in their behalf with their master the Khan, and to allow them in the meantime to reside near the British frontier, or in any place that I might name. I however declined to interfere in any way between them and his Highness, except at the latter's request, in which case both parties must agree to abide by my decision, they on their part consented to do so. I then wrote to his Highness the Khan who was at Khelat, pointing out that these chiefs had received severe and well-merited punishment at his hands, and suggesting that it would be for his benefit and for the well-being of his country if they were forgiven and allowed to return to their homes. In due time I received a reply from his Highness, saying that he placed everything in my hands, and that he would agree to any arrangement I might suggest. I then informed the Sirdars that they were at liberty to reside at Seebee, the N.E. corner of Kutch-Gundava, until I had leisure to meet them; and at the same time I informed the Shahgassee that they were not to be molested, on which he dismissed the assembled tribes to their homes. This occurred in February last, and I felt confident that no attempt at disturbances would be made by the chiefs until I could attend to their business.

9. On my return to Jacobabad on the above date, I sent a messenger to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed his Highness the Khan's Wuzzeer, or principal adviser, as also to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, requesting their attendance on the 10th of the month. I may here mention that with both these individuals I had become intimately acquainted during a residence of four years as Political Agent in Beloochistan. The family of the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed had held from time immemorial confidential posts near the Khan of Khelat, and his brother Noor Mahomed had died sword in hand by the side of his master Mehrab Khan at the storming of Khelat by the British in 1839—an act since proved to have been of questionable justice—while the females of his family were destroyed at the same time according to Belooch custom, to prevent them from falling into the hands of the victors. He himself escaped from the citadel in charge of the son of Mehrab Khan, the late Khan and brother of the present one, and was the principal instigator and actor in the rebellion which dethroned the Khan-Sha-Newaz, elected by the British Government after the death of Mehrab Khan, and caused the election of Meer Nusseer Khan and death of the Political Agent, Lieutenant Loveday. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed during the many years in which I have been acquainted with him, has never failed to offer the best advice to his Highness the Khan in all matters, and to his firmness and loyalty towards the British Government, and influence amongst the chiefs and people of Beloochistan, I mainly ascribe the peace which prevailed on the Sind frontier during the worst period of the Indian rebellion, and when the Khan, then a boy of 15 years, was being urged by Persian and Affghan intrigue to side against the British power and create disorder on its frontier.

10. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, the chief of Sarawan, and the head of the Raisanee tribe of Brahooees, fled in 1865 from Beloochistan to Candahar, owing to his implication in a plot, the object of which was the assassination of the present Khan, and in which the late Sirdar Taj Mahomed was the chief instigator; this latter chief, the most powerful in Beloochistan, had, on a former occasion in 1862, more successfully led a rebellion against his master, in which the latter was severely wounded by his cousin Shere Dil Khan, who was elected Khan, and his victim sought refuge close to the British border; the usurper did not long retain his position after. For a time being made the tool of the chiefs who plundered Khelat, he was murdered in the Gundava Pass by some men of the Zehree tribe, of which Sirdar Taj Mahomed was the chief, and who at the time was close by, being beyond a doubt again the prime mover.

11. The present Khan then again resumed his legitimate position, but it may well be understood that he placed little confidence in his chiefs, more particularly in Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Taj Mahomed. As before stated, these two chiefs again leagued against him, but this time he was beforehand with them, and the Zehree chief was seized and confined, whilst the chief now under notice fled to Candahar. These occurrences happened in the month of February 1865, and from that date up to the time of he events now under report, Beloochistan enjoyed a periodof profound peace.

12. In August 1867, Taj Mahomed died at Khelat while in confinement, and reports were spread of his having been assassinated at a feast, but these were utterly false: and that other means were employed to cause the death of the chief, my most minute inquiries have failed to elucidate. One thing is however beyond a doubt, that a more desperate intriguer or a greater traitor did not exist in any native court in Asia, and so long as he remained at large his Highness the Khan's position could never have been safe.

13. As reported in the month of November last, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed returned from Candahar, with the view of again creating a rebellion; but his former companion was no longer ready to aid him, and in the meantime his Highness the Khan had done everything in his power to strengthen his position. I knew of this chief's intentions, and having a regard for him, which I had gained from frequent intercourse on sporting excursions in the Belooch mountains, where I had on many occasions partaken of his hospitality, I warned him to desist from his intention; the results of his not doing so have been shown in my second paragraph.

14. At the appointed date, the Wuzzeer and chief attended at Jacobabad, each escorted by a small party of retainers, and after hearing the complaints of both parties, I was enabled so to adjust the differences as to remove all chance of a renewal of hostilities between his Highness and his chiefs, and on the return of the former to the plains next winter a more permanent arrangement can be made.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed went to Seebee and waited there until the time for making the permanent arrangement here referred to arrived.

With the Jam of Beyla on the point of again rebelling he could not well do so.

W. L. M.

In a great measure brought about by their own acts.

W. L. M.

On the 8th February, in the first instance under instructions received by telegram from Bombay, but not gazetted till March. He however entered on the duties in February. Captain Harrison had served on the frontier for 11 years, and having been at Khelat with Sir Henry Green, was already personally acquainted with the Khan and some of the chiefs.

W. L. M.

Sir Henry Green was succeeded as Political Superintendent on the frontier of Upper Sind by Colonel Phayre, who arrived there in the month of August 1868.

On the 14th October it was reported that the Khan of Khelat, whom the Political Superintendent had expressed a wish to meet in Kutchee for the purpose of discussing the affairs of the Khanate, would not move down from Khelat that season. In fact, his Highness had not left Khelat since 1865.

The Vakeel of his Highness, who brought this intelligence from his master, came full of complaints as usual against the chiefs; he informed me "that "the Khan had recently intercepted correspon- "dence between some of these chiefs and Sirdar "Moolla Mahomed, which had tended to heighten "his feelings of resentment against them.

Letter No. 1222, dated 14th October 1868.

"Indeed, it appears that his Highness expects "some fresh outbreak of rebellion, and therefore "does not wish to leave Khelat; in this he is "wise perhaps, until he has adopted measures "to do them justice by redressing their real "wrongs.

"It is certainly scarcely to be wondered at "that, when in addition to the deprivation of "landed property, absolute want of the neces- "saries of life affects men of rank and influence "like Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and others, some "such effort to relieve themselves as that hinted "at by the Vakeel should develop itself."

Captain Harrison was appointed Political Agent at Khelat in March 1869. One of the first matters he was requested to undertake being to reconcile Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, the Jam, Noordeen, and others, with the Khan.

The Jam and Noordeen had been out in rebellion at the end of 1868, but Sirdar Moolla Mahomed had not joined them under promises from me that, if he remained quiet in his place of exile at Seebee until Captain Harrison could present him at Khelat, his case would be represented in a proper manner.

No specific causes of grievance had ever been elicited from any of the chiefs; one of the first measures therefore which I adopted was to write down everything as expressed in the following letter to Sir Wm. Merewether, dated 23rd March 1869:—

"I received your telegram regarding Sirdar "Moolla Mahomed and his "followers late last night.

Col. Phayre's letter of 23rd March 1869.

"My first plan regarding him was that he should go to Khelat with Harrison, but as Harrison did not appear to like that, it was abandoned. I then proposed the same plan that you now suggest, viz., that he should go to Khelat direct, arriving a few days after Harrison.

"To this Moolla Mahomed replied that he would do just as I might decide, but that as this is a matter that nearly concerns the whole of the Brahooee chiefs and people, whose rights and very means of livelihood are at stake, he wished to join the Council of the Confederacy which was to meet in Jalawan, to draw up a petition to the Khan representing all they had to say.

"I replied to Moolla Mahomed that according to the original and proper organisation of the Khelat State, the assembly of a council of chiefs was unobjectionable, and that under all the circumstances of the case, I would not object to his going, as he wished to do so; but I told him, and also wrote to the Jam of Beyla, that a respectful representation to the Khan of all reasonable grievances would meet with support from the Political Agent, Captain Harrison, but that violent measures would injure their cause.

"Sirdar Moolla Mahomed quite assented to this; he said moreover that were he not to go, it would place him in a most awkward predicament with all his own people, inasmuch as they would conclude that he had secretly abandoned their cause under promises from us.

"Now, as we have given him nothing whatever for all his services, and as he and his people have gone through an immense amount of actual want during the past two years, and remained silent by our advice, I did not feel authorised under our present policy of non-interference, to throw the apple of discord between him and his own people.

Note by Colonel Phayre.

I could have secured the services of this Sirdar for very little.

R. P.

Note by Sir W. Merewether.

But of course such a plan was impossible, while the Sirdar remained at variance with the Khan.

W. L. M.

Military confederacy can scarcely be correctly applied to the Khanate of Khelat, no more than to England in the time of the Plantagenet. The Khan is clearly a sovereign, and the chiefs possess lands and rights on feudal tenure.

W. L. M.

"I have gained a good deal of information lately which quite confirms our views as to the sinister aims of the Khan at the original organisation of the Khanate as a Military Confederacy, which is the form to which we wish to restore it, if possible, but which cannot be carried out without speaking very plainly and decidedly to the Khan, and showing him that in return for our support of him as ruler of the State, and securing the throne to him and his successors, we look for the fulfilment on his part of the objects we have always had in view from the first, as communicated to him by Jacob. We never intended that the Khan should become a despot in violation of the rights and privileges of his chiefs and people, and yet the whole of the troubles that have come upon the country for the last few years have arisen from his assumption of despotic power; to support which, he has surrounded himself by upwards of 2,000 mercenaries of the lowest description, who commit fearful tyranny in the country, as the Sirdars assert, and who swallow up more than half of the revenues of the State, viz., two lakhs per annum, that being, I am told, the cost of their maintenance.

Khanazad despotism.

It can scarcely be said the Khan was alone in fault, as this would convey. The Khanazadas had held office about the Khans in previous reigns, but it was reserved to the reign of the young and weak ruler Khodadad to see the development of struggle for power between the Khanazadas and nobles. The formation of a mercenary force was the necessary sequence.

W. L. M.

"Remonstrances against this unlawful system were unheard, and armed resistance to it has been called rebellion, leading to the confiscation of property on all sides.

"I enclose for your information memorandum of two statements taken by Harrison from Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Alla Dina Koord.

"I also have ascertained that the following are points which the chiefs generally wish to settle with the Khan:

With some reason, when the demands of the nobles were such as the Khan could not comply with.

W. L. M.

"1st. They claim that the Khanate shall be constituted as to laws and government as it was in the days of the first Nusseer Khan.

He ruled absolutely, and being a very able man, kept his nobles in order better.

W. L. M.

This is tantamount to calling on the Khan to acknowledge the murder (a disputed point) and his own complicity.

W. L. M.

This is a fair grievance. It has since been settled by the death of the Khan's son.

W. L. M.

This has never been conceded. The present Wuzzeer is the best and most true man in Beloochistan, and his appointment was approved by our Government.

W. L. M.

This was only the case with head chiefs of Sarawan and Jalawan, the Raisanee chief and Zehree chief.

W. L. M.

This is quite wrong.

W. L. M.

Because as the Jam was in rebellion it would be flying in the face of the Khan, and render the Sirdar's reconciliation more difficult.

W. L. M.

He did, however, go straight to Beyla from Jacobabad, disobeying instructions given to him, having for their object the fulfilment of Sir H. Green's promise to bring about his reconciliation with the Khan. He afterwards accompanied the Jam towards Khelat.

W. L. M.

Note by Colonel Phayre.

Disadvantage of listening to no one but the Khan's own agents.

R. P.

Note by Sir W. Merewether.

The Khan himself should have been heard before conclusions were formed.

W. L. M.

This is merely the statement of the Sirdars and requires confirmation.

W. L. M.

A later report from Captain Harrison speaks differently as to the conduct of these mercenaries.

W. L. M.

" 2nd. They complain of the entertainment of a large body of mercenaries, who are fed by the proceeds of lands and other sources of revenue, of which they and their children have been deprived.

" 3rd. They claim compensation for the murder of Taj Mahomed, Chief of Jalawan.

" 4th. They object to the innovation of the Khan's appointing his own infant son as heir to the Chieftainship of Jalawan, the appointment being by right and ancient privilege in the hands of the Jalawan Sirdars themselves subject to confirmation by the Khan; and that a son of the ruler is not eligible to the position, and that such a measure cannot fail to perpetuate the present divided condition of the Khanate.

" 5th. They claim the right of appointing their own Wuzzeer, and want a change of ministry.

" 6th. They claim to have a voice, as of old, in the civil and military councils of the Khanate.

" 7th. They say that the treaty of the British Government is with the Khan of Khelat as ruler of Beloochistan and the head of the Brahooee Confederacy, [not with the individual Khodadad Khan, who they say has become their enemy, by departing from the rules and laws of their Confederacy, &c., &c.,

End of letter 23rd March.

* * * *

" Moolla Mahomed demands :—

1st. The restoration of all his paternal estates.

2nd. Restoration of property.

3rd. Restoration of the Enam lands at Tehree, Mushkab, and Kolara.

4th. Right of river-water at Dadur."

Sir William Merewether objected to Moolla Mahomed going to Beyla, and on the 26th March Colonel Phayre again wrote :—

" Sirdar Moolla Mahomed will not go to Beyla in consequence of your being opposed to it. He will precede Captain Harrison by a day or two to Kozdar, on the direct road to Khelat, where the Jalawan Sirdars have been invited to meet Captain Harrison in about 20 days time. Captain Harrison will thus hear all they have to represent, as he has done in the case of the Sarawan Sirdars. He will then proceed to the Khan, and it will remain for his Highness to decide as to the course he will take.

" I beg to enclose a copy of a letter I have addressed to the Khan on the subject of the affairs of the Khanate generally, which are in a much worse condition than we supposed them to be, whilst labouring under the disadvantage of communicating only with the Khan himself and his agents.

" For instance, I have only now ascertained from the Sirdars that what the Khan calls his regiment has swelled into a standing force of 2,000 infantry, 300 horse, and three or four guns, which cost the State nearly two lakhs out of a revenue of $3\frac{1}{2}$. That this force is mainly a body guard quartered at Khelat; that it is composed of a set of lawless Mekranees, Pathans, &c. who are under no wholesome control whatever, and commit fearful tyranny in the country. At my earnest remonstrance with the Khan a few months ago, regarding the insecure state of the high road from the Sind Frontier to the Bolan, he sent a detachment of 60 or 70 men of this body to Bagh, which

The mercenary brigade.

This depends on whether the feudal system can be restored on a sound and safe basis. I question it very much, and if it cannot, a well organised regularly paid force would materially aid in the formation and maintenance of good government.

W. L. M.

In consequence of the hostile attitude of the leading Sirdars. It was originated in the late Khan's reign.

W. L. M.

This is the statement merely of the Sirdars, who are still in direct hostility to the Khan.

W. L. M.

As other Khans did before him.

W. L. M.

Mekran is held by a firm ruler, Naib Fukeer Mahomed, who refused to join the discontented nobles.

W. L. M.

Because the service is not rendered.

W. L. M.

Note by Colonel Phayre.

When I wrote this, I had not read the early history of this reign, and did not dream that assassination was likely to be attempted.

R. P.

Note by Sir W. Merewether.

This note would point to the Khan having originated or authorised the attack on Alla Dina Koord at Beyla. There is nothing to support this, beyond the bare assertions of the rebellious Sirdars, and such a supposition should not be hastily entertained.

W. L. M.

My desire was that Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, the Chief of Sarawan, should follow Captain Harrison to Khelat without joining first the Jam of Beyla, who, with Noordeen Mingul was known to be conspiring against the Khan, feeling sure that the Jam's evil influence would affect Moolla Mahomed injuriously, and render the latter's reconciliation with the Khan, which Sir H. Green had promised to aid in, more difficult. Unfortunately this course was not followed, and Moolla Mahomed afterwards at Khelat under that evil influence rejected most liberal and just terms which the Khan offered him.

W. L. M.

is utterly useless for the purpose for which it was detached, never attempting to do anything against the Murrees or other border plunderers, but as usual with such rabble, tyrannising over the poor people of the neighbourhood, and committing many of the gang robberies on Kafilas that are laid at the door of the Murrees and Brahooees.

"It will be in your recollection that the former commandant of this body, when it consisted only of some 700 or 800 men, murdered the last Khan (Shere Dil Khan), and there can be no doubt that unless measures are taken gradually to get rid of, or considerably reduce it, it will sooner or later give us a good deal of trouble. It is in fact the nucleus of a similar force to what the Rohillas under the Nizam have now attained, and I respectfully submit that I can conceive no more dangerous or mischievous element than this, which has crept into the administration of the Khanate of late years.

The mercenary brigade.

"The Sirdars affirm that, were it not for the evil influence of this body guard, they would all be holding their proper places in the State. That Sirdar Taj Mahomed would not have been murdered, and that their own lives and property and those of their children would not be in constant danger.

"Thus, in order to arrogate all power and concentrate it in himself at Khelat, Khodadad Khan has taken Khanazads for his advisers and deputies, and a lawless ribald soldiery for his body guard, with whom he has shut himself up in the Fort of Khelat. His districts are never visited. His Sirdars cannot approach him for fear of their lives.

"If we look to Mekran, we find the effects of this misrule. If we look North and N.E. to the Belooch tribes of Murrees and Boogtees, we find the same. If to Kutchee and the whole border from Larkhana to Kurrachee, the same. Lands confiscated. Money allowance for feudal service stopped and swept into the Crown Treasury, to be expended upon this embryo army of foreign mercenaries.

"With regard to the immediate combination of the Sirdars for coercive measures against the Khan, I have so repeatedly impressed upon Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and all, that they will get nothing by violent and intemperate conduct, that I have every reason to hope and believe that nothing of the sort will take place. Indeed, I am perfectly certain that it will not, if the Khan will be reasonable and follow our advice. But on the other hand, it is quite certain that the state of suspense, agitation, and distrust, which has rendered the condition and circumstances of the chiefs absolutely intolerable, cannot last."

Colonel Phayre then wrote the following letter, dated 26th March 1869, to his Highness the Khan:—

AFTER COMPLIMENTS,

Letter to the Khan.

"IT has now been arranged that Captain Harrison will leave Jacobabad on the 30th instant, and he will meet the Jalawan and Sarawan chiefs when he arrives in Baghwana. After that he will proceed to join your Highness at Khelat.

"I enclose copy of a letter that I have addressed to the Jam of Beyla in reply to one recently received from him.

"I have heard all that the Sarawan Sirdars have to represent, and without pronouncing an opinion upon any specific case, or accepting all to be as stated by them, yet I offer your Highness the sincere advice of a friend, that it would be for your own good, that all these differences should be settled, in accord with the established rules and customs of the Khanate.

"One complaint of the Sirdars is, that some of their possessions have been confiscated, and that a body of foreign mercenaries is maintained by your Highness with the proceeds. If this be true, it is not accordant with the usual custom of any king or ruler.

"Amongst the objects of the British Government in originally entering upon a treaty of friendship and support with the ruler of Beloochistan and Kohistan, were these:—

"That the just and reasonable rights and privileges of every chief and ryot should be respected, and justice generally be administered; also that life and property should be secure; yet at this time the principal Sirdars of the Khanate affirm that through your Highness' unkindness in this respect, they are driven to stand aloof from you.

"I hope your Highness may resume your kind way of dealing with your chiefs, that they may all become loyal and obedient subjects. Thus, in the midst of a contented people, your Highness will not need many, if any, foreign mercenaries, and your own Sirdars and people would then do good service against border plunderers.

"It may be in your Highness' recollection what the late General Jacob told you, viz. that in administering justice to, and respecting the rights of all your chiefs and people, you would not only secure the peace and prosperity of your country, but receive the full support of the British Government in your measures to that end.

"There can be no doubt that when the greater part of the nobles and people of any country are in absolute want, where the means of plenty exist, that there cannot be tranquillity or prosperity in that country, until such want is removed.

"The welfare and interests of 100,000 people are involved in your Highness' decision in this matter."

End of letter of 26th March.

R. PHAYRE.

Now occurred an event which effectually changed the aspect of this whole attempt at reconciliation; for whilst Captain Harrison was awaiting the arrival of the Sirdars at Baghwana, he received intelligence of the attempted assassination of Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Alla Dina Koord. He at once wrote the following letter to the Khan upon the subject:—

The attempt was made on 17th April 1869.

From Captain Harrison to H. H. the Khan.

"Baghwana, 22nd April 1869.

AFTER COMPLIMENTS.

"It should be known to you that when the Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and other chiefs left Jacobabad, a man who gave his name as Mairab Jumalee, an inhabitant of Door-Mahomed's-Gote, stated to the Sirdars that he had a petition to make to your Highness, and solicited their permission to accompany them to Khelat. His petition was not only complied with, but he was treated as a guest, and went with them to Beyla.

"On the night of the 17th June, when every one was asleep, Mairab took the sword of a man who was asleep, and proceeded towards Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's tent; but seeing a sentry alert, he went to Sirdar Alla Dina Koord, and succeeded not only in wounding the Sirdar and his two sons, Nubbee Buksh and Yusuff Khan, but unfortunately killed his second son Janee Khan.

"From the above, your Highness will perceive that the work of this assassin could not have been from personal enmity, but must have been done at the instigation of a third person.

Not an act of personal malice.

" From the vernacular letter herewith forwarded for your information, your Highness will see that the murderer attempted to save his life by stating that this cruel and cowardly act had been done by order of your Highness.

" As a report of this kind may be very injurious to your Highness, I would suggest that every effort be made to find out at whose instigation the crime was committed.

" This unfortunate event has quite unsettled the minds of the Sirdars who were coming to pay their respects to you, and I trust that by a kindly interest in their present misfortune, you will disabuse their minds of the statement made by the assassin Mairab."

Its effect upon the Sirdars.

C. H. HARRISON.

In reporting this event to the Commissioner in Sind, the Political Superintendent observed as follows:—

No. 703 of 27th April 1869.

" 3. Under these circumstances I would solicit a review of the events connected with the causes of dispute between the Khan and his chiefs, dating from my letter No. 1,222 of 14th October last, from which it will appear that the deliberate outrage now reported, has so intentionally widened the breach between the two parties, as to render it very difficult for us to mediate successfully as we had reasonably hoped to do; for, on the one hand, the Khan will of course repudiate all knowledge of the act, whilst the Sirdars on the other will as strenuously uphold their view, quoting it as an additional evidence of their oft-repeated charge, viz., that Khodadad Khan is step by step, and year by year, destroying the constituted form of Government of the Khanate, for the purpose of establishing despotic power in his own person and family.

" Against this tyrannical invasion of their civil and political rights, the chiefs naturally, and I believe justly, claim our protection, asserting that the treaty of alliance and friendship on the part of the British Government is with Khodadad Khan as head of the confederacy of Beloochistan, not with Meer Khodadad Khan Ahmedzye as a despotic prince; and they urge with truth that, excepting on the strength of the British alliance, and the power and status which it has conferred upon him, Khodadad Khan would never have ventured to assail their hereditary rights, and endeavour to subvert the constituted Government of the Khanate, as he has deliberately done for some years past.

" These Sarawan chiefs have, as you are aware, been living in exile and actual want for more than two years, but under the hopes held out to them by my predecessor, Sir Henry Green, and latterly by myself, they waited patiently till the time for respectfully representing their case to the Khan should arrive. The present outrage, therefore, instigated as it undoubtedly was by the Khan's party, would seem to indicate the determination of the latter to prevent a reconciliation and refuse them justice.

" I would, therefore, respectfully submit for consideration what course it would now be desirable to pursue. On the one hand, our relations with the Khanate, both in Mekran and on the Sind frontier from Kurrachee northwards, are so intimate, that we are precluded from withdrawing our support from its ruler, even temporarily; and yet, on the other hand, we cannot permit him to use the power derived from that support in a way that we never intended and that we cannot justly

There should be very clear evidence before this should be accepted and used in argument.

W. L. M.

The treaty is clearly and distinctly with the Khan of Khelat as ruler of the country, and the course followed by previous Political Superintendents has been strictly in accordance with that view, as being the policy intended and ordered by Government.

W. L. M.

The terms sent by the Sirdars last spring were very far from respectful.

W. L. M.

The terms given by the Khan to Moolla Mahomed were most liberal and just, and the Khan was even prepared to make concessions to the Jam, his inveterate enemy and intended supplanter in the Government, but the Jam retired to Beyla to try and mature a more successful rising for the next cold season. In this he has been signally defeated, and he is now a fugitive in British territory.

W. L. M.

countenance, consistently with the welfare and interests of the nobles and people generally.

" Whilst these matters are under consideration, Captain Harrison and I will do our utmost to pacify the chiefs and prevent them having recourse to arms. I would submit, however, that without other means at our command than friendly advice and persuasion (which in consequence of hope deferred have well nigh lost their power), it is quite impossible to foresee what men of rank and influence in the country with many thousands of discontented retainers may not be driven to do, under the exasperated state of feeling occasioned by this fresh outrage under report."

R. PHAYRE.

Sir W. Merewether replied as follows:—

No. 226, dated 1st May 1869.

" I have to express the regret with which I have heard of the unfortunate occurrence which took place at Beyla.

" While fully sympathising with the sufferers from this dastardly act, and equally feeling with you the importance that may be attached to it by interested people, I must caution you to be most careful how you accept or appear to accept even any statement intended to involve the Khan i this outrage. When a ruler and his influentia subjects are at variance, any act against any o the latter would at once be set down both by them and their followers as originating from the source whence they consider all their trials to come from. It is manifestly therefore the more necessary that any report received from them should be accepted with most extreme caution. Moreover, I need hardly remind you, that it would be highly unbecoming and most unsuitable for us to allow that we could for an instant give credence to so grave and dishonouring a charge against a ruler of a country, and that it would require the most conclusive evidence before such an accusation should have the slightest countenance.

" The statement made by the dying assassin, as communicated by Moolla Mahomed Raisanee to you, cannot be considered of any weight whatever, and bears the stamp of untruth on it clearly. The man, residing as he did previously at Noor Mahomed Jamalee's village, near Rojan, could not have received any orders from the Khan direct, the latter being at Khelat, and if any evil-disposed person ventured to instigate him to the deed, as one which might be approved of by the Khan—and his dying words would seem to have had reference to that—I need scarcely point out to you how unjust and unseemly it would be to hastily consider the Khan personally implicated in the deed. Direct information received here from Beyla mentions that the assassin was a known madman. Be this however as it may, I consider that we are bound to indignantly scout the idea of his Highness the Khan's complicity, until unmistakeable proof is adduced distinctly declaring it.

" I must now advert to the principles generally shown in the third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs of your letter, and in the first place, I must disagree with you as to your estimation of our political relations with the Government of Khelat. It is true that his Highness the Khan is the head of a Confederacy, but it is as such only that we have to do with him, and that in reality we have no business to interfere in the least between him and any of his subjects, whether baron or peasant. I must therefore request that in all your proceedings with reference to that Government, you will carefully bear in mind, that our communications are strictly speaking to be solely with the Khan,

Note by Colonel Phayre.

The preparations for the chiefs going to Khelat had been made in January and February 1869.

R. P.

Note by Sir W. Merewether.

The subject of the chiefs going to Khelat was discussed by me with Col. Phayre while I was in the frontier districts in February and March. I left them on the 11th March from Kusmore. Col. Phayre did not have his interview with Moolla Mahomed till his return to Jacobabad after that. On the 26th March, according to Col. Phayre's letter of that date, the route to be followed by Moolla Mahomed was decided to be to Kozdar, not Beyla. The Sirdar, however, disregarding his instructions went to Beyla.

W. L. M.

and that as regards the mode of governing his country, he alone is responsible, and to him alone we must look.

"From long connexion with the Khelat Government and earnest desire to assist in establishing it on a firm and secure basis, we have been in the habit of freely giving the best advice we could, but the acceptance of it, and acting upon it, rests with the Khan. Should he obstinately refuse to accept our good offices, it would then become a matter for consideration whether the Political Agent should not be withdrawn from the court.

"For some time past there has been no British officer resident with him, and until Captain Harrison arrives at his court, we are only in a position to judge by hearsay of what his motives have been, and what his present course of action is likely to be; of what has occurred for the last year or two, we are mainly dependent for direct information on the statement of those who felt themselves aggrieved, rightly or wrongly we are not in a position as yet accurately to judge, and under that sense of wrong attempted to obtain by force of arms what they considered their rights, but which his Highness for reasons of his own, which we have yet fully to learn, found himself unable to grant. They failed in their attempt, and had to suffer the privation and exile you allude to.

"It will be manifest to you from what is above written, that the policy I would wish you to follow, is that of friendly counsel to his Highness the Khan as the sole person in Beloochistan with whom we have any right or reason to communicate. That we are in no way entitled to interfere directly between him and his nobles and subjects; and to carry out this policy fairly and justly, it is above all things most important that it should in no way be shown that we are meddling in the affairs of the country by identifying ourselves openly with the cause of those who are acting in opposition to him.

"I have in conclusion to request that you will strictly adhere to the principles herein set forth, and that you will forward by the quickest means a copy of this letter to Captain Harrison for his guidance."

W. L. Merewether.

On the 4th May, Colonel Phayre replied as follows:

"Adverting to your fourth paragraph I would submit that there has been no other interference on my part between the Khan and his chiefs than has been occasionally carried on by my predecessors, whenever they deemed it to be emergently necessary.

"In the present instance, this interference has merely consisted in giving friendly advice to the Khan, expressive of the hope that he would for his own, and his country's sake, listen to what his chiefs had to represent to him; and to the latter, my invariable advice has been that they should submit a respectful representation of their grievances to his Highness, wait patiently for redress, and on no account whatever have recourse to arms.

Note.—I did this in several letters. One is given above.

"This timely intervention allayed their excitement, and inspired them with a hope, which, as all acknowledge, saved Kutchee from being plundered last December, and also restrained such of the Jalawan chiefs as had assembled at Baghwana for hostile operations against Khelat.

"Thus, up to the present time, such efforts have fully answered their object, having had a most beneficial effect upon our own interests, as well as those of the Khan and his people generally, and I trust that as, ere this, the Sirdars have met Captain Harrison at Baghwana, his Highness will accept our mediation regarding them as originally arranged.

"For the future, however, under the instructions contained in the seventh paragraph of your letter under reply, no direct communication will be held with the Sirdars as heretofore for pacific or any other purposes, and Captain Harrison will be directed to consider his Highness the Khan as his sole medium of correspondence with them or any one else in the Khelat State."

R. PHAYRE.

These orders reached Captain Harrison about the 10th May, about which time the Sirdars, whose minds were very "unsettled" owing to the attempted assassination of the Sarawan chiefs, had arrived.

Captain Harrison then reports on the 13th May from Camp Zooroo :—

"On the 11th and 12th instant I met the Sirdars and clearly impressed on their minds that the English Government had satisfied itself that there was no truth whatever in the report that had been spread regarding the assassination of Sirdar Alla Dina Koord's son.

"I also informed the Sirdars that I had come to meet them, as the mutual friend of the Khan and themselves, and that if they had to make any request to his Highness, it must be made by themselves in a respectful manner, and that I would use any influence I might have with his Highness regarding the restoration of their hereditary lands, &c.

"I am sorry to say that what was anticipated by the Commissioner in Sind in his telegram has come too true. The Sirdars as you are aware met at Beyla. They did not come as you anticipated in a friendly manner,* far otherwise, they have come accompanied by a considerable force of about 3,000 men, and have one fixed determination, viz., to demand the dismissal of the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and disbandment of his Highness' regiment. I told them that his Highness and the English Government had a very high opinion of the Shahgassee, and that I did not think their request a reasonable one. Regarding the regiment, I said I had no doubt it would be reduced when they (the Sirdars) showed that they had the interest of their Khan and country at heart. In the meantime I recommended that they should rest satisfied if their estates, &c., were restored.

The Khan had about 7,000 troops present at Khelat at this time.

"I left Baghwana this morning, and the Sirdars have gone to Zehree and intend waiting there until the Khan intimates his wishes to them.

"From the above you will see that I have been placed in a most unenviable and critical position. I shall however use my best endeavours to avert hostile proceedings on the part of the Sirdars, and show them that though asked to a friendly meeting, there is no intention of taking part with them against his Highness."

C. H. HARRISON.

On the 18th May, Captain Harrison reached Khelat, and thus reports what occurred there:—

* * * "I paid a formal visit to his Highness on the 21st ultimo. I had a long interview with him, during which he gave me a brief sketch of the conduct of the Sirdars, and then asked me if I could conscientiously state that it was for the benefit of himself and country to receive them back into

No. 9, dated 9th June 1869.

Note by Colonel Phayre.

* I gave up all hope of their doing so after I heard what had happened.

R. P.

Note by Sir W. Merewether.

Whatever good intentions Moolla Mahomed may have had, (and from previous personal acquaintance with that Sirdar, I believed him however fully capable of forming them ;) they would certainly be modified, if not entirely set aside when he joined the Jam and his party. For this reason I wished he should go direct to Khelat, following Captain Harrison. The report from Captain Harrison, dated 10th June 1869, No. 10, does not speak favourably for the Sirdar, as he shows himself now.

W. L. M.

favour. I was obliged to say that they had no claim to his kindness or consideration, but as they had suffered three years' exile and privation, he might find clemency on the present occasion not misplaced. His Highness then of his own free will wrote to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed in the kindest way, stating that he was prepared to restore all hereditary rights.

" The next thing that was heard of the Sirdars was, that they were marching with their full force on Khelat. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed came to me with an urgent request that I would write to the Sirdars in such a way as to prevent further encroachments on their part. I demurred at this, as I had received positive instructions on the subject; as however both his Highness and the Shahgassee thought I was bound to act in the matter, I ventured to depart from the rule laid down in Commissioner's letter, No. 266. The spirit of the order however may be considered to have been carried out, as no letters have been sent without being perused and approved by his Highness and the Shahgassee.

" My letter was to the following effect: That they (the Sirdars) were to move at their peril another step towards Khelat. That they would be allowed two days leave either to come in with 300 followers, or go back to their respective homes. That should they advance, it would be looked upon as a declaration of hostilities against his Highness.

" The answer to this was, that they did not feel safe coming in with so small a party. I then, with full concurrence of his Highness, sent a Native officer of my escort and 12 men, inviting them to tender their allegiance, and stating that I would hold myself personally responsible for their safety. They were also distinctly ordered by his Highness not to go to Cupota. The Sirdars refused this invitation, and told the jemadar all they wished was that I would remain neutral, and allow them to settle their differences by force of arms. This message was only a reiteration of what the Sirdars had written.

Non-intervention solicited.

" In spite of the Khan's expressed wish, and all the injunctions the Sirdars had received not to move, they marched on Cupota and took up a strong position on two hills, running up walls and small bastions at the weak points.

" Under these circumstances, the following arrangements were made. Part of the regular troops and levies were sent to Iskulkole to prevent a surprise from that point, the rest of the troops and levies accompanied me to Zaweh. I left them there, and marched to Cupota and sent for the Sirdars.

" As they had behaved so badly, I did not hesitate to tell them in very plain language what I thought of their behaviour, and what they might expect if they did not change their mode of proceeding. Seeing that matters had gone too far, and that I was determined not to be trifled with any longer, they asked permission to consider over what I had been saying. After an hour they returned, saying that they did not wish to moot the questions regarding the Shahgassee and the regiment, and they had given up all intention of fighting for what they wanted, as they appeared to think that his Highness might make further concessions if properly represented by them. I agreed to meet them the next day, and marched back to the Khan's camp.

" On the following morning we re-assembled at Cupota, and I could get nothing definite settled until five in the afternoon. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed then agreed to return to Khelat with me with 50 of his men.

Note by Colonel Phayre.

The Belooch say that the Sirdar had lost all faith in the Khan, and his promises.

R. P.

Note by Sir W. Merewether.

This is merely hearsay. But even if true, it cannot in any way justify the Sirdar in bringing forward frivolous and insulting complaints before his sovereign.

W. L. M.

This might be considered liberal and just enough under all the circumstances.

W. L. M.

"On the following day I went with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to call upon his Highness, and arranged for a business interview on the following morning. At the particular request of the Sirdar I was present, and the Khan insisted upon the conversation being carried on in Hindustani, so that I might understand the rights of the case. Moolla Mahomed read out a list of complaints that had been framed by his worthy associates. Most of them were frivolous and insulting. The Khan kept his temper admirably, and gave an answer to every thing, and when these various points had been settled, his Highness briefly defined his intentions, viz., that if they (the Sirdars) expected to get anything, they would have to behave in a becoming manner, and that he would then restore all hereditary rights. Free grants made by himself were declared forfeited by rebellion, and only restorable when they had shown by future good conduct that they were worthy of these tokens of regard.

"Compensation for defunct Sirdars was positively refused; two having died a natural death in confinement, and the rest having met their death fairly when fighting against him.

"In conclusion, he said that if they behaved well, they would have no reason to regret it. On the other hand, if compulsion were attempted, he would not give them a farthing, and was quite prepared to defend his rights and assert his position. Considering the behaviour of the Sirdars all through this business, I think his Highness deserves the greatest credit for having consented to restore hereditary lands, supplemented with a promise that their interests would be further attended to if they showed themselves worthy of further favour.

"After this interview, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed returned to Cupota, and as the chiefs would not make up their mind one way or another, I wrote to them at the request of his Highness, saying that the force at Zara had finished all the grass and water, and would be obliged to march on Cupota the following morning, so that if they (the Sirdars) wished to avoid coming into collision with his Highness' troops, they had better fall back and march on their homeward route. To this a speedy reply was sent, asking me to come alone and have half an hour's conversation with them, and that they would then either return with me, or go peaceably to their homes.

"I accordingly requested the Shahgassee to delay his march until I had given the Sirdars one more opportunity. On reaching Cupota all the Sirdars came to see me, except Azaad Khan, and he did his utmost to compromise the Sirdars beyond all hope, by sending repeated messages saying that the Khan's army was in sight, and close upon them. I told the Sirdars that I could see what Azaad Khan intended, and that they might rest assured that as I had told them I would come alone, the Khan's army would not move a step until they heard the result of my present visit. After a little talk, they agreed to go back quietly the following day, if I would give them a written pass. This I did, and guaranteed that they would not be molested if they abstained from plundering.

The chiefs and their followers retire quietly to their homes.

"Sirdar Moolla Mahomed would have accepted the Khan's terms, but was too weak-minded to sever from his evil advisers, the Jam and Noordeen. * *"

After the Sirdars had gone to their homes, Captain Harrison thus continues to report another matter:—

"His Highness came to see me on business yesterday regarding the Village of Kummul Khan in Baghwana, which, as you know, has been the source of dispute between the Jam and himself for some time past.

Kummul Khan's Village.

"Being aware that I knew on what grounds the Jam framed his pretensions, as also the rule in Beloochistan regarding intestate estates, his Highness asked me to write to the Jam from him, with the view of avoiding all further disputes for the future. The letter on the subject is marked A, and attached to this report, and from its perusal I hope it may be thought that I have arrived at right conclusions."

To the Jam of Beyla— from Captain Harrison.

After Compliments.

"It should be known to you that the English Government has sent me to Beloochistan to benefit the country by giving advice to his Highness in different matters.

"From all that has happened I see that until the dispute regarding the village of Kummul Khan is settled, that there will always be dissension between the Khan and yourself. His Highness has therefore asked me to write to you on the subject, and to settle the case from my knowledge of the circumstances.

"1st.—You say that you are entitled to the village by right of your mother.

"2nd.—That you inherited the property in the time of the late Nusseer Khan, and have had possession of it during part of the present reign. This his Highness positively denies.

"Regarding these claims one stultifies the other. Had you enjoyed the property in the late Khan's reign there would be no necessity for urging your claim through the female branch of your family.

"In the time of the great Nusseer Khan, at the request of all the Sirdars in Beloochistan, the Mahomedan law regarding the right of females to inherit property was cancelled, and as this Belooch law is still in force, I do not see how you can have any claims through your mother.

"The statement that you held the property in the late Nusseer Khan's time, and during part of his Highness' reign, was distinctly denied by the Khan in presence of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and that Sirdar was directed to invite you to come in person and prove whatever claims you might have, and that if the proofs were satisfactory, further opposition on his part would be withdrawn. It is generally known that his Highness at the end of last year allowed you to receive charge of the village, only however on this proviso, that you would come at an early date to Khelat and substantiate the claim you say you have.

"As you have declined both invitations, it can only be considered that you have voluntarily resigned your pretensions. Under these circumstances, I think it would be advisable for you to withdraw any agent you may have placed there, and consider the village as belonging to his Highness, the lawful heir, until such time as you feel disposed to prove your right to the same."

C. H. Harrison.

On the 3rd June Sir W. Merewether conveyed his approval of Captain Harrison's proceedings* as above reported, as follows:—

"Capt. Harrison's proceedings have my fullest approval and unreserved commendation. In a position of great difficulty and delicacy, he has shown admirable firmness and sound judgment. The interference he was called upon to engage in was forced upon him, and I cannot too strongly express

* In respect to the Sirdars.
W. L. M.

my high opinion of the coolness, firmness, and excellent tact he displayed throughout. Though actively interfering, he did so in a thoroughly systematic manner; always working with, through, and for the Khan, and for the best interests of the country his Highness has to rule over. It will afford me great pleasure to bring his valuable services to the notice of his Excellency the Governor in Council. * *

"The sole object of my letter of 1st May and subsequent correspondence was to caution you against what appeared to me—unintentionally I conceived on your part—a too active interest in and partisanship with the Sirdars, whose tale you had heard, and with whom your generous feelings were leading you to join against the Government with whom alone we really had to do. The events that have taken place clearly establish the correctness of the opinion formed as to the designs of the recusant Sirdars, and I cannot help adding that had you adhered to the same course you so aptly adopted last October, in advising Moolla Mahomed Raisanee to keep aloof from the Jalawan party, that the latter would have earlier seen the hopelessness of opposing their sovereign. * *

"With regard to the foreign mercenaries, I do not see that we can interfere. Were his nobles true and staunch to him he would not require such. * * * * *

"The Khan has undeniable faults of character, as I have before stated, but undoubtedly on this occasion he has shown well." * * *

W. L. MEREWETHER.

The subsequent proceedings of the Jam, in the Kummul Khan affair, are before Government in the papers as per margin. The Khan, roused by these open threats, assembled a force under the Shahgassee, and attacked the Jam before he had time to organise any efficient force, and the result is that he has been defeated, whilst the victorious troops have proceeded to his head quarters at Beyla to plunder it.

Captain Harrison's letters Nos. 38 and 39 of 27th September 1869, and accompaniment.
No. 40, dated 20th October 1869, and accompaniment.

The Jam himself has taken refuge with some of his followers in the hills between Beyla and our border, west of Sehwan, where it is supposed the Shahgassee will not attempt to follow him.

Having thus brought the narrative of the leading events in the reign of Khodadad Khan down to the present year, I would respectfully offer the following remarks regarding them.

It appears the original intentions of Government as expressed in the treaty, and explained by General Jacob personally at the Conference with the Khan which preceded its ratification, have not been fulfilled up to the present time, so far as concerns the protection of life and property in the Khanate; the protection of cultivators and traders; safe and easy roads; and finally the administration of justice to all—nobles and people.

General Jacob's definition of a strong friendly Government.

Any honest attempt to establish a "strong friendly Government" on such a basis would be indeed worthy of our support, but instead of that we find that no sooner did Nusseer Khan—who was the sincere friend of the British Government, and beloved by all his chiefs and people—show an honest determination to act up to the treaty, than he incurred the implacable hatred of the chief Khanazad, the Daroga Gool Mahomed.

Sir Henry Green's report dated 4th December 1858.

This enemy of the British Government finding that British influence was stronger than his own

This is an assumption and not a fair one. The truth now appears to be, that the Jam's troops and followers, it is said by his order, plundered Beyla before the Shahgassee could reach it. When he did he set to work to restore order.

W. L. M.

The Jam fled to Kurrachee, reaching it on the 8th December. Sirdar Noordeen Mingul has gone, it is said, to Kandahar, his brother accompanied the Jam to Kurrachee.

W. L. M.

The terms of the treaty have been on the whole well adhered to by the Khan. The advice given by General Jacob is a separate thing. Close attention to it has been as much if not more defeated by the misconduct of the chiefs, than by faults of the Khan.

W. L. M.

Afterwards removed from power and since dead.

W. L. M.

Of this weakness the chiefs showed an early intention of taking advantage.

W. L. M.

This was only the case in the time of the Daroga Gool Mahomed and Bunnia Gungaram; and has ceased entirely since 1858.

W. L. M.

The said-to-be perpetrator has long since disappeared.

W. L. M.

A fair review of the course of events and later acts of the Sirdars show the contrary.

W. L. M.

At this time even the Sirdars commenced preferring unreasonable demands.

W. L. M.

The whole circumstances should be taken into consideration in forming a judgment here.

W. L. M.

There is nothing to show they are allowed uncontrolled license now. Were they, much more would be heard of them than is the case. A late report from Captain Harrison points to the contrary. It has arisen in consequence of the disaffection and misbehaviour of the chiefs.

W. L. M.

The circumstances do not bear out this conclusion.

W. L. M.

in the councils of the Khan, and perceiving that his master's mind could not be moulded into their treacherous designs towards us, resolved upon, and finally accomplished, his murder in the manner related by Sir Henry Green.

May 1857.

We then learn that the present ruler Khodadad Khan, "a youth of sixteen, of weak intellect," was taken from the harem in Khelat, where he had been confined up to that time, and became the helpless tool of this faction of household slaves who, from that moment have marched steadily to power, secretly yet surely thwarting every one who has opposed them, commencing with General Jacob and Sir Henry Green.

The time and circumstances under which the foul murder of Nusseer Khan was committed ought never to be forgotten, because there can be little doubt that it had some connexion with the general outbreak which occurred in Hindoostan during that time, the primary object of the Daroga being to retrieve his lost power, at a moment when he fervently hoped that the British power in India would be crushed for ever. The faction therefore that revolutionised the country at that critical moment, depriving us of a real friend, and Beloochistan of a beloved sovereign, would no doubt repeat this act, were a similar opportunity to occur again.

The Khanazads during the mutinies.

The Sarawan and Jalawan chiefs on the other hand were staunch and loyal to us, as their murdered master had been; cheerfully obeying Colonel Green's calls upon them, in spite of the bad treatment they had received from the new Khan Khodadad's party. Indeed, with the single exception of the Jam of Beyla, their conduct contrasts most favourably with that of the Khanazad Government throughout the whole of the period under reference.

Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Taj Mahomed during the mutinies.

Sir Henry Green relates how the first act of the faction, after the accession of the new Khan, was to make the base and treacherous attack upon the unsuspecting chiefs, who had assembled at Khelat to elect a head, and were at that time encamped outside the walls with only a few of their retainers.

Treacherous attack of September 1857.

This diabolical act laid the foundation of all the fighting and mischief that has since occurred, by sowing the seeds of eternal feud between Khodadad and his chiefs, nullifying at one stroke all that General Jacob had worked so hard to establish. The cowardly deed was effected by a force, which then upheld and still constitutes the strength of Khanazad Government. In 1857, Sir Henry Green characterised it as a "band of about 400 scoundrels "of sorts; deserters from our Belooch regiments, "Patans and Afghans, with men from all parts of "Central Asia."

Khanazad ideas of a "strong government."

This permanent force has now grown into a brigade of upwards of 2,000 men, and if the original 400 of these ruffians were, as Sir Henry says, "permitted uncontrolled license, and were a "scourge to the country around," what, we may ask, must not a brigade of 2,000 of them be?

In it we have the mainspring of the Khanazad Government of Khelat, and it may readily be believed that the chiefs and people of Beloochistan only suffer it to exist, owing to the unqualified

The proceedings at Khelat have been very carefully watched and well understood for many years past.

W. L. M.

Very different in many respects. The Government officials of Khelat have been very different to what they were before 1858, as good as could be, and in spite of very adverse circumstances the Government now promises to be stronger than it has ever been.

The severe course pointed out by Lord Elphinstone's Government, here alluded to, was in consequence of most unfavourable opinions passed on the Khan himself by all the authorities in Sind, such is not the case now.

W. L. M.

That is, only of the chiefs and some few others, who are distant from the scene.

W. L. M.

The acts of the Sirdars, since the commencement of the present Khan's reign, have certainly not helped to remedy this state of affairs.

W. L. M.

The appointment of a member of Taj Mahomed's family has been arranged for.

W. L. M.

The treaty entered into by General Jacob had reference to the prevention of attacks on our border by subjects of the Khelat state, and protection of merchants. He gave his advice freely and soundly besides to the then Khan, and that his advice has not been followed, is due as much to the mischievous behaviour of the chiefs, as to the system of government they persist in attacking without reason, and complaints against which they always bring forward.

W. L. M.

It would be expedient first of all to establish clearly that such is the case, and next to learn what amount of interference Government considers it right to adopt in the matter of the government of an independent sovereign.

W. L. M.

Sir Henry Green's opinion referred to the first levy—12 years ago. It by no means follows that opinion should be applicable now, and recent reports show it is not. Moreover, Sir Henry Green latterly changed his views entirely with support which we give to the present ruler, through which they are intimidated.

I doubt if the real character and unquestionable tendency of this system has attracted the attention which it deserves. The circumstances now are precisely what they were in 1858, excepting that all is on a far larger and more serious scale. The whole of the despatches to and from Lord Elphinstone's Government in 1858, from February to December, show what was going on. Those of June are particularly applicable to the present time.

That the Khan himself soon imbibed the spirit of his Khanazads is clear from his vindictive speech regarding Taj Mahomed to Captain Dickinson, which showed beyond denial what he was capable of; and we know that a spirit of that sort laying hold of the young ruler of a semi-barbarous State "of weak intellect" is not easily extinguished, and, therefore, in the words of Mr. Frere's despatch, above quoted, "I am convinced "that our first care ought to be to obtain some "assurance before we further support the Khan, "that his future government shall be such as to "give reasonable satisfaction to his chiefs and "subjects."

The murder of the good Nusseer Khan, the treacherous attack on the chiefs of September 1857, the reputed murder of Taj Mahomed, the attack on the Sarawan chiefs of last spring, are all attributed by public opinion to the Khanazads, and there certainly is a consistent aim and consequent action observable in all, that renders it difficult to controvert the assertion of the Sirdars that Khodadad Khan desires to exterminate them and to usurp their rights and their property. The Khan last year appointed his infant son to the vacant chieftainship of Jalawan, in violation of all rule; but the child died and Jalawan is yet without a head. Had Sirdar Moolla Mahomed been killed last spring, Sarawan also would have been without a head. Now, indeed, it virtually is so, Moolla Mahomed having been obliged again to flee the country.

I respectfully submit that nothing could be further from the objects and intentions of General Jacob's treaty than a government like this. Our object was, and still is, to civilise, reform, improve, and thus attach to us a grateful contented people who in the hour of need, would take the honourable and faithful part in the defence of the empire that these noble races are capable of, if well led and properly handled; yet, instead of such results, after 11 years of work of the Khanazad system of government, nothing but anarchy, confusion, discontent, and indeed all the natural fruits of the crimes with which the reign was inaugurated, prevail.

Thus, apart altogether from higher principles it would be well, as a matter of mere policy to remonstrate with a power which, having in the first instance treacherously drawn the nobles to save their lives by measures of self-defence, has persisted in calling them rebels, and confiscating their estates ever since.

Again, in another point of view, if Sir Henry Green has rightly characterized the Khan's force —and it was only 400 strong when he wrote—it is scarcely to our interest, or that of the country either, that a brigade of trained though utterly regard to the entertainment of the mercenaries, considering it now necessary for the due maintenance of order.

W. L. M.

It has first to be proved that the system is a bad one. Any government with a lot of ambitious chiefs fighting for power would indeed be a dangerous matter in the country next to us.

W. L. M.

It is therefore the more necessary there should be a strong government in Beloochistan under one head, and not that the country should be parcelled out amongst a number of uncertain chiefs.

W. L. M.

Note by Colonel Phayre.

The Jam of Beyla has just taken refuge in these hills.

R. P.

Note by Sir W. Merewether.

This Jam of Beyla has been at the bottom of all the mischief in Beloochistan for the last 12 years.

W. L. M.

Quite so, if there was not a responsible ruler to prevent such.

W. L. M.

It is with the view of avoiding this that the power of the Khan should not be destroyed, and the country left to the chance fancies of a number of factious chiefs.

W. L. M.

This is most true and has always been borne carefully in mind by me, and is so still. The letter from which this is quoted was written by me in reply to a reference from Government, whether it was advisable or not to retain a British officer at Khelat, and I strongly urged the necessity of it, and am of the same opinion still.

W. L. M.

To this I do not assent, as shown in all my above remarks.

W. L. M.

This is not sound doctrine; is a very dangerous course to follow; and contrary to the principles laid down by Government.

W. L. M.

Note by Colonel Phayre.

Impolicy of having a brigade of mercenaries on our frontier.

R. P.

Note by Sir W. Merewether.

It depends on how and for what purpose it is used. If to strengthen a friendly government and maintain order, its value would be great. Colonel Phayre's supposition that it is for the contrary, is I think a mistaken one. Papers on this point are appended.

W. L. M.

Note by Colonel Phayre.

It is stronger than the Jacobabad field force.

R. P.

Note by Sir W. Merewether.

The Jacobabad field force numbers :—

Cavalry -	- 1,479
Infantry -	- 712

W. L. M.

licentious soldiery should be the vanguard of British India upon the left flank of the most important face of the frontier.

Looking at the accompanying sketch map, which shows the whole frontier from Peshawur to Kurrachee, the strategical and political importance of Beloochistan are too apparent to require comment here. Apart therefore, as I before remarked, from higher principles, it can hardly be to our national interest to support the brigade of mercenaries in Khelat, and the system which they upheld in such a manner as to incur the odium of the 30,000 or 40,000 Brahooees outside, who, with an equal number of Belooch, constitute "the real "strength of the country."

Supposing, for argument sake, that war had broken out with Russia or Persia, or both, one of our first anxieties would be the safety and independence of that long weak line of Indus valley communication for 300 miles between Kurrachee and Sukkur: broken only by a weak garrison at Hydrabad, which has its own responsibilities to protect.

The whole of that tract as far as Jacobabad is flanked by a rugged hilly country, inhabited by Brahooees and Belooch, the subjects of Khelat, many of whose chiefs have been and still are in so-called rebellion against the present Khanazad government.

Might not one resolute leader amongst them, with 300 daring followers, seriously interrupt this main artery of communication? in some instances harassing and in others absolutely impeding extensive operations that might be dependent upon it?—Is it not then worth an effort at kindly intervention on our part to avoid making deadly enemies of men occupying such a strategical position as that? Men, too, of whom Sir W. Merewether wrote in 1861—"If that power become hostile to us, or unmanageable from internal dissensions, we should have to defend the western frontier of Sind, not against a few hundred Belooch robbers, as is sometimes supposed, but against thousands of most hardy and determined enemies, viz., the whole Belooch nation."

Extract from Sir W. Merewether's report.

I respectfully submit that the first part of this apprehension is in danger of immediate fulfilment, unless we step in to prevent it. Internal dissensions are fast reaching their culminating point, as the events of the last few months prove. It is quite as much our right according to Treaty, as it is to our national interest, to separate the factions, and do for them what they cannot do for themselves.

Again, looking at Khelat in another strategical point of view, as an important centre with reference to the Bolan and Moolla passes on our frontier, and to Persian Mekran, Persian Seistan, and Kandahar on the opposite border, is it not a dangerous position in which to nurse such an element of weakness to ourselves, as a mutinous mercenary brigade, composed partly of the scum of our armies, and partly of Persian and Central Asian spies and emissaries? No one seems to know anything about this force, or how it has quintupled itself since 1857. It has always been represented that the Khan was so poor, that he had to live from hand to mouth, and yet this costs a considerable amount of ready money annually. The chiefs complain that they and their children have been robbed and impoverished to maintain it; and if that be true, it is a serious matter, because it can only be done in the strength of our support. Sir Henry Green fixed it at 400 strong (in 1857), yet it now outnumbers the Jacobabad field force, General Jacob's object was to see a good and strong government formed in Beloochistan, and gave the best advice to that effect. That it did not happen as he proposed was owing to the force of circumstances, and to none more than to the misbehaviour of the leading chiefs of the country.

W. L. M.

Neither the treaty nor its accompaniments warrant direct interference. But our best advice, as was given at the time of the treaty being first made (and it should be borne in mind that the accompaniment was not the treaty, or part of it, as inferred by Colonel Phayre) should always be readily accorded.

W. L. M.

Quite so—but to do that, by forcing refractory chiefs on the ruler, would not be in accordance with the views of Lord Elphinstone's Government, of justice, or of sound policy.

W. L. M.

When penning this, the events that occurred at Khelat in May last seem quite to have escaped Colonel Phayre's recollection. His Highness the Khan then acted as Lord Elphinstone's Government and Sir Bartle Frere would have desired. In spite of extreme provocation, he readily listened to the advice of the Political Agent, showed great toleration and moderation, but his clemency was insolently rejected by the fractious chief of Sarawan.

W. L. M.

All depended on the "if," and neither Sir Bartle Frere, General Jacob, myself, or Sir Henry Green, found it expedient or just to carry out the extreme measure Lord Elphinstone's Government pointed out as dependent on that "if."

W. L. M.

This chief was afterwards proved to be an inveterate intriguer and determined enemy of the Khan, which would account in a great measure for the Khan's feelings against him. Not that I mean to defend such feelings for a moment.

W. L. M.

This, as before stated, was distinctly contradicted by Sir Henry Green, than whom there could be no better authority.

W. L. M.

Sir Henry Green, with his intimate knowledge of Khelat affairs, thought he could manage without a Political Agent with the Khan. I think this was a mistake, as the presence of an English officer and would infallibly be made a bad use of in the time of war, as seen in 1857.

I am the more earnest upon this point, because it cannot be denied that the fewer Sittanas we have upon this frontier the better.

I respectfully submit, without fear of its being controverted, that this force and the system of which it forms the basis, constituted no part of General Jacob's policy, sanctioned by Lord Dalhousie's Government in 1854. It was intended by that policy to mould both Brahooees and Belooch to our purpose, through their affections; never by the harsh mode of treatment into which the Khelat Government have drifted. I merely solicit with the greatest deference that the principles of the treaty and its accompaniment may be quietly but consistently inculcated and supported, without alarming the Khan or his advisers. No faction should be allowed to predominate in the State, whether Khanazad or aristocratic. Our object and our desire is to see justice done to all—nobles, as well as people. We may be sure that, to use the words of Lord Elphinstone's Government in 1858, "to right ourselves with the chiefs and people of Beloochistan," is a step in the right direction, and that each step gained in advance on that basis, and properly used when it is gained, will soon allay all the revolutionary fermentation that now distracts the country, unsettling everything, and everyone connected with it.

Policy advocated.

I need scarcely say that had I known the whole of the facts now produced, before assuming the task in March last of trying to reconcile the Khan with the Jalawan and Sarawan chiefs, and to obtain justice for them, I should not have attempted using the ordinary means of representation for that purpose. I should have been convinced, as the Commissioner, Mr. Frere, expressed it "of the "hopelessness of our getting from his Highness "in return for all that we do for him, any but "negative results," by such means, and I should have asked for permission to give Captain Harrison the same orders that Lord Elphinstone's Government issued for Major Green's guidance, in paragraph 4 of their letter No 2,265 of 1858, already quoted above.

Paragragh 9 of that letter runs as follows :—

"If Khodadad Khan is the worthless man that he is represented to be, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council considers that the sooner we leave him to his fate the better; but I am desired to request that you will have the goodness to instruct Major Green to make a last effort to rouse him to a sense of his duty; and if this fails, that you will instruct Major Green to return to Jacobabad."

It was so long as three years after this very distinct command had been given, that the Khan unconsciously unveiled his real character, when he ventured to say to the British Agent at his court regarding the second chief in the Khanate whom he had done all he could to drive to desperation, that "by the assistance of God and of the Prophet "he would quietly exterminate an enemy, whom "he would hate, even were they to meet before "the judgment seat of their Creator."

Within about two years of that time Taj Mahomed died suddenly at Khelat where he was a prisoner, and the general belief amongst all the Brahooees and Belooch is, that he was poisoned by the Khanazads.

I now understand why Sir Henry Green did not recommend the Khelat appointment being filled up, when his brother resigned it and went home; because I do not believe that, under the present with the Khan, ready to afford advice at the moment it is needed, is of the first importance. I do not share Colonel Phayre's doubts as to the Agent being independent. Though reported of "weak intellect" when he first came to the throne, the Khan was greatly improved in this respect; and no one now knows better than he does the advantage of having a British officer at his court, or the danger to himself and his country that would be involved in his withdrawal.

W. L. M.

This was when the Daroga was working against him, and for the time all powerful. Such a state of affairs no longer exists, nor is likely to recur. Should it, it would then be time enough to consider the advisability of withdrawing the Agent.

W. L. M.

Nor has he now.

W. L. M.

The circumstances last spring were totally different, as the events clearly show.

W. L. M.

The Murrees do, because they themselves are in a quasi state of rebellion against the Khan, and are only well acquainted with Moolla Mahomed's version of what has occurred. But even their sympathy is limited, for, on the first occasion of the Sirdar taking refuge with them, they refused to give him any assistance in his projects, and would do so still. The Boogtees, Rinds, Dhoombkees, Mugzees, and other Belooch have little sympathy with him.

W. L. M.

The Sirdar's late flight to the Murree Hills was quite unnecessary. He was in no danger at Seebee. I believe his object in going to the Murrees was the hope of, through them, getting again to the British authorities.

W. L. M.

Since writing the above, I have learned from Captain Sandeman that the Murrees have addresed him on behalf of Moolla Mahomed.

W. L. M.

Even these brought on partly by their own unreasonable demands, as pointed out by Sir Bartle Frere.

W. L. M.

tone maintained at Khelat on the strength of the brigade of mercenaries, the Political Agent with a troop of cavalry for his escort, is in a sufficiently independent position. He most certainly is not, if he should happen to be charged with orders to insist upon an unpalatable observance of the Treaty, in regard to doing justice to all, as already adverted to. Sir Henry Green himself describes that, when the mercenaries were only 400 strong he was not independent, until his brother reached Khelat with about 200 of the Sind horse; consequently, now that the same body numbers upwards of 2,000 men, the position is more untenable than ever, with a small escort; and I feel sure that, whatever may be the orders of Government as to the future, none but "negative results" will be obtained, unless we manage to put a stop to the practice of hunting down or exiling chief after chief, as is now the case.

In describing the difficulty of his position at Khelat, and the relief that followed the arrival of a strong escort, Sir Henry Green says "the "Detachment arrived at Khelat on the 1st August, "much to the delight of the poor, the merchants, "and lovers of peace; but to the disgust of the "evil-minded. I now felt that I had gained "sufficient influence amongst the people and chiefs, "and backed by 200 Sind horse, I could take a "higher stand with the Daroga."

We here see what stress Sir Henry lays upon his having the chiefs and people with him, when about to strike a blow for them, by getting rid of the Head of the Khanazad faction.

In those days the Khan was not strongly enough backed by Military force to accuse Sir Henry of heading rebellious subjects, whilst merely advocating just rights, in fulfilment of a Treaty.

This scene illustrates precisely what I aimed at last spring, without my having known what had occurred in this and other instances of a similar kind.

The whole of the Belooch, the Murrees in particular, sympathise with the cause of the Jalawan and Sarawan chiefs and people, and I respectfully urge that it is not wise or politic to ignore the existence and secret effect of such sympathies amongst an excitable and impulsive population, such as this is. Even whilst I am writing I have received a report which may bring about serious complications. I allude to the fact of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, with his family and nearest relatives, having through fear of the Khan taken refuge in Kahun, the head quarters of the Murree tribe; and we know that those mountaineers will protect them to the utmost of their power.

Had the original cause of quarrel with the Khan been an act of their own, we could have justly told the Sirdars that they had brought all their misfortune on themselves; but Sir Henry Green has shown clearly that the original cause of all was the treacherous attack of September 1857, followed by gross insults; since which the Khanazads have, in their own interests, used the implacable character of the Khan, as an effectual bar to any lasting accommodation being brought about.

There is therefore, I would submit, a natural opening for us to interpose with our good offices.

In the correspondence we see that the Political Superintendent on this frontier and the Political Agents at Khelat have always been allowed to exercise their own judgment as to whom they would receive, and whom not. This was in fact the only safety-valve which the chiefs had. The

The correspondence will show that this restriction became necessary. It was most reluctantly put in force, and would only apply to the Sirdars, who were deliberately plotting against their sovereign, with whom it was unbecoming that the British authorities should hold communication, or give any countenance to, while they were behaving in the way reported at the time.

W. L. M.

Captain Sandeman has no political relations with the Government of Khelat. His direct action with the Murrees and Boogtees has been approved; but as soon as proper arrangements can be made, in conjunction with his Highness the Khan, for the proper management of those tribes, it will be unquestionably proper that all communications with the Murrees and Boogtees, including Captain Sandeman's, should only be through the Political Superintendent on the frontier.

W. L. M.

This opinion is formed on altogether wrong premises, as shown in marginal notes above. If the course involved in it was followed, an amount of interference with an independent government must take place, such as was never contemplated by Government, or the country would be given up to a state of anarchy and confusion as would lead to most lamentable results.

W. L. M.

No one doubts it for a moment, and if Colonel Phayre has an opportunity—as I hope he soon will have—of discussing these matters more generally with the Khan and other Sirdars of Beloochistan, he will find that the designs of Moolla Mahomed, the Jam of Beyla, &c., are better understood than he now supposes.

W. L. M.

After establishing the late Khan Meer Nusseer Khan on the throne in 1841, our connexion with the Khelat State was very limited. Our troops evacuated Beloochistan and Kutchee in October 1841, and never again returned to it, except during Sir Charles Napier's hill campaign in 1844–45, extracts of correspondence show that Sir Henry Green, Major Macauley, Captain Dickinson and Major Malcolm Green, always received the chiefs, even though they were in so-called rebellion; heard what they had to say, and recorded their petitions for the information of Government; but now this privilege, which the Chiefs themselves called "the last door of hope," has been closed to them by recent orders, which I respectfully solicit may be modified, so as to leave it optional with the Political Superintendent to act according to circumstances.

Commissioner's letter, No. 266, dated 1st May 1869.

Under its action the Khelat Political Agent is reduced to the position of a mere partisan of the Khan's, and it has operated prejudicially to my own authority and influence in the vicinity of Jacobabad, being opposed to the free action observed towards the Murrees and Boogtees by Punjab officers; indeed, without this freedom, Captain Sandeman could never have gained the confidence of those tribes, and laid the foundation of their reclamation, which the Punjab Government, the Government of India, and the Home Government, have so fully eulogised and supported.

On this frontier, from Peshawur to Kurrachee, we are in the presence of foreign powers, who are accurately informed of all that is going on at certain important centres, of which Khelat is one. Nothing could play into their hands more completely than any system which would alienate the affections of the bulk of the people from us; and therefore I am humbly, but strongly, of opinion that it is lowering the British prestige that its representatives in Beloochistan should be expected to see, hear, and speak, solely, under the inspiration of a faction of household slaves, who, as the records of the last few years prove, have unjustly seized the reins of Government.

The natural effect of this will be, that in a very short time, instead of our moulding the Khan and the present Government to our purpose as we want to do according to treaty, we shall be inevitably moulded to theirs; and when the hour of need comes, the real strength of the country will be against us.

Instead of weakening, it would really strengthen the Khan's government, if under our good advice and influence it can be brought to govern on enlightened principles; because the people of the country would then feel and see that we do not intend our powerful support to be used against their proper rights any longer.

We may rest assured that Belooch and Brahooees will never submit to a harsh rule, and it is an undeniable fact that the present rule would not stand for a day, were our support withdrawn from it. Hence our responsibility for its character. This was pointed out in 1858, and since that matters have become worse.

We ought to bear in mind that both Belooch and Brahooee chiefs discuss these matters much more clearly and reasonably than many give them credit for.

In conclusion, I am induced to mention that I am not now passing through my noviciate in Beloochistan history and politics. Out of the first ten years of my service in Sind and Affghanistan, commencing nearly thirty years ago, the first two or three were passed in Kutchee, Mooswhen the operations were entirely confined to the Eastern portion of Kutchee in the Boogtee hills. It was not till after General Jacob went to the frontier in 1847, that attention was much drawn to the adjoining state. He was appointed Political Superintendent in February 1848, but it was only after the visit of the Wuzzeer Moola Mahomed Hussein to Jacobabad on the 11th March 1851 that Khelat affairs began again to command any marked attention

W. L. M.

A careful study of this reign is necessary for Government to arrive at just conclusions. During the first part, the Wuzzeer Moolla Mahomed Hussein was all powerful, but conspiring to be Khan himself, his treachery was exposed by General Jacob to the Khan, and he was imprisoned. The Daroga and Gungaram then assumed the chief management, and held it till the Khan's death.

W. L. M.

It might have been, had the chiefs not—presuming on the supposed weakness of the Khan—essayed to grasp all power for themselves.

W. L. M.

The Khan has only lately shown every desire to be tolerant and merciful, but his offers were rejected. The Khan shows no desire to act against our remonstrances. It would certainly not strengthen his power to support factious subjects against him.

W. L. M.

Alluding to Mahomed Hussein, the Wuzzeer, who was removed. Since the removal of the Daroga and Gungaram in the subsequent reign, there has certainly been no thwarting by officers.

W. L. M.

Yet it was never found necessary or right to carry out the alternative mentioned by Lord Elphinstone's Government, nor is it now. The friendship of the people of Beloochistan will be best secured by giving them order and quiet which, owing to ambitious dissensions, they have not hitherto enjoyed.

W. L. M.

The cause or causes are simple and plain enough. Since March 1865 the Jam of Beyla has been unceasing in his attempts to overthrow the Khan's power, also aided by Azaad Khan. Unless absolutely called for, the Khan would have been unwise to leave the capital of his kingdom, tung, Khelat, and Quetta with my regiment; the remainder were in Sind under Sir Charles Napier and Lord Melville.

We held Khelat for about six months in 1841, during which one or two brother officers and myself were on terms of personal friendship with several of the Brahooee chiefs of that day, who showed us excellent sport with their well-bred greyhounds, which we returned by inviting them to rifle matches at our camp.

Colonel Stacey of the Bengal Army was the Political Agent at Khelat at that time, and it was under the genial influence of his treatment of the chiefs as gentlemen, which as a rule they are, naturally, as well as by birth, that the cordial relations to which I allude existed, giving a tone to the young Khan's position, which lasted up to the hour of his sad fate, as recorded by Sir Henry Green.

One and all—Belooch and Brahooees, chiefs and peasants—declare how happy they were under the "strong friendly government" of this prince. The reason was that his rule had the paternal and patriarchal elements in it. Nusseer Khan had a just regard for the right of property, and never robbed his nobles and retainers of their lawful share in the State revenues.

If we could persuade the present Khan to do the same, he might save the cost of his brigade, and confer incalculable good on all, including the British Government and its interests. I would submit that the whole question admits of being summed up in a very few words.

On the one side it is sought to establish a "strong government" by unqualified support of the Khan, irrespective of the character and popularity of his rule. This policy secures the Khan himself and his Khanazads, but is gradually alienating the chiefs and people from us.

On the other hand I advocate the support of the Khan also, but would make him strong by acting upon those principles of government which our Treaty provides for, viz., support in sound and good measures, but remonstrance against such as are faulty and bad.

This was General Jacob's policy, for when ratifying the Treaty in 1854, he says "from the first "day of my receiving charge of the Frontier of "Sind, I have exerted every effort in my power "to bring about the establishment of order and "good government in your Highness' neighbour-"ing dominions, but I laboured to little or no "purpose, because I was always thwarted by "your Highness' officers."

This was also the policy of Lord Elphinstone's Government in 1858, and was communicated to Sir Henry Green for his guidance, and acted on by him ever since, because he repeatedly shows throughout his reports that the Khan's friendship must not be purchased at the expense of his people's; which is the sum total of all that I contend for.

We should not blind ourselves to the significance of the fact that Khodadad Khan has shut himself up in his citadel of Khelat since 1865. He moved out with a force for a month or six weeks at the end of last year, for a short distance against the Jam, but he remained several miles away from the scene of operations. There must be a cause for his thus shrinking from visiting his districts for such a length of time, and I submit that we ought to be fully satisfied as to what that cause is, whilst giving unreserved support to a rule which en-which was centrally situated, and nearest to his greatest enemies.

W. L. M.

Captain Harrison reports also that the Jam was doing his best to tamper with the Khan's followers and adherents, but it does not at all follow that they would have joined him, though he might have thought it worth while risking the chance of their doing so. The easy way in which the Jam was overthrown in October last would lead to the conclusion that his cause was not favoured.

W. L. M.

These Brahooee levies "were the chiefs and their followers."

W. L. M.

genders such an unmistakeable sign of unpopularity and indeed fear of his subjects.

Many circumstances warn us not to make enemies of the chiefs and people. For instance, when the chiefs were at Khelat last May with 3,000 armed followers, there were altogether 7,000 men with the Khan; and yet Captain Harrison reports that the chiefs expressed the wish "that I would remain neutral, and allow them to "settle their differences by force of arms. This "message was only a reiteration of what the "Sirdars had written."

It is scarcely possible, I think, that such a request would have been preferred in the face of double numbers, had not the chiefs been assured that if a mêlée had ensued, a portion at all events of the Khan's levies would have joined them.

When Sir Henry Green returned from the campaign against the Murrees, he found that treachery had existed amongst the Brahooe levies of the Khan; he says, "I saw quite enough to con- "vince me that a force composed of tribes of the "same race, and having a fellow-feeling with the "Murrees, could never be entirely successful in "acting against them, more especially as these "Murrees are in the habit of giving protection to "malefactors, &c."

Report No. 354, dated 26th May 1862.

All history proves that in the long run "the real strength of the country" will cause themselves to be heard. I would therefore during the present time of peace anticipate them by removing their grievances and settling the country as soon as possible through the medium of their rightful sovereign.

Enclosure 6 in No. 3.

From Colonel W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier,—(No. 825, dated 15th December 1869).

In reference to your letter No. 1725 of the 6th instant, with accompaniment, I have the honour to request that you will furnish me with complete and detailed information regarding the following:—

The nature of the so-called regular force maintained by the Khan; of what countrymen it is composed.

The exact numbers and conformation thereof; whether artillery, cavalry, or infantry, the numbers of each being shown separately.

The total cost of the force, mode of payment, amount of pay of each soldier, also from what source the funds are provided.

Whether any, and if so, how many, of this so-called regular force accompanied each of the bodies lately despatched from Khelat,—the one in the direction of Lus Beyla, under the Wuzzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, and the other towards Mekran, under Atta Mahomed.

In your memoir you give the numbers from hearsay as upwards of 2,000 men, this information being derived from the Sirdars Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, and Alla Dina Khoord. It is very necessary that clear knowledge should be obtained on the above points, and the Political Agent, Captain Harrison, will now probably be in a position to give it. I would request therefore that you will call on that officer to draw up a full report on the subject.

2. Also that you will obtain from him a statement showing the names and tribes of the chiefs of Beloochistan now paying obedience to, and on good terms with, his Highness the Khan of Khelat; and of those who are associated with Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, or with the Jam of Beyla, in opposition to the Khan.

3. These matters are not sufficiently clearly explained, and in a matter of such great importance, it is most necessary that nothing should be left vague.

Enclosure 7 in No. 3.

From Col. R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to the Commissioner in Sind,—(No. 1839, dated 31st December 1869).

I have the honour to forward Captain Harrison's report No. 57, dated 28th instant, giving the information called for in your letter No. 825, dated 15th idem.

2. It will be seen that Captain Harrison states the Mercenary Brigade to be as under, viz.:—

Regular Cavalry - - - - -	200
Artillery - - - - - -	78
Body Guard Infantry - - - -	400
Regiment of Infantry - - - -	800
Total - -	1,478

3. On receiving the above, I had a conversation with Captain Harrison and his Highness' Vakeel upon the subject of numbers and cost, and reminded the Vakeel that my having previously stated the strength of the Mercenary Brigade to be about 2,000 men was not put forward on the exclusive report of the Sirdars; but that in presence of the Sirdars themselves, he (the Vakeel) had admitted the strength and cost then given to be correct.

5. Having explained this, I was informed that Captain Harrison had not included the Khan's "Umla," a body of Household Cavalry, composed of Pathans and Belooch mounted on the Khan's horses. I could not ascertain the exact numbers of this body from Mahomed Khan on the present occasion.

5. Thus it appears that the information given by the Sirdars was substantially correct. Indeed, we have yet to learn whether it was understated or not.

6. With regard to the character of their troops, the information which Captain Harrison himself gives in his 4th paragraph shows, that out of the 800 men of which the body was composed at the time referred to (1864–65), 600 supported the usurper Shere Dil, and only 200 remained faithful to their master, the present Khan (Khodadad), thus proving how completely the Khan, whoever he may be, is in their power.

7. In fact, not long afterwards, the leader of the body killed Shere Dil himself, which combined with Sir Henry Green's strongly expressed opinion of them, seems to decide the question of character as a whole.

8. Captain Harrison, however, speaks well of a "great number of the body guard," and states that "the cavalry" are for the most part Hindustanees and Sikhs, who were "well behaved and respected." Nothing, however, is said of the character of the "Fighting Regiment," who do the detached duty in the country.

Strength of Body Guard - -	400
Cavalry - - - -	200

9. My own experience of these troops verifies Sir Henry Green's, so far as it has gone. I allude to what occurred last spring during the negotiations with the Murrees, when I had occasion to request his Highness' Vakeel to write to the "captain" commanding at Bagh, to request him to be so good as to restore the arms and mares treacherously taken from the Murrees, and that proper compensation would be given for them at once. The insolent and insubordinate reply which the Vakeel received was, "that when Rs. 300 were paid down in ready money the arms, &c. would be given up—not before." I threatened to write to the Khan reporting this "captain," but refrained from doing so at the earnest solicitation of the Vakeel, who said that it would ruin him (the Vakeel) for having shown me the man's letter. Thus I directly obtained evidence of the character of one commander of a body of men, whose character throughout the country has been already described; and when the time comes for inquiry, we shall know to whom the Murree chiefs refer as inviting and aiding plundering parties in Eastern Kutchee.

10. Captain Harrison states, that during the time he was at Khelat "only one or two people "complained that the Sepoys had pilfered their fruit."

11. It seems strange that even "one or two" complaints reached Captain Harrison, because, as a rule, none would either be made to, or received by, him against any of the Khan's servants at the capital; the Khan himself being present—particularly too, after the orders issued in your letter No. 266, dated 1st May 1868, which positively prohibited his receiving any complaints whatever except through the Khan himself.

12. For the same reason I do not consider that either he or I are in a position at present to offer a reliable opinion as to what Sirdars and tribes are really friendly to the Khan as a despotic ruler, in contravention of the organisation of the Khanate as a Military Confederacy, and what not; but I am quite clear as to which of these forms of Government is best suited to British interests; and from what I know of the feeling of the country which I have watched quite independently during the revolutionary crisis of the last 18 months, I think it would be very dangerous for us to reason ourselves into the belief that the present calm is that of contentment, or that a despotism of Khanazadas will ever govern Belooch and Brahooees in the proper sense of the term.

13. Captain Harrison, in the 6th paragraph of his letter under reply, when advocating the continuance of the present strength of the Mercenary Brigade, states that "the disaffected considered "themselves strong enough to cope with the said force on several occasions."

14. Bearing in mind Sir Henry Green's experience in the Murree tribes, I believe that "the disaffected" knew perfectly well what they were about, and that in an actual mêlée they would have received support against the mercenaries, otherwise the 3,000 under the Jam at Khelat in May last would never have ventured to entreat Captain Harrison to remain neutral, and leave them to fight out their quarrel against the more than double numbers on the side of the Khan.

15. In conclusion I beg to quote for your information paragraphs 13 to 17 of a report No, 482, dated 14th December 1869, from Captain Sandeman, to the Commissioner of the Derajat Division, from which it will be seen that Khelat affairs are viewed by Punjab officers in the same popular light in which I have endeavoured to lay them before the Government for consideration.

Extract above referred to. Captain Sandeman's report.

"13. There is no doubt of the fact that the Khanate of Khelat is in a state of anarchy, and it behoves our Government fairly to inquire into the cause. I have endeavoured to discover it, and I will now place before you the result of my inquiries.

"14. It is asserted that the treaty our Government made with the State of Khelat was entered into with the Khan and his nobles, i. e., the Brahooee confederacy; but that this was merely in theory, for in practice we failed to carry it out in accordance with the constitution of the Khelat State.

"15. For instance, I understand that such nobles as those of Sarawan and Jalawan declare that in our arrangement for the reduction of the fees taken on Kafilas, the incomes of the chiefs were reduced, while no arrangements were come to for the subsidy being distributed according to the loss each had sustained by such reduction. They further declare that the money thus granted, so far from being employed for the benefit of the Khanate, is spent by the Khan on mercenary troops, who are a standing menace to them, this being contrary to the constitution of the State. They affirm that these and other like causes have driven them into rebellion.

"16. With the above state of affairs before us, it is obvious that our present policy has not succeeded, and that however much we may desire to act solely with the Khan, treating him as a despot, the constitution of the State does not admit of our doing so. I will now proceed to show how our doing so is not a safe policy, and that it has already shook our present successful arrangements with the Murrees to the foundation.

"17. I have already mentioned the defeat of the first noble of the State, Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan, and his brother confederate. Since then he has made several attempts to renew the war, but from various causes has desisted. He is described as a chief of excellent disposition, and to have great influence in the Khanate. Since commencing this report I have heard that he has left Seebee and joined the Bijaranee Murrees, who reside near the Bolan pass. What will be the result the future will determine. Were he an evil disposed man, from his well known influence over this tribe the results would certainly be very serious. His being a well disposed amiable chief of high position in the Khanate renders it all the more essential that his case should be inquired into. It is surely time for our Government to interfere, when we find that the Khan of Khelat's mismanagement of his Khanate has led to the peace and administration of that part of the Punjab border being placed in much jeopardy, for such is truly the case."

Memorandum by Colonel W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind.

The first part of this letter only reiterates Colonel Phayre's views on the Khelat Government question, formed after an experience of 18 months at Jacobabad.

Referring to the latter part of this letter, quoting from Captain Sandeman's report, I would observe that that officer residing at a distance from Khelat, and hearing only casually of its politics, has greater difficulties in forming a correct opinion than those who have been intimately concerned in the events connected with that country for many years past. The jeopardy he alludes to proceeds from the lawless acts of the Murrees and Boogtees, which have been in play for fully half a century; to ascribe it solely to the present administration is not correct therefore. The question of successfully controlling and managing hereditary cattle-lifters is no easy one, and has puzzled more powerful Governments than that of Khelat. His Highness the Khan has however done his best to remedy this evil, and is prepared to continue his efforts on a good plan being shown to him.

Enclosure 8 in No. 3.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Frontier, Upper Sind.—(No. 57, dated 28th December 1869).

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, and to annex returns giving the information called for in the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 5th paragraphs of letter under reply.

2. Regarding the 4th paragraph, 100 rank and file of the body guard, one field-piece, and one mortar comprised the strength of the regular horse that accompanied Daroga Atta Mahomed on the Mekran expedition. The major part of the fighting regiment and the regular cavalry, with four guns and a proportionate amount of artillerymen, accompanied the Shagassee.

3. The Khan's force being larger than was supposed, I propose to show the circumstances under which the old regiment was sub-divided and increased.

4. When his Highness was deposed by his cousin Shere Dil, part of the old regiment elected to go over to the new Khan, whilst about 200 accompanied Khodadad Khan to Nusseerabad in Kutchee. On his being re-elected to the Khanate, bad feeling existed in the regiment from their having espoused different causes. His Highness then formed those who had remained true to him into a body guard, and the remainder into a fighting regiment, increasing both to their present strength.

5. Some of the discontented having stated that his Highness supported his regular troops from confiscated lands, I am in a position to state that such is not the case. His Highness has sufficient revenue from his lands at Baghwana, Khelat, Mustoong, Kutchee, and other places, besides the transit dues, to support his small force. The only Sirdaree lands estranged are those of the Raisanee chief, and I showed in my letter of the 10th of June that his Highness was quite willing to restore them.

The actual income of this Sirdar, taking everything into consideration, used to be about Rs. 6,000 per annum.

6. Except under peculiar circumstances, the fighting regiment would furnish about 300 men for the protection of Quetta and Kutchee, and as it is his Highness' intention to establish a post at Kozdar for the protection of Kafilahs, and the people in the neighbourhood, only half of the regiment would be available for any emergency. Whether this force distributed in this way is more than his Highness requires, may be open to discussion. Taking into consideration the formidable combination against them, and the disciplined men and persons that the Jam of Beyla had at his disposal; as also that the disaffected considered themselves strong enough to cope with the said force on several occasions, I do not think that his Highness' force has been in excess of his requirements: and now that his chief difficulty is over, I think that his regular troops, if judiciously employed in giving detachments for the protection of trade and his people, could scarcely be thought excessive. His Highness states that it would be more economical and satisfactory than keeping up levies, as the latter cannot be depended upon to stay from their homes for any length of time.

7. The list of friendly Sirdars that I have had the honour to attach, appears to be very excessive, in comparison with the disaffected. I have, however, seen and conversed with most of them, and can vouch for the accuracy of the list up to the present time. The disadvantage however that his Highness labours under, is, that his well wishers are so far apart that time must elapse to enable him to collect them together. On the other hand, the evil disposed have great facilities of combining, from the Mingul tribe being so near Kozdar.

8. During the time I was at Khelat, only one or two people complained that the sepoys had pilfered their fruit. On his Highness being made aware of what had occurred, arrangements were made to prevent recurrences of these petty thefts.

9. A great number of the body guard are men holding certificates of good conduct from the 1st and 2nd Belooch Regiments in which they had served for five years.

10. The cavalry are for the most part Hindustanees and Sikhs, who served for some years in the Sind Horse, prior to the reduction that took place in 1860 or 1861. They are well behaved and very much respected. The annual cost of his Highness force' is Rs. 1,14,402.

Strength and Pay of his Highness' Infantry Regiment.

No.	Rank.	Pay per mensem.	Rs.	Caste.	How paid.	Remarks.
		Rs.
1	Commandant - -	- - -	50	Half of these are Patans, the rest Belooch.	From his Highness' private resources.	During the time I was in Beloochistan I only heard one or two complaints against these men for pilfering fruit, and this was put a stop to by his Highness. Annual cost of this Regiment Rs. 60,912.
8	Native officers - -	15 each	120
8	Ditto - -	10 „	80
32	Havildars - -	9 „	288
32	Naiques - -	7 „	224
719	Sepoys - -	6 „	4,314
800		Total Rs.	5,076

His Highness' Body Guard.

1	Native Commandant -	50	50	Most of these men are Belooch, a few Patans.	From his Highness' private means.	Many of these men enlisted in the Belooch regiments for five years, and on taking their discharge entered his Highness' service. As a rule they are well behaved. Annual cost Rs. 30,720.
4	Native officers - -	15 each	60
4	Ditto - -	10 „	40
16	Havildars - -	9 „	144
16	Naiques - -	7 „	112
359	Sepoys - -	6 „	2,154
400		Total Rs.	2,560

Strength and Pay of His Highness' Cavalry.

No.	Rank.	Pay per mensem.	Rs.	Caste.	How paid.	Remarks.
2	Native officers - -	30 each	60	Hindustanees and Sikhs.	From his Highness' private means.	The majority of these men have served in the Sind Horse, and joined his Highness on the reduction of the frontier force. They are very well behaved and much respected. Annual cost Rs. 18,120.
2	Ditto - -	18 „	36
2	Ditto - -	12 „	24
8	Duffadars - -	10 „	80
8	Naiques - -	8 „	64
178	Sowars - -	7 „	1,246
200		Total Rs.	1,560

His Highness' Artillery.

1	Native officer - -	20	20	—	From his Highness' private means.	These men are distributed at different places, Quetta, Dadur, Bagh, and Gundava; in addition to their pay they get two pounds of flour pe diem.
2	Ditto - -	15 each	30
25	Men - - -	4½ „	112½
50	Belooch Brahooees, Juts slightly instructed in artillery practice -	4½ „	225			Annual cost Rs. 4,650.
78		Total Rs.	387½

Jacobabad, the 28th December 1869.

C. H. HARRISON, Captain,
Political Agent, Khelat.

List of Sirdars well disposed towards his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

No.	Name.	Caste.	Residence.
		JALAWANS.
1	Sirdar Meah Esan -	Gitchkee - - -	Punchgoor.
2	Do. Azum Khan -	Ditto - - -	Ditto.
3	Do. Bahei Khan -	Ditto - - -	Kedj.
4	Do. Kaisah Khan -	Moozanee - - -	Ghat near Zeree.
5	Do. Faquir Mahomed -	Bezonjao - - -	Naib of Kedj.
6	Do. Meah Kerah -	Ditto - - -	Nal.
7	Do. Meah Khan -	Meerwanee - - -	Kolewah.
8	*Do. Kaisah Khan -	Mugzee - - -	Jull.
9	Do. Khan Mahomed Khan -	Kubranee - - -	Khelat.
10	Do. Moheem Khan -	Goorugnaree - - -	Zehree.
11	Do. Kumal Khan -	Lotanee - - -	Ditto.
12	*Do. Chakur Khan -	Mishk - - -	Juttuck.
13	*Do. Jahan Khan -	Mahomed Hussanee - -	Mushka.
14	*Do. Pahar Khan -	Safsoolies - - -	Kozdar.
15	Do. Keechee Khan -	Ditto - - -	Ditto.
16	Do. Peer Bux -	Haroonee - - -	Soorab.
17	*Do. Gool Mahomed -	Nutwanee - - -	Kozdar.
18	Do. Saleh Mahomed -	Daizar - - -	Nal.
19	Do. Attah Khan -	Khanzai - - -	Huttajee.
20	Do. Gazee Khan -	Ditto - - -	Ditto.
21	*Do. Sakur - -	Sajee - - -	Nal.
22	Do. Shere Khan -	Moondranee - - -	Ditto.
23	Do. Bahee Khan -	Samalee - - -	Near Kharan.
24	*Do. Sudeek - -	Oomranee - - -	Mahomed Abad Soorab.
25	*Do. Dost Mahomed -	Moogairee - - -	Near Bagh.
26	Do. Abdool Kair -	Ubrah - - -	Mungool near Bagh.
27	*Do. Muddut Khan -	Pundranee - - -	Near Khelat.
28	*Do. Abdool Ahud -	Neecharee - - -	Khelat.
		SARAWANS.
29	*Do. Abdool Kadur -	Shawanee - - -	Mustoong.
30	*Do. Rehman Khan -	Zugger Mingul - - -	Nooshkee.
31	*Do. Adam Khan -	Bungoolzai - - -	Ispilungee.
32	*Do. Imaum Bux -	Rhind - - -	Near Gundava.
33	*Do. Hybut Khan -	Raisanee - - -	Mittree.
34	*Do. Alah Deenah -	Koord - - -	Moorao.
35	*Do. Syud Khan -	Mahomed Shai - - -	Mustoong.
36	*Do. Hubeeb Khan -	Shahwanee - - -	Iskulkote near Khelat.
37	*Do. Moobaruk Khan -	Ditto - - -	Ditto.
38	*Do. Jehangeer -	Lehree - - -	Nurmook.
39	*Do. Shadad Khan -	Bungoolzai - -	Ispilunjee.
40	*Do. Aktah Khan -	Koord - - -	Ditto.
41	*Do. Kadur Buksh -	Surpurah - - -	Mustoong.
42	*Do. Sorab Khan -	Dhoombkee - - -	Lehree.
43	*Do. Rahimdad -	Lungao - - -	Mungoochur.
44	*Do. Saleh Mahomed -	Mingul - - -	Near Much.
45	*Do. Peer Buksh -	Sumanalee - - -	Near Abgoom in the Bolan.
46	Do. Muzar - -	Ditto - - -	Ditto.
47	Do. Hybut - -	Ditto - - -	Ditto.
48	*Do. Koortub Khan -	Satukzai - - -	Near Quetta.
49	Do. Kushmeer -	Peer Khanee - - -	Zehree.
50	*Do. Gohur Khan -	Rodanee - - -	Soorab.
51	*Do. Goolam Murteza -	Boogtee - - -	Beebra-ka-Deree.

The names marked * are the Sirdars that Captain Harrison is acquainted with.

Disaffected Sirdars who have connected themselves with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the Jam of Beyla.

No.	Name.	Caste.	Residence.
	SARAWANS.
1	*Sirdar Moolla Mahomed -	Raisanee - - -	Kanuk.
2	*Do. Mahomed Khan -	Reestumzai - - -	Do.
3	Do. Sumundah - -	Lehree - - - -	Nurmook.
	The whole of the Murree tribe.†
	JALAWANS.
4	*The Jam of Beyla - -	Loonreah - - -	Lus Beyla.
5	*Sirdar Noordeen - -	Mingul - - - -	Wud.
6	Do. Ebraheim - -	Do. - - - -	Do.
7	Do. Essan Khan - -	Do. - - - -	Do.
8	Do. Meah Mahomed - -	Do. - - - -	Do.
9	Do. Futteh Khan - -	Do. - - - -	Do.
10	Do. Kheir Mahomed -	Do. - - - -	Do.
11	Do. Essoo Khan - -	Mahomed Hoossanee - -	Mushka.
12	Do. Azaad Khan - -	Patan - - - -	Kharan.

* Sirdars that Captain Harrison is acquainted with.
† With the exception of those in the Bolan.

Enclosure 9 in No. 3.

From Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to the Commissioner in Sind,
(No. 1,828, dated 24th December 1869.)

In forwarding the accompanying report, No. 54, dated 23rd instant, from the Political Agent, Khelat, containing a precis of his several reports quoted, I have the honour to invite attention to paragraph 4, which, so far as I have been able to discover, is scarcely borne out by the facts on record in this office.

For instance the Government correspondence as per margin pronounces his Highness the Khan's campaign against the Murrees in the winter of 1858–59 to have been a complete success, and no mention whatever is made of the Jam's conduct at Kahun in 1858, until May 1862, when Major Henry Green in excusing the Khan's omission to coerce the Murrees, notwithstanding the extra Rs. 50,000 paid to him for that purpose, wrote as follows to Mr. Mansfield, the Commissioner :—

Bombay Government Letter No. 2,084, dated 25th May 1859, and Resolution of Government.
Government of India Letter No. 3,569, dated 13th June 1859.
Political Superintendent's report No. 52, dated 28th January 1860.

* * * "but although I was aware at the time that treachery existed amongst the Khan's forces, I was not aware of the extent until afterwards, or that the present Jam of Beylah when at Kahun (the Murree headquarters) proposed in open Durbar, uniting with that tribe, then turning the whole force on Jacobabad, which station had been still further weakened by a squadron under Captain Dickinson having been ordered to Nuggur Parkur. Notwithstanding, however, this treachery, the expedition was so far successful, and the arrangement afterwards made, so far satisfactory, that the British territory, until the raid now complained of, has remained free from Murree incursions." * * *

The Jam's conduct was inexcusable, but it does not appear, as put by Captain Harrison, "that his "most successful intrigue was that which caused the failure of his Highness' campaign against the "Murree tribe some 11 years ago."

Had Major Henry Green viewed the matter in this serious light he would no doubt have reported it as soon as he became aware of it.

In paragraph 11 of the report under reply, Captain Harrison says that "he (the Jam) has no hope "of being allowed to resume his rule in Beylah is apparent from his having plundered his people "before seeking safety in Kurrachee."

Owing to this allusion, I deemed it right to ask Captain Harrison upon what grounds he based the above opinion. His reply is given in letter No. 55, annexed hereto.

The following correspondence regarding the Jam in 1858–59 appears to afford the clue to his original misdoings :—

1. Complaint of the chiefs of Beloochistan, 24th September, and 25th November 1857.
2. Brigadier General Jacob, No. 183, 7th April 1858.
3. Mr. Frere, Commissioner, „ 215, 19th May „
4. Secretary to Government, „ 1,723, 7th „ „
5. Mr. Frere, Commissioner, „ 1,025, 21st „ „
6. Brigadier General Jacob, „ 258, dated 24th May 1858.
7. „ „ „ „ 343, „ 21st June „
8. Mr. Frere, Commissioner, „ 267, „ 19th „ „
9. Government letter, „ 2,139, „ 4th „ „
10. Mr. Frere, Commissioner, „ 257, „ 14th „ „
11. Government letter, No. 2,500, dated 25th June 1858.
12. „ „ „ 2,569, „ 1st July „
13. „ „ „ 2,619, „ 7th „ „

14. Mr. Frere, Commissioner, No. 1,548, dated 23rd July 1858 with memorandum of the Jam's grievances.
15. Government letter, „ 3,027, „ 13th August „
16. „ „ „ 406, „ 15th February 1859.
17. Political Superintendent, „ 605, „ 29th October „
18. Major H. Green, dated 8th September and 10th October „
Also more recent correspondence in 1868-69.

General Jacob gave the following report of the Jam's position and responsibilities in his letter No. 343, dated 21st June 1858 :—

* * * "The Jam of Beyla is the sovereign prince of that province; he is a feudatory of the Khan of Khelat, to whom he owes allegiance, military service, and some trifling specific dues.

"The Jam and his subordinate chieftain Oomed Ali are, as I have long since reported, in rebellion against the Khan of Khelat, but the Jam of Beyla has an undoubted right to levy any taxes he may think proper within his own territory, except transit dues on general merchandize passing through Beloochistan."

No. 50, 31st January 1861.

In January 1861, the then Political Superintendent, Major (now Sir W.) Merewether, described British relations to Khelat in the following terms :—

"As regards good faith, I would observe that since the day (1842) on which the British Government by the hands of the then Political Agent, Major Outram, placed the late Nusseer Khan on the throne of Khelat in the presence of the whole of the chiefs of the Beloochistan, the people of the country, as well as the surrounding nations, have considered the Belooch State more or less under British protection, and the subsequent Treaty entered into by the late General Jacob in the year 1854, and then the deputing of a British officer to the Khelat Court, confirmed them in this belief."

I would particularly call attention to the whole of this letter. The views expressed therein I hold still, and they are as applicable now as then.
W. L. MEREWETHER.

Our support to the Khan and his Government should certainly be most carefully watched, so that direct interference with the detail arrangements of that Government may be avoided. Otherwise our support would only tend to weaken, not strengthen as desired. This is quite understood even by those whose interests make them pretend to think the contrary, and who are merely trying to get our aid to promote their ambitious objects, not the good of their country.
W. L. MEREWETHER.

The Khelat Government being at the present time in full enjoyment of our support, its acts are regarded by the people as having our approval; hence the necessity of our carefully watching their character.

The information required in your letter No. 826, dated 16th instant, is given in Captain Harrison's report under notice.

P.S.—I omitted to remark, with reference to the Bolan arrangements for Kafilahs, that the traders pay "black mail" for this protection in addition to the "Khan's transit dues." Captain Harrison has sent to make inquiries how much is charged per maund, or per load, as the case may be, but it will be some time before a reply can be obtained.

No complaints about this have ever been made by merchants to me, nor has Colonel Phayre brought it before to my notice. Captain Harrison's inquiries will clear up this point.
W. L. MEREWETHER.

Enclosure 10 in No. 3.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier—(No. 54, dated 23rd December 1869.)

My report No. 10 having embraced all matters of interest in Beloochistan up to the 10th of June, I propose to briefly review subsequent events as reported from time to time.

2. The main objects that engrossed his Highness' Government during my residence at Khelat were the intrigues of the Jam of Beyla and the Mingul Sirdar, as also the probability of aggression by the Persian Government towards Kedj.

3. As the Jam of Beyla's conduct will occupy a prominent part in my present report, it may not be amiss to briefly allude to his antecedents. Before the time of the great Nusseer Khan, Beyla was not under Belooch rule, being a weak power, they had to succumb to this well-known ruler. Beyla was left in charge of Meah Khan, the then Jam, and his Highness gave him his daughter in marriage, and thus made him a friendly tributary of the Khelat Government; things went on in a peaceful and uninterrupted manner until the present Jam's accession to power. During the past ten years he has done everything he possibly could to weaken the Khan's Government, either by intrigue or organizing forces against the Khelat Government "to take part in disputes that were no concern of his."

4. His most successful intrigue was that which caused the failure of his Highness' campaign against the Murree tribe some eleven years ago. Regarding "armed resistance against the Khan;" these occurrences can scarcely be enumerated. To give some idea of their frequency, it may be as well to mention the Jam's having organised three forces against the Khan during the past twelve months.

5. My letter No. 10 showed the ostensible cause of dispute and my advice to the Jam on the subject; as the ill-feeling still continued, I attempted to define in my letter No. 27 who were the rightful heirs; the continuation of this letter No. 28 reported that the Jam had withdrawn his agent from the village in dispute. A few days later I had to continue the subject in No. 31, and to report that an agent of the Jam's with an armed force of Minguls had not only removed the Government revenue from the village of Kumal Khan but from Mahomed Khan's village. His Highness was very much annoyed at this, but with the view of keeping peace and quiet said he would overlook the insult if they returned the grain; this they declined to do, and stated they were prepared to take the consequences. His Highness then made arrangements that his Shahgassee should go as soon as practicable to punish these rebellious chiefs; other reasons for this active policy were shown in my letters, Nos. 39 and 40, viz. the receipt of four treasonous letters from the Jam of Beyla to his Highness' chiefs as also the appeal for protection from the Sassoolies, Hootmanzais, and other people residing at Bhagwanah.

6. The Khan had intended going in person and asked me to accompany him, but bearing in mind the repeated instructions I had received not to interfere actively in the Government of the country, I told his Highness that it would do him more harm than good my being mixed up in the business, for, if success attended his present measures, the disaffected would state that he, the Khan, could never have managed it without aid from the English Government. His Highness appeared to appreciate what I said, and quite understood that no active aid would be given to him on this or any other occasion.

7. The cold weather having set in, necessitated a move towards the plains, so I determined to return viâ the Bolan, as by so doing I should not come in contact with the Khan's force, or the rebel chiefs. On arriving at Mustoong, I heard that emissaries from the Jam and Sirdar Noordeen were trying to persuade the Shawanees, Koords, and others to join them: this report was never confirmed. I, however, thought I might indirectly benefit the Khan and the people, so stopped a month. During my stay I heard that the Prime Minister had started for Bhagwanah; his movements were so rapid that no combination could take place, and as no serious opposition was to be feared, he pushed on at once to Wud; the Minguls had only just time to escape with their families into the neighbouring hills.

8. From Mustoong I proceeded to Quettah, and after remaining there a few days, marched down the Bolan and proceeded to the large and wealthy town of Bagh, where I stopped some days, as the people were greatly alarmed at passing events in Beloochistan.

9. On the 24th October, the Jam marched a force with seven guns to aid the Minguls, and took up a position at Furruk Burr, being joined on the 26th by Sirdar Noordeen and the Minguls; as no advance was made upon them, they concluded that the Shahgassee must be afraid, so marched to within three miles of his camp; occasional skirmishing took place, the Shahgassee delaying in hopes that a force from Kolewah might act in combination with him; the Jam and Sirdar Noordeen appear to have realized what plans were under contemplation, and were meditating flight, so the Shahgassee marched on the 15th ultimo to dislodge them from the hill they occupied. After some hours' fighting, the Jam and Sirdar Noordeen's force fled, leaving seven guns and all their ammunition and camp equipage on the ground. About 30 or 40 were killed.

10. A letter received by the Shahgassee from the principal men of Beylah, marginally noted, stated that the Jam and Sirdar Noordeen, after having plundered Beylah, had fled to Kurrachee, "that they themselves were harmless, inoffensive people, and were quite ready and willing to place themselves under his Highness' protection." In connexion with this letter the Shahgassee requested his Highness to write to the following Roongas in a kind and friendly manner (Ali Khan Chungool and Mettah).

Chungool.	Aladad.
Ali Mahomed Wakeel.	Ala Ruckia.
Saleh Mahomed.	Esau.
Mahomed Roongee.	Moosah.
Abroo Bukah.	Dahood, &c.
Ismael.

11. The Jam's career down to the present time shows him to have been the scourge and pest of Beloochistan for years past; and that he has no hope of being allowed to resume his rule in Beylah is apparent from his having plundered his people before seeking safety in Kurrachee.

12. Before leaving this subject, I would beg to state that, in consequence of a letter received from his Highness, I directed the Shahgassee on arrival at Beylah to send some responsible person to report himself to the Commissioner in Sind to ascertain his wishes; particulars were stated in letter No. 51; when writing I asked the Shahgassee to use his influence to prevent the poor and inoffensive people of Beylah from being ill-used and plundered.

13. The second subject of political importance to the Khan's Government was, as stated, probability of Persian aggression at Kedj; at first his Highness was inclined to think that his Naib, Faquir Mahomed, had exaggerated the difficulties of his position, but on reading the Naib's letters, I felt convinced that no man would have written as he had done without urgent cause, and am glad to say that his Highness had taken this view of the case before the receipt of telegram acknowledged in my letter No. 34.

14. My letters Nos. 34 and 37 will show that his Highness was more or less hopeful that the English Government would afford him active aid and supply him with material to protect his territory on the Mekran Coast. My reply to him was that the Persian Government being on friendly terms with the English, it would be impossible to assist him actively, and that giving him ammunition for war would be misunderstood, that he must act independently and rest assured that we would try and relieve his present embarrassments by diplomacy with the Shah of Persia.

15. His Highness after taking into consideration what I had said, detached his Darogah Atta Mahomed with a force as detailed in my letter No. 34. Before, however, they had proceeded far on their way, his Highness wrote and directed that they were to consider themselves under the Shahgassee's orders and act in combination with him if possible.

16. A short time ago it was reported that Ibrahim Khan, the Serhind of Bumpoor, who had caused all these difficulties at Kedj, had died. I am not however in a position to state whether this is reliable information.

17. Having duly discussed the two subjects noted at the commencement of my letter, I will endeavour to touch upon other matters that may be of interest.

18. In my letter No. 14 I afforded the explanation called for in Government Resolution, Political Department, dated 15th March 1869, regarding Oomer Khan Gitchee, and showed the Khan's anxiety to forward his interests; from Naib Faquir Mohamed's letter attached to No. 37, it appears that Oomer Khan, whilst expecting consideration at his Highness' hands, was at the same time offering to go over to those who had acknowledged the Persian supremacy, under the proviso that they would make him Naib of Kedj and Toomb.

19. At Khelat, Mustoong, Quettah and other places, I had many opportunities of seeing Kossids, Kafilas, and other people passing through; the only information, however, that I thought might not have been communicated through other sources was the apparent distrust of the present Affghan

Government against the Persians—Shere Ali Khan, the Sirdar of Kandahar, having written to the Zuggur Mingul tribe stating that aggression on their part might be anticipated sooner or later, and recommended mutual support. Another subject I considered worthy of report was a conversation that I had with an Afghan merchant, who had been trading in Kokan and Bokhara between Tashkend and Samarkand; the particulars of the conversation were detailed in my letter No. 47, under date 11th November 1869.

20. At Quettah, as a rule, his Highness generally stations a company of his regiment to protect the people against the Patans, Kakurs, and Doomars; these people occupy the hills about Quettah, Siriab, and the Dusht. The Satukzais, a branch of the Koord tribe, also live in the hills about Siriab and the Dusht and have intermarried with the Doomars.

The Minguls, under their Chief Hybut, occupy the hills from Much to Abgoom.

The Muzeranees Koh Murree live in the hills to the right of Beebee Nanee under their Chief Shere Dil, and the Koochuks at Kertah under Pilloo Khan.

21. Each tribe taken individually is of little or no importance; the Naib at Quettah acts in conjunction with Shere Dil Murree; as far as the safe transit of Kafilas through the Bolan is concerned, he has at his disposal 500 effective fighting men and gets a certain percentage on each Kafila, varying from Rs. 10 to 40. His capability of conducting this duty seems to be acquiesced in by all the tribes inhabiting the Pass; some I believe are subsidized, others he is prepared to punish if they interfere with him in any way. No attempt is made to furnish each Kafila with a large escort, only one or two of the Murree tribe are in attendance, and I think if the records are consulted it will be found that the system works well, and that obstruction is rarely or ever offered in the Pass itself; in fact all the Kafilas and Kossids that have lately come down say that they have not the slightest fear about passing through the Bolan; they, however, dread the depredations that may be committed in the low hilly country between Dadur and Hajee-ka-Shere; to obviate this difficulty, Nawab Khan has stationed Belooch levies at both these places, and Kafilas are escorted backwards and forwards in perfect safety. Of course these levies would not be able to hold their own against raids on a large scale, but are quite sufficient to protect property against the depredations of smaller parties; for the safety of the people in the plains, mounted Belooch Sowars have been posted at the places marginally noted.

The merchants pay "black mail" for this protection in addition to transit dues.
R. PHAYRE.

Reply to Commissioner's letter No. 791, dated 27th November 1869.

Lehree.	Bagh.
Poolajee.	Kundah.
Shahpoor.	Gundavah.
Bushooree

22. The arrangements in the Pass and on the plains of Kutchee, small as they are, appear to answer admirably, and his Highness only requires aid to continue and develope the plan; there is no doubt that with a little trouble the traffic would increase to a great extent. Kafilas appear to be coming down in unusually large numbers this cold season, and merchants who have not frequented the Bolan route for some years say that they only came hearing that a Political Agent had been appointed; the greatest part of the traffic would I fancy always go to the nearest seaport, Kurrachee, viâ Khelat, Kozdar and the Hubb. Horse Kafilas for Bangalore, dried fruits and other merchandise for Shikarpoor, Ahmedabad, Baroda, and other places, would always select the Bolan route.

23. At Lehree I had a long conversation with Sorab Khan, the Sirdar of the Dhoombkees; owing to the dread of Murree raids there is but little cultivation. His Highness grants him 13 kurars of jowaree per mensem, equivalent to about 350 rupees; this being inadequate to keep up his position, he is anxious to increase his means by taking up land in the frontier districts on the same favourable terms that have been accorded to other Belooch.

24. Referring to the correspondence regarding the Belooch Rehmutoolla, forwarded under your endorsement of the 7th August, as also Government Resolution No. 2,816, Political Department, dated 31st August, I have the honour to inform you that I have requested his Highness to have the movements of this Belooch carefully watched. At Quettah a Hindustanee, who could not give a satisfactory reason for wandering through Beloochistan, was arrested, as it was thought he might be acting in conjunction with this Belooch. After a careful search he was released, as only a few harmless letters were found in his possession addressed to people at Hydrabad and Kurrachee.

25. His Highness whilst occupied in punishing those who for years past had been trying to subvert his authority, was not forgetful of those who were anxious to return to their allegiance. Sirdar Alla Dina Koord and Sirdar Adam Khan Wuderah went to Seebee after they had parted with the Jam, and gave as their reason that no one would believe that they had been forgiven. His Highness hearing this sent them a written order sealed by him, stating that they might return to their country and live amongst their own people, and that if their conduct was such as met with his approval that he would look upon them as his Sirdars; the whole of the Raisanee tribe sent Hybut Khan, the elder brother of their Sirdar Moollah Mahomed to Nawab Mahomed Khan, saying that they did not wish to join in any intrigues that might be got up against the Khan, and only wished to be allowed to remain quietly at Mittree. His Highness wrote two very kind letters to Hybut Khan, saying that he had no wish to interfere with them, and that no one should harm them so long as they adhered to their present good intentions.

Moolla Mahomed is with the Bijaranee Murrees, and it has been reported from the Bcogtee hills that these Sirdars fled after him. Inquiries will be made.—R. PHAYRE.

26. Directly Sirdar Moollah Mahomed heard of the defeat of the Jam of Beylah and Sirdar Noordeen, he fled with six followers to Khan, only one of whom was a Raisanee, the rest of the tribe elected to remain quietly at Mittree under Hybut Khan.

27. Azaad Khan, after leaving the Jam and Sirdar Moollah Mahomed in June last, saw that the object he had in view could not be attained through their means, so went to Candahar and tried to interest the Ameer and Sirdar Shere Ali Khan of Candahar in his behalf; a lengthy correspondence ensued on this subject between the Khelat and Afghanistan Governments. His Highness' replies were dignified and appropriate, viz., that he should be most happy to restore Azaad Khan the land that he held for doing his, the Khan's, service, when he chose to account to him for having plundered the village of Punchgoor and other aggressive acts.

28. Two or three Afghan Sirdars being displeased with Ameer Shere Ali Khan, passed through Khelat en route to Persia, Sirdar Surwur Khan was the first who arrived, and I at once requested Nawab Mahomed Khan to ask his Highness to follow the usual policy towards these fugitives, viz., after showing them hospitality, to request them to seek an asylum elsewhere than on his frontier or in Beloochistan.

29. In concluding this report, I wish to bring Doctor Bowman's very valuable services before the Government. From the 15th April to 20th November 7,405 people were treated, of this number 2,815 were either surgical or serious cases of illness that necessitated admission into hospital. Dr. Bowman gained such repute amongst these wild people as a surgeon and oculist, that they came any distance to consult him. During the few days we were at Quettah, the attendance at hospital was very large, Afghans, Patans, and various other people having come more than 50 miles for treatment. Seeing the great advantage that is derived from having such a zealous and highly qualified officer in this Agency, I am naturally anxious that his pay should be drawn on the old scale, as recommended by the Government of Bombay in their Resolution, Political Department, No. 3,354.

Enclosure 11 in No. 3.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier,—(No. 55, dated 24th December 1869).

With reference to your letter of the 23rd instant, alluding to the 11th paragraph of my report No. 54, I have the honour to inform you that I have no further reasons to offer for the conclusions arrived at than my personal knowledge of his Highness and the Jam of Beyla.

2. The whole tenor of my letter was to show the Jam's intention, either by intrigue or armed opposition, to upset his Highness' Government, and I endeavoured to point out that the Jam during the past 12 months had by treasonous correspondence and armed resistance endeavoured to upset the Khelat Government and dethrone the present Khan.

3. His Highness having by his own personal efforts subdued this tributary, who for years past has done his utmost to disorganize his country and Government, would not voluntarily reinstate such a person. That the Jam is of this opinion may be inferred, as no man having any hope or intention of returning would have deliberately plundered his own people before seeking safety in Kurrachee.

4. Paragraph 10 of report No. 54 gave substance of letter from the principal men of Beyla to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. I have now the honour to attach copy of letter received on the 2nd instant.

5. Replies to other letters will be forwarded with as little delay as possible.

Substance of letter received by Captain Harrison from Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, dated Beyla, 11th December 1869.

After salutations,—I arrived at Beyla on the 2nd of December, and all the principal Lussees came to make their salaam.

Sirdar Noordeen and the Jam of Beyla had plundered Beyla before I arrived, and have gone to Koneraj.

I have done everything that could be done to re-assure the people; those who had fled have come back and are living peaceably in their houses, and I have promised to try and recover the property that was taken from them by the Jam and Sirdar Noordeen.

Abstract translation of a letter from Wullee Mahomed Shahgassee, to the address of the Commissioner in Sind, dated 30th Ramzan 1286, [illegible]zri.

You are aware that I came here by order of his Highness the Khan of Khelat to fight with Jam and Noordeen. I found that before my arrival Noordeen had gone to Wudd. I proceeded there, and Jam and Noordeen also came to that place with their armies to fight a battle. By the grace of God, and majesty of his Highness the Khan they fled by night and we obtained the victory. They left behind some guns and property, and of these I took possession. I then left Wudd for Lus Beyla, and arriving there was informed that Jam and Noordeen were in Guzraj. I was going to that place to arrest them; when on the way I was informed that the Jam had gone to Kurrachee, and Noordeen to Kah Saroor. It was at first my intention to go in search of Noordeen and make other necessary arrangements, but I learnt from a letter written by Faquir Mahomed, Naib of Kedj, that Ibrahim Khan Banpoor Wullah intended to commit mischief at Kedj. This has been his intention since one year, as you are well aware of. My wish is that I should go to Kedj. Now that the Jam is under the protection of the British Government he should be considered to be as in that of his Highness the Khan, for both the Governments are on friendly terms with each other. As Noordeen was a companion of the Jam, the latter should be called on to produce him. Before my arrival at Beyla, the people of that place, and Minguls, had laid waste Lus Beyla. From the day I arrived here I commenced making arrangements and giving the people presents. After a few days I went to punish the Minguls, and they all submitted and made obeisance; and of the property that they had taken by force from the people of Lus Beyla, a portion has been recovered and returned to the owners. The rest will also be returned. When I will proceed to Kedj I will leave a small force with Ghoolam Mahomed, Naib of Jhellanee, at Lus Beyla. I have written this for your information.

Enclosure 12 in No. 3.

Minute by the Hon. Mr. Mansfield, dated 24th May 1870.

THE arrangement, proposed by Sir W. Merewether involves a grant of Rs. 44,000 to the Khan of Khelat. The Government of India have on more than one occasion refused to sanction any additional grant to this chief, and will not, I am afraid, entertain the present proposal, unless some reduction is made in the Jacobabad force to meet the extra expense. The subsidising of a certain number of Murrees and Boogtees, subjects of the Khan, would no doubt have great effect in restraining these tribes from plunder, and if the mounted force of Jacobabad were reduced 150 men, with the proper proportion of native officers, funds would be available for the arrangement, and I should like to have it carried out.

The force now at Jacobabad is much larger than is necessary, unless some great convulsion took place in the neighbouring States, and threatened an invasion of British territory, and might be reduced with safety.

Enclosure 13 in No. 3.

No. 1712, dated 3rd June 1870.

Resolution by the Government of Bombay, Political Department.

Read—

The Commissioner in Sind, No. 52, dated the 26th January 1870.—Submits, with remarks, copies of "Outline of Khelat affairs from 1857 to 1769," received from Colonel Phayre, Political Superintendent of Upper Sind.

RESOLUTION.—In this correspondence two main questions come up for consideration: 1st, the future management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes; and 2nd, the position of the Khan of Khelat, and his relations to his Sirdars.

2. With regard to the first question, the object is to induce these robber tribes to give up plundering, and to settle down permanently to peaceful occupations. This object has for some years been attained with regard to the corresponding tribes residing within the Sind frontier; and there seems no reason why a similar policy should not now be successful with regard to the Murrees and Boogtees. It was found mainly by experience during the earlier years of our connexion with Sind, when anarchy and bloodshed prevailed along the whole border, that in order to deal properly with these mountaineers repressive measures were not alone sufficient. Military operations in the hills were found to be hazardous and costly; and even when successful tended little to the pacification of the tribes. For the utmost that could be effected by a campaign was to destroy the villages of the offenders and drive off their cattle; and though this no doubt overawed them for a time, it in the end tended to aggravate the evil, for the general impoverishment which followed weakened the authority of the chiefs, who alone could be made responsible, while their followers were driven to fresh acts of plunder in order to save themselves from starvation.

3. The chief aim of General (then Captain) John Jacob's policy in pacifying the frontier of Sind, was to withdraw the bulk of the tribes from the hills and settle them to agriculture in the plains. The success which attended this experiment will be seen from a perusal of his report printed at page 123, Government Selections No. XVII. "Province of Sind." The results he describes as follows: "Soon afterwards the "Belooch settlers took to manual labour in their own fields with spirit, and even pride. "From that time they were really conquered, and commenced to be reformed; they are "now the most hard-working, industrious, well-behaved, cheerful set of men in Sind. "Their numbers amount to about 2,000 adult males; but for three years past not a "man of them has been convicted, or even accused of any crime whatever, great or "small; yet seven or eight years ago they were the terror of the country, murderers and "robbers to a man." This arrangement disposed of the bulk of some of the larger clans, but the hills along the border will always furnish an asylum to a certain portion of robber tribes; and with these Captain Jacob dealt in a different way. He saw that they could be only successfully managed through their own system of tribal government, and therefore took into British pay the leading chiefs and the best behaved of their followers. These men became thus themselves enlisted on the side of law and order, while they acted as a sort of border police for the protection of the peaceable settlers, and suppression of petty inter-tribal feuds.

4. This is the policy which it is now proposed to make systematically applicable to the Murrees and Boogtees; regard being had to the fact that these tribes are nominally subjects of the Khan of Khelat, and that the plains on which it is proposed that they should settle are in Khelat and not British territory.

5. It appears from paragraph 44 of the present report of the Commissioner in Sind that there are now a certain number of Boogtees in the pay of Government on the same frontier, but the number is not stated. On the Punjab frontier there are already 20 Murrees and 20 Boogtees on pay of Rs. 20 per mensem. Sir W. Merewether now proposes that the total force on both frontiers should stand as follows :—

ON SIND FRONTIER.

I.—Boogtees.

Chief of the Boogtees - - - -	Rs. 100	per mensem.
2 Jemadars, @ Rs. 20 - - -	„ 40	„
50 Sowars, @ Rs. 15 - - - -	„ 750	„
Total - -	Rs. 890	„

II.—Kahun Murrees.

Chief of Kahun Murrees - - -	Rs. 100	per mensem.
2 Jemadars, @ Rs. 20 - - - -	„ 40	„
50 Sowars, @ Rs. 15 - - - -	„ 750	„
Total - -	Rs. 890	„

III.—Kote Moondaie Murrees.

Chief of Kote M. Murrees - - -	Rs. 100	per mensem.
2 Jemadars, @ Rs. 20 - - -	„ 40	„
50 Sowars, @ Rs. 15 - - - -	„ 750	„
Total - -	Rs. 890	„

ON PUNJAB FRONTIER.

I.—Kahun Murrees.

1 Jemadar - - - - -	Rs. 20	per mensem.
30 Sowars, @ Rs. 15 - - - -	„ 450	„
Total - -	Rs. 470	„

II.—Boogtees.

1 Jemadar - - - - -	Rs. 20	per mensem.
30 Sowars,—Rs. 15 - - - -	„ 450	„
Total - -	Rs. 470	„

The total cost of this force would be, for Sind, Rs. 2,670, and for the Punjab, Rs. 940 per mensem = Rs. 3,610 per mensem, or Rs. 43,320 per annum.

6. This is the additional sanction asked for by Sir W. Merewether; but in estimating the additional cost he has not taken credit for the 40 Sowars already in British pay on the Punjab Frontier. The amount of their pay, Rs. 400 per mensem or Rs. 4,800 per annum, should be deducted from the total shown in the above statement. It is also presumed that the Boogtees already in Government service on the Sind Frontier are included amongst those shown in the statement. The number and pay of these Boogtees should therefore be shown, and a credit taken for their cost. Government desire also to be furnished with some information regarding the location of the Murrees and Boogtees now in Government service, and the nature of the duties required from them.

7. But before recommending the grant of an additional sanction, this Government must be satisfied that the numbers proposed by the Commissioner in Sind are the lowest compatible with the attainment of the object in view. Sir W. Merewether is aware how difficult, at the present time of financial pressure, it is to obtain sanction for any new charge. He should therefore be requested to consider whether any part of the proposed cost might not be met from local sources. From paragraph 21 of Captain Harrison's report, No. 54 of 23rd December last, it appears that a precentage varying from Rs. 10 to Rs. 40 on each Kafilah is now levied in the Bolan Pass in addition to the sanctioned transit dues. When this exaction on the part of the tribes is put a stop to, as it no doubt will be when permanent arrangements are made, it will perhaps be found that a moderate toll may, without injuriously affecting the traffic, be levied from each Kafilah by way of contribution towards the expenses of keeping the pass open and safe. Perhaps also the Khan of Khelat, when partially relieved from the necessity of furnishing escorts, would be willing to pay a share of the new charge.

8. It must also be borne distinctly in mind that the entertainment of these Sowars should be regarded as an arrangement entirely subsidiary to the main object which Government have in view, viz., the settlement of the tribes be peaceful and especially agricultural occupations.

9. Colonel Phayre should therefore be requested to report as to the practical steps which should now be taken to carry out this policy. When it has been ascertained what portion of the tribes may probably be settled down to cultivation, and what is the least number of Murrees and Boogtees that must be taken into pay in order to secure freedom from plundering, Sir W. Merewether will be in a position to submit to Government a revised scheme based upon the instructions contained in this Resolution.

10. It is desirable that the payments should be made to the tribes in the Khan's name and through officers at Jacobabad on the part of the Khan, as proposed by Sir W. Merewether.

11. It may be pointed out in this place that while his Excellency in Council cordially approves of the policy suggested for adoption by the Commissioner, he does not think the proposal that the Political Superintendent should meet the Khan and confer with him as to the steps required to carry it out necessary. It should also be stated that the nominal subjection of the Murrees to the Khan appears to make it desirable that the carrying out of the whole scheme proposed should be in the hands of the Sind Frontier officers.

12. The second question, viz., the position of the Khan and his relations to his Sirdars, will be considered in a separate Government Resolution.

13. The Commissioner should be asked for an early reply to this Resolution, so that Government may at once communicate with the Government of India.

Enclosure 14 in No. 3.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. & C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to His Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor and President in Council, Bombay, —(No. 337, dated 17th June 1870).

In acknowledging the receipt of Government Resolution No. 1,712, of the 3rd instant, I have the honour to state that the general principles which guided the late General Jacob in his management of the frontier and its tribes are most aptly and concisely shown in the second and third paragraphs thereof; but to place the present state of affairs in a perfectly clear light before your Excellency for submission to the Government of India, it is necessary to add a few elucidatory remarks, which I will make as brief as possible.

2. The Belooch tribes which harassed the Sind frontier previous to Sir Charles Napier's hill campaign in 1844–45 were the Jekranees and Dhombkees, who resided not in the hills but in the plains, the former near Shahppo at Chuttur and Sahar-ka-Gote, the latter at Lehree and Phoolajee. These places are all to be found in the map appended to Colonel Phayre's letter No. 1,725 of the 6th December 1869, with the exception of Sahar-ka-Gote, which lies between Chuttur and Phoolajee. They are all situated on the north side of the desert which separates Jacobabad from Kutchee and in Khelat territory.

3. On Sir Charles Napier crossing the desert the Jekranees with the main portion of the Dhoombkees retired into the adjacent Boogtee hills, and afterwards surrendered at Trukkee, an important stronghold immediately to the north of Deyrah. They were then transported into Sind and located on lands close to Khanghur now Jacobabad. These are the people alluded to in the third paragraph of the Government Resolution, as having been so thoroughly reclaimed from their former lawless habits, by the excellent system introduced by General Jacob after he took charge of the frontier in 1847. They were residing immediately under his control, and civilising influences could be brought directly to bear upon them. A portion of the Dhoombkee tribe, which was not considered so much implicated in the outrages, was left at Lehree where they still are.

4. As long as the Jekranees and Dhoombkees, who were the most powerful of all the Belooch tribes, held the lands at the foot of the Boogtee hills, they monopolised the plunder of the Sind border, but on their removal in 1845, the way was left open to the Boogtees, and they commenced a similar course of irritation. General Jacob assumed charge of the frontier in January 1847, and at once adopted an offensive attitude against these freebooters. By a well-arranged plan of outposts and incessant patrolling, it was rendered almost impossible that any robbers should leave the hills for the purpose of plunder with impunity. The result was, that in the autumn following the Boogtees driven to desperation, entered the plain near Shahpoor in force, were encountered by a detachment of Sind Horse and completely overthrown. It was reckoned that one half of the fighting men of the tribe were killed or taken prisoners on that occasion. Shortly afterwards the whole tribe, finding themselves beaten at every point, surrendered and were located near Larkhana. Owing to ill treatment they received at the hands of Native Government officials, a portion fled back to the hills in March 1848, and again attempted to follow their old life, but being foiled they sued for mercy, and in 1851 the strength of the tribe being found to be thoroughly broken the remainder were allowed to return to their hills. Some of the best men were taken into Government employ to act as scouts and guides.

5. The Murrees, living in the hills behind the Boogtees, and consequently further from Sind, seldom interfered with that province, excepting in joining in small bodies with the Boogtees, in their attempts. This course they also followed against the lower portion of the Punjab frontier.

6. I mention these circumstances to show that though it is undoubtedly most desirable that the same excellent civilizing influences should be brought to bear on the Boogtees and Murrees, as were on the Jekranees and Dhoombkees, it cannot be managed directly, because the former are located so far off, and altogether beyond the British border, as well as the immediate supervision of the authorities. The same influences can therefore be only indirectly extended to them; that it can be successfully, I have not the least doubt, though the process will not be so speedy, and it was with this object that I ventured to submit the proposal contained in my letter No. 52 of the 26th January 1870.

7. It must also be borne in mind that the Jekranees and Dhoombkees being transferred into Sind became British subjects, whereas the Boogtees and Murrees, as noticed in the fourth paragraph of the Government Resolution, being still in Khelat territory, are subjects of our ally, his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and in working towards them his interests must also be consulted.

8. The numbers of Boogtees and Murrees proposed to be now taken into pay on the Sind frontier are in addition to the Belooch Horse now entertained, who have specific duties, which could not for the present certainly be neglected.

3. The strength of those hitherto employed is as follows:—

3 Ressuldars	on Rs. 50	each	-	-	-	Rs.	150
12 Jemadars	„ 25	„	-	-	-	„	300
300 Sowars	„ 15	„	-	-	-	„	4,500
			Total per mensem		-		4,950

One ressuldar, four jemadars, and 100 sowars are reckoned as attached to each of the three regiments of Sind Horse, and they are stationed in small parties at all the outposts held by detachments of those regiments, with a reserve at headquarter, to give reliefs, and afford changes for sick. Their duties are very many, being to act as scouts in obtaining intelligence by actual reconnaissance, of movements of any bodies of marauders attempting to leave the hills. On acquiring any, they despatch information to the nearest outposts and watch the enemy until bodies of troops arrive. In this way they are incessantly employed. They have repeatedly attacked and boldly engaged small bodies of robbers that they have come across when so employed, as the records show. They officiate as guides to all patrolling parties and to detachments of troops in active movement against the enemy, being well acquainted with the different watering places and usual haunts of the robbers. One ressuldar, two jemadars, and 50 horsemen hold by themselves the advanced post of Gundooee at the foot of the Zeen mountain. The greater portion of the sowars in Government employ are taken from the Belooch tribes residing within the British border, viz., Jekranees, Dhoombkees, Cosahs. The Gundooee post of 50 men is alone drawn from the Boogtees. They were placed there after the final surrender in 1851.

10. I cannot recommend that the services of any of these men should be dispensed with. Until the new arrangements lately submitted have had time to produce the results anticipated, it will be manifestly impossible to remit any of the precautions or vigilant action which it has been found requisite to maintain on the frontier heretofore.

11. The proposed entertainment on the Sind side of 50 extra Boogtee and 100 Murree horsemen with salary to chiefs and Jemadars must therefore be an additional charge of Rs. 2,670 per mensem, or Rs. 32,040 per annum. It will be observed that the number of Boogtees recommended to be employed are less than those of the Murrees, because the former have already men engaged in Government employ.

13. It was accidentally omitted to take credit for the Sowars already in pay on the Punjab side, and who will be incorporated in the new arrangement. This will make the new monthly charge for services on that side Rs. 940—400, only Rs. 540 per mensem, or Rs. 6,480 per annum, and so reduce the total annual sum asked for to Rs. 38,520, or say, roughly, Rs. 40,000 per annum. The numbers and arrangements may not be carried out exactly as I gave them in my former letter. It would be preferable, I think, that the details should be left to the discretion of the Political Superintendent, and for that reason it will be as well to leave a slight margin to meet any contingencies that may arise.

13. The only Murrees now in Government employ are those (twenty) entertained by Captain Sandeman on the Punjab side. They are chiefly used by him as a means of communicating with the chiefs in the hills, part of them remain with him generally, the remainder in the hills. He has 20 Boogtees similarly employed. On the Sind frontier the only Boogtees engaged are those above mentioned as holding the Gundooee outpost. To the Murrees a subsidy of Rs. 600 was granted last year to the chief of the Murrees, conditional on the good behaviour of the tribe; but owing to the arrangement being considered as only binding on one section, and other branches ignoring it, the subsidy had to be withdrawn.

14. The grant of this additional sanction was only asked for by me after most careful and mature deliberation, and with the firm conviction that it is the most economical arrangement that could be entered into, something more than at present exists being undoubtedly called for. The Sind frontier I consider to be thoroughly and efficiently protected, but for some years past there have been complaints of aggressions on the Punjab frontier by portions of the Boogtee and Murree tribes. These have been fewer of late owing to temporary arrangements made, and skilful management on the part of the officer in charge of that district, Captain Sandeman. But they are liable to recur, and unless some fixed and clearly defined system meeting all probable chances is estabished, will infallibly happen again.

15. I should myself prefer that the bold policy of General Jacob, which has proved so successful on the Sind border, should be continued in its simple integrity and extended to that of the Punjab. But this would cause greater expense by calling for the presence of more disciplined troops in the latter district and the change of arrangements hitherto prevailing, which I believe were adopted chiefly for economical reasons; I allude to the practice of using the inhabitants of the district partly for the purposes of defence. This latter has undeniable defects, inasmuch as it tends to perpetuate intertribal feuds and that martial unsettled state among our own subjects which it is far better should be discouraged. It has, however, the advantage of cheapness. The efforts also of Captain Sandeman to win over the Boogtees and Murrees by taking a few men into pay, have been approved and hitherto have worked well. But they are on too small a scale, and unless enlarged will not produce lasting results.

16. The proposal in paragraph 43 and 44 of my letter of the 26th January last, is merely an elaboration of this last-mentioned plan, which will not only provide for the safety of the Punjab frontier, but will also assist in reclaiming the two above-mentioned tribes from their habits of plunder and violence. By taking the chiefs and a certain number of men into regular service, we have a certain bond for the good conduct of all, as the ill-behaviour of any portion of the tribes will cause the entertainment of all, the members of that tribe being immediately annulled. Their being brought more into contact with us, and during their visits, which will be made as frequent as possible, their seeing the advantages others gain from living under good rule and settled order, will tend gradually to civilize them and create in them new wants which their old state could not possibly give them.

17. Another of the conditions of their continuance in employment will be that they, the Murrees especially, shall in future abstain from harassing the Kafilahs which pass down the Bolan and across the plains of Kutchee into Sind. It is true that this duty of protecting these Kafilahs belongs more correctly to his Highness the Khan of Khelat; but it has been before explained that owing to the distance of the Murrees from his capital the strong nature of and difficulty of access to their hills, and his own very limited means, his Highness is unable to establish his power over such unruly characters, though most ready and anxious to carry out all in which he is bound to the British Government Fostering and promoting this trade to the utmost is of such great importance, especially at the present time, to us, that I have no hesitation in most strongly urging the sanction of my proposal on that ground particularly. In the returns following the better development thereof, Government, I am confident, will receive good return for the outlay now suggested.

18. It has also been already pointed out to Government that the assistance thus rendered to his Highness the Khan in establishing order and security in one portion of his dominions will enable him to consolidate his power more effectually in the remainder, and facilitate his forming a strong government, which more than ever now it must be an object of the first importance to us to see established. During the past year he has successfully crushed rebellion in his country, and help now will be all the more opportune.

19. With regard to the question, whether any part of the proposed cost might be met at once from local sources, I regret to say I am unable to offer any expectation of such being the case. The arrangements mentioned by Captain Harrison in the 21st paragraph of his report No. 54 of 23rd December 1869, made by the Naib of Quetta, the Khan's representative there, and the toll which the Murree chief receives is, I conclude, so much out of the dues which would otherwise go into the Khan's exchequer. Colonel Phayre added a marginal note to Captain Harrison's statement, "that the merchants pay black "mail for this protection, in addition to transit dues," but I have received no complaint on this subject from any of the traders who have passed through Sind, and had they been subjected to such a heavy new impost they would assuredly have represented it. Colonel Phayre also alludes to the same in the postscript of his letter No. 1823 of 24th December, but no further information has been submitted. I infer, therefore, that my first impression was the correct one. But be this as it may, when I drew out the proposals, it was with a knowledge of the existence of that toll and with the intention that while the new arrangements provided for the safety of the Kafilahs after they had entered the plains of Kutchee, his Highness the Khan should be left to see to the security of the Bolan, and his existing arrangements which had proved successful should remain undisturbed. I cannot therefore say that anything may be realized from this source What may be done hereafter when the working of the system has proved successful is a different matter, but for the present I can only say that recompense must be looked for in the peace and security of our borders, in the improvement and encouragement of trade, and in the better government of the country immediately next to our own.

20. The subject of the 8th paragraph of the Government Resolution has been borne in mind both by Colonel Phayre and myself, and the necessity of providing means of resorting to agricultural pursuits, for those who are disposed to follow them, has not been forgotten. The Maksoodwah, in the first instance, merely a short canal four miles long, intended to give fresh water and to give boat communication from the Indus to the town of Kusmore and the lines of the Sind Horse outpost, has gradually been converted into a valuable irrigational medium. Sir H. Green commenced its enlargement several years ago, and the extension has since been gradually carried out until the canal has now a length of some 40 miles, and supplies water for the cultivation of thousands of acres of land where 20 years ago armed men used to go with caution. Mr. Bolton, the deputy collector of the district, has, under the direction of Colonel Phayre, done much this last season to improve the canal, but it has become so important a work, both in respect to yielding considerable revenue and affording a handy field for the settlement of any of the hill people desiring to take to cultivation, that I requested Colonel Phayre to submit a report showing the present dimensions of the canal, its cost hitherto, the revenue already realised, the amount of land brought under cultivation and the further extent that could be, and the superintending engineer will be requested to give it his best consideration with a view to its further improvement on a larger and more systematic scale before next inundation.

21. The canal almost follows the line of the great desert canal so wisely proposed by the late General Jacob, but which has unfortunately been postponed from one cause or another. Passing as it does just along the frontier line, it not only fertilises a tract of country that had never before been touched by the plough, but being in the neighbourhood of the hills it affords an excellent opportunity of displaying under the very eyes of the mountaineers the advantages to be gained from habits of peace and honest labour, and of giving land to any who wish to change their way of living from that of a marauder to a respectable cultivator. The beneficial results of such procedure have been proved as regards the formerly wild Belooch residing within our territory, and there can be no doubt that the hill men will gradually be drawn within these same civilising influences. But I would deprecate the expectation of its succeeding so rapidly with them as with the others. Some Boogtees have already got lands on the Maksoodwah, and as the supply of water is increased, more grants will be given to others who are quite ready to take them up. The Boogtees are immediately adjacent, the Murrees are beyond them again, and not so easily reached. Every encouragement, however, will be given them, and they will certainly sooner or later join too, especially as the canal gets extended further to the westward and nearer to them.

22. Although I have said in the 19th paragraph that no help towards the proposed extra expenditure can be given from local means, I would here point out that much will be gained hereafter from this canal. Similar works on the frontier district have returned 800 per cent. on the original outlay, giving steadily an average of 50 per cent. annually for 16 years. Supposing, owing to portions of land having to be given free as encouragement at first, that only half that percentage is obtained, it would be a most profitable arrangement, and worth for itself alone the expenditure of Rs. 40,000 a year to ensure its being brought about.

23. I shall not delay the submission of this report to refer to Colonel Phayre, but copy of it and the Government Resolution will be sent to him for any remarks he may have to add in reference to paragraph 9. The numbers of Boogtees and Murrees that should be taken into pay have been already given by me, and I have no hesitation in stating that I cannot recommend less. Their distribution and the management of their engagement may require some modification. This should be left to the judgment and discretion of the Political Superintendent, who will be the best judge of who should or should not be entertained.

24. One of the principal objects I had in view in recommending that the Political Superintendent should meet the Khan and confer with him, was that Colonel Phayre should have the opportunity of becoming personally acquainted with the Khan, after which the transaction of business would be so much more easy and satisfactory. I never anticipated the Khan not immediately and completely complying with and accepting any wish expressed by the British Government. His unvarying conduct in this respect prevents any doubts ever being entertained on the subject. But if it is your Excellency's desire that the interview shall not take place next cold season, it can be deferred.

No. 4.

No. 287—1056, dated Murree, the 8th September 1870.

From T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

WITH reference to your letter No. 1266P., dated 20th July, I am desired to forward copy of letter No. 578, dated 2nd September, from Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, reporting on the case of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Khan, of Khelat.

Enclosure in No. 4.

No. 578, dated the 2nd September 1870.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Officiating Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, to the Secretary to the Government of the Punjab.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your No. 893, dated 1st August 1870, with enclosures, directing me to submit, for the information of the Government of India, my opinion on the statements made by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, of Sarawan, to the Amir of Cabul, in a petition dated the 14th Mohurrum (16th April 1870). To enable me to do this it is necessary that I should give briefly a short history of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's career, and how I came to have political relations of any kind with a Sirdar in open rebellion against the Khelat Government.

2. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed is, as the Government is doubtless aware, next to the Khan of Khelat himself, the most influential chieftain of Beloochistan, and is the hereditary Sirdar of the province of Sarawan.

3. On the death of Nusseer Khan (13 or 14 years ago) the confederacy of the nobles placed Khodadad, his brother, on the throne of Khelat. I believe the consent of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed had to be obtained to this, and I merely mention the fact to show the influential position this Sirdar holds in the Khelat State.

4. About six months after Khodadad's election to the throne a dispute arose between him and his nobles. The particulars are as follows:

5. Khodadad was betrothed to the daughter of the second chief of the State, Sirdar Taj Mahomed, of Jalawan, but he also wished to espouse Taj Mahomed's sister, who was widow of his own brother, the late Nusseer Khan of Khelat. Not only were the nobles disgusted at this, but it is said that the widow herself was also so, and that rather than submit to the indignity she declared that she would destroy herself.

5. Notwithstanding this, Khodadad, seizing a favourable opportunity, got possession of the person of his late brother's widow, and it is said married her in spite of her wishes to the contrary.

7. On the news becoming known, the nobles of Sarawan, Jalawan, Mingul, Khoord, &c. all assembled their forces and expelled Khodadad, placing his cousin Sher Dil Khan on the throne.

8. After this Khodadad Khan sought the protection of Moolla Mahomed, and received an asylum with him. This displeased Sher Dil Khan, and it was agreed that Khodadad should seek protection in Jacobabad and await there the turn of events. This was done.

9. About six months after this Sher Dil Khan was murdered by his own troops, and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed exerted his influence, and on certain terms got the other nobles to restore Khodadad to the throne. The dispute about Taj Mahomed's sister was also at an end, as she had died during these disturbances, and Khodadad made Taj Mahomed happy by marrying his daughter.

10. During the above-named troubles, the minister Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed got a very bad name with the Chiefs, and I believe that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed incurred his enmity from having supported Sirdar Taj Mahomed in his demanding of Khodadad Khan that he must dismiss this minister before restoring him to the throne. The promise was given, but was never carried out.

11. On this becoming known to Shahgassee, he at once commenced to intrigue, his object being to secure his own safety at the expense of the nobles. He had every opportunity to do this, as he was favoured by our officers at Jacobabad, he having, on their recommendation, been made prime minister by the Khan.

12. The result of it all was that the breach between the Khan and his nobles widened daily, until a rebellion broke out. The nobles were defeated, and the Sirdar of Jalawan made a prisoner. It is said he was poisoned by Shahgassee's orders in prison. The Sirdars of Sarawan fled to the Murree Hills.

13. Shortly after this Colonel Sir Henry Green sent for the Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, who had complained of his grievances and of the conduct of the Shahgassee, who is a household slave by birth, and pointed out to Sir Henry that unless some arrangements were come to, the nobles of Khelat could expect no mercy at his hands. Colonel Green promised that he would arrange with the Khan to settle matters, who would meet them in the cold weather for the purpose, and the Moolla was directed to retire to his estates, which he did.

14. The cold weather came and went, but no arrangements were made, and Colonel Green was succeeded in office by Colonel Phayre, who also, I believe, promised this Sirdar that he would do his best to settle matters between the Sirdars and their Khan at a personal interview.

15. A few months after this Captain Harrison was appointed Agent at Khelat, and was directed by Colonel Phayre to do his best to settle matters between the Khan and his nobles, and I believe that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's demands were that the Khan should make good his promises made to the whole of the nobles when they restored him to the throne on Sher Dil Khan's death.

16. This object was not obtained, and the Sirdars declare that the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, by treacherously attacking them separately with the Khan's army, in violation of all promises and agreements, defeated them one by one.

17. The Sirdar Moolla Mahomed during the last cold weather fled to the Murree Hills, and sought aid from the Hill men.

18. The Hill Belooch appealed to me, sending a deputation to Dera Ghazee Khan and asking my advice. I strongly advised them not to aid Moolla Mahomed with men, but to try what negotiation would do. The Moolla finding this out went to Candahar to Amir Sher Ali, and laid his grievances and that of the other chiefs before him. The Jam of Beyla and other Sirdars are also refugees.

19. I am of opinion that his Highness the Khan of Khelat has not kept his promises made to his nobles, and I further think, from all I have heard, that the interference of the British in the affairs of Beloochistan has up to the present time caused the impression that we have not been faithful to our agreements. It is even said that the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed is the real ruler of Khelat, and that the Khan himself is not opposed to a fair settlement being come to between himself and his nobles; but that the minister, who has every cause to fear this coming about, opposes it with all his might.

20. I think myself that the affairs of Khelat are in a most unsatisfactory state, and that it is a great pity, for State reasons, that a reconciliation between the Khan and his nobles is not brought about. It might at any moment be a great source of weakness, for the nobles are too powerful and have too much influence in the country to admit of either the British Government or the Government of Khelat ignoring their grievances.

21. I believe that the Khan himself, if properly managed and guided, is quite reasonable, and I think further, there are real grounds to show that the Chiefs have cause for acting as they have done, which they, justly or unjustly lay at our door, and that if our Government will only influence that of the Khan's, as it very easily could, to inquire into and settle such, that the result would be greatly to our own interests as well as to those of the Khelat State.

No. 5.

No. 2,123 P., dated Fort William, 6th December 1870.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 249, dated July 16th, 1870, and of its enclosures, relative to the future management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, and the relations between the Khan of Khelat and his Nobles.

2. In regard to the first of the subjects dealt with in this correspondence, the Bombay Government has expressed its general concurrence in the recommendation of Sir W. Merewether that instead of advancing the present line of outposts, as proposed by Colonel Phayre and the local authorities of the Punjab, the British Government should endeavour to ensure the tranquillity of the border by entertaining more levies of Murrees and Boogtees in its service. The Commissioner in Sinde has computed the cost of such additional levies as would in his opinion be sufficient for this purpose at Rupees 40,000 a year in round numbers. The Bombay Government has undertaken, if the experiment be allowed, to see that it is carried out with the least possible expense to the State, and is not without hope that it might be initiated at a less cost than that estimated by the Commissioner. But whilst advocating the adoption of this measure, it has impressed on him that the maintenance of the levies must be regarded as an arrangement subsidiary to the main object of Government, namely, "the settlement of the tribes in peaceful and especially agricultural occupations." This object Sir W. Merewether has also been bearing in mind, for he has enjoined the Superintendent on the frontier of Upper Sinde to report specially on the possibility of improving and extending the Maksoodwah Canal, from which the Beloochees who live immediately within the British border have already derived so much benefit. It is the wish of the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council that a copy of this Report may be forwarded for his consideration with the views of the Commissioner in Sinde and of the Government of Bombay.

3. The local authorities in Sinde and the Punjab differ greatly in opinion concerning the mutual relations of the Khan of Khelat and his nobles. Colonel Phayre holds that the Khan is no more than the head of a confederacy, and he considers that the present chief has throughout his reign been steadily striving to make himself independent of the constituted form of Government. He believes that without the countenance of the British Government, the Khan's rule would, owing to the unpopularity of his Highness and the pervading spirit of anarchy, soon be overthrown. These views are generally shared by Captain Sandeman, the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, and by Colonel Graham, the Commissioner of the Derajat. Sir W. Merewether, on the other hand, and Captain Harrison, the present Political Agent at Khelat, believe in the supremacy of the Khan, and dissent from Colonel Phayre's opinion that internal disturbances, dangerous to the power of the British Government, are fast culminating. On the contrary, they adduce reasons for considering that a large majority of the nobles are well disposed to the Khan, and that order prevails generally in the country. They deprecate any change in the policy which is at present being pursued towards Khelat. In its Resolution, No. 1,712, dated the 3rd of June last, the Bombay Government promised to record its views on this subject. So far no intimation of them has been received. But his Excellency in Council trusts that they may shortly be communicated, and that also at the same time a reply may be given to the reference which was made hence in July last concerning the application of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to the Ameer of Cabul for aid in recovering his confiscated estates and lost position in Khelat.

4. It appears to the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council that it would tend much to the settlement of the questions which form the subject of this letter if the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, who has already commenced his march along the frontier, and the Commissioner in Sinde were to meet during the present cold season either at Dera Ghazee Khan, or at some other convenient place on the confines of the two provinces. It is desirable also, in the opinion of his Excellency in Council, that Colonel Phayre and Captain Sandeman should be present on the occasion, in order that his Honour and Sir W. Merewether may be able to avail themselves of their local knowledge and experience. It is expected that Sir H. Durand will reach Dera Ghazee Khan towards the end of January next. Accordingly, I am to request that you will, with the permission of his Excellency the Governor in Council, put yourself in communication with the Punjab Government for the purpose of giving effect to the wishes of the Government of India. The Viceroy and Governor-General in Council trusts that when these questions have been considered in all their bearings on the spot, the Lieutenant-Governor and Sir W. Merewether will be in a position to make such proposals, both in regard to the treatment of the Murree, Boogtee, and other frontier tribes, and in regard to the status of the Khan of Khelat and the members of the Belooch confederacy, as will enable the Supreme Government to reconcile existing differences of opinion, and to decide on a strictly uniform line of policy for the Sinde and Punjab frontier.

5. A copy of this letter and of the correspondence to which it is the answer will be sent for the information of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

No. 6.

No. 36—110, dated Lahore, 4th February, 1871.

From T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Secretary to the Government of Punjab and its Dependencies, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I AM directed by the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor to state, for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy, the results of a conference held yesterday at Mittunkote between the Lieutenant-Governor and Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sinde, in accordance with the instructions conveyed in your letter No. 2124P., dated the 6th of December, 1870.

These instructions were passed on a communication of the Government of Bombay, No. 249, dated 16th July last, submitting for consideration certain proposals of the Commissioner in Sinde, contained in his letters No. 52 and No. 337, dated the 26th January and 17th June, and with reference to the question of the future management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, and the position of the Khan of Khelat and his relations to his Sirdars, directed that the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Commissioner in Sinde, having discussed these questions on the spot, should submit such proposals as might enable the Supreme Government to reconcile existing differences of opinion, and to decide on a strictly uniform line of policy for the Sinde and Punjab frontier.

2. The Punjab officials who took part in this conference, in addition to the Secretaries to Government in the Civil and Military Departments, were Brigadier-General Keyes, Commanding the Frontier Force, Lieutenant-Colonel Graham, Officiating Commissioner of the Derajat, and Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan.

Sir William Merewether and Colonel Phayre, Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sinde, represented Sinde in the conference.

3. His Excellency will not consider it desirable or necessary that a full narration should here be given of the series of events which have terminated in the present conference; voluminous reports have from time to time been submitted to the Government of India, both through the Government of Bombay and that of the Punjab, on the affairs of Khelat, the management of the frontier tribes, and the system to be adopted on the frontiers of the Punjab and Sinde, and it is needless to repeat in this place what has already been submitted to Government in full detail.

4. The first point upon which any discussion was held was the advantage of placing the direction of frontier affairs, so far as the management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes was concerned, in the hands of one officer, so as to secure the carrying out of the same policy on the frontiers of the Punjab and Sinde.

As his Excellency is aware, hitherto the action of the authorities of this province and of Sinde has been altogether independent of each other.

The direction of the relations of the British Government with the Khelat State has always been in the hands of the Sinde authorities, and they, considering the Murree and Boogtee tribes as the subjects of the Khan, however turbulent and rebellious they may be, have always attempted to control them through the influence of their legitimate Chief. The Punjab officers, on the other hand, had no official relations whatever with Khelat, and their only frontier policy for many years, as far as the Murrees and Boogtees were concerned, was to drive back their marauding parties, and endeavour to obtain compensation for damage committed in British territory through the Political Superintendent of Upper Sinde.

5. It was only in 1867 that the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan entered into direct relations with these tribes. They had made, in January 1867, a combined raid into British territory, had attacked the Fort of Harrand, burned several villages, and killed several British subjects. Captain Sandeman, the Deputy Commissioner, applied to Sir H. Green, then the Political Superintendent of the Upper Sinde Frontier, for compensation; but that officer held the Khan of Khelat to be free from responsibility, that the Murrees, although nominally subjects of the Khan, were virtually independent of his authority, and that he could not be expected to control them.

6. The Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan was thus compelled, in self defence, to take action himself, and, entering into direct engagements with the chiefs of the tribes in question, and taking a certain number of them and their followers into the service of Government, he enlisted them on the side of order, and from that time to this the tribes have adhered faithfully to their engagements, and the peace of the Southern Punjab border has been preserved.

7. This policy, which, as far as the Punjab border was concerned, proved eminently successful, was unsatisfactory from other than Punjab points of view. There was no unity of action between the Punjab and Sinde; the engagements which bound the tribes to respect the Punjab territory had no force in Sinde; while the tribes seemed to consider that their peaceful behaviour in one direction gave them a certain right to plunder on a more extensive scale in another; and their depredations in Khelat territory and in the plains of Kutchi, down to the Sinde Frontier, diminished the revenues of the Khan of Khelat, weakened his authority, and so disturbed the trade routes through the Bolan Pass, that caravans and merchants were compelled to give up the use of the most convenient and direct road into British India.

8. Every year it became more evident that if the Belooch tribes were to be reduced to order, and the security to commerce through the Bolan Passes restored, united action from the direction of Sinde and the Punjab was essential. No good result could be hoped while the tribes were treated, at the same time, on two different systems, or when, as was lately the case, a rebellious tribe was punished for its depredations by exclusion from Sinde territory, while, in the Punjab, its chiefs and their followers were in receipt of allowances from Government, allowances which could not be suddenly stopped, as the Sinde officials desired, without endangering the peace of the border from Harrand to Kasmor.

9. The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor and the Commissioner in Sinde, in discussing the best means of securing united action on the frontier and efficient control of the Belooch tribes, have unreservedly accepted as the basis for such discussion the treaty engagements of the Khan of Khelat with the British Government, and the necessity to observe them so long as they have not been expressly modified or cancelled. The treaty of the 14th May 1854, under which the Khan receives an annual subsidy of Rs.50,000 engaging in return to protect the trade routes through his territories, and levy reasonable and stipulated rates of toll on merchandize, has always been held to place on the Khan the obligation to prevent plundering and outrages on the part of the Murrees and Boogtees. These tribes, it is true, have given to the Khan a very doubtful allegiance, while he has wished to disown as subjects tribes whose occupation was plunder, whose raids devastated his country, and whose depredations he was called upon to make good. But, however doubtful the allegiance of the tribes, and however anxious the Khan might be to renounce them as subjects, it is certain that from the date of the Treaty of 1854 the Murrees and Boogtees have invariably been assumed by the British Government to be the subjects of the Khan, who was, under the treaty, bound to keep them in order, if possible, and an extra subsidy was actually granted him for several years for this very purpose. To deal now with the tribes independently of the Khan, to make arrangements with them ignoring his authority, nominal though it may be, would be undoubtedly in opposition to the policy which has hitherto been maintained, and which has received the sanction of the Government of India and of the Secretary of State.

10. I am desired to state, moreover, that the Lieutenant-Governor and the Commissioner in Sinde are entirely agreed as to the advantage to the British Government of effecting arrangements with the frontier tribes through the Khan of Khelat. Even did Treaty engagements not influence the consideration of the question, it would still be the interest of the Government to strengthen in every way the Khan of Khelat, to teach him by assistance and wise council, to look to the British Government as his best friend, and to aid him to put down brigandage, and make the caravan routes from Afghanistan passing through his territory secure. The Khan is represented by those officers who have been most closely connected with him to be well affected to the Government, and to have endeavoured, though with indifferent success, to carry out faithfully his engagements. His power has not been equal to his good-will, and the outrages of the Murrees and Boogtees, repressed on the British border, have continued without any interruption in the Kutchi and along the caravan route. This is in duty a reason that, in any arrangement with the tribes, the name and authority of the Khan should be used, and the security and peace of the Khelat territory be considered as well as the tranquillity of the British border. The Government has a direct interest in the security of the important roads which pass through Khelat territory, and their maintenance in the hands of a strong and well disposed Chief. Unless the British Government continues its support to the Khan of Khelat, he will be unable to maintain his position, and the country will fall into a state of anarchy, the battle-ground of numerous petty chiefs, and there will be no one across our border whose friendship would be worth acceptance, or whose influence would suffice to keep open the most important commercial and military road on the North-western frontier.

11. Such being the views of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor and Sir William Merewether, and which, it is understood, are shared by the Government of India, it appeared absolutely necessary that the management of frontier affairs in their relation to the Murree and Boogtee tribes should be in the hands of one officer only, who should consider the requirements of the Punjab, Sinde, and Khelat together, and be able to maintain a consistent policy towards the frontier tribes. The experiment of independent action by the Political Superintendent of Upper Sinde and the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan has been tried for several years, and though, from one point of view, successful, could hardly be pronounced so when the question is considered in its entirety, and the interests of the Punjab, Sinde, and Khelat assumed to be one and the same, which they undoubtedly are.

12. His Honor and the Commissioner in Sinde accordingly propose that the whole direction of the relations with the Murree and Boogtee tribes be placed in the hands of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sinde Frontier, and that the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan qúa the above-named tribes, be under the orders of the Political Superintendent, and not under the orders of the Commissioner of the Derajat, who will be relieved of all responsibility, so far as our political relations with these tribes are concerned. It would appear evident that if the political control is placed in the hands of one officer only, the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad, from his standing in the service and experience, must be the officer selected. The Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan has managed the tribes in the interests of the tranquillity of the Punjab border with great ability and success, which is readily admitted by the Commissioner in Sinde; and although he is now prepared to be placed under the orders of the Political Superintendent, it is by no means desirable nor intended that the interference of the latter officer should extend to matters of petty detail. His control will be general, and only such as to secure a uniform and consistent policy of management. The acquiescences of both Colonel Phayre, the Political Superintendent, and Captain Sandeman, the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, in the proposed arrangement, and their conviction that it will at once dispose of many of the difficulties which have given so much trouble, and have formed the subject of so much correspondence, are in the opinion of his Honour and the Commissioner in Sinde strong arguments in favour of its adoption.

13. The arrangements agreed upon by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and the Commissioner in Sinde for the pacification of the Murrees and Boogtees, and securing the tranquillity of the border and of Khelat territory, are detailed in the letter of Sir W. Merewether dated 26th January 1870, to the Government of Bombay, and which was submitted for the consideration of his Excellency the Viceroy in letter No. 249, dated the 16th July last, of the Government, Bombay. In these proposals of the Commissioner in Sinde the Lieutenant-Governor concurs, and, believing that they will have the desired and anticipated results, he would recommend them for sanction. These proposals are, in short, to take into pay certain of the Murree and Boogtee chiefs with their followers. With the object of strengthening the Khan of Khelat, the service would be given and the allowances made in his name; but in order to secure the due payment of the sums, and to prevent dispute and difficulty, the actual disbursements would be made at Jacobabad by the Political Superintendent and the Khan of Khelat's officers. The quotum allotted to the Punjab sections of the tribe would, in the same manner, be paid by the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan. For the allowances thus given the tribes would be bound to maintain horsemen, to keep open communications, and to abstain from all plundering in the territories of the British Government or of the Khan of Khelat. Should they in any place or in any direction break this condition, and commit outrages, their whole allowances would be liable to stoppage.

14. The Lieutenant-Governor and the Commissioner in Sinde consider that without an arrangement such as that proposed, it is altogether vain to expect the tribes to remain quiet. The strong administration within British territory may, with difficulty, and by the exercise of constant vigilance, preserve the peace of the border, but these wild tribes will then turn to other and easier fields of plunder and inflict, in the Kutchi and the Bolan, upon British interests, injury as great though less direct. By taking the tribes into pay, by giving them a direct interest in the preservation of order, can their pacification alone be expected. Plundering has been the profession of these people so long, and peaceful occupations have been so long neglected, that it is unreasonable to expect them to abstain from plundering unless some inducement which they can understand is offered them.

15. It would not be reasonable to insist upon the Khan of Khelat coercing the Murrees and Boogtees in consideration of the subsidy he receives, nor would it be of the slightest use to make such a demand. The subsidy does not more than cover the losses sustained by the Khan in the low tariff of charges levied under the treaty on goods taken through Khelat territory, and he is quite unable, without further aid from Government, to subsidize or reduce to order the frontier tribes. Satisfactory arrangements cannot be made without some expense; but this must fairly be borne by the British Government, and will be repaid in increased commerce and reduction of military expenditure upon border expeditions. The change is not altogether a new one, but is a resuscitation in another form and in a reduced amount of the subsidy granted the Khan for the purpose of keeping in order the turbulent tribes on the border, and the withdrawal of which, however just, appears to have had a very unfortunate result on the tranquillity of Khelat.

16. The amount asked for by Sir William Merewether in the letter above quoted was Rupees 43,320 per annum, which sum included Rupees 11,280 for the Punjab frontier. But no additional sanction for the Punjab is required, and the amount for which the sanction of the Government of India is asked is consequently only Rupees 32,040 for charges on the Sinde frontier, including Kutchi and the Bolan Pass.

17. It is at the same time necessary to state that the present expenditure on the Punjab border in allowance to the border tribes, Murrees, Boogtees, Khetrans, and Haddianis, amounts to about the same sum as is now asked for the Sinde border, viz., Rupees 32,400; but the greater portion of this has been raised locally, and only Rupees 7,920 has been required annually from imperial funds. These local funds, it is believed can continue to supply the money needed under the new arrangements without any assistance from the Imperial Treasury.

18. The two local sources from which the funds are drawn are the salt contract and the tirni, or grazing tax.

The former of these previous to the arrangements of 1867, by which the hills were opened to trade, was ordinarily sold for Rupees 900 for a term of three years. The subject of the contract was the earth salt manufactured in the plains. When the hills were opened up the contract sold for a term of three years for about Rupees 22,000, and the increase in the amount of the contract proceeds, which was solely due to the arrangements concluded with the tribes and the payments made them, was expended by the Deputy Commissioner in maintaining the arrangements. Rupees 7,200 a year is expended from this source on the pay of troopers, the balance received being credited as miscellaneous revenue.

It would be more regular and satisfactory were the total proceeds from the salt contract credited to Government, and a grant of Rupees 7,200 a year made from Imperial revenues to meet the cost of horsemen entertained; and such an arrangement may appear to the Government of India preferable to that now in force.

19. From the grazing tax, which is variable in amount, but which may be expected in the future to average Rupees 18,000, a sum of Rupees 17,280 is paid for the service of 72 horsemen.

This tax was recently increased in the Dera Ghazee Khan District with special reference to the arrangements now in question, and the increase sanctioned by the Government of India, the actual disposition of the money being one of the questions deferred for the consideration of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor during the present tour.

20. The amount, therefore, requiring the present sanction of the Government of India to complete the proposed arrangements, and leaving the greater portion of the Punjab charges to be met, as at present, from local resources, is Rupees 32,000, which the Lieutenant-Governor and the Commissioner in Sinde earnestly trust his Excellency the Viceroy may be pleased to sanction in the manner and for the objects proposed in the letter of the Commissioner in Sinde, No. 52, dated 26th January 1870. If this is done, and if his Excellency in Council agrees to the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan being placed in questions relating to the Murree and Boogtee tribes under the orders of the Political Superintendent of Upper Sinde, the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor and Sir William Merewether trust that the difficulties and dangers arising from divided authority and inconsistent policy will cease, and that quiet will be maintained both on the British border and in Khelat. It is, moreover, hoped that early intimation of sanction having been accorded may be conveyed, as it is very desirable that arrangements should be made and the Kutchi visited in company with the Khan of Khelat, who is now in Kutchi, but is not expected to remain there very long.

21. In conclusion, I am directed to state that the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor and the Commissioner of Sinde, after full deliberation, have decided to submit to his Excellency no joint representation on the subject of the internal condition of the state of Khelat and the relation of the Khan with his subordinate Chiefs and Sirdars. The Lieutenant-Governor and Sir William Merewether have felt that, in abstaining from any recommendations on this subject, they best follow the instructions of the Government of India, which only desired that their views and decisions should be recorded where it would be possible to draw from them some practical conclusion. But this is impossible with regard to the internal affairs of Khelat. The direction of the political relations of the State having rested entirely with the Sinde authorities, under the orders of the Bombay Government, the Government of the Punjab has never been in possession of information which could enable it to understand clearly the position of affairs. The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor is consequently unwilling, on imperfect information, to commit himself to views which, were the whole circumstances of the case known to him, he might have occasion to modify or abandon.

No. 7.

No. 412P., dated Fort William, 24th February 1871.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

No. 36.110, dated 4th February 1871.

With reference to the letter from this Office No. 2123P., dated 6th December 1870, I am directed by the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council to forward a copy of a letter from the Secretary to Government, Punjab, which contains a full report of the conference lately held between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Commissioner in Sinde, and to state that his Excellency in Council would be glad to be favoured with the views of the Bombay Government on the proposals therein made, viz.—

1st.—That the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan should be placed, as regards the management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, under the orders of the Political Superintendent of the Sinde Frontier.

2nd.—That in addition to the sums now spent in entertaining levies of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, a further sum of Rs. 32,040 be given for additional levies to be entertained and paid in the name of the Khan of Khelat by the Political Superintendent of Upper Sinde.

2. His Excellency in Council is quite prepared to sanction the first proposal; but before agreeing to the second, he wishes the question to be carefully considered by the Bombay Government, and to be favoured with the opinion of his Excellency the Governor in Council as soon as may be convenient.

3. It appears to his Excellency in Council that this proposal is virtually a revival in another form of a subsidy to the Khan in addition to the subsidy of Rs. 50,000 paid under the Treaty of 1854. His Excellency in Council is unable to find in the correspondence relating to the negotiation of the Treaty, or in the papers relating to the extra subsidy guaranteed in 1859 and subsequently stopped, anything to countenance the idea which appears to be entertained by the local authorities, and to have first found expression in Sir William Merewether's letter of 11th September 1868 that the subsidy was intended as compensation to the Khan for loss of revenue sustained by the tariff of 1854. On the contrary, it was given on condition of the faithful fulfilment by the Khan year by year of his Treaty obligations, and among others of his engaging "to prevent "all plundering or other outrages by his subjects within or near British territory; to "protect the passage of merchants to and fro between the British dominions and "Afghanistan, whether by way of Sinde or by way of Soumeeanee or other seaports of "Mekran, and to permit no exactions to be made beyond an equitable duty to be fixed "by the British Government and Meer Nusseer Khan," &c. The subsidy is liable to be suspended if in any year these conditions are not faithfully fulfilled.

4. It seems to be admitted that the Khan has failed to act up to his obligations, not wilfully, but because he lacks the power to fulfil them. To strengthen his hands and preserve the peace of the frontier, the British Government already spend on local levies Rs. 91,800 a year,* in addition to the subsidy paid to the Khan. It is now proposed to increase this expenditure by Rs. 32,040, raising it to Rs. 1,23,840, or nearly 2½ times the subsidy to which it is additional.

*In Sinde	-	Rs. 4,950×12=Rs. 59,400
In Punjab, Imperial Revenue	-	„ 7,920
Salt contract	-	„ 7,200
Grazing tax	-	„ 17,280
			32,400
		Total Rs.	91,800

5. In the opinion of his Excellency in Council it is worthy of serious consideration whether the additional expenditure now proposed should be made in the Khan's name without a corresponding reduction in the amount of subsidy to be paid to him direct, or if it be inexpedient to reduce the subsidy, whether the payment should not be made to the chief tribes directly in the name of the British Government. His Excellency in Council is anxious to do everything that can reasonably be expected for the purpose of strengthening the hands of the Khan and enabling him to consolidate his authority, but he is unable to sanction any course which would impair the responsibility imposed on the Khan by Treaty, or would countenance the notion that the subsidy is granted for any other purposes than those which the Treaty sets forth.

6. His Excellency in Council will come to no final decision on the question till he is in receipt of the deliberate views of the Bombay Government after weighing the considerations above set forth. While anxious to meet the reasonable wishes or expectations of the Khan, to support his dignity and strengthen his power, his Excellency in Council is of opinion that the question must be decided on broader grounds than such personal considerations.

7. You will perceive that no opinion has been offered by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab on the relations of the Khan with his Nobles; as the Lieutenant-Governor did not consider himself to be sufficiently well informed to be able to understand clearly the position of affairs. On this subject as also on the possibility of extending the usefulness of the Muksoodwah Canal in the interests of the tribes bordering on Sinde, his Excellency in Council still awaits the views of the Bombay Government.

No. 8.

No. 2529, dated Bombay Castle, the 14th June 1871.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

WITH reference to the correspondence noted in the margin, I am directed to forward a minute, dated the 10th February last, by his Excellency the Governor, which expresses the views of this Government regarding Khelat affairs.

Government of India letter (Foreign Department) No. 1194, dated the 26th August 1869, and previous correspondence.
Bombay Government letter No. 548, dated the 17th December 1869, and previous correspondence.

Enclosure in No. 8.

Minute by his Excellency the Governor, dated the 10th February 1871.

THE questions brought to notice by these papers are:

(1.) The policy to be pursued towards the State of Khelat, more especially with reference to the relations of the Khan towards his Sirdars.

(2.) The communication addressed to the Government of India by the Ameer of Cabul with regard to the case of Moolla Mahomed.

(3.) The difference of opinion which has occurred between Sir William Merewether and Colonel Phayre and the correspondence that has taken place between those officers.

2. With regard to the latter, whatever may be the views of the Government as to the policy to be pursued as regards the first two questions, nothing can justify the tone of Colonel Phayre's correspondence.

3. At the time when the command on the frontier was, on the representations of General Jacob, separated from the Sindh Division, the Political Superintendent and Commandant Frontier Field Force was, in his political capacity, distinctly made entirely subordinate to the Commissioner in Sindh, and such he has always remained.

4. Colonel Phayre says that none of his predecessors have been addressed by any former Commissioner as he has been addressed and controlled by Sir William Merewether. This may be so; but the reason is that no former Political Superintendent has attempted to establish a policy of his own in direct opposition to his superior, and in this instance there is the less justification for the course Colonel Phayre has pursued, because he was aware that the views of Sir William Merewether had obtained the distinct sanction and approval of the Government.

5. I most willingly acknowledge Colonel Phayre's zeal and singleness of purpose; but he must be reminded that he is subordinate to the Commissioner in Sindh, and cannot be permitted to act on his own opinion in opposition to the clear instructions of his superior.

6. I have refrained hitherto, from regard to Colonel Phayre, from proposing his removal; but I think it would be for the public interest, if, on a fit opportunity, another appointment were found for Colonel Phayre, and his place in Sindh supplied by the selection of another officer. It would be my duty thus to record my disapproval of Colonel Phayre's proceedings and correspondence, even if, upon a full consideration of the events of the last few years in the Khelat frontier, I had found reason to re-consider the opinions I have heretofore expressed as to the policy which should be pursued with reference to Khelat affairs.

7. I have again read over most carefully the whole of the voluminous papers on the subject, and have minutely considered them; and the result is that I am forced to repeat my concurrence in all points with the views of Sir William Merewether.

8. The Government of India remark on the differences of opinion that exist between the Sindh and Punjab authorities as to the relations between the Khan and his Sirdars, and the policy which should be pursued in reference to them. As regards past events or the present state of affairs, as for instance as regards the disposition and loyalty of the chiefs and the ability of the sovereign to control them, I think the greatest weight must clearly be given to the views of officers such as Sir William Merewether and others who are nearer the scene, who have been for years conversant with political events in Khelat, and have been well acquainted with the principal actors in them.

9. As to questions of policy, it is to be borne in mind that the point of view from which this Government must regard the affairs of Khelat necessarily invests them with a greater importance than that which they are likely to possess in the eyes of others. We not only look to the importance of maintaining our frontiers in tranquillity, of preventing border raids and tribal feuds, and of establishing secure routes for trade. Such considerations are doubtless of great importance, and are of common interest to our frontier officers as to the officers of the Punjab Government. To us the position of Khelat with regard to Persia and the ability of the Khan to maintain his frontier intact and secure from Persian encroachments is of paramount concern and daily becomes more important. The considerations which would influence our policy in the one case are not necessarily the same as those which may guide us in the other. Having said this it will be convenient to consider the position and antecedents of the various persons who are brought prominently before us in these papers.

10. The Jam of Beyla in the time of General Jacob was described by him as a sovereign prince with an undoubted right to levy any taxes he may think proper in his own territories, but still as feudatory to the Khan of Khelat, to whom he owes allegiance, military service, and some trifling specific dues. He is now a refugee in British territory, and his State is under the administration of the Khan. His present position is the consequence of his defeat by the Khan's troops in October 1869, when he raised the standard of rebellion in concert with the chief of the Mingul tribe. Of this chief Captain Harrison writes that Beyla affairs went on in a peaceful and uninterrupted manner until the present Jam's accession. During the last ten years he has done everything he possibly could to weaken the Khan's government, and to give an idea of the frequency of these occurrences, it is mentioned that the Jam organized three forces against the Khan in twelve months. It may be said that he has for years been at the bottom of every disturbance in Beloochistan, that he was an avowed pretender to the throne, and to secure his objects on every occasion united himself to the declared enemies, foreign or domestic, of his sovereign. Such a man is justly visited with the confiscation of his States and deposition from authority, and he ought not to be permitted to return to Beloochistan.

11. I would say in passing that the reports so industriously disseminated, and which Colonel Phayre seems to have adopted, of the oppression and violence exercised by the Khan's officers and troops in Beyla, appear to be without any foundation. The plunder and violence to which the inhabitants were subject after the flight of the Jam were, it is shown, committed by his own adherents, and at his own instigation, and tranquillity and order seem to have been promptly restored by the Khelat commander.

12. The chief in whose favour Colonel Phayre is most earnest in his representations is Moolla Mahomed. This chief was concerned in the rebellion of 1863, when the Khan was suddenly attacked by the Sirdars in his camp at Gundava and cut down by his cousin Shere Dil Khan, who was then placed on the throne. He next appears as a warm supporter of the Khan, when he was reinstated on the throne in 1864, after the assassination of his cousin, but in March 1865 he made common cause with Taj Mahomed and attempted an insurrection in Kutchee having for its object the assassination of the Khan and placing his infant son on the throne. The insurrection, however, was put down. Moolla Mahomed fled to Candahar, and his estates were confiscated. Of this period, Sir H. Green writes that from the time Taj Mahomed was secured, and that Sirdar Moola Mahomed had fled, the most perfect security reigned throughout Beloochistan.

13. In October 1867 Moolla Mahomed returned from Candahar, with the intention of again creating an insurrection; but being supported only by a few minor chiefs, the attempt was speedily quelled, and he again fled with a few followers to the Murree hills. In December 1868 troubles were again raised by the Jam of Beyla, in which Moolla Mahomed took no part; but a few months afterwards, notwithstanding the advice and instructions of Colonel Phayre, he proceeded with others to Beyla and marched upon Khelat, where a collision was only prevented by the prudence and tact of Captain Harrison. Under the wise guidance of that officer, the Khan offered to restore to the Sirdar his hereditary lands and to forgive the past, with the promise that the lands which had been before granted to him by the Khan himself, but which had been resumed on his rebellion in 1865, should be restored to him upon his continuing to be loyal and well-behaved. The Sirdar, however, refused these temperate conditions, insisted upon the unconditional restoration of all the lands which had been resumed, and ultimately retired to Seebee, from whence, on hearing of the defeat and flight of his former confederate, the Jam, he again fled to the Murree hills.

14. He has since made an appeal, to which I shall presently advert, to the Ameer of Cabul, in which, in derogation of the rights of his own sovereign, he says that Beloochistan has always been subject to Afghanistan, and all rules and regulations for it have always been framed by that kingdom.

15. Of the minor Chiefs, Alla Dina Koord, Adam Khan Bungoolzye, and the Raisanee Chief next in rank to Moolla Mahomed, it is unnecessary to say more than that they submitted to the authority of the Khan, and were told that they might return to their lands, and they are now enumerated by Captain Harrison among those who are well disposed towards his Highness.

16. Azaad Khan, of Kharan, although his name figures frequently in the history of Khelat affairs, can scarcely be called a dependent of Khelat. His connexion with the State is mainly owing to his being allied by marriage to the late Khan, on the strength of which he entertains pretensions to the Khanate. He may be rather considered, however, as a semi-independent chief, a restless intriguer, who has at one time acknowledged the authority of the Shah, and at another professed himself subordinate to Candahar. He has allied himself with the enemies of the Khan, and must take the consequences of defeat.

17. It is necessary to distinguish only one other Chief, Sirdar Noordeen of Wud, Chief of the Minguls. He appears to have been concerned in every attempt to subvert the authority of the Khan that has occurred since the death of Nusseer Khan. It does not appear to be alleged that he has any particular grievance to complain of, and his disaffection seems to have arisen chiefly from his connexion with the Jam of Beyla. After his defeat in 1868 he fled to Candahar, from which place he does not appear to have yet returned.

18. As regards the remaining Chiefs of Beloochistan, it appears from the report of Captain Harrison that only eight Chiefs, of whom five belong to the Mingul tribe, are found to take part with Moolla Mahomed, while a list is given of 51, including Moolla Mahomed's brother, who are well disposed towards the Khan and submit to his authority.

19. The Khan himself is spoken of, on coming to the throne, as a lad of weak intellect. This appears to have been a hasty judgment, based upon his want of education and his long seclusion in the harem, which no doubt unfitted him on his first accession to power to deal with the turbulent people he had to govern.

20. He is since described by Sir H. Green as being of a capricious and unstable character, and Sir William Merewether speaks of him more than once as an unsatisfactory ruler.

21. It must be observed, however, that he has had the wisdom to select and give his entire confidence to a most able minister, described by Sir William Merewether as one of the most true and honest men in Beloochistan, whose appointment was warmly approved by General Jacob, and of whom Sir H. Green has said that no better selection could have been made.

22. It is recorded of the Khan by Sir H. Green that from the time of his accession to the throne not a single chief of any description has been put to death by his order or by that of any of his people in authority, although few princes have had the provocation he has had to put up with. Accusations have been made against him of having removed his enemies out of his way by assassination; but, apart from the fact that such charges are invariably made under Oriental Governments whenever any one of eminence may happen to die, in the two prominent instances of Taj Mahomed and the attack on Sirdar Dina Koord, subsequent investigation has brought to light nothing to show that the accusation had any foundation. Whatever his other faults may be, the Khan may be considered a temperate ruler, who has shown himself clement in the hour of success and invariably willing and anxious to be guided by our advice. On the whole he may be considered, I think, a favourable specimen of an oriental sovereign, and quite as good as any other with whom we have to deal. It is always possible that he may be led into acts or to the adoption of a policy that might be disapproved or condemned by us, but nothing is so likely to lead to such a result as the manifestation by our chief political authority on the frontier of a ceaseless hostility to his Government and the encouragement of those who have for years been bent on the subversion of his authority.

23. I fail to see in the circumstances now detailed any claim the chiefs named can have for our interference, even if the Khan had treated them with severity, after they had risen in rebellion against him. No doubt the Khan would be stronger if he had the united support of all his feudatories, and it is a proper exercise of our influence to counsel moderation in his dealing with them. Such advice has been given and followed. But Colonel Phayre seems to consider that the chiefs have rights which it is our duty to see maintained, and he quotes from despatches written at various times by General Jacob in support of his views. But the state of affairs in General Jacob's time, or even a few years ago, was very different from what it is now. In truth the change appears to be taking place in Beloochistan of which history gives so many examples in the old world, when feudal relations between a sovereign and his chiefs are, from force of circumstances, from the growing power of the sovereign, from his ability to maintain a regular force, and in consequence to suppress rebellion, succeeded by a regime in which the power of the sovereign becomes paramount and his feudatories take the diminished rank of powerful subjects. I do not believe it to be our policy to prevent this result. These papers show what the inevitable consequence must be of the continuance of feudal relations among an unruly and armed population.

24. The slightest provocation, personal or political, has been the signal for immediate rebellion. Sir H. Green writes that "while much of the ill-feeling against the Khan is "doubtless caused by his capricious and unstable character, his chiefs, by the unreason-"ableness of their demands and the insolence of their conduct towards him, render any "permanent settlement of their differences most difficult. His power over them is "slight, and although their lands are held by feudal tenure, any attempt made by his "Highness, even to enforce the extradition of a culprit, leads to their banding together "and defying his authority." In more than one instance in these papers we find a chief who has been unsuccessful in his rebellion inviting the interference of a foreign power, the latest example of which may be seen in the case of Moolla Mahomed, who declares all Beloochistan to be subject to the ruler of Cabul, as Azaad Khan had before acknowledged the supremacy at one time of Candahar, at another of Persia.

25. Is this a state of things which we should seek to perpetuate? It appears to be undoubted that not many years ago the principal Chiefs claimed, and perhaps were entitled to, a voice in matters affecting the general state. It would, perhaps, be advantageous if the relations between the Khan and Sirdars were such that he applied to them for their advice in matters of grave importance, but that is a very different thing from our recognising and attempting to enforce a claim to share in the administration. I believe that nothing is more embarrassing than that we should thus tie ourselves down to one unvarying principle of action in cases such as this. The circumstances of the people with whom we have to deal are changing every day, and our relations change too, and it is the height of unwisdom to stereotype our policy with reference to them. We have numerous examples of this. In past times we have entered into guarantees in many instances that rights then existing should be preserved, and thus we find ourselves now bound to maintain a state of things inconsistent with the altered conditions of the country, and which, if we had now to consider our position, we should never dream of establishing. Our guarantees in Kutch and Katteewar are instances of this, are sources of embarrassment now, and are not unlikely to be still more embarrassing hereafter.

26. With reference to the Khelat nobles, Colonel Phayre does not claim that they have an actual guarantee from us, but he deals with the question as if they virtually were entitled to one. In my opinion we must accept the state of affairs which is being gradually developed in Beloochistan, and while I would not ignore and put out of consideration the ancient relations that existed in former times between the Khan and his nobles, because they undoubtedly must colour and influence to a certain extent popular feeling among the tribes, I believe that to refer to those relations as establishing what Colonel Phayre calls constitutional rights would be retrogressive and impolitic.

27. I believe that while our Agent should be instructed to lose no opportunity of counselling moderation and conciliation, and earnestly and urgently impressing on the Khan the importance of such a policy, we should allow events to take their course and the solution which appears impending to be accomplished, which will consolidate the power of the Khan and establish his supremacy. Twenty years ago our policy might have been different, but twenty years have changed the relations of parties, as well as the external relations of the Khelat State.

28. I must not, however, be understood to speak confidently of the result of the Khan's policy towards his feudatories. Any interference from outside (such as Colonel Phayre's if persisted in), the appearance on the scene of some man of marked force of character, or some unexpected event may alter the aspect of affairs. In anticipating the establishment of the Khan's supremacy on a firmer basis, I speak only of what appears probable and what it is not our interest to prevent.

29. The policy therefore to be pursued seems to be that recommended by Sir W. Merewether and already approved by this Government, to acknowledge no authority but that of the Khan, to recognise the chiefs in no other capacity than his subjects, to abstain from all interference otherwise than by counselling forbearance and consideration, and to refrain from any recognition of feudal rights, which it is neither for our advantage nor the advantage of the country to perpetuate.

30. As regards the arrangements which should be entered into with regard to the Chiefs of the Murrees, we have already on more than one occasion expressed our views to the Government of India. To those views I still adhere, and would only add that I think it essential that all our communications with the tribes should be made by one officer, and looking to the importance of the political relations of this Government with Khelat, that officer should be, in my opinion, our Political Superintendent at Jacobabad.

31. All payments should be made in the Khan's name by his agent in the presence of a British officer.

32. It remains only to consider the reply which should be given to the Ameer of Cabul. It should be clear and unmistakeable that we recognise the Khan of Khelat as an independent sovereign with whom we have treaties of alliance, but with whose proceedings we do not desire to interfere beyond giving him friendly advice; that we should always counsel clemency and moderation in his dealings with his chiefs; but that in the case of Moolla Mahomed, who had been engaged in repeated rebellions against his sovereign and had refused to accept the moderate terms on which pardon for his past offences and restoration of his hereditary property was offered, we see no reason to disapprove of the Khan's conduct. Finally, that we do not doubt that on these grounds the Ameer will concur with us in discountenancing appeals which, if entertained, could only lead to complications with a state which, though small, we desire to uphold, and to whose independence the British Government attaches much importance.

(Signed) W. R. S. V. FITZGERALD.

P.S.—Since writing this memorandum I have had an opportunity of seeing Sir H. Green. I gather from him that on one point to which I omitted to refer, viz., the possible embarrassment that might arise to us from the entertainment by the Khan of the small body of half-disciplined troops referred to by Colonel Phayre, he entirely differs from the views of that officer. They could never, in his opinion, be or become an embarrassment to us, much less formidable. They are of service to the Khan as against those who have no troops with the slightest discipline whatever, but against any British Indian force they are not worth thinking of.

No. 9.

No. 2813, dated Bombay Castle, the 28th June 1871.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. LePoer Wynne's letter, No. 1,180 P., dated the 8th instant, and in reply to refer the Government of India to the letter from this Office, No. 2529, of the 14th idem, which conveys the opinion of this Government on the representations of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Khan of Khelat (vide paragraph 32 of his Excellency the Governor's minute).

No. 10.

No. 3167, dated Bombay Castle, the 15th July 1871.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I AM directed by the Right Honourable the Governor in Council to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 24th February last, No. 412 P., forwarding a copy of a letter from the Secretary to the Government for the Punjab, containing a full report of the conference lately held between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Commissioner in Sindh, in accordance with the instructions conveyed in your letter, No. 2123 P., dated 6th December 1870.

2. The Government of India have requested the opinion of this Government on two proposals made at the conference regarding the management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, viz., first, that the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan should be placed, as regards the management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, under the orders of the Political Superintendent of the Sindh frontier. It is observed that his Excellency the Viceroy in Council is prepared to sanction this proposal; and I am directed to state that the Right Honourable the Governor in Council entirely concurs* as to the propriety of the proposed arrangement.

* Vide paragraphs 10 and 11 of Bombay Government Resolution, No. 1712 of 3rd June 1870.

3. The second proposal is that, in addition to the sums now spent in entertaining levies of the Murree and Boogee tribes, a further sum of Rs. 32,040 be given for additional levies to be entertained and paid in the name of the Khan of Khelat by the Political Superintendent of Upper Sindh.

4. Besides the financial objections to so large an increase of expenditure the Government of India have noted several points for consideration, namely (a) whether a corresponding reduction should not be made in the Khan's subsidy; (b) whether if the Khan's subsidy be not reduced it would not be expedient to pay the tribes directly in the name of the British Government; (c) whether the proposal may not impair the responsibility imposed on the Khan by treaty; and (d) whether it would not countenance the notion that the Khan's subsidy is granted for any other purposes than those which the treaty sets forth.

4. After weighing the considerations noticed by the Government of India, his Excellency in Council is of opinion that the subsidy granted to the Khan under the Treaty of 1854 should not be reduced. The ground for withholding the subsidy would be if the Khan had not (vide Article VII.) "faithfully performed" the conditions of the treaty. But the local authorities report that he has done his best to keep these tribes in order. The task is beyond his power, and as he has apparently done all he can reasonably be expected to do towards fulfilling the conditions of the treaty, it would hardly be fair to inflict upon him the penalty. It would also not be expedient to adopt a measure which would weaken his power for good, while it would no doubt tend to impair the friendly feeling which now exists.

6. With regard to the point (b), his Excellency in Council has already expressed his opinion that the payments of these tribes, which have been hitherto regarded as Khelat subjects, should be made in the name of the Khan. The services for which they are entertained are almost entirely to be performed in Khelat territory. And while, on the one hand, no special advantage to Government appears to be derivable from direct payments, on the other hand, the authority of the Khan will be consolidated if these tribes are practically taught to look to him as their lawful sovereign. Direct payments would tend to reverse the policy, which has been acted on for many years, under which these tribes have been regarded as the Khan's subjects.

7. His Excellency in Council does not anticipate any practical inconvenience on account of the matters noticed in points (c) and (d). But, if necessary, the Khan could be formally addressed on the subject, so that no possibility of future misapprehension should exist.

8. With reference, however, to the remarks contained in paragraph 3 of the letter now under reply, to the effect that the local authorities appear to entertain the idea that the subsidy of Rs. 50,000 was intended as compensation to the Khan for loss of revenue sustained by the tariff of 1854, it is to be observed that in the report of the conference (paragraph 9) it is distinctly recognised that the Khan is by treaty bound not only to reduce the tariff, but also to protect the trade routes, and prevent plundering. The same principle is laid down in paragraph 46 of Sir William Merewether's letter, No. 52, of 26th January 1870.* The local authorities do not apparently deny the liability of the Khan to prevent outrages. But they point out (vide paragraph 15 of the conference report) that the subsidy does not more than cover the loss caused by the reduction in the tariff; so that the position of the Khan as to ability to control the tribes is not materially improved by the existing treaty.

* Copy forwarded to the Government of India with Bombay Government letter, No. 249, dated the 16th July 1870.

9. With regard to the financial aspect of the case, this Government were disposed to think that a smaller outlay than that now proposed might have been sufficient, especially at the beginning. But as the matter has been fully discussed at the conference by the officers best acquainted with the details of the subject, his Excellency in Council will not propose that the amount shall be reduced. The possible reduction of expenditure in future years should, however, not be lost sight of; and the Political Agent at Khelat should report from time to time what measures have been taken to induce the Murrees and Boogtees to settle to peaceful occupations in Khelat territory.

10. The special report from the Commissioner in Sindh, regarding the Muksoodwah canal is awaited, and will be forwarded on receipt to the Government of India.

No. 11.

No. 3969, dated Bombay Castle, the 24th August 1871.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I AM directed to forward herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of correspondence from the Political Superintendent, Upper Sindh frontier, regarding the state of affairs at Khelat, received under endorsement from the Commissioner in Sindh.

Enclosure 1 in No. 11.

No. 682, dated Camp Murree, the 12th July 1871.

From Captain R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazee Khan, to the Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sindh.

HEARING of the very serious raids that have lately been made by the Murree clan into Kutchee in Khelat, and Kurrum Khan, the Chief of the Bijaranee Murrees being with me here in camp just after the late one, in which it is said 45 men were killed and 1,600 head of cattle carried off, I took the opportunity of ascertaining how it was that he and his section of the tribe took such a prominent part against his Highness the Khan. As his replies to my questions put to him in general conversation may prove of value, I have the honour to submit them for your information.

2. Kurrum Khan declares the principal reason is because the Khan has quarrelled with his chief subjects, the Brahooees, which has weakened his power; that the Murrees knowing this, and having also their own cause of complaint against him still unsettled, that they take the only means they know of to show their resentment. Were it not for these causes, he considered, as far as I could discover from our conversation, that the Murrees would be powerless to raid into the Kutchee did his Highness desire to prevent it.

3. When I say "did his Highness desire to prevent it," I do not write so without well having considered the meaning of the words, for this expression was prominently brought to my notice by Kurrum Khan using it repeatedly. I desired him to explain his meaning. He replied, "The Khan does not desire to quarrel with us outright; for now that he is at enmity with the Brahooees, he may have to come to us for aid any day."

4. I grant you that the position is a difficult one to understand; but as the intricacies of the hill politics are well known to you, I have thought it worth while to place the above particulars before you for your information.

No. 1162, dated Jacobabad, the 22nd July 1871.

Memorandum by Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sindh Frontier.

COPY submitted to the Commissioner in Sindh for information with reference to Political Superintendent's report, No. 1107, dated 13th instant.

2. This report is spontaneous on Captain Sandeman's part, but it confirms what the Political Superintendent had himself recently heard respecting the Khan's unpopularity in Kutchee after his recent long visit there.

3. Nawab Mahomed Khan was, however, mentioned as the main cause of it; all in consequence of his illiberality towards the people. The Khan's own avarice has, however, been the subject of general comment, and many stories about it are flying about the country, which, as is usual in such cases, are no doubt exaggerated. This trait in the Khan's character is well known, and would not have been referred to now had not the cause of recent excesses in Kutchee been touched upon by Captain Sandeman.

Enclosure 2 in No. 11.

Dated Kurrachee, the — August 1871.

From Colonel W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sindh, to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sindh Frontier.

In acknowledging the receipt of Captain Sandeman's letter, No. 682, of the 12th July, forwarded under your endorsement, No. 1162, of the 22nd idem, and your remarks on the subject of Captain Sandeman's letter, I have the honour to inform you that the conduct of Kurrum Khan, the chief of the Bijaranee Murrees, in openly vaunting the attacks by members of a portion of the Murree tribe, will be taken into consideration on receipt of the orders of the Government of India on the conference held in February last at Mittunkote, and which may shortly be expected. At the same time I have to request that you will cause it to be intimated to the Murree chief, Kurrum Khan, Bijaranee, that his openly boasting of deliberate opposition of his clan to the sovereign of the country is viewed with strong disapprobation, and, unless discontinued, as well as the outrageous acts of the clan, will infallibly cause the withdrawal from him and them of the favour and countenance of the British authorities.

2. It would have been more correct and more in accordance with the relations existing between the British Government and his Highness the Khan of Khelat, if Captain Sandeman had at the time remarked as above to Kurrum Khan; for it must be remembered that whatever grievances the Murree tribe may fancy they have, they are the subjects of his Highness the Khan; and it is not in accordance with the policy which has been approved by Government, nor is it just to a ruler with whom we are in alliance, that openly proclaimed opposition to that ruler's power, and the declaration of premeditated outrages within his dominions, should be heard by British authorities without immediate expression of marked disapprobation.

3. Unfortunately Beloochistan has for a long time been disturbed by internal dissensions, and it is only very recently that his Highness the Khan has been able to assert his authority in a more complete manner than in the earlier part of his reign. It therefore behoves all officers on the frontier having communication with subjects of the Khan to use their best endeavour to support him in the restoration of order, and the establishment of a firm and well-constituted government. I need hardly point out to you both that the first essential to this latter is, that the subjects of that government should show a proper sense of respect for, and obedience to, the orders of the ruler, to which action such as that of Kurrum Khan is most directly opposed.

4. I am well assured that the non-notice of Beejar Khan's want of respect towards the Khan, and of the misconduct of the clan members, was an oversight on Captain Sandeman's part; and that after being placed in possession of the above remarks that I may confidently trust to his ready co-operation in so important a matter; I have therefore to request that you will communicate to him copies of these four paragraphs.

5. With regard to the second and third paragraphs of your endorsement, I would observe that when a ruler is restoring peace and order in his country, where hitherto there has been anarchy and confusion, there will necessarily be reports of his having done some unpopular acts; but the greatest care should be taken how these are received, and every endeavour should be made to cause the speakers to recollect that it is their head they are declaiming against, and that their showing discontent only renders his position more difficult, their claims less easy of adjustment, and the restoration of desired quiet more distant. A true and respectful submission of any just claims they may have will assuredly receive due attention from his Highness the Khan; but it as likely as not, considering the state of affairs that has hitherto existed in Kutchee, that claims have been advanced to which there is no valid title, and only careful investigation can prove how far they are just. With this, however, we have nothing directly to do, and I only mention it here to show how necessary it is on the part of our officers to be very careful not to give encouragement to discontent by appearing to receive and attach weight to complaints, the truth or otherwise of which we have no right to inquire into.

6. In respect to Nawab Mahomed Khan, he is his Highness's representative at Jacobabad, and if any specific charges can be brought against him, showing that by his misconduct he is endangering the peace of the frontier, it may then be a question whether the subject should not be laid before Government with a view to his Highness the Khan being addressed as to the propriety of removing him and appointing a more suitable person. But something more than mere rumour will be required before such a course should be adopted.

No. 12.

EXTRACT from the Proceedings of the Government of India in the Foreign Department.

No. 2248 P., dated Simla, the 19th October 1871. READ—The under-mentioned correspondence relative to the future management of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, and the position of the Khan of Khelat and his relations to his Sirdars.

Proceedings, Political A, May 1871, N. 193–196.

From Government of Bombay, dated 14th June 1871, No. 2529.

From Government of Bombay, dated 15th July 1871, No. 3167.

RESOLUTION.—As regards the future management of the above-named tribes, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Commissioner in Sind, at a conference held in the early part of the present year, made two distinct proposals, viz. :—

1st.—That the control of the relations of Government with those tribes should be placed in the hands of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, and that the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, in respect of the said tribes, should be placed under the Political Superintendent, and not under the Commissioner of Derajat, who will be relieved of all responsibility, so far as those relations are concerned. The Viceroy and Governor General in Council entirely approves of this proposal and authorises its being carried into effect.

2ndly.—It was proposed to grant an additional sum of Rs. 32,040 a year for the entertainment of certain horsemen of the Murree and Boogtee tribes for purposes of protection. As to the mode of paying this amount three distinct proposals have been made (a) that it should be paid to the Khan of Khelat; (b) that if additional sums are considered necessary for preserving the peace of the frontier, they should be paid to the chiefs in the name of the British Government; and (c) that the amount should be handed over to the chiefs in the name of the Khan, and that it should be considered an addition to the subsidy of rs. 50,000 a year, at present paid to the Khan. The last course is that which commends itself to his Excellency in Council, and it will accordingly be recommended to the Financial Department for sanction.

2. But looking to the large sums that are yearly paid for securing the peace of the frontier, and for the protection of trade, and to the small results obtained for this outlay, his Excellency in Council is clearly of opinion that, for the present, this additional amount of Rs. 32,040 shall only be granted for one year, and on the distinct understanding that the whole question, connected as it is with the administration of the Sind and Punjab Frontier, may be taken up shortly and discussed in all its bearings.

3. As regards the relations of the Khan of Khelat with his nobles, the Governor General in Council concurs generally in the views expressed by his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in his minute dated the 10th February last, paragraphs 8 to 29. The Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, and the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan should shape their attitude to the subjects of the Khan accordingly.

As regards the petition of Moolla Mahomed, his Excellency in Council considers that after the lapse of this interval of time it is not needful to make any communication regarding it to the Ameer of Cabul.

ORDER.—Ordered, that a copy of this resolution and the papers read, in original, be forwarded to the Financial Department for the purpose indicated in paragraphs 2 and 3.

(True extract.)

(Signed) C. U. AITCHISON,
Secretary to the Government of India.

No. 13.

EXTRACT from the Proceedings of the Government of India in the Financial Department.

No. 4603, dated Simla, the 21st October 1871. READ—Extract from Proceedings in the Foreign Department, No. 2248 P. of the 19th instant, recommending the grant for one year only of an additional sum of Rs. 32,040 for the entertainment of certain Murree and Boogtee levies for the purpose of protecting the Punjab and Sind frontier, in addition to the subsidy of Rs. 50,000 a year at present paid to the Khan of Khelat, the amount to be handed over to the Chief in the name of the Khan.

RESOLUTION.—Sanctioned for one year, on the distinct understanding that the whole question of this grant, connected as it is with the administration of the Sind and Punjab frontier, shall be taken up shortly and discussed in all its bearings.

ORDER.—Ordered that a copy of the foregoing Resolution be forwarded to the Foreign Department, and that the original papers received from that Department be returned.

Ordered, also, that a copy of the Resolution be sent to the Accountant General, Bombay, for guidance.

(True extract.)

(Signed) R. H. HOLLINGBERY,
Assistant Secretary to the Government of India,
Financial Department.

No. 14.

No. 2336 P., dated Simla, the 27th October 1871.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to the Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department.

IN forwarding, for the information of the Government of Bombay, a copy of the Resolutions noted in the margin, I am directed, with reference to recent events in Khelat, to request that his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council, before giving effect to the measures now provisionally sanctioned, will take into consideration the expediency or inexpediency of at present making payments to the Murree and Boogtee tribes. If his Excellency in Council decides that the disbursements to the Murree and Boogtee tribes can now be properly made, his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council hopes that the payments will be so arranged that, on the one hand, the British Government will not be committed to taking any part in the struggle now going on in Khelat, and, on the other hand, that the money will not be used to assist any of the Khan's subjects in their rebellion.

Resolution to Financial Department, No. 2248 P., dated 19th October 1871.
Resolution from Financial Department, No. 4603, dated 21st October 1871.

2. I am to request that a general report on the question referred to in paragraph 3 of the Foreign Department resolution of 19th of October, may be submitted within a year from this date.

No. 15.

Government of India. Foreign Department. Political. No. 185.

To His Grace the Duke of Argyll, K.T., Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

MY LORD DUKE, Dated Simla, the 31st October 1871.

WE have the honour to forward for the information of Her Majesty's Government a copy of documents* relative to Khelat affairs, and showing the measures that we have sanctioned for the better management of the tribes on the Sinde and Punjab frontiers. With regard to the lamentable insurrectionary movement in Khelat, we have asked the Commissioner in Sinde whether, in his opinion, it is so serious as to endanger the rule of the Khan. On receipt of his reply we purpose to address your Grace again.

We have, &c.

(Signed) MAYO.
NAPIER OF MAGDALA.
R. TEMPLE.
&c. &c.

---

* Nos. 1 to 14.

No. 16.

No. 5286, dated Bombay Castle, 31st October 1871.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to Government, Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, with Governor General.

I AM directed to forward to you, for submission to the Government of India, the enclosed copies of papers, as per margin, from the Commissioner in Sind, relative to the disturbances in Mustoong and Quettah, in Khelat territory.

Letter from Commissioner in Sind, No. 647, dated the 16th October 1871, with accompaniments.

Enclosure 1 in No. 16.

No. 647, dated Kurrachee, 16th October 1871.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to his Excellency the Right Honourable Sir W. R. Seymour V. FitzGerald, G.C.S.I., Governor and President in Council in Bombay.

IN reference to my telegrams of the 12th instant and to-day, I have the honour to forward herewith copies of reports from Colonel Phayre, Political Superintendent on the frontier, and of Captain Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, with translation of a vernacular letter submitted also by the former.

2. The fact of his Highness the Khan having deputed his Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, with only 200 sowars, leads me to conclude that he does not consider the outbreak of any great importance, and that Captain Harrison's anticipations will prove correct. Two of the sirdars mentioned, Jehangeer Lehree and Moobaruk Khan Sawanee, are members of two of the leading tribes in Sarawan, and therefore of some influence; but unless they are joined by the majority of their clans, which is not mentioned, their proceedings will not have much weight, and the prompt action of the Khan will probably bring the matter to a speedy and favourable issue. The difficulty, however, will be increased should Moolla Mahomed Raisanee appear on the scene from Afghanistan, as is thought likely by the people who wrote from Mustoong.

3. Such disturbances as those now reported will for some time to come be liable to recur, but if quickly met and crushed in the outset by means of the increasing power of his Highness the Khan, it is to be hoped they will happen at longer intervals each time. It is a matter of satisfaction to note that, with the exception of some petty disturbances in Lus Beyla, and an occasional foray by the Murrees into Kutchee, the peace in Beloochistan has been well maintained for the last two years.

4. The Moondahee Murrees being in deliberate opposition to the Khan, it is natural that they should receive all fugitive rebellious Sirdars, such as Alladina Khoord, and that the latter should resort to the Murree Hills when it suits his purpose. But I do not consider that his going there is likely to cause any particular additional difficulty, because the utmost the Murrees would attempt would be raids on Kutchee, which they carry on as it is, and I do not concur in the opinion of Colonel Phayre as to the existence of the feeling mentioned in his sixth paragraph. The majority of the people are, I think, getting wearied of the selfish attempts of these Brahooee Sirdars to excite disturbances, and are becoming less and less inclined to sympathise with them.

5. Our disapproval of such disturbances should on all occasions be clearly and pointedly expressed, and to this I have called Colonel Phayre's attention.

6. I quite agree with Colonel Phayre in what he says in his third paragraph, with regard to the proceedings of the Dhoombkees at Lehree, and have requested him to take an early opportunity of conveying to the Chief of the Dhoombkees the certain disapprobation with which such acts will always be viewed. They only tend to keep up the hostility existing between the tribes of the plain and those of the hills, and provoke reprisals which the former are not from the circumstances always in a position to meet successfully. The course pointed out by Colonel Phayre of acting solely on the defensive and in an energetic way is the one they should alone be encouraged to adopt.

7. The proposals in paragraphs 7 and 8 of Colonel Phayre's letter have already been approved by me by telegram and again by letter. It will have the effect of calming any excitement that may exist and induce the Murrees to be careful how they enter the plains, while there will be no risk of our being involved in any circumstances affecting the general political aspect of affairs in Beloochistan.

Enclosure 2 in No. 16.

No. 1782, dated Jacobabad, 12th October 1871.

From Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, C.B. and K.C.S.I., Commissioner in Sind.

IN continuation to my telegram of this date, I have the honour herewith to forward report No. 73 of 1871 dated 5th October, received this day from the Political Agent, Khelat. I also attach copy of a vernacular letter brought for my perusal this morning by his Highness the Khan's vakeel at Jacobabad.

Vernacular letter from certain inhabitants of Mustoong to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

2. In my letter No. 1746, dated 5th instant, to your address, I made a mistake in saying that about 100 Dhoombkees had gone to join the Murrees from Lehree. It appears that they went to plunder the Murrees in retaliation for raids recently committed by that tribe near Lehree, but as some of the Dhoombkees had not long ago declared that they would either join the Murrees or come into these districts if not protected, I concluded that they had carried their intention of joining the Murrees into execution.

4. It is foolish in them to attempt to retaliate by going into the hills to plunder because the Murrees are far too powerful for them there, but if they showed a good defence in the plains they would have a fair chance unless against overwhelming numbers.

4. As matters now stand the vakeel informed me to-day that the report is current through the country that the rebel Brahooees referred to in Captain Harrison's letter have plundered both Mustoong and Quetta.

5. The immediate cause of the outbreak was connected, it is believed, with the alleged severe treatment of a popular Syud near Moostoong, named Alee Mahomed, who held office under Sheredil Khan, the usurper of the throne of Khelat, a few years ago, but Captain Harrison's next report will clear up this point. I believe, however, that the flight of Sirdar Alladina Khoord to the Murrees with his whole family just before the news of this outbreak transpired indicates that it had been previously planned, though perhaps it took place sooner than was intended.

6. The Moondahee Murrees always sympathize with these Brahooee Sirdars, as indeed the whole border do more or less, and I have felt for some time past that the feeling in their favour would probably find expression sooner or later in something of the kind that has now taken place.

7. At present a good deal of excitement prevails in Kutchee, and if I am permitted to detach a regiment of cavalry to patrol along the border of Eastern Kutchee to Lehree and Bagh, it will, I hope, hold the Murrees in check, and reassure the people of that province, who are in a great fright, and would probably fly into these districts unless supported in the way suggested.

8. Should a regiment go they would not, of course, only patrol in the plains, but protect the people and country by attacking any body of hill marauders they might come across there.

Enclosure 3 in No. 16.

No. 73, dated Khelat, 5th October 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to report for your information, and that of higher authority, that disturbances have occurred in Mustoong and Quetta, but to what extent has not been ascertained.

2. His Highness the Khan received intelligence a day or two ago from Candahar that certain Brahoocees had combined to assassinate him, and that some of his sepoys were implicated.

3. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed proceeds at once with 200 sowars to the scene of disturbance.

4. I do not anticipate any serious result, but will keep you informed of what is going on.

Enclosure 4 in No. 16.

From Moolla Mowladad, Sultan Mahomed, and Mahomed Saleh, to (no name is mentioned in the letter, but titles are as if to his Highness the Khan, apparently written from Mustoong).

THAT Brahooees, Jehangeer Khan Lehree, Wussund Khan, Mahomed Shahee, and Mahomed Syud Khan Soondra, have this day (Wednesday) at 12 A.M., taken possession of Mustoong and seized the Government officer, Nubbee Buksh. We have heard that Moobaruk Khan Shahwani has proceeded to Shaul and will take it this day. We would have brought this to your notice had we been informed of this before. It is only now that we came to know this suddenly. We therefore beg to state that we shall come over there if you order us to do so, or if you send your sowars to this place we shall join them.

It is given out here that Moolla Mahomed, who has heard of the Brahooees' proceedings, will also come.

You are aware that we have our families here. We have no other means than to make ourselves useful to Government. We therefore beg to wait for your instructions in the matter.

If we had received the news mentioned above earlier we would have shed our blood at the doors of Mustoong as in honour bound.

We have written this letter in short through haste and hope to be excused. We know this much about the Government official, but no more.

Enclosure 5 in No. 16.

No. 74, dated Khelat, 6th October 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

WITH reference to my letter of yesterday's date, No. 73, I have the honour to report that as yet no reliable information has been received. It is, however, generally understood that the disturbance has originated through intrigues on the part of Sirdars Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and Noordeen Mingul, and that these chiefs have either arrived or are en route from Candahar. The latter chief, it is said, intends proceeding to Kharan and Nul. Should this be true, I imagine his object will be to create a disturbance in Lus Beyla on Sirdar Meer Khan's behalf.

2. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed will be at Mustoong to-morrow, and a correct report of this disturbance may be expected on the 8th instant.

Enclosure 6 in No. 16.

No. 76, dated Khelat, 8th October 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

IN continuation of former correspondence, I have the honour to report that there is every prospect of the disturbance in Mustoong being speedily quelled. Reports received this morning are to the effect that the Shahgassee had dislodged the opposing party from the water at Gooroo, and that half of the Shawani tribe had returned to their allegiance.

2. Sirdar Jehangeer Lehree and Syud Ali Mahomed, of Mustoong, with others, wished to reopen the disputes of 1869, and sent special messengers to Sirdars Moolla Mahomed, Noordeen, Azaad Khan, and their adherents in Beylah, inviting them to join in this rebellion. His Highness' promptitude will, I believe, thwart the intention of creating a general disturbance in this country.

No. 17.

No. 6000, dated Bombay Castle, 12th December 1871.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of my letter, No. 5286, dated the 31st October last, I am directed to forward to you, for submission to the Government of India, the accompanying copies of further papers, as per margin, from the Commissioner in Sindh, relative to the disturbances at Mustoong and Quetta in Beloochistan.

1. Letter from Commissioner in Sindh, No. 684, dated 24th October 1871, with enclosures.
2. Memorandum from " " 727, " 9th November 1871 "
3. " " " 769, " 2nd " "

Enclosure 1 in No. 17.

No. 684, dated Kurrachee, 24th October 1871.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to his Excellency the Right Honourable Sir W. R. Seymour V. Fitzgerald, G.C.S.I., Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

I have the honour to forward copy of a letter from Colonel Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sindh frontier, No. 1867, dated 19th instant, with accompaniments, and to add the following observations thereon:

2. The first part of the letter would seem to be intended to show that Captain Harrison, the Political Agent at Khelat, had failed to give a sufficiently disastrous account of the result of the commencement of the late disturbances in Northern Beloochistan, but I do not see that this idea is borne out by this correspondence or by what was previously received.

3. Captain Harrison, in his letter, No. 77, of the 10th instant, states that the disturbances at Mustoong had been quelled, "not, however, without a most obstinate resistance "in the open country situated between Kud and Mustoong," and that this "only "terminated when three out of the four ringleaders had fallen." He also mentions the loss on the Shahgassee's side to have included two Sirdars and two officers of the Khan's regular army. The excellent Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, always foremost in his master's cause, was wounded. It appears that the Shahgassee had with him some 200 infantry and two guns, in addition to the 200 sowars before mentioned; also that he was joined by some irregulars, a proportion from Mustoong. A severe fight took place, ending in the Shahgassee obtaining possession of Mustoong, which had been occupied by the rebels. Quetta had been promptly secured by the Khan's Naib there before the rebels could reach it.

4. Captain Harrison does not enter into details, because he either thought it unnecessary, the facts he gave being sufficient to denote the severity of the struggle, or, what is more likely, he was not in possession of any detailed official report, and did not think it advisable to give merely local reports. The native officer's letter quoted by Colonel Phayre affords details, but they could only be what he picked up from hearsay, and may or may not be correct.

5. I have now to notice the tenor of Colonel Phayre's remarks in his seventh to fifteenth paragraphs inclusive, and regret exceedingly to have to draw your Excellency's attention to the very dangerous attitude he still assumes in his persistent adherence to the wrong views he has for the last two years entertained with regard to the policy that should be followed in connexion with the Khelat State. In spite of the clear exposition of the principles which should be followed in our relations with Khelat, as set forth in your Excellency's minute of the 10th February last, copy of which was furnished by me to Colonel Phayre, that officer still adheres to the idea that the chiefs of Beloochistan are systematically oppressed by the Khan; that the latter is universally regarded with extreme disfavour by his chiefs and subjects; and that it is desirable that the interference of the British Government should be exerted in behalf of the chiefs, and pressure brought to bear on the Khan to make him carry out Colonel Phayre's ideas.

6. I need not enlarge on the extreme danger which must follow the entertainment of such views as those held by Colonel Phayre at the present time, much more so of course than any other. It is utterly impossible that his opinions should not be widely known, where all actions or expressions of authorities are so closely watched, as is always the case on a frontier, and have the worst possible effect on the tribes adjacent to the border, as well as on the general community of a state so constituted as that of Beloochistan. Colonel Phayre's telegrams of yesterday, which I had the honour to forward, stated that "the "Jumallies (who resided at Rojan, and near Khyree Gunee, close to Jacobabad) and "other Belooch of the Khan's territory on this border have refused to go against them" (the rebels). I cannot help feeling that this is the effect of the above mentioned, and that had a different course been followed by the chief authority on the frontier than he has systematically adhered to, that the Belooch tribes near us would have been the first to rally round their sovereign when danger threatened.

7. The regiment of Sind horse being sent across the Kutchee was a move in the right direction; but it was scarcely sufficient to do away with the ill effects of the supposition that the British authorities on the spot were adverse to the maintenance of the Khan's power.

8. It is difficult to understand clearly what Colonel Phayre would wish the Khan to do. In former correspondence he complained of the Khan never leaving his citadel (Khelat), and now that he has spent a whole cold weather in Kutchee, and been absent from his capital for eleven months, he discovers apparent reason for blame in the Khan's proceedings on this tour.

9. When a district has not been visited by the ruler for some time, and tenures and supposed rights have to be inquired into, it would naturally follow that all should not be contented with decisions passed. But I hold that even the slightest attention to any expressions of discontent should be most carefully avoided, indeed, promptly discouraged, as matters with which we have no concern, and which should only be considered by the king of the country, to whom his subjects should be enjoined solely to look.

10. That Beloochistan will be liable to a recurrence of disturbances as long as the fugitive rebel Sirdars are at liberty to incite them may be reasonably expected, but the frequency and duration of such will certainly depend very greatly on the manner in which they are regarded by the authorities of the power which immediately adjoins that state. It therefore becomes all the more necessary that such disturbances should only meet with immediate and marked disapprobation, and the chiefs and people of Beloochistan be led to understand that breaches of the peace in their country will never receive the slightest countenance from the British Government.

11. I regret exceedingly to have to point out that all Colonel Phayre's proposals are exactly contrary to the above principles, and, as I before remarked, from it being impossible that his views should not be well and widely known, his entertaining such must tend to bring about the most undesirable results, and fail to produce that peace and prosperity which it is the chief object to secure for Beloochistan.

12. Colonel Phayre invariably brings forward everything that he hears in disparagement of the Khan of Khelat, and as this will all be obtained from native sources, the very fact of his accepting it must have a most injurious effect. On the other hand, with him, the rebel chiefs and discontented subjects are at once assumed to be persecuted and trampled on.

13. I am at a loss to understand how Colonel Phayre can write in his ninth paragraph that the disturbances were "not originated on this occasion by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed or Noordeen," when it had been distinctly stated by Captain Harrison in one of his former letters that it was "generally understood that the disturbance has originated "through intrigues on the part of Sirdars Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and Noordeen "Mingul; and again in his letter, No. 78, of the 10th instant, he reports "that his "Highness has received information from Candahar that Sirdars Moolla Mahomed "Raisanee and Noordeen Mingul had been in communication with Sirdar Jehangeer "Lehree, one of the principal leaders who was killed, and Syud Ali Mahomed, and "that they contemplated returning to their country as soon as they had communi-"cated their intention to his Highness the Ameer." All previous history of the country would at once lead to the conclusion that these fugitive chiefs would be certain to be engaged, especially as the outbreak commenced in the district of Sarawan, of which Moolla Mahomed was formerly the head, and where it would be naturally supposed there would be best prospects of success. Colonel Phayre, however, ignores Captain Harrison's official reports, and is not guided by previous events, but, as suitable to his own preconceived ideas, considers that the outbreak was originated "by other chiefs, "who no doubt have given expression to the feeling which I have been informed now "pervades a large part of the Brahooee nation, viz., that it is better to die than any "longer submit to acts of oppression and injustice worse than death." The above is simple hearsay and assumption, while the latter part might easily be the hasty expression of some discontented person or section, which, however, should not be lightly accepted or have any weight attached to it.

14. The latest intelligence submitted by Colonel Phayre is from Bagh, and needs confirmation, the alarm of the people there leading them to imagine an immediate approach of the rebels. The report is, the latter are plundering at the foot of the Bolan. It is possible some may have come down the Bolan, but, if they have any fixed plan and are still in any collected force, it would be more likely that they would remain above the pass until joined by Mod[illegible]a Mahomed.

15. In reference then to what is above stated, and the attitude Colonel Phayre persists in assuming, so fraught with danger to the peace and quiet of the country next to our border, and so contrary to what is clearly the only proper policy to hold by, I would most earnestly request that an authoritative decision as to the course to be followed may be speedily come to and communicated to me as early as possible, otherwise the difficulties in the suppression of this revolution by the Khan will be very largely increased.

16. I do not consider it advisable that Captain Harrison should be withdrawn from Khelat for the present, or certainly not until better and more clear information has been received in regard to the true extent of the outbreak.

P.S.—Since writing the above I have received a demi-official letter from Captain Harrison, dated Khelat, 17th October, from which the following is extracted:—"No "further disturbance has occurred; it is rumoured that Moolla Mahomed, Noordeen, "Alla Dina, and Azaad Khan* intend joining the discon- "tented in the Dusht.† This, however, I do not believe. "The Mahomed Shahees and a few Shawanees have taken "up a position in the hills close to Mustoong, and have been sending their women all over "the country with Korans trying to get up a general rebellion. The Deenarzai Sirdar "gave them a decided answer in the negative, stating that his son had fallen fighting "for the Khan and he meant to support him; that if anxious to be forgiven, he would "use his interest on their behalf. This they declined after the late lesson. I do not "think the discontented will find many supporters. Two letters have been handed over "to the Shahgassee, evidently written by Moolla Mahomed, but he has been cunning "enough not to attach his seal. The substance of the communication is as follows:—That "as the Ameer will do nothing for them, their last hope was to create a disturbance in "Khelat territory; utmost efforts should be used to get the "Brahooee Sirdars to espouse their cause;‡ names of adherents to "be regularly forwarded to Candahar; and that when the scheme was fully organized, they would come and join their friends. These allies of Moolla Mahomed thought a "favourable opportunity had occurred, from the fact of there only being 200 infantry in "this part of the country. Their original scheme, it is said, was to have been carried "out on Wednesday, the 4th; that is, to assassinate his Highness between Zeearut and "Khelat, and on the same day seize Mustoong and Quetta. My having gone out to "meet his Highness probably deterred anyone from attempting his life, and the Naib of "Quetta got timely intimation of what was up and closed the fort, so a very small part "only of the programme was carried out. They, however, I think, felt convinced that "his Highness would not think of sending the few troops that he had until reinforce- "ments arrived, and that they would have plenty of time to mature their plans for a "campaign against the Khan. The Shahgassee started in a couple of hours, and thi[illegible] "disturbance was fairly quelled on Sunday, the 8th. The fighting was not at all in[illegible] "Brahooee fashion, but an obstinate hand-to-hand engagement. His Highness had 3[illegible] "killed and 70 severely wounded. The loss on the other side was even heavier."

[illegible]am glad to say Captain Harrison mentions that the Shahgassee, so far from having die[illegible] is going on very well. The wound is neither extensive nor dangerous, and he should [illegible] quite well in a couple of weeks.

* Ruler of Kharan.
† Plain at the head of the Bolan, between it and Quetta.
‡ That of Moolla Mahomed, &c.

Enclosure 2 in No. 17.

No. 1867, dated Jacobabad, 19th October 1871.

From Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, [illegible]
Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, C.B. and K.C.S.I., Commiss[illegible]

REFERRING to my telegram of yesterday's date, relativ[illegible] and Quetta, I have the h[illegible] tion of Government, the[illegible] which I based that tele[illegible]

Captain Harrison's Report, No. 77, dated 10th October 1871.
Captain Harrison's Report, No. 78, dated 10th October 1871.
Captain Harrison's Diary, dated 10th October 1871.

2. Late in the ev[illegible] Captain Carpendale, of the 2nd Regiment, Sin[illegible] account of the operations of the Khan's troops in a private letter from a native officer of his own regiment commanding the Political Agent's escort at Khelat, Ressaldar Goolam Mahomed, who is an excellent officer and a man highly respected in the brigade.

3. The following is a translation of that letter :—

"Khelat, 10th October 1871.

"On the 6th October intelligence was received that the Shawanee and Lehree Brahooees had taken Mustoong and had wounded the Jansin (the Khelat Government official in civil charge of the district). On this his Highness the Khan sent the Shahgassee with 500 regular troops and two guns and some irregular forces to the scene of disturbances.

"The force arrived at Mungooshur, about 15 coss from this, and afterwards moved on by night (towards Mustoong). The guides of the Khan's troops were, it is supposed, confederate with the rebels, who were posted (in ambush) at Ghud, about 20 miles on. The rebels then attacked the Khan's troops, who, as they were marching carelessly, were helpless, and fled back towards Mungooshur, and arrived within four miles of it by daybreak, pursued by the rebels.

"The Shahgassee here rallied his force, and having again advanced on the rebels, retook the guns and property which they had captured in the first instance, and finally encamped at Kud. But a tribe of Brahooees, by name Lungoo, who inhabit Mungooshur, helped the Khan's troops greatly, and their Sirdar was killed.

"Next day the Shahgassee marched again at noon, and reached Umeroolla Kurez, about three coss from Mustoong on the Khelat side, and again attacked the rebels. The Khan's forces were fewer than the enemy, who were very strong, and after the artillery had fired two rounds, the rebels attacked in great force and took the guns, and great numbers were killed and wounded on both sides; how many we know not.

"The rebels having no artillerymen, left the guns on the ground, and they were eventually recaptured by the Shahgassee, who drove the rebels up to Mustoong, which town he took. This intelligence of the victory was received on the 9th October, and the Khan fired a salute in honour of it. We now hear that the rebels have reassembled in great force at Pusgirrun, four coss from Mustoong. In this fight the rebels have lost Sirdars Jehangir Khan Lehree, Syud Khan Syudzyo, and Abdool Kadir Shawanee. On the Khan's side, Ressaldar Hyat Khan, and the Commanding Officer of Artillery, Shere Khan, were killed.

(Signed) "Goolam Mahomed,
"Ressaldar, 2nd Regt. Sind Horse."

4. I append the original vernacular letter for your information.

5. After its perusal I addressed the following letter, No. 1866 of this date, to Captain Harrison :—

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the correspondence noted in the margin, which reached yesterday, and on the authority of which I reported to Government the victorious result of the Shahgassee's operations between Khelat and Mustoong.

Report No. 77, dated 10th October 1871.
Diary to the 8th October 1871, dated 10th October 1871.
Report No. 78, dated 10th October 1871.

"For a day or more previously, however, I beg to inform you that rumours of a very different tenor from that conveyed in your reports under reply had reached me, but I refrained from taking any notice of them, preferring to await further communication from yourself before reporting further to Government on the subject. When, therefore, I received the above-noted correspondence, and found that it in no way confirmed or even alluded to the adverse intelligence which is now rife throughout this whole border, I concluded that it may have been spread by the enemies of his Highness the Khan, and therefore, in telegraphing to Government, I merely condensed your own report of [illegible]rs.

"[illegible]ast evening, however, I was much surprised to hear from Captain Carpendale, of the [illegible]giment Sind Horse under my command, that he had received a private letter from [illegible]r, Ressaldar Goolam Mahomed of his regiment, who now commands [illegible]h I asked Captain Carpendale to place at my disposal for the in- [illegible]n that letter you will see that the Ressaldar gives an apparently [illegible]erations of the Shahgassee between Khelat and Mustoong [illegible]h which your own reports left Khelat, and as that account [illegible]ith the independent rumours referred to in my 2nd [illegible] as generally correct. I should now feel obliged by [illegible]e to me on the 10th instant, you were aware of the 6. It thus appears that really serious events have taken place within 40 or 60 miles of Khelat between the 6th and 9th instant, no details of which are mentioned by Captain Harrison, but of which he merely reports in the first paragraph of his letter No. 77 of 1871, dated 10th instant, that "they have now been quelled, not, however, without "a most obstinate resistance in the open country between Khelat and Mustoong," &c., &c.

7. As a revolutionary crisis has again occurred in respect to Khelat affairs, I feel it to be my duty, as Political Superintendent on this Frontier, and as a British officer of old standing who has his country's interests and those of the Brahooees and Belooch truly and sincerely at heart, to entreat the Government not to disregard as unworthy of their notice, the earnest and perfectly true representations which I have from time to time made during the last two years and upwards, as to the prevalent feeling of the whole country in respect to the present tone of the Khelat rule, and our connexion with it, because I am convinced that unless some early remedy be found, worse than has yet occurred cannot fail to be the result.

8. It is worthy of notice that these events have immediately succeeded the tour which his Highness has just completed. He arrived in Kutchee by route of the Moolla Pass at the end of last year, and remained there till May or June last, when he moved up the Bolan to Quetta. He thence visited Mustoong, and has just reached Khelat.

9. I know from what I have heard, though I have purposely abstained from instituting any inquiries, that his stay in Kutchee increased his unpopularity greatly, owing to the illiberal manner in which he treated his people generally; and we now learn from this correspondence, that almost on the very day that he reached his capital serious disturbances broke out within 50 miles of his rear, not originated on this occasion by either Sirdars Moolla Mahomed or Noordeen, but by other chiefs, who no doubt have given expression to the feeling which I have been informed now pervades a large part of the Brahooee nation, viz., that it is better to die than any longer submit to acts of oppression and injustice worse than death.

10. I merely report what I have frequently heard of late is the climax which Brahooee unhappiness has now reached, and I believe it to be perfectly true—indeed some of the boldest of the chiefs have testified to its truth with their lives, in the correspondence now before us.

11. No one clearly knows what the immediate cause of the outbreak is, and, under the present system of non-inquiry, never will; but I would deferentially ask, whether we can any longer safely ignore a national feeling of the kind referred to, the result of absolute despair. It may, I know, be calmed and allayed by real acts of justice; but more confiscation, more outlawry, more impoverishment, will have a contrary effect, and continue to produce still worse results than they have done during the present reign of thirteen years.

12. It is quite true that the Khan has been repeatedly advised to follow the path of justice and regard for the lives and property of his people, and it is equally true that whilst promising to do all that was required of him in these respects, he has never fulfilled his promises, but kept his wrong way and enjoyed our subsidy equally, as if his conduct as a prince had been all we could have desired.

13. I therefore deferentially submit that until his Highness clearly understands that his failing to follow our advice in essentially important political matters will involve the loss of our support, he will continue to do as before, until finally he will make us and our interests on this border as unpopular as himself.

14. There is not a man of any weight or influence in the country, whether Brahooee or Belooch, who does not feel keenly that our connexion with the Khan involves a certain amount of responsibility for his acts as a ruler, because both the Khan himself and they too are perfectly well aware that, were it not for our support, he must either respect the just rights of his people or lose his throne; and I feel convinced in my own mind, that if we were honestly and decidedly to inform his Highness that he cannot at one and the same time be the friend of the British Government and the oppressor of the fine races subject to him, he would begin to see the absolute necessity of altering his policy, and would shrink from risking the loss of that support on the continuance of which he is well aware his power rests.

15. There is reason to hope that such a policy in the hands of a British officer of weight of character sufficient to initiate and develop it gradually, would redound as much to the power and stability of the Khan's Government as to our own interests on this border; and I venture to hope that the present crisis may be taken advantage of to guide the Khelat Government into so desirable a line of policy, and to confirm them in it.

16. The people of Kutchee are profuse in their expressions of gratitude for the protection which the cavalry regiment recently despatched from Jacobabad now affords them. Its beneficial effect upon the Khelat Government interests at this moment has also been very great; hence I plead the greater necessity for our seriously endeavouring at once to bring good results out of the state of affairs at present impending, which must of themselves afford evidence to the Khan of the impolicy and unpopularity of his acts as a ruler.

17. When the last revolutionary movement took place in Khelat in 1864–65, the Political Agent was withdrawn; and I now respectfully submit for your consideration, whether it is not expedient that Captain Harrison should return to Kutchee by the Moola Pass as soon as possible.

P.S.—20th October 1871.—Since writing the above, the following further intelligence has been received from Bagh, from Uzzeem Jan to his brother Peer Jan Naib at Jacobabad, under date 17th October:—

"Since I wrote about the Shahgassee's fight I have heard nothing from either the Khan or my father (Mahomed Khan), but I have heard that the rebel Brahooees have now reassembled at Nuslee, near Narmook, about 30 or 40 miles from the scene of their defeat. They are undecided as yet what to do, whether to return or fight with the Shahgassee, or to descend into the plains and plunder (this city) Bagh. I send you information of all I know.

"About the fight of the other day, I hear that the Shahgassee himself is wounded though slightly; both sides lost so many men killed and wounded as to be helpless. This I got secretly from the Naib of this place."

Enclosure 3 in No. 17.

No. 77, dated Khelat, 10th October 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In continuation of my letter No. 76 of 9th October 1871, I have the honour to report that a disturbance alluded to has been quelled, not, however, without a most obstinate resistance in the open country situated between the Kud and Mustoong. The malcontents closed with the Shahgassee's party to avoid his guns and musketry, and a hand-to-hand combat ensued, which only terminated when three out of the four ringleaders had fallen—Sirdar Jehangir Lehree, Moobaruk Khan Shawanee, and Syud Khan Bungoolzye. "Sirdar Syud Khan Mahomed Shai escaped."

The casualties amongst the Shahgassee's camp have not been fully reported. Sirdar Kaisab Khan Deenarzai and Sirdar Shirbat Khan Bungoolzye, Ressaldar Hyat Khan, and Shere Khan of the artillery, were killed.

Enclosure 4 in No. 17.

No. 78, dated Khelat, 10th October 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

With reference to my letter No. 74, I have the honour to report that his Highness has received information from Candahar that Sirdars Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and Noordeen Mingul had been in communication with Sirdar Jehangir Lehree and Syud Ali Mahomed, and that they contemplated returning to their country as soon as they had communicated their intention to his Highness the Ameer.

Enclosure 5 in No. 17.

Dated Khelat, 10th October 1871.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, from 2nd to the 8th October 1871.

ON Tuesday, the 2nd instant, all the Khelat merchants and zemindars went out to Zeearut to pay their respects to his Highness the Khan, and congratulate him on his return to the capital after an absence of eleven months. Early on the following morning I paid his Highness the usual compliment of going to meet him, and, owing to delay on his part, arrived at Zeearut just as he was about to leave. When within two miles of Khelat the road was thronged with people of all classes, who appeared to be glad to see his Highness again. On Thursday this festive appearance changed to one of gloom and apprehension, it having been reported that disturbances had occurred in Mustoong and Quetta. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed started at once with about 500 followers, and was met by the malcontents in Kud Mustoong, who disputed his progress "for the twenty miles" that intervene between the above place and Mustoong. They were, however, completely routed, on Friday afternoon, after a most obstinate resistance, in which three of the four ringleaders were killed—Sirdar Jehangir Lehree, Moobaruk Khan Shawanee, and Syud Khan Bungoolzye. "Sirdar Syud Khan Mahomed Shai escaped."

Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed has only reported that his loss in killed and wounded is several; amongst the former, Sirdar Shireut Khan Bungoolzye and Sirdar Kaisab Khan Deenarzai.

(Signed) C. H. HARRISON, Capt.
Political Agent, Khelat.

Enclosure 6 in No. 17.

No. 672, dated Kurrachee, 24th October 1871.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 1867 of the 19th instant, and in reply to point out to you that the remarks and views set forth in paragraphs 7 to 15 thereof are entirely at variance with the instructions that have been conveyed to you from time to time in regard to the policy Government desire should be followed in our relations with the Khelat Government, and that your persistence in adhering to and expressing such views after they have met with the marked disapproval of his Excellency the Governor in Council, is not only most unbecoming, but most dangerous in a position such as you hold.

2. Your letter will be submitted to Government for notice, such as it may be deemed to require. But in the meanwhile I have to desire most distinctly that you will wholly and solely be guided, in all transactions relating to the Khelat Government and its subjects, by the principles set forth in the minute by his Excellency the Governor, dated 10th February 1871, copy of which was furnished to you; and that you will be most careful, during the present state of affairs, to let your acts and words only show that no other principles but those can be followed or allowed.

3. There is no necessity at present for the withdrawal of Captain Harrison from Khelat. When such a step is desirable, instructions will be communicated to you.

Enclosure 7 in No. 17.

No. 85, dated Khelat, 21st October 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to forward the letter alluded to in my diary ending 16th October, with translation, perusal of which will explain the late disturbances in Mustoong.

The above letter, though addressed to Saloo Khan Raisanee, a relative of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, was found in a tattered state in the pocket of the late Lehree, Sirdar Jehangir. I therefore conclude that this epistle was written at Candahar by the Raisanee Sirdar, and has been circulated amongst the Brahooee Chiefs to incite them to rebellion.

Copy of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed's forwarding letter is attached, as also the letter he received from the Deenarzai Chiefs.

Enclosure 8 in No. 17.

TRANSLATION.

To Saloo Khan, Raisanee.

I HAVE received your letter and am aware of its contents. You write that we people in Candahar have made no attempt to create a disturbance in Khelat territory. What you say is true. Wealth and opportunity are required to carry out such plans. Owing to want of combination I have been obliged to live at Candahar. If all you people will act in conjunction with me we shall attain our object.

I have sent Aladad Khan, son of Naib Mahomed Hussun, to the Ameer, and we shall see what will happen. If you, Saloo Khan, have made any arrangements for me, let me know who your confederates are, and whether the rebellion is to take place in Quetta, Mustoong, or Kutchee; also inform me when it takes place, and I will join you at once.

You write that all the Brahooees are of one accord in this matter. Let me know the names of the Sirdars, as also whether Sirdar Jehangir Lehree and Syud Ali Mahomed are of the same opinion. Lose no time and spare no effort in organizing this rebellion, and I will join you as soon as the arrangements have been completed. Don't rely upon the Afghan Government for any support in this business; we have nothing to hope for from the Ameer. If you can do anything by yourselves, well and good. No assistance will be given from this place, so do not calculate upon our being able to aid you.

Inform me on what terms Khodadad Khan and Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed are, whether they act cordially with each other or not. I have given the cossid eight rupees.

Enclosure 9 in No. 17.

From Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to His Highness the Khan.

A person in Pussund Khan Lungo's levy found a letter in the pocket of the late Lehree, Sirdar Jehangir, which I send you for perusal of it; you will understand everything.

I sent Choota Khan Khoord as a spy amongst the Brahooees, and he returned with a letter from Sirdar Kaisa Khan and Mahomed Khan Deenarzai, which I also forward to you.

Enclosure 10 in No. 17.

From Sirdars Kaisa Khan, Deenarzai, and Nawab Khan, Deenarzai, to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

The state of the Brahooees is as follows:—All their families are collected in the Dosan Hill. Sirdar Syud Khan, Mahomed Shai, Mahomed Khan Giranee, and other people of influence amongst the Lehrees, collected their families. One half of them came to me and the other half to the Khoord's with Korans, asking us to give them assistance and to act in conjunction with them. We accepted the Koran, but declined to join them or give any assistance in this rebellion, stating that we were quite satisfied at one of our relatives having died on Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed's side. We also told them that if they would remain quiet we would petition his Highness the Khan on their behalf; that if they did not agree to this, we declined any further connexion with them. They would not heed what we said, and left my house on Friday. It remains to be seen what will happen.

Enclosure 11 in No. 17.

No. 90, dated Khelat, 24th October 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

IN forwarding true copy of a letter from Sirdar Azaad Khan with my reply, I have the honour to make the following remarks:

That Azaad Khan implies that I have been writing to him regarding his Highness's claim, whereas I merely stated that his messenger had seen and conversed with his Highness, and he would learn from him what had been stated.

Azad Khan states that his correspondence is carried on surreptitiously. His cossid goes direct to Nawab Mahomed Khan, and the letters, after perusal,* are handed over to him† for his Highness's information, as also my replies to the same.

* By Captain Harrison.—W. L. M.
† Mahomed Khan.—W. L. M.

Nawab Mahomed Khan states that after the fullest inquiry he cannot find out that any kafila was treated in the manner stated; also, that the Hindoos state no restriction has been put on them as regards the sale of cloth, &c., to residents of Kharan.

In conclusion, I would beg to state that in my replies I have avoided all allusions to Sirdar Azaad Khan's numerous statements, as his object is only to bring about a lengthy correspondence on subjects that I have no authority to deal with.

Enclosure 12 in No. 17.

From Sirdar Azad Khan to Captain Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat.

You write that Meah Khodadad Khan has three claims against me—

1st. That I had withheld my daughter from him.
2nd. That I had plundered Punchgoor.
3rd. That I had plundered Sohrab.

You belong to a just Government, so please give attention to my replies.

1st. My daughter had no wishes to marry Khodadad Khan, and I have not forcibly withheld her from his Highness, and it would have been against my religion to force a marriage of this kind on her.

2nd. Regarding Punchgoor, a person called Mahomed Shah Khan, a Persian subject, seized Punchgoor. The Sirdar, Goolam Azum Khan, went to the then Khan, Nusseer Khan and asked him for assistance. Nusseer Khan sent the Sirdar to me, and ordered me to collect a force and turn out Mahomed Shah Khan, and that compensation for casualties would be granted by the Punchgoor people; I have papers on this subject from Nusseer Khan and the Punchgoor people. I collected a force and was engaged fighting for some time in Punchgoor, and succeeded in turning out Mahomed Shah Khan, not, however, without considerable loss of life on both sides.

Khodadad Khan carried off 100,000 loads of grain, camels, cattle, and slaves from my country; some of the latter are still in his possession; in retaliation I plundered Sohrab.

You kindly wrote to me that kafilas would not be interfered with. After its receipt, a kafila laden with dates went to Khelat, and having purchased cloth, &c., were about to leave, when they were stopped and the bunniahs informed that they would be punished if they sold any cloth to residents of Kharan. The bunniahs, however, occasionally send secret supplies; I don't know whether this has been done with your approval, or whether you are ignorant of what has occurred. Khodadad Khan does not act up to the wishes of your Government; no injustice is ever committed on any Sovereign's vakeel; Khodadad Khan hanged Wuzeer Khan,* and no notice has been taken of it for this reason. I don't send any person of influence to visit you for fear he should be hanged like Wuzeer Khan; my letters are sent surreptitiously.

* Wuzeer Khan had committed murder, and was an outlaw from Khelat territory; on his return to it he was arrested and tried for the original crime.

If you don't intend to notice what I have said, please give consideration to the kafila question, if you wish the road closed. I have nothing further to say.

The army of the Ameer has started for Seistan. God knows what is going to happen; I have been sent for. I enclose Sirdar Mahomed Rahim Khan's letter to myself. Let me know what your wishes are regarding kafilas.

Enclosure 13 in No. 17.

No. 159, dated Khelat, 20th October 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Sirdar Azaad Khan, Nowsherwan.

I HAVE received your letter by hand of Mahmood Kumbranee; it reached me at a happy moment. Regarding what you have written concerning the transit of kafilas between Kharan and Khelat, you will ascertain from your messenger that he experienced no obstruction as to the disposal of his dates and purchasing other merchandise, "and that he left this perfectly satisfied."

I have read the enclosure you sent me, and return the same with thanks.

Enclosure 14 in No. 17.

From Sirdar Mahomed Rahim Khan, Barakzai, to Sirdar Azaad Khan.

I HAVE arrived safely at Soorukdoze and hope that you are well. I send you a letter from my father. In a few days I shall be at Guren Seil; my father has entrusted me with verbal messages for you, which I will deliver when we meet, and after we have discussed the subject we can make arrangements. I am hopeful that on receipt of my letter you will at once proceed to join me, and shall be happy to meet you at any place. If you are prevented from coming, send a trustworthy person to meet me, and he will inform you of what I have told him. Rest satisfied.

Enclosure 15 in No. 17.

No. 86, dated Khelat, 21st October 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

REFERRING to the late disturbances in Mustoong, I have the honour to report, for your information, that the Brahooees are said to be assembling at Khondlan, at the bottom of the Bolan Pass, and, on being joined by Sirdar Alla Dina Koord, intend to attack Dadur; should they succeed, they intend to plunder the whole of Kutchee, but in case of defeat to retreat into the Murree Hills. As the interests of British merchants and traders would be affected by a disturbance of this kind, I would respectfully suggest that a patrol of the Sind Horse might be sent for a fortnight or so to Dadur or Hajeeke Shere; by that time his Highness will, I expect, have made arrangements for Kutchee.

No. 727, dated Kurrachee, 9th November 1871.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE copies (with accompaniments and original letter of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to Saloo Khan Raisanee, found in the pocket of the late Lehree, Sirdar Jehangir), with copies of translations thereof, submitted for the information of Government, in reference to Commissioner's endorsement No. 692, dated 28th October 1871.

Enclosure 16 in No. 17.

No. 94, dated Khelat, 4th November 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

IN acknowledging the receipt of your letter No. 1866, with accompaniment, I have the honour to state that between the 6th and 10th rumours in the bazar regarding this engagement were so various and conflicting, that I only reported what I considered reliable, viz., information received direct from Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

Ressaldar Goolam Mahomed framed his letter to Captain Carpendale on one of these bazar rumours, which subsequent information disproved to a great extent. The Shawanee, Sirdar Abdool Kadur, was not killed. The guns and provisions were never captured. The Shahgassee maintained his position with the infantry, guns, and Lungo levy; 125 discontented opposed the Khan's force, not 3,000 or 4,000. The cavalry were seized with panic during the night attack, and retired on Mungooshur, but rejoined the Shahgassee next morning and took an active part in the fight near Ameenoola, with the exception of eight or ten wounded and deserters who retured to Khelat.

Subsequent correspondence will, I trust, show that the disturbance in Mustoong was quelled, where the discontented had gone to, and what they were likely to do.

As Ressaldar Goolam Mahomed's letter has been forwarded for the information of Government, I should feel obliged by your forwarding the accompanying remarks on the same.

No. 769, dated Hyderabad, 22nd November 1871.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE copies submitted to Government, in reference to paragraph 4 of Commissioner's letter No. 684 of 24th October 1871.

2. Such communications as those of the Ressaldar in question must, and should always be accepted with great caution. The Political Agent will always give true and complete information (the first of any), and his reports should alone be trusted by the Political Superintendent.

No. 18.

Dated Khelat, 29th October 1871.

Extract Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, from the 23rd to the 29th October 1871.

THE people who created the disturbance in Mustoong having been joined by Sirdar Alla Dina Koord, and Wuderah Adam Khan, Bungoolzye, have taken possession of the village of Nowshera close to Dadur; their object, it is supposed, is to seize the fort at the latter place and commit a general raid in Kutchee. Latest intelligence was from Captain Forbes, who reported the people at Bagh to be in a great state of alarm; that the number of Brahooees assembled was not known, some people stating that there were 300, whilst others imagined that there were 3,000. Directly this disturbance was known Nawab Mahomed Khan was directed to proceed to Kutchee with 150 sowars, but he remonstrated against being sent without a detachment of infantry. "No move could therefore be made," as the Beylah detachment only arrived here late yesterday, the 28th. His Highness wishes to proceed himself to Kutchee, leaving Khelat with his family in charge of the Nooshky Sirdar, Abdool Rehman, and Sirdar Kaisa Khan, Moosanee,* but he will be guided as to his movements by the advice of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, who is hourly expected.

* The Zehree Sirdar.

* * * * * *

No. 19.

No. 6046, dated Bombay Castle, 13th December 1871.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

WITH reference to my letter of the 12th instant, No. 6000, I am directed to forward herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of a further memorandum, with enclosures, from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 798, dated the 3rd idem, relating to the disturbances in Khelat territory.

Enclosure 1 in No. 19.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Nawab Moolla Mahomed Khan, Vakeel of His Highness the Khan of Khelat, to the address of Colonel Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 10th Ramzan 1288.

THAT his Highness the Khan of Khelat appointed me to Kutchee. I crossed by way of Thakari and halted near the waters of Kharee. In Khet Thakari I had to face the army of the Brahooees. The battle lasted two days, and the Brahooees being unable to withstand any longer, fled with a loss of some of their number. I sent you full particulars from the town of Kotra (near Gundava), but it appears the letter was intercepted by one of the Brahooees, and therefore did not reach its destination. I then proceeded towards Bagh Waree on the way. I heard that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee had collected an army and was in the fort of Shere Khan, between Jallal Khan and Bagh, prepared to go into the field. I, after traversing the distance, arrived in Mukkan Jallal Khan on Wednesday, the 8th Ramzan, 20th November, and made the necessary preparations for war. Before the battle commenced influential persons interfered and spoke about terms of peace. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed also came and made salâam (submitted) and proposed terms of treaty; whatever terms and conditions were agreed to were noted down and the original document given to the aforesaid Sirdar. Copy of it is enclosed for perusal. I have submitted full particulars of this treaty to his Highness the Khan for approval and sanction. If approved, well and good, and if not, the Khan is his own master. To-day I have arrived at Bagh.

Enclosure 2 in No. 19.

Abstract of Treaty entered into.

As Sirdar Moolla Mahomed has now visited me in the town of Jallal Khan, he and I have come to the following terms:—

All inams and jagheers in Sarawan and Jalawan granted to Sirdars Noordeen and Azaad Khan, Nowsherawanee, according to Sunnuds under the seals of his Highness the late Meer Mahomed Nusseer Khan and Meer Khodadad Khan, are to be wholly restored. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed agreed that he absolved his Highness the Khan of all responsibility on account of loss to person and property in Sarawan and Jalawan. That if from this day, Friday, the 10th of Ramzan, any of the Brahooees did any ill or any act of hostility in the territory of his Highness the Khan, he would be given in charge of Moolla Mahomed Vakeel to be punished in any way I liked. That whatever misdeeds Sirdars Noordeen and Azaad Khan have committed are forgiven, and the same would not be done in future. That his Highness the Khan was the sovereign, and they the subjects.

The second question about relinquishing the country of Lus Beyla mooted by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed will be submitted to his Highness the Khan for orders.

These few orders were written down to serve as a document.

Dated 10th Ramzan 1288.

No. 798, dated Camp Salaroo, bank of the Indus, near Halla, 3rd December 1871.
Endorsed by Commissioner of Sind.

ORIGINAL vernacular letter with abstract translations submitted to Government for information.

2. It appears that Moolla Mahomed Raisanee had joined the rebels in Kutchee. It remains now to be seen whether his Highness the Khan of Khelat will accede to the terms asked for by Moolla Mahomed.

3. The Political Superintendent was informed by telegram on the 21st ultimo of Sirdar Meer Khan having been sent to Bombay, and the reasons for the step. He was also requested to communicate the fact to his Highness the Khan through the Political Agent at Khelat, so that his Highness should have been aware of what had been done by the time the terms submitted by the Vakeel reached him.

No. 20.

No. 6158, dated Bombay Castle, 20th December 1871.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

IN continuation of my letter No. 6046, dated the 13th instant, I am desired to forward to you, for submission to his Excellency the Governor General of India in Council, copies of the further papers connected with the recent disturbances at Mustoong, &c.

Enclosure 1 in No. 20.

No. 95, dated Khelat, 4th November 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to report for your information that Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed returned to Khelat on Thursday, the 2nd instant, and, after consulting with his Highness, agreed that there was no other course left but for him, "the Khan," to proceed with as little delay as possible to Kutchee.

As far as can be judged everything is quiet in Sarawan, Jalawan, Beyla, and Kedj, but his Highness fears that directly he moves, there may be serious disturbances, i.e., if any reliance can be placed in the following rumours.

It is reported that Sirdar Noordeen has joined Ali Khan Jamote, and that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed has proceeded to Seebee. It is also said that Sirdar Azaad Khan has been trying to induce the Bezonjaos to join him.

The Shahgassee appeared to place great weight in the movements of the Bezonjaos, and Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed has been written to. I also wrote a friendly letter at the request of his Highness, a copy of which is annexed.

His Highness a day or two ago remarked that the suddenness of this rebellion reminded him of what had occurred in English territory in 1857, and wanted to know if the English Government would give him active aid in putting down the disturbance in Kutchee, "as there was no time to collect a force." I replied in the negative, telling him that the English Government looked to him to maintain order in his own territory. During this conversation his Highness said that he believed if he was killed, that Buktawur Khan Barukzai, of Seebee, would be put on the Khanate.

His Highness also asked me if I would remain at Khelat a few days after his departure; that my doing so would be of very great service to him. I have given no definite answer, but, as far as I can ascertain, delay is unavoidable, as there is not a camel to be hired, and we could not proceed down the passes without grain and flour. The whole of Kutchee being in the hands of the discontented, it might be as well, perhaps, if I remained until his Highness could reach the scene of disorder.

Note by Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated Jacobabad, 13th November 1871.

The remark in this letter about Buktawur* Khan Barukzai, of Seebee, I never heard before. It is most improbable, I think, that the Brahooees would select a Pathan sovereign. A report has been current in Kutchee that they looked to the Jam of Lus Beyla as their future sovereign, but I do not believe this report either.

Captain Harrison's No. 96 is attached to this.

* His nephew visited Jacobabad a few days ago and stayed two days. I declined to hold any conversation with him upon passing events. He gave me information which led to the accompanying telegrams.

Enclosure 2 in No. 20.

No. 96, dated Khelat, 6th November 1871.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

SINCE writing my letter No. 95, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed has advised his Highness to remain at Khelat, and to send Nawab Mahomed Khan with 600 men, two guns, and a Belooch levy under the Moosance Sirdar Kaisah Khan.

On the 5th the Sohrab Naib reported that Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen had arrived at Kharan, and that Sirdar Azaad Khan was preparing to raid Sohrab.

Enclosure 3 in No. 20.

From Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed, Naib of Kedj.

IT is well known that you and your ancestors have always behaved in a true and loyal manner towards the Khans of Khelat, and that you have always acted loyally towards his Highness.

His Highness has sent you a letter by hand of a trustworthy man, Abdool Suttar Babee, knowing your faithfulness and loyalty. I hope that, on receipt of the above, you and your son Meah Kairah will visit his Highness, for this reason, that people are creating a disturbance in the country, and by coming you will publicly show your goodwill to the Khan. I feel sure that if you have any request to make that it will be favourably attended to by his Highness. I have merely written this to you out of friendship.

N.B.—Meah Kaisur Khan's reply to his Highness the Khan's letter is attached in the vernacular.

No. 21.

Dated Khelat, 5th November 1871.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, from the 30th October to the 5th November, 1871.

SHAHGASSEE WULLEE MAHOMED returned from Mustoong on Thursday, the 2nd instant, and agreed that the only course for his Highness to pursue was to proceed himself to Kutchee. On Saturday, however, these plans were altered, and it was decided to send Nawab Mahomed Khan with 600 men, two guns, and the Moosanee Sirdar, Kaisa Khan, with a Belooch levy. This force starts on Wednesday viâ Zehree and the Moollah. Nawab Mahomed Khan expects that the rebels will collect somewhere near Kohoo.

The fall of Dadur was reported after a resistance of three days, and the Naib, it is said, was burnt alive. The Rhind Chief, Imam Buksh, wrote to his Highness as follows:—That from time immemorial the Rhinds had been loyal to the Khans of Khelat, and that he proceeded to Bagh and urged his representatives to march to the relief of Dadur; that after consulting amongst themselves they decided to await the Brahooee attack at Bagh; when, however, Dadur had fallen they all left the place. The sepoys also behaved so badly that there was no alternative for him but to retire.

Reliable information was received to-day, 5th instant, from the Naib of Sohrab, viz., that Sirdars Noordeen and Moolla Mahomed had arrived at Kharan, and that a raid on Sohrab was intended.

At the present moment I believe quiet prevails in Sarawan, Jalawan, Beylah, and Kedj; it is, however, rumoured that Sirdar Azaad Khan has been trying to induce Meah Kaisah, Sirdar Faquir Mahomed's son, to join him. The Shahgassee is of opinion that if Sirdar Faquir Mahoned remains loyal to his Highness, no serious disturbance will occur in Jalawan. Nawab Mahomed Khan was directed to write to this chief and tell him that if he came to Khelat, any wish he might express regarding Kedj would be attended to. I also wrote a friendly note to this Sirdar at his Highness' request. The Shahgassee does not anticipate any further disturbance in the Sarawan District. His Highness being obliged to send all available fighting men with Nawab Mahomed Khan, is enlisting men for the protection of Quetta, Mustoong, and Khelat.

The whole of Kutchee being in the hands of the discontented Brahooees, I have thought it as well to remain quietly here until Nawab Mahomed Khan has time to reach the plains; my doing so will probably cause Azaad Khan to defer his raid on Sohrab. Should any disturbance occur we must depend on his Highness to lend us some of his camels, as there are none to be hired.

A horse kafila for Bangalore arrived here on Friday last, and the owner asked me to report his arrival to Colonel Thompson, Remount Agent, Bangalore. I told him that owing to the present disturbance it might be as well if he delayed a few days, but he declined to do so stating that grass and forage were so expensive that it would ruin him to stay here.

A letter I wrote to Captain Forbes was returned by the Rhind Sirdar, stating that he had been unable to forward it. The post contractor, Gohur Khan, Dinaree, has written to say that he is unable to forward our post, the Naibs of Kunda and Gundava having left, as also all the people in his village.

The Pundera Sirdar, Muddut Khan, informed Dr. Bowman that Wuderah Adam Khan, Bungoolzye, had died at Seebee, and that the discontented in Kutchee had been joined by 300 Murrees. This chief has been taken seriously ill, since his arrival at Khelat, with paralysis.

No. 22.

Dated Khelat, 26th November 1871.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, from the 20th to the 26th November 1871.

ON the 22nd his Highness received a letter from Nawab Mahomed Khan reporting his arrival at Gundava on the 19th, and that he had been joined by the Mugzees and Rhinds, and had done all in his power to re-assure the few Syuds, Mahomedans, and Hindoos that had remained; they and the inhabitants had suffered much at the hands of the Brahooees, and I have promised in your name that they shall receive compensation for the property that has been plundered. I have also changed the transit on ghee to eight annas per maund, reduced other taxes one fourth, and allowed snuff, bhang, and spirits to be sold without a license. The Brahooees have left Bagh, and I propose going there in a day or two viâ Shorun, as the Lehrees generally occupy that part of the country during the cold season. All the people are very much pleased at the modifications I have made, and pray for your Highness's welfare. Dia Mul Bunniah, resident of Gundava, has given me a list showing that the Brahooees had enforced a ready-money payment of Rs. 688–6–6, and carried off 175 kurwars of wheat (about 1,400 maunds) from the village of Futtehpoor. Please give me a written order, with your seal attached, that this is to be made good to them from your Highness's revenues and tithes.

The Brahooees having left Bagh, I have sent my nephew Khooda Buksh there with Aktur Khan Koord and Nawab Khan Dinarzai. The Rhinds and Mugzees have asked my permission to follow and loot the Brahooees; I have told them to remain quietly with me until we reached Bagh.

On the 21st November Ramzan Nawab Mahomed Khan again wrote to his Highness from a place called Seeanah, as follows:—

Jumal Khan and Baz Khan, Budoozais, were appointed vakeels by the Brahooees, and intimated that they wished to make their salaam, but would only make Anjamor treaty in presence of the English Government, and that I was to remain at Gundava. I replied that I was coming to Bagh, and that if they wished to make terms they might meet me there. I have sent 1,000 Mugzees and Rhinds to join my nephew. Aktur Khan and Nawab Khan, the Mugzees and Rhinds, are most anxious to attack the Brahooees, but I have restrained them, as Sirdar Kaisah Khan, Dinarzai, has written to say that a great number of the Brahooees had asked him to make terms for them.

Sirdar Kaisah Khan is living in his village Moonga, near Bagh. Gazee Khan Budoozai and Malik Dostin Geranee are with him. The Dinaree Chief states that the latter have taken no part in the late disturbances.

A letter from Syud Ali Shah, Syud Morad Shah, and Arab Ala Dittah, residents of Bagh, to Nawab Mahomed Khan, has been forwarded by the latter person for his Highness's information.

The Brahooees have robbed us and the inhabitants of everything; we have neither food or clothing, and our state of destitution is beyond description. Please send aid. Aktur Khan and Nawab Khan cannot hold the place with the few people they have The Brahooees are assembling at Hajee ke Shere and Mittree.

Esau Khan, Meer Dost Mahomed, Meah Attah Mahomed, headmen of the Mingul tribe, have written to his Highness reporting their having joined Sirdar Meeah Mahomed and Naib Abdool Azeez. The two latter report that the Murdooees, Goolananees, and Meer Hajees have been assembled, and that Sudeek Oomranee Lushkur Khan and the Sassoolies have been written to and will probably join in a few days.

A buniah from Kharan has written to his agent stating that Azaad Khan had distinctly refused to give Sirdar Noordeen any assistance, telling him that the Ameer did not wish him to take any part in Brahooee disputes, and that he had done himself a great deal of harm with his Highness the Khan by taking their part in former rebellions. Forty of Sirdar Azaad Khan's men escorted Sirdar Noordeen to Jalawan viâ the Rukshan route. This news has been corroborated by the Naib of Mustoong and Jan Sing of Sohrab, both of whom have got correspondents at Kharan.

On Wednesday, the 22nd, I happened to hear for the first time that it was believed at Kurrachee and other places that the disturbances in Mustoong and Kutchee had been caused by some act of his Highness regarding a marriage. I at once made inquiries and found that this rumour had reference to the marriage of his Highness's nephew, Meah Kurrum Khan, with the daughter of a wealthy and highly respectable merchant and horse-dealer, Wullee Khan Mahomed Shai. Being on friendly terms with the latter person, and knowing that he had just arrived from Bangalore, I asked him to visit me, and in the course of conversation mentioned that some people had spread a report that his Highness the Khan had forcibly abducted his (Wullee Khan's) daughter and given her in marriage to his nephew, and that I should be much obliged if he would tell me the real circumstances of the case. In reply, he stated that the proposal regarding the marriage was made in his absence to his son and wife, and cordially agreed to by them and approved of by him; also that the marriage had taken place in the usual way, and nothing had occurred to authorise such an assertion.

Wullee Khan said he had always been well treated by the English Government, so would tell me something regarding this rumour, viz.:

It being well known both in Mustoong and Kutchee that I had left Kurrachee for Khelat, messengers were sent by the Mahomed Shais and Lehrees to meet me; they met me between Wud and Kozdar, and stated that they wished to give some reasons for the raiding in Mustoong and Kutchee, and asked me to write strong and forcible letters to the Commissioner in Sind, and Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, stating that the Khan had forcibly abducted my daughter, and given her in marriage to his nephew; that the Belooch were so incensed at this conduct of his Highness that they had shown their displeasure by raiding Mustoong and Kutchee. I replied that the marriage had taken place with my full approval, and that I had no intention of acting as they wished, that his Highness had always treated me well, and that I did not believe he had done anything to authorise their having acted as they had done, and they would repent of their foolish conduct ere long.

From this conversation it may be inferred that the malcontents had no real cause for complaint against his Highness, but are anxious to justify their conduct by falsehood and misrepresentation.

Goolam Jan gives a satisfactory account of Beylah in a letter just received. Ali Mahomed Borah, who had always given a great deal of trouble, had made his salaam and been placed at the Hubb with six sowars to protect travellers.

No news from Mekran. Jalawan is quiet; in Zehree the few Belooch that did not accompany Nawab Mahomed Khan are quarrelling amongst themselves. His Highness has sent a small party to restore order.

During the past week two donkey kafilas from Shikarpoor have passed through Khelat en route to Candahar, about 100 animals; two donkey kafilas from Candahar, laden with rice and dried fruits, consigned to Khelat merchants; 160 camels from Shikarpoor with piece goods—100 for Candahar, 60 to Khelat; 15 camels from Kharan, laden with dates, consigned to Khelat merchants.

No. 23.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, from 27th November to the 3rd December 1871.

On Friday, the 1st instant, the following report from Nawab Mahomed Khan was received:—

I wrote to you from Seronj, and from that report you will have learnt what had taken place. Sirdar Aktar Khan and Nawab Khan Dinarzai had been sent to Bagh, and were to have been joined by the Rhinds and Mugzees; the latter, however, hearing that the Brahooee force were advancing on Bagh, remained at Jallal Khan's Gate.

When I arrived at Goolam Mahomed-ka-joke I heard that Sirdar Moollah Mahomed had left Hajee-ka-Shere and taken up a position at Shere Khan's fort, situated between Jallal Khan's Gate and Bagh, with the intention of making a night attack on my camp. I arrived at Jallal Khan's Gate on Wednesday, and, having consulted with Shuhur Khan and Abdool Rusack, commandants of infantry and cavalry, determined to encamp on the Gaihee Nulla.

Meah Zungee Raisanee and others came to ask for terms. I remained until 5 p.m. talking with them, and then returned to Jallal Khan's Gate.

Beebee Syud, resident of Shahpoor, believing that Bagh was about to be again sacked by the Brahooees, came to offer what protection she could to the inhabitants. When, however, she heard of the defeat of the rebels at Koombee she joined Sirdar Moollah Mahomed and persuaded him to ask for terms, and returned to me with Sumunder Lehree; the latter having heard what I had to say rejoined Sirdar Moollah Mahomed; the latter then met me half way between our respective camps. We wrote a treaty, a copy of which we sent to Colonel R. Phayre, C.B.; a duplicate is forwarded for your information. This treaty is still an open question. If you approve of what has been done, well; if not, I await your orders, and will act upon them.

Sirdar Moollah Mahomed has returned to his camp, and Sumunder Lehree has remained with me.

On the 10th day of the moon I left for Bagh; the poor inhabitants have been ruthlessly plundered by the Brahooees, and have committed such oppression that I cannot describe their acts in writing; they have carried off all cattle, household property, &c., and not left the poor people even clothes to wear. They are utterly destitute, nothing is procurable, and I anticipate great difficulty in procuring food and forage for my party. I have received a letter from Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., regarding Sirdar Meah Khan, ex-Jam of Beylah, which I forward for your perusal.

I hear from my son, Peerjan, that the Lehree detachment with guns proceeded to the Noomeah. I have ordered them to join me, and expect that they will arrive in a day or two.

Roka, or Postscript No. 1.

I HAVE made a treaty with Sirdar Moollah Mahomed subject to your Highness' approval, and am free to act on your instructions.

Sirdar Moollah Mahomed states that if your Highness agrees to this treaty, he and I must proceed to Jacobabad and have the same ratified in presence of Colonel Phayre, C.B., and that if this is not done everyone is at liberty to act for himself. If you approve of this treaty I will proceed to Jacobabad with Sirdar Moollah Mahomed; if not, I will act on any instructions you may give me. I myself approve of the treaty and hope you will do so; if you do please write clearly that I have authority to act and that you will abide by what I do. When I receive this I will proceed with the chief to Jacobabad. If you disapprove I am your obedient servant.

(Signed) MAHOMED KHAN.

Postscript No. 2.

Sirdar Moollah Mahomed states that the personal property of the rebels has been concealed by their friends in Mustoong and other places, and requests that they may be allowed to return and look after their possessions. Kindly write to the Naibs of Mustoong and Quetta, directing them not to interfere, and that these people are at liberty to look after their property.

(Signed) MAHOMED KHAN.

Postscript No. 3.

I have reappointed Hyut Khan Lehree Jan Sing of Dadur, and have sent him to join with 50 horsemen and 50 foot.

Postscript No. 4.

Containing Terms of Treaty.

Sirdar Moollah Mahomed has visited me at Jallal Khan's Gate, and the following terms were submitted:—

1st. That the Sarawans, Jalawans, and Sirdar Azaad Khan should have all inam lands as shown by Sunnuds from the time of the Great Nusseer Khan until the present Khan's reign, latter inclusive.

2nd. Sirdar Moollah Mahomed, on behalf of the above, agrees to drop all claims due for blood money, loss of property, &c.

3rd. That if any Brahooees after the 10th instant commit any improper acts, Nawab Mahomed Khan is at liberty to punish them in any way he may deem fit.

4th. That no notice is to be taken of former rebellions caused by Sirdars Noordeen and Azaad Khan, and that for the future they will take no part in any disturbance, for this reason that his Highness is by ancient descent king of the country. In future we will, as in former years, always do his service, and never be guilty of any disobedience.

5th. Sirdar Moollah Mahomed wishes your Highness to give up possession of Beylah. I have replied that I will petition you on this subject; that if you agree, well; if not, you are sovereign.

Written by me on the 10th Ramzan 1288.

(Signed) MAHOMED KHAN.

Vernacular copies of the above correspondence are attached.

The above reports, with accompaniments, reached his Highness just before paying me his usual weekly visit. From his Highness' conversation he was greatly incensed at Nawab Mahomed Khan's conduct, as prior to leaving Khelat he had agreed that the acts of the rebels in Kutchee had been of such a nature as to preclude any possibility of anjam or treaty. His Highness further stated that Nawab Mahomed Khan's conduct regarding this treaty had been to actually acknowledge Sirdar Moollah Mahomed and the rebels as the ruling power in Beloochistan; that other districts would naturally follow the example that had been set them, and that he would be unable to restore order unaided; that he and his brother Nusseer Khan had always considered themselves as dependents of the English Government. If this country was of any value to us as a boundary to our own territory, the time had now come for us to take possession or give him assistance, and that if we were indifferent as to what took place he would do the best he could, but might eventually have to seek protection from either Afghanistan or Persia.

Naib Abdool Azeez writes from Bhagwana to his Highness as follows :—

Morad Ali Mingul has sent a man to inform me of Noordeen's arrival at Lukerjee, close to Wud, and that he had sent to the bunniahs of the latter place to supply him with 200 maunds of wheat.

Lushkar Khan, Humzan Morad, and Hyder, Minguls, are in the fort at Wud, Sirdar Meah Mahomed being with me ; they are prepared to fight should Noordeen attack them.

Some of the Minguls have joined Noordeen; the latter has tried his utmost to induce Sirdar Faquir Mahomed to espouse his cause, but this chief has given him a decided answer, viz., that if he, Noordeen, wished forgiveness for past faults he would accompany him to Khelat and petition his Highness to pardon him. Noordeen replied that he would go if your Highness would give up Beylah. Sirdar Faquir Mahomed then informed him that if he talked in such a way he should look upon him, Noordeen, as an enemy.

Certain chiefs of the Bezonjao tribe, viz., Humlanees, Tumlanees, and Sakur Sajdees, urged Sirdar Faquir Mahomed to support Noordeen as he had come to his door for assistance. Sirdar Faquir Mahomed replied that he had never joined in any rebellion and never meant to.

Your Highness need not have the slightest anxiety regarding Sirdar Faquir Mahomed's fidelity.

I have sent Sirdar Meah Mahomed, Nubbee Buksh, Cherezai, and five Pathan sowars to Nul, that they may accompany Sirdar Faquir Mahomed to Khelat. I have done this to show respect to the Bezonjao chief.

(Signed) ABDOOL AZEEZ.

The above information is confirmed by letters from Sirdar Faquir Mahomed to various people, viz. :—

From Faquir Mahomed to Naib Abdool Azeez.

Meah Esau Mingul will tell you what is going on; if anyone states that I am nimuk haram, false to my salt, he is a nimuk haram. The present crisis will show who are true and who are false to his Highness. I have never been false and never mean to be.

From Faquir Mahomed to his Highness the Khan.

It will soon be apparent to your Highness who are loyal and who are false. You have no kindly feeling to the Brahooees. I am by cast a Brahooee, but not in feelings towards yourself. You know that I was loyal and true on a former occasion, and my loyalty will be apparent at the present time. Whenever you require my services you will find me true and ready to perform any duty that may be required of me.

From Faquir Mahomed to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

Noordeen arrived at Koormistan, close to Nul, with some of Azaad Khan's sowars, and sent some of them to me, stating that he intended getting up a rebellion. I replied that if he wanted forgiveness I would ask his Highness to pardon him, but would not assist him in any other way. His answer was that he intended to fight. Some of the Minguls and Judgals will join him, and I believe it is their intention to create a disturbance in Beylah. Two sowars of Azaad Khan's came to me and said that their Sirdar would join in the rebellion if I would, but that if I did not he would have nothing to do with the business. I replied that I relied on God and his Highness and had no other support.

You, Shahgassee, may depend that any tribe amongst the Bezonjaos who obey me will arm for his Highness. Some of my tribe on the borders of my district may be induced to join ; for instance, on the last occasion, most of the tribe were with you whilst a few joined Sirdar Meah Khan, late Jam of Beylah.

Meah Allum Khan, the Bezonjao Chief close to Beylah, has promised to act according to my wishes. You will soon see who are false and who are true. I have also sent to the Bezonjaos who reside at Poorali in Beylah, to support Shahgassee Goolam Jan in any disturbance that may arise.

You have written and asked me to come to Khelat, and to send my son Meah Kairah to Bhagwana. You know that I am an old man and could not stand the cold at this season of the year. I will send my son either to Bhagwana or Khelat, whichever you think best.

Azaad Khan's men told me that if their chief made any move it would be against Punchgoor.

Don't have the slightest doubt as to my fidelity.

I also received a friendly note from Sirdar Faquir Mahomed informing me of his intention to support his Highness. All these letters have been just received, Sunday, and the Bezonjao Sirdar's conduct has done much to reassure his Highness the Khan.

Gohur Khan Zurukzai, who created a disturbance in Lehree after the departure of Nawab Mahomed, wrote to his Highness that he had appointed himself Chief of Jalawan vice Taj Mahomed, and requested that a khillut might be sent to him, as also the barak or standard of the tribe. Prior to the receipt of this note, the Zuggur Mingul, Sirdar Abdool Rahman, with his followers and fifty infantry, were sent with the Darogah to restore order. Gohur Khan tried to hold the narrow pass against them; in the skirmish that ensued the Zurukzais lost four men, and Gohur Khan fled. His Highness' party then took possession of his village, Kurgan, and property.

During the past week 21 camels laden with wool have passed through en route to Kurrachee, and 34 camels with piece goods from the latter place en route to Candahar.

Owing to scanty forage I propose proceeding to Kozdar in the course of a day or two.

His Highness has, I believe, written to Nawab Mahomed Khan regarding his treaty with Sirdar Moollah Mahomed, and refused to sanction the same.

No. 24.

Dated Soonasing, 10th December 1871.

Diary by the Political Agent, Khelat, from 4th to the 10th December 1871.

SIRDAR MEAH KAIRAH, son of the Bezonjao Chief, arrived at Khelat on Wednesday, the 6th instant, and visited me on Friday. From conversing with him it was apparent that the loyalty proposed by these Sirdars.* Father and son expect large grants of inam land or valuable appointments. The former has applied for the half of the Foorbut districts in Kedj as a reward for past services, and the latter has implied that he ought to be made Naib of Beylah vice Shahgassee Goolam Jan. His Highness is very much incensed at these chiefs trying to sell their services to him, and states that they would not have dared to make the requests they have done except under the present trying circumstances, and that come what may he will not yield to their demands. His Highness attributes this change of demeanour on the part of the Bezonjaos to Nawab Mahomed Khan's dilatory and unsatisfactory conduct in Kutchee.

* Sic in orig.

Forage being scarce I left Khelat on Saturday en route to Kozdar. At Soonasing a severe shock of earthquake was felt about 9 p.m. on the 10th instant.

A large kafila about 250 camels laden with wool left Khelat with me en route to Kurrachee.

Gohur Khan Zurukzai and Dad Mahomed, who attempted to create a disturbance in Lehree, have joined Noordeen Mingul.

Thirty sowars of Azaad Khan's, under command of Jumal, having escorted Noordeen into Wud on their return homewards, plundered a kafila of thirty camels at Shereenzur, near Mushka. These camels belonged to people at Geedur, near Sohrah, and were laden with dates.

His Highness, anticipating a disturbance in Beylah, wrote to Darogah Attah Mahomed some time ago to reinforce Shahgassee Goolam Jan. The Darogah has, however, written to say that it would be very ill advised his doing so, as the people in Mekran are in a very unsettled state having heard of the disturbance in Kutchee.

The Nowsherwanis had plundered a kafila at Punchgoor, and in the fight that took place a nephew of Azaad Khan was killed. The latter threatened to attack Punchgoor if Kootabooddeen was not given to him as blood money. The Darogah at once sent 100 men of his detachment to occupy the place and proceeded with the remaining 200 to Kedj.

At Rodenjo I received a letter from Shahgassee Goolam Jan, informing me that Ali Khan Jamote had occupied Oothul, but that he intended, if well enough, to attack him in the course of a day or two.

No. 25.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, from the 11th to the 17th December 1871.

ARRIVED at Bhagwana on Friday, the 15th instant, and move our camp to Kozdar on Tuesday, the 19th.

The Naib of this place informs me that a few days ago a sowar from Sirdar Moollah Mahomed joined Noordeen Mingul, informed him of the anjam or treaty that was under consideration, and directed him, Noordeen, to lose no time in attacking Beylah.

For the last ten or twelve days all communication between Kozdar and Beylah has been stopped by the Minguls. Noordeen left Wud with 200 men, and has, I believe, been joined by several branches of the Mingul tribe. A few of the Rezonjaos have also accompanied him; it is stated that they sent a messenger to Shahgassee Goolam Jan, asking him to surrender Beylah as he had no chance of holding it against them. The Shahgassee replied that as long as he had life he would protect Beylah and his Highness the Khan's interests.

Sirdar Faquir Mahomed has just sent me a letter reported everything quiet in Nul.

The climate here is comparatively mild, not much colder than Kutchee at this season of the year.

Sirdar Faquir Mahomed's messenger states that Noordeen Mingul had arrived at Asiab, and that Ali Khan Jamote had advanced on Dund; also that the Roonjas had joined Noordeen, and that the Shahgassee's detachment had refused to fight. This report requires confirmation.

Asiab is about eight miles from Beylah on the Khelat side, and Dund is about the same distance on the Kurrachee side.

No. 26.

No. 68, dated Bombay Castle, 8th January 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I AM directed to forward herewith, for the information of the Government of India, copy of a memorandum from the Commissioner in Scind, No. 816, dated the 9th ultimo, and of its accompaniments, regarding the entrance into the talookas of Kumbar and Soojawal, of the Shikarpoor District, of large numbers of the subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat who have fled from the Brahooee marauders who are in insurrection against the Khan.

Enclosure 1 in No. 26.

No. 498, dated Shikarpoor, 8th November 1871.

From C. McIvor, Esq., District Superintendent of Shikarpoor Police, to Commissioner of Police in Sind, Kurrachee.

INSPECTOR Khan Bahadoor Taj Mahomed Khan reports to me that large numbers of the subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat have entered the talookas of Kumbar and Soojawal, having fled from the Brahooee marauders who are in insurrection against the Khan.

The majority of the refugees have only escaped with their lives, their property having been plundered and destroyed by the insurgents.

The inspector is at Gote Shaho Jumalee on the Khelat frontier, and has taken the necessary steps to preserve order among the refugees.

I have placed a body of armed and mounted police under his orders.

From the latest information the Brahooees are committing depredations in the villages near Bhang, about 80 miles from British territory.

I do not anticipate that they will plunder any towns within our frontier, but as I consider it advisable that I should be present to superintend any arrangements which may be found necessary to protect the interests of our subjects, I am about to proceed in the direction of Shadadpoor.

I shall submit a further report on receipt of more reliable information.

Enclosure 2 in No. 26.

No. 525, dated Camp, Shadadpoor, 25th November 1871.

From C. McIvor, Esq., District Superintendent of Police, Shikarpoor, to Commissioner of Police in Scind, on circuit.

In continuation of my letter No. 498, dated 8th instant, I have the honour to report that I visited Shah Jumalee and several of the villages adjacent, in order to satisfy myself that effective measures had been taken for preserving order amongst the numerous refugees from Khelat territory; and I beg to state that the arrangements made for this purpose by Inspector Khan Bahadoor Taj Mahomed Khan appear to be most judicious.

Eleven temporary police outposts have been stationed at the following villages, viz.:—

1. Gote Butchul Lugharee.
2. „ Mahomed Khan Khund.
3. „ Lukho Gudro.
4. Putt.
5. Gote Rhya Mujsee.
6. „ Khawundne Roree.
7. Tiloo Mugsee.
8. Gote Meer Mahomed Huonani.
9. „ Imam Bux Nuthrani.
10. „ Shaho Jumalee.
11. „ Meer Mahomed Sumananee.

At each of these posts there are from three to four constables from the armed and mounted police. The whole are superintended by a chief constable, who has received all necessary instructions.

Armed men crossing the frontier are, on entering British territory, immediately disarmed, and there are at present 65 muskets, 132 swords, and about 52 shields and ammunition pouches in charge of the police.

In all cases in which the owners recross the border the arms are returned to them.

Police detachments have chiefly been stationed here to prevent annoyance or inconvenience to the inhabitants of the isolated squattings, which have become so numerous here, and to dissipate any sudden panic which may occur, as I am well informed that there are many disorderly and turbulent characters fully prepared to augment and take advantage of the slightest disturbance.

Even the residents of towns as far removed from the frontier as Soojawal and Kumber entertain groundless fears about the security of their property. The whole of the country immediately within the western boundary of the talooks of Kumber and Soojawal swarm with refugees, and places which were formerly wretched hamlets have now become respectable villages in size.

Many of these persons are in extremely destitute circumstances and suffer considerably from hunger and cold; numbers are, however, returning to their homes, though they may probably be compelled to re-enter our territory, as from the latest intelligence it appears that Sirdars Noordeen Khan Mingul and Moolla Mahomed Raisanee are both raising men to oppose the Khan.

I would beg to take this opportunity of bringing to your notice the very praiseworthy conduct of Peer Bux Kohawur, Zemindar of Shadadpoor, who has exerted himself most creditably in aiding the police in procuring and communicating intelligence.

I am also informed that he has done much to relieve the sufferings of the unfortunates who have fled from Brahooee marauders, and I would therefore respectfully urge that his services may be suitably recognised.

No. 3538, dated Shikarpoor, 29th November 1871.

Endorsed by the Magistrate of Shikarpoor.

FORWARDED in original to the Commissioner of Police in Scind.

No. 816, dated 9th December 1871.

MEMORANDUM.

IN reply to his endorsement No. 3538, dated 29th ultimo, the Magistrate of the Shikarpoor district is informed that the proceedings reported by Mr. McIvor on behalf of the refugees from Khelat territory are entirely approved.

2. The conduct of Peer Bux Kohawur is viewed with much satisfaction, and the Magistrate is requested to convey the Commissioner's approbation and thanks to that Zemindar.

3. Means for affording subsistence to the refugees will be open on the public works now in course of construction on the Seer and Sukkur and canals, and the Collector and Magistrate is requested to communicate with the Executive Engineer in view to this being arranged.

(Signed) W. L. Merewether, Colonel,
Commissioner in Scind.

No. 27.

No. 8 C.P., dated Camp, Delhi, 11th January 1872.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, to Secretary to Government of Bombay.

With reference to the correspondence ending with the telegram of the 9th instant from his Excellency the Governor of Bombay to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General, I am directed to forward copy of a telegram, dated the 7th instant, from the Commissioner in Sind, and to communicate the following remarks and instructions of the Governor General in Council on the subject of affairs in Khelat.

2. It appears that nearly the whole country is in the hands of the revolted Sirdars. Kutchee was in rebellion many weeks ago. Lus Beyla has fallen into the hands of Ali Khan Jamote. Within the last few days Kedj has thrown off allegiance, and the position of the Khan's representative there appears to be untenable. His Excellency the Governor General in Council views this successful rebellion with great anxiety. The spread of disorder in Khelat is most prejudicial to British interests, and his Excellency in Council, while impressed with the urgent necessity that exists for bringing the present disorders to a close, sees very little hope of the Khan being able to establish his authority while he maintains his attitude of uncompromising demand for the unconditional surrender of the rebels.

3. It is difficult to believe that the Sirdars who have taken the lead in the present insurrectionary movement could have maintained their position so long and so successfully if they had not some well-grounded grievances against the Khan's government, and to a considerable extent enlisted the sympathies of the people on their behalf. Admitting that, in former years, many of the Sirdars may have proved themselves to be turbulent and intriguing men, and may have been the cause of much anxiety to the Khan and weakness to his Government, his Excellency in Council nevertheless doubts whether the policy is altogether sound which refuses to receive their overtures except upon unconditional surrender. If the Khan were in a position to assert his authority by force of arms the case would be very different, but this he seems quite unable to do. On the other hand, the British Government could not consent to assist him with a British force under any circumstances to coerce the Sirdars, nor can help of other kind be given unless his Excellency in Council is fully satisfied that they will receive proper treatment at his hands, and that their rebellion has not been caused by aggressions upon their just and ancient rights.

4. I am therefore to suggest for the consideration of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council, whether it would not be proper that the Commissioner in Sind, when calling on the Sirdars to submit, should assure them that their complaints will be thoroughly inquired into, and that such rights as they may be found justly to claim will be secured to them by the Khan. At the same time the Governor General in Council considers that the Khan should be required to put his affairs entirely in the hands of the Commissioner, and to abide by his mediation with the Sirdars. If the Khan would undertake to abide absolutely by the terms which the Commissioner might mediate, to remedy all the grievances of the Sirdars in regard to confiscation of property, resumption of jaghires, and oppressive taxation, which the Commissioner might decide to be well-founded, and if he would consent eventually to such a change in his administration as would give the principal chiefs a due share in the government of the country and an interest in the maintenance of order, and lead to the establishment of a system which would give a reasonable hope of permanent peace—on these conditions his Excellency in Council would not be indisposed, after the terms have been satisfactorily arranged and accepted, to give the Khan pecuniary assistance to the extent of a lakh of rupees, or more if necessary, to enable him to meet his most pressing demands and give his administration a fair start.

5. Under no circumstances will his Excellency in Council consent to send a force into Khelat to assist the Khan or suppress internal revolt. Nor will his Excellency in Council assist the Khan with money unless assured that substantial justice is done between the Khan and his Sirdars, and such arrangements are made as give a fair prospect of permanent peace and firm government. The mediation of the British Government on the above condition seems, therefore, to be the most advisable course, and if the Bombay Government concur in these views, his Excellency the Governor General in Council authorises action to be taken on them at once. If his Excellency the Governor in Council has other suggestions to make, I am to request the favour of their submission at an early date.

I am to state that, in the opinion of his Excellency in Council, the extremely opposite views of policy which have prevailed between the Commissioner in Sind and the Superintendent of the Frontier have not been without an injurious effect on the state of affairs in Khelat, and if the Commissioner, with the liberal discretionary powers that have been given to him, is unable to mediate with advantage, it will be necessary to consider whether other arrangements for the control of our relations with Khelat ought not to be made.

6. With respect to the remark in the telegram of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay, that he regrets that his minute of February was left unanswered as he hesitated to remove Colonel Phayre, and now ascribes most of the present difficulties to his present and known sympathies, I am to point out that the Government of India were never asked to direct the removal of Colonel Phayre. In his minute of 10th February 1871, his Excellency the Governor of Bombay stated that he had refrained hitherto, from regard to Colonel Phayre, from proposing his removal, but thought it would be for the public interest if, on a fit opportunity, another appointment were found for him. This was a matter which it was entirely within the competency of the Bombay Government to deal with, and in regard to which it has not hitherto been usual for the Government of India to interfere. In my telegram of 24th February 1871, you were informed that, before deciding on the affairs of the Sind frontier, the Viceroy would await a reply to my letter No. 412 P., of that date, in which the views of the Bombay Government in regard to the Murree and Boogtee tribes were called for. The reply to that letter was not furnished till 15th July. In my letter No. 2336 P., dated 27th October, the policy proposed in the minute of his Excellency the Governor was provisionally sanctioned, and in expressing approval of this policy his Excellency the Governor General in Council considers that he did all that was needed to enable the Bombay Government to give effect to their views under the conditions laid down by the Government of India. If the permission of the Government of India, which had never hitherto been asked in respect to appointments in Sind, was considered necessary before Colonel Phayre could be transferred to another appointment, it ought to have been specially asked for.

No. 28.

No. 264, dated Bombay Castle, 15th January 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

Referring to previous correspondence regarding the affairs of Khelat, I am directed to transmit herewith, for submission to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council, copy of a letter (and of its accompaniments), No. 868, dated 30th ultimo, from the Commissioner in Sind, reporting his proceedings at Jacobabad, and submitting his views as to the present rebellion in the Khelat territory, and the mode in which assistance should be given to his Highness the Khan in dealing with his nobles.

2. In submitting these papers I am desired to express the concurrence of the Right Honourable the Governor in Council in the views and recommendations submitted by Sir William Merewether. His Excellency in Council is still of opinion that pecuniary aid should be given to the Khan, not on the ground that his resources are exhausted, but to prevent their being so.

Enclosure in No. 28.

No. 868, dated Camp, Jacobabad, 30th December 1871.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Scind, to His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir W. R. Seymour V. FitzGerald, G.C.S.I., Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

I HAVE the honour to report that I reached this place on the 21st instant. On the 19th idem, when en route from Sukkur, I received the following telegram from Colonel Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier :—

"Nawab Mahomed Khan has written in to his Highness' Vakeel here, that he is coming "to Jacobabad with the Sirdars about making terms. But in the Khelat Diary sent to "you yesterday, Captain Harrison reports that the Khan is averse to making terms and "asks us to aid him against the Sirdars. Shall I let Mahomed Khan come to Jacobabad. "Please let me know quick, as from the letter just received he appears to be en route." I replied at once, "Mahomed Khan should be directed immediately not to bring the "Sirdars into Jacobabad. He should leave them on the border, and come in himself to "Jacobabad, where I shall be on Thursday morning."

2. Colonel Phayre again telegraphed, "Referring to my telegram of this morning, I "have just learnt that Nawab Mahomed Khan has arrived "at Mamool,* two coss from this, with the Sirdars, and "wants to come in to Jacobabad this evening." To this was sent—"Mahomed Khan "should leave the Sirdars at Mamool and not bring them within British territory. He "should not have brought them so far without permission first obtained. He should "himself come to Jacobabad, and be there when I come on Thursday."

* In Khelat territory.—(Sd.) W. L. M.

Colonel Phayre further reported on the 19th, "I have given your orders to Mahomed "Khan and he has written to tell them. He tells me they did not travel with him—were "behind.

3. The Khelat diary referred to in Colonel Phayre's first telegram reached me on the 20th, having gone to Sukkur (copy in full appended). It contains the following:—"The "above report with accompaniments† reached his Highness "just before paying me his usual weekly visit. From his "Highness' conversation, he was greatly incensed at "Nawab Mahomed Khan's conduct, as prior to leaving "Khelat he had agreed that the acts of the rebels had been "of such a nature as to preclude any possibility of anjam or 'treaty.' His Highness "further stated that Nawab Mahomed Khan's conduct regarding this treaty had been to "actually acknowledge Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the rebels as the ruling powers in "Beloochistan. That other districts would naturally follow the example that had been "set them, and that he would be unable to restore order unaided. That he and his "brother, Nusseer Khan, had always considered themselves as dependents of the "English Government. If his country was of any value to us as a boundary to our own "territory, the time had now come for us to take possession or give him assistance. "That if we were indifferent as to what took place, he would do the best he could, but "might eventually have to seek protection from either Afghanistan or Persia."

† From Nawab Mahomed Khan to his Highness the Khan, giving an account of his proceedings and the terms he had received from the rebel Sirdars.
Copy of these terms was forwarded under my memorandum, No. 798, of 3rd December 1871.—(Sd.) W. L. M.

4. The view taken by the Khan of the demands of the Sirdars was undoubtedly the correct one. They were not terms respectfully asked for, but arrogant dictations, which could not be accepted by a sovereign without conveying a public acknowledgment that he was helpless, and virtually abdicating his power and position as ruler of the country. The Khan indignantly refused to receive these terms, and wrote to Nawab Mahomed Khan as follows:—"I have perused your letter and the terms of peace sent by you. I was "greatly astonished at reading the contents. You remember very well that I asked you "in the presence of Major Harrison whether you would go and fight or make peace, and "you replied that the time was not for making peace, that peace was not advisable, the "time for that had passed. I inquired again from you and Sukkur Khan,‡ and received "the same reply; you stated fairly there was no resource but "to go to war. When you put to flight the rebels at Sunn "and Laskaree they were compelled to proceed to the town of Jallal Khan and ask for "peace. You should at first have given me information of the wish of these rebels and "then have carried out my instructions. It was quite wrong on your part to have "inclined to the side of peace in opposition to your very clear statements to me. What "is the reason of this procedure? You were my vakeel; when you did not wish to fight, "you should have made such terms as would have been consistent with my high dignity "and honour, and I would have given my consent. I am at a loss to understand for "what reasons you have agreed to the terms you mention. If you have done it for ‡ Commander of the regular troops. (Sd.) W. L. M.

" security of the country and people, and peace to the subjects, where are those people " and that country? By this arrangement the return of the people who have left the " country is impossible, but there is every probability of the flight of those who have " remained when they come to know of it. There should be distinction between the " ruler and the ruled. You should think for a moment and pay great attention to the " fact that the Brahooees have caused great disturbances and have inflicted very great " injury on the subject people, who have on that account been obliged to take refuge " in another country. The British Government, on hearing of these improper acts of " the Brahooees, were greatly dissatisfied and expressed disapproval, and have in conse- " quence imprisoned Meer Khan Jamote and sent him to Bombay. The British officers " will not now, taking into consideration what has already passed, approve of those " terms of peace. Noordeen* was turned out of Kharan by " Azaad Khan, to whom he had gone for assistance. Meer " Fukkeer Mahomed and Kairiah † also remained faithful and " have given the same refusal of aid to Noordeen. Meer Kairiah will himself come into " my presence. Noordeen, who has met with disappointment everywhere, has gone to " the Minguls for protection of his person from injury, but his entreaties have proved " unsuccessful. None have given him refuge, and all have kept aloof through fear; why " have you now shown such an inclination for peace? This is not good that you want " to do, but is evil. A poet has said—' War and peace out of time and season are " ' useless. The rose remains in its own place, and the thorn in its own. The time is " ' not yet passed, and it is not too late, you should gird up your loins and show your " ' courage, and try to perform such acts as may be remembered for ever, and may " ' not be forgotten by lapse of time.' I approve of your sending for the son of Naib " Wullee Mahomed from Dadur, what instructions have you issued to Hyat Khan " Lehree, whom you have appointed to the Naibship of Dadur as formerly, and how will " he perform his duties? What property will he take care of? Had you taken the " country by force and appointed Mahomed Hyat Khan also by force, it would have " been better and have looked nicer. All is well here; continue to give particulars of " the state of affairs with you without fail."

* Mingul Chief and in rebellion.
† His son.

5. On the day of my arrival here Nawab Mahomed Khan paid his respects, and communicated to me the contents of the above letter. He also briefly informed me of his proceedings to the effect that after reaching Jellah Deera,‡ his forces and those of the rebels were on the 20th November drawn up opposite each other, to try the issue of battle, but he thought that, taking into consideration the injury the country and people had already suffered from these disturbances, he would consult his master's interests best, and those of the country generally, if he endeavoured to make peace. Rebel Sirdars came into his camp, and the result was the terms of peace were drawn up as already explained. He then proceeded to Bagh, the rebels occupying Hajee-ka-Shere. The distance between is about 16 miles. On the 13th December he received reply from his Highness the Khan respecting the terms. He still, however, thought peace on these terms most desirable, and determined on coming into Jacobabad to lay the whole matter before the Political Superintendent, Colonel Phayre, and bringing the Sirdars also. The Sirdars did not accompany him, but followed. On receiving my orders he arranged for the Sirdars to remain at Mamool and Nusseerabad, places in Khelat territory on the border, four and seven miles respectively from Jacobabad.

‡ Six miles west of Bagh.

6. By bringing the Sirdars with him he evidently thought there might be a chance of his proceedings being approved by the authorities here, and that arrangements might be made under which the terms he had received might be ratified, while at the same time he extricated himself personally from a difficult position in which his pusillanimity and disregard of his master's and country's best interests had placed him.

7. As the least recognition of these Sirdars, and of their demands, would, I felt sure, be fatal to the present and future power of his Highness the Khan, I at once informed Nawab Mahomed Khan that he had acted most improperly in bringing them in this direction, and that he must immediately intimate to them that I could hold no communication whatever with them as long as they were in arms against their sovereign, and that they must abandon their hostile attitude before I could listen to any statements in regard to them. That as regards himself, he had received the instructions of his Highness the Khan, and should proceed accordingly.

8. In acting thus I was guided by the conviction that direct interference from this in the present disturbances was most unadvisable; that it was most necessary to let the Sirdars understand that they would receive no countenance in their rebellious proceedings, and that if the Nawab chose to act vigorously and with proper courage, he had ample means in Kutchee to defeat the rebels and bring them into submission or drive them out of the country.

9. The Sirdars were duly informed, and left Mamool and Nusseerabad that night for Hajee-ka-Shere, Nawab Mahomed Khan intending to follow afterwards to Bagh.

10. It appeared to me to have been conclusively shown, by what had passed, that the Khan's interests and the peace of the country must inevitably suffer gravely in the hands of so weak and timid a person as Nawab Mahomed Khan. I therefore addressed the following letter to his Highness the Khan, to inform him how I had acted, and to induce him to speedily depute a more worthy person to manage his affairs in Kutchee.

" I have to intimate to your Highness that I this day (21st December) arrived at Jacobabad.

" I had previously heard from Colonel Phayre, C.B., the Political Superintendent on the Frontier, of what had passed between your Highness' vakeel, Moolla Mahomed Khan, and the chiefs who have been lately acting in opposition to your authority, and that the vakeel was on his way to Jacobabad, accompanied by the chiefs, for the purpose apparently of having his proceedings countenanced and approved by the British authorities.

" I requested Colonel Phayre to inform the vakeel that, while he himself should come into Jacobabad, the chiefs could not under the circumstances be allowed to enter British territory.

" The vakeel has to-day paid his respects to me, and I have heard from him a statement of what had occurred as well as of your Highness having disapproved of the terms he had taken on himself to make with the chiefs.

" I at once informed him that such arrangements as he had entered into could not be listened to by me, and he should immediately inform the chiefs that I could hold no communication with them as long as they were in arms against their sovereign.

" It is necessary now that I should point out to your Highness that I do not consider that your interests and those of the country and people you rule over have been properly regarded by the vakeel, and that the stability of your Government, the peace and prosperity of your country, which it is the earnest desire of the British Government to see firmly established, are liable to suffer while in the hands of Vakeel Mahomed Khan, especially as regards the present state of affairs.

" I would therefore earnestly urge on your Highness that you should, with the least possible delay, despatch your Wuzeer, the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, to Kutchee, with full powers to act in your Highness' name, and with authority to confer with me on such points as you or he afterwards may deem it advisable he should seek my advice.

" That advice will always be most freely and readily given, and I trust results favourable to the good of your country will speedily follow from the course now recommended.

" Major Harrison has received instructions to remain above the passes, so that he may be near your Highness, and be able to afford you the benefit of his advice, when required, and as I have the fullest confidence in his judgment, I trust you will cordially accept his counsel.

" With assurances of sincere friendship for your Highness, and of regard for the welfare of yourself and country, I subscribe myself, &c."

11. The Wuzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed is one of the bravest and most true servants the Khan has about him, and is, at the same time, a man of good sound sense as well as very just. If he can be spared from Khelat for a little while, I have little doubt of matters being satisfactorily arranged.

12. The above letter was forwarded for delivery to his Highness the Khan by the Political Agent at Khelat, through the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to whom I wrote :—

" I have the honour to forward herewith a letter addressed to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, with copy of the same in English, for your information and record, which I request you will be so good as to despatch by the quickest route to Major Harrison, for delivery to the Khan.

" 2. I consider that the conduct of the Vakeel, Moolla Mahomed Khan, has been most blameable. He was sent down by his master to attack and bring into subjection the chiefs who had taken up arms against the Khan's authority ; on the very first occasion that he gets near them he proceeds at once to arrange terms with them, and finally accedes to their actually dictating the terms on which they will be pleased to behave themselves better in future. These he forwards to his Highness the Khan for approval, but without waiting to receive answer* he takes upon himself to bring these chiefs towards this place, apparently with the object of having his proceedings approved, and the terms he had arranged acknowledged by the British authorities.

* It appeared afterwards he had received a reply from the Khan. (Sd.) W. L. M.

"3. It is clear from a letter written by his Highness the Khan to the Vakeel, and which the latter has shown me, that he has acted entirely at variance, both with the orders he received and his own professions at the time of leaving the Khan, and in the worst possible manner for the good of his master and country. He behaved most improperly also in attempting to bring these chiefs to the British authorities without the sanction and instructions of the Khan, and before even he knew whether what he had done was approved of by the Khan. Until such approval had been received, and the Khan had expressed a wish that these chiefs should be allowed to visit the British authorities, it was manifestly most unbecoming that the Vakeel should have thought of bringing them to Jacobabad. It should also have been equally manifest to him that no communications could be held by the British authorities with men who were in arms against the ruler of the country. When the Vakeel attended to-day you were present. I informed him that intercommunication would not be allowed as long as the chiefs remained in armed opposition to their sovereign, and that he should act accordingly.

"4. It is most necessary that some person of more courage and better judgment than Moolla Mahomed Khan has displayed should be entrusted with the management of affairs in Kutchee, and Major Harrison should urge his Highness the Khan to depute at once his Wuzeer, the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, whose courage and integrity have been so often proved, to conduct the affairs of Kutchee and bring matters to a more satisfactory condition. I believe the state of affairs in Jalawan, and generally above the passes, will allow of this measure being adopted, and I trust the Khan will not hesitate to carry it out.

"5. Major Harrison, as mentioned in my former letter, should remain, for the present at all events, above the passes, and, as arranged with you to-day, his escort be relieved, the relief being provided with everything necessary to meet the severity of winter there. He should select the best place as regards obtaining forage, merely keeping in view the desirability of being within easy communication with the Khan.

"6. I have to request that you will transmit a copy of this letter to Major Harrison, with copy of the English version of the letter to his Highness the Khan, for his information and guidance."

13. The Sirdar left on the night of the 21st, the Nawab on the evening of the 24th. The latter, before quitting his party, who were encamped a little north of Bagh, had given instructions that they were to engage in no hostilities during his absence unless they were attacked, in which case they were to do their best. Information has now been received that, during the night of the 23rd instant, the rebels attempted to surprise the camp of the Nawab's troops. These, however, were on the alert, met the attack, and, when day broke of the 24th, assailed the rebels so vigorously that they quickly and completely defeated them. The rebels fled in the direction of Null, as if intending to seek shelter in Seebee or in the Murree Hills. They are said to have had 120 killed, while the loss of the Khan's troops was only three sowars and two foot soldiers killed, and one of the latter wounded. Sheekkur Khan, the Commander of the Khan's troops, followed up the rebels, and afterwards took possession of Hajee-ka-shere and Mittree, finding in the latter of which much of the property that had been plundered by the rebels.

14. It is not clearly ascertained as yet whether the attack on the Nawab's camp was ordered by the Sirdars after they had been told they would not be received here, but it most probably was, and instructions might easily have been sent by them in advance in the hope of catching the Khan's troops careless. In this they were completely foiled by the good conduct of the latter and their commander. This success, if followed up by good arrangements, should bring the present disturbance in Kutchee to a close.

15. From the southern part of Beloochistan the intelligence is not, I am sorry to say, so satisfactory as before reported. Ali Khan Jamote had succeeded in getting possession of Beyla, the Shahgassee Golam Jan having had to abandon it, owing to the troops with him misbehaving and refusing to fight. What has become of the Shahgassee since he fled from Beyla is not yet known, but he completely abandoned his charge, though the force coming against him was very insignificant. Noordeen, the Mingul Chief, failed to obtain assistance from Azaad Khan. He then entered his own country of Wud, and having got a small body of men together proceeded to Beyla and joined Ali Khan Jamote.

16. Fakheer Mahomed Bezonjao, the old Naib of Kedj, held aloof on all former occasions from any of the rebellious movements that took place. He appears on the present occasion to have shown the same fidelity towards the Khan, and if he continues to do so Noordeen's power for mischief will be nothing great.

17. After most careful inquiry made since my arrival here, and mature consideration, I am quite satisfied that the late disturbance arose conjointly from dissatisfaction felt by a few chiefs of Sarawan with certain acts of the Khan, and the working of the two fugitive Sirdars, Moolla Mahomed Raisanee and Noordeen Mingul, who had been residing at Candahar. The Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, his Highness the Khan's Wuzeer, in whose honesty and truth, from an acquaintance of many years standing, I can fully trust, stated to Major Harrison that these disturbances had not arisen from any act of the Khan, but he allowed that, though the Khan had not been unjust, he had not favoured his chiefs with much affection. They certainly have not done much to win it. Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, it will be recollected, fled to Afghanistan after he had rejected the liberal decision passed on his case by the Khan in May 1869. Alladina Khoord, another chief of Sarawan, also cast in his lot with Moolla Mahomed, but remained at Seebee or in the Murree Hills without proceeding to Candahar. Noordeen Mingul, a chief of Jalawan holding formerly possession in Wud, joined the Jam of Beyla (whose connexion he is by marriage) in his attempted hostilities against the Khan in the end of 1869, and when the Jam escaped into Sind he was accompanied by a younger brother of Noordeen who is still with the ex-Jam's family at Hyderabad, but Noordeen himself fled to Candahar and joined Moolla Mahomed Raisanee. From there these two watched events. An appeal they made to his Highness the Ameer appears to have met no favourable response, and they waited until some opportunity should offer for reviving disturbances in Beloochistan.

18. This appeared to have come to pass the other day, and the absence of the main body of the Khan's troops in Mekran, Beyla, and Kutchee seemed to make it a favourable one. The Khan of Khelat during last cold season made a tour through Kutchee, which he had not done for many years, and remained there for some time. He then proceeded up to Quetta by the Bolan and by Moostung to Khelat, staying awhile at both those places, and not reaching Khelat until the 2nd October. During his progress his Highness thought fit to make inquiries into the nature and extent of tenures which during former disturbances had been either irregularly obtained possession of, or been improperly enlarged. This of course he had a just right to do, and it was proper he should do so when present himself in person. But it was a delicate task, and one in which liberal views and decisions would have greatly added to his popularity and power. Unfortunately Major Harrison was not near him at the time to give him the benefit of advice, and there were others who did not counsel him well, so that a too precise course would seem to have been followed, which did not give satisfaction to those whose actions were closely looked into. Still there was nothing which occurred in Kutchee, as far as I have yet learned, the Khan had not a perfect right to do as sovereign of the country, if he considered it necessary.

19. At Moostung there was a man named Syud Ali Mahomed, who during the time, 1863–64, when the present Khan Khodadad Khan was driven from his throne, and his brother Shere Dil Khan was made Khan, took an active part against the former and officiated as Wuzeer to the latter. While the Khan was at Mustoong he went through the revenue accounts and discovered that the Syud had misappropriated some 8,000 rupees, besides making payments without authority. Major Harrison happened to join the Khan shortly after, and directly he heard of the above he strongly advised the Khan not to try and recover what his cousin had taken no notice of, as doing so would lead to discontent and disturbances. The Khan's excellent Wuzeer gave the same advice. Syud Ali Mahomed had also in his possession a letter bearing Shere Dil Khan's signature, which made over Quetta to the Afghans.

20. Unfortunately the advice tendered had come too late. The Khan having proved the misappropriation made the Syud repay the money. He also made him deliver up the letter of Shere Dil Khan's giving away Quetta, and his Highness has it now in his possession. That causing the refund of the money by Syud Ali Mahomed was an impolitic act is plain enough, particularly as so many years had been allowed to pass without any notice having been taken of it, and that it caused the Syud to become discontented is undoubtedly true, but still such circumstances would not have caused the outbreak of rebellion had there not been other agency at work, and the Sirdars at Candahar not been ready to take advantage of any ill-feeling they might hear of.

21. Syud Ali Mahomed used his best endeavours to work on others, and succeeded too well with some, especially with Jehangeer Khan, the head of the Lehrees, and one of the most determined men in that part of the country. Moolla Mahomed also addressed Jehangeer Khan from Candahar, as was shown afterwards in the letters found upon his person. Jehangeer Khan had much to be grateful to the Khan, for in 1869 he had sided with Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, and had been seized and imprisoned by the Wuzeer Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, but had been released and pardoned by the Khan without any penalty being exacted. When, however, the Khan was in Kutchee, his Highness examined the Sunnuds under which Jehangeer Khan held his lands there,* and finding he had encroached on Government lands, directed that revenue should be collected on the latter; Jehangeer declared he would either keep what he had got or take nothing. Jehangeer Khan being a man of note for courage was the leader of the rebels at Mustoong and fell in the fight.

* The principal part of the Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan, though their chief possessions and places of residence in summer are above the passes, have large grants of free lands in Kutchee and spent the greater part of the cold season there, as less inclement than in the upper country.

22. Moobaruck Khan Shawanee, another leader, and who was also killed, had for some time hoped the Khan would nominate him head of the tribe in place of Abdool Kadar, who is an imbecile. But this had not been done, and the Sirdar had further learned that the Khan intended examining his Sunnuds also. These seem his only reasons for joining the others.

23. Syud Khan Bungoolzye, the third who was killed, was a wealthy merchant, and it is not stated that he had anything to complain of whatever. The fourth, Sirdar Syud Khan Mahomed Shahee, escaped. He was, it is said, dissatisfied with some decision of the Khan in revenue matters.

24. The design of these chiefs was to seize on Mustoong and Quetta, cause the Khan to be assassinated, and being joined by Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen from Candahar, to take possession of the country. What was to follow afterwards does not appear to have been taken into consideration by them, but there would undoubtedly have been anarchy and confusion throughout the whole of Beloochistan. Meer Khan, the ex-Jam of Beyla, would have attempted to return to his old position, and would have immediately resorted to his old intrigues to obtain the supreme power. This would never have been allowed by the Brahooees and Belooch, for though he was related to the Khan of Khelat by marriage, he is by birth a Sindee, whose rule the others would not submit to.

25. Quetta was saved by the fidelity and ready action of the Khan's Naib there, who placed himself in the fort with the troops he had. The rebels gained temporary possession of Moostung, but were defeated and driven from it by the promptitude and courageous attack of the worthy old Wuzeer. The rebels being scattered proceeded down the Bolan, and, recruiting near Dadur, succeeded in getting possession of that place by the treachery of people inside. They were then joined by such people in Kutchee who had nothing to lose, and might gain by plunder, and the Khan's officers having shamefully fled from Bagh it was occupied by the rebels, and Gundava afterwards, where the Khan had no troops. There was no organization, each person of any position formed himself a free agent and plundered on his own account; such would always be the case were there no ruler in Beloochistan.

26. Sirdar Alladina Khoord joined the rebels in Kutchee, and dissensions immediately commenced between him and Summunder Khan, the Lehree chief, who had succeeded Jehangeer Khan. These, however, were repressed by the appearance of Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, whom all acknowledged as head, and who arrived about the same time that Nawab Mahomed Khan reached Kutchee with the Khan's troops.

27. When Nawab Mahomed Khan agreed to discuss terms there were present in the rebel camp the following chiefs:—

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee.
" Jundoo Shwanee.
" Mahomed Khan* Rustomzye.
" Alladina Khoord.
" Summunder Khan Lehree.
" Syud Khan Mahomedshahee.
" Shadee Khan Bungoolzye and his son.
" Adam Khan.
" Ittibar Khan Gheranee.

Add to these—

" Noordeen Mingul.
" Ali Khan Jamote.

A minor chief—

" Gohur Lehree.

* Brother-in-law of Moolla Mahomed.

And these are all that are in open opposition to his Highness the Khan. Syud Ali Mahomed is said to have fled to Cabul.

28. The unpopularity of any acts of the Khan during his tour in Kutchee and afterwards may, I believe, be justly attributed to the baneful counsel of Nawab Mahomed Khan. The office this person properly holds is that of Vakeel for his Highness at Jacobabad. But of late years he has been much with the Khan, leaving his son in charge here. This should not, and will not, be allowed in future. Mahomed Khan is a clever man, but he is a thorough courtier, and endeavours to gain influence with his master by concurring in all his proposals and agreeing in all his views, no matter how injudicious they might be, instead of remonstrating and pointing out their impolicy, as the old Shahgassee invariably has done, when necessary. This induced the Khan to lean more on Nawab Mahomed Khan than on the Wuzeer, and to carry out illiberal measures which the latter would have certainly advised him against. The Nawab introduced octroi duties into Moostung without the Wuzeer's knowledge. These the Shahgassee repealed after the fight there. The Nawab is also sadly deficient in courage, while delighting in petty intrigues. He is, therefore, the worst person to be near the Khan, who, as a despotic sovereign, might easily be led away, especially when he has reason to be justly offended with people who have so systematically and continuously opposed his authority.

29. I regret also that I must add my conviction that these Sirdars felt a confidence in their actions, which they otherwise would not have had, from their knowledge of the views the Political Superintendent, Colonel Phayre, has unfortunately held for the past two half years in regard to their position and duty towards their sovereign. The existence of this was, I have often reported, well known throughout the country, and most seriously adds to the difficulties experienced by the Khan in controlling his unreasonable barons. They assume to themselves the right of doing whatever they please, and disputing his wishes and orders on all occasions.

30. That this is the case is, I think, plainly proved by their recent proceedings, when the Nawab consented to enter into terms with them. They dictated such as no ruler could possibly accept, and then desired and persuaded the Nawab to bring them into Jacobabad to get the assistance of the British authorities there in having them ratified by the Khan, and to get them ratified also by those authorities. They would never have ventured to propose such a thing had they not thought they would have received support, and the evil effect of such a belief I cannot too strongly remark upon. The recent orders of the Government of India have clearly laid down the policy that is to be followed as regards relations with the Khelat Government, but it will take years to remove the damaging influence the above has caused.

31. There now only remains to be considered what should be done for the future. The rebels have been dispersed for the present, and may not be able to re-collect in Kutchee or elsewhere, But owing to the temporary success that has attended Ali Khan Jamote's advance on Beyla, and the junction with him of Noordeen, there are still elements of disorder afloat, and it is most desirable that something should be done to re-establish on a sound basis and strengthen the power of the Khan, unless we are contented to let his government fall to pieces and anarchy, with subsequent estrangement from the British Government to follow. His Highness the Khan, in his conversation with Major Harrison, as detailed in that officer's diary, pointed out that he would be unable to restore order unaided, and appealed first to the British Government. Failing to obtain assistance there, he would in the end have to apply elsewhere, either to Afghanistan or Persia. This may read as a threat, but I do not believe for a moment it was intended as such by the Khan, but was the wearied exposition of real helplessness by one who was at last driven almost to despair by the incessant troubles he had been involved in from the time he ascended the throne, and who naturally turned to that power he had most confidence in, and to whom he felt he might yet be of value could his unfortunate country be brought into a settled and prosperous condition.

32. The Khan may not be the best of rulers, but taken as a Native Sovereign he will bear comparison with most. He has had more than usual difficulties to encounter, for from the very first he has had to contend against the unceasing endeavours of turbulent barons to wrest all powers from his hands; of one thing, however, there is and can be no doubt, that he has been unswervingly true in his faith towards the British Government, and in his desire to act on all occasions in the way which he thought would best meet its wishes.

33. I would therefore most strongly urge that both in justice to the Khan for the way he has acted throughout, and as certainly a course of sound policy, that his present appeal should not pass unheeded.

34. I would not for a moment recommend armed intervention now, though I clearly foresee that such will become necessary before very long for the safety of our own districts, unless some suitable remedy is applied. Ever since I have had anything to do with this frontier, many years now, I have steadily opposed the idea of armed intervention, as I have always considered it as certain to prove detrimental in a high degree to the Khan's best interests, and more likely to weaken than strengthen his power by our settling the country, not he. These were the views entertained by General Jacob as expressed by him to the previous Khan, when the treaty was entered into in 1854.

35. I am, however, and always have been, of opinion that the Khan's position and the strength of his Government may be greatly improved by the judicious application of moral power, by cordially and truly supporting his rule, by letting it be seen by his nobles and subjects that we desired to have rule sustained; and by exerting our influence in his behalf whenever we found him to be deserving and in need of it.

36. The application of moral power though may not always be sufficient, and especially in respect to a poor country like Khelat. The course we would recommend and be prepared to encourage, the ruler may not be able to carry out for want of means, either in money or war equipment, to enforce the orders he would have to issue, and to carry out the plans necessary to secure their complete observance.

37. I would therefore respectfully recommend that should the Khan of Khelat be able to send his Wuzeer into Kutchee to confer with me as proposed, that I should be authorised to act on the above views. That should I find after careful inquiry that, as I believe to be the case, one of the Khan's chief difficulties is want of pecuniary means to restore order, I should be permitted to supply him with the necessary funds to an extent not exceeding one lakh of rupees, that it may be expended for the above purpose, in rewarding those who have done him good and faithful service during these disorders, and in recompensing in some degree those who have suffered by those.

38. I would also most strongly recommend that, as a very valuable assistance at the present time, a present of 400 Enfield rifles, with 200 rounds of ball ammunition for each, and the proper supply of caps, should be made to his Highness the Khan by the Government of India. This would not only be a great help now and for hereafter, but it would be an unmistakeable mark of the earnestness of the desire of the Government of India to see the Khan's power maintained, and of its determination to uphold it. It would also clearly show the discontented that their illusion, as to the countenance acts of rebellion were likely to receive, was totally unfounded.

39. On an interview taking place with the Wuzeer, I would hear fully from him the Khan's views and intentions, and if his Highness desired that I should assist in bringing about restoration of order I might then, with due propriety, receive intimation that an amnesty was proposed, and assent to a communication being made to the rebellious Sirdars, that if they chose to throw themselves on the mercy of the Khan the question of an equitable and just settlement of the respective position and rights of the ruler and ruled would be entered upon under the authority of the British Government, and that any arrangement so made should be held to be binding on all.

40. If the above procedure is deemed appropriate by Government, I think it very probable that any money payment may be avoided, or only a moderate one be found necessary. But on a satisfactory conclusion being arrived at, I would still urge that the present of arms should be granted as a sign of the confidence of Government and continued friendly feelings towards his Highness the Khan. I need hardly add, after all that has passed, that no measure derogatory to the position of his Highness the Khan will meet with any attention from me, while at the same time every endeavour will be made on my part to ensure the relations between the Khan and his nobles being placed on a sounder and more satisfactory footing than has hitherto existed.

41. I trust that my proceedings in this matter may meet with approval and my recommendations be accepted; should such be the case, I would beg that I may be favoured by telegram with instructions to act in accordance with the proposals herein submitted, so that there may be no delay in carrying them out. I shall of course remain here until the orders of Government are received.

P.S.—I do not consider it expedient at present to enter into the arrangements and make the payments to the Murree and Boogtee tribes lately provisionally sanctioned by the Government of India, and referred to in correspondence forwarded under Mr. Secretary Wedderburn's letter No. 5980, of the 9th instant. Order should certainly be restored before anything is done in the matter, and the year of trial should date from time of commencement of the new system.

(Signed) W. L. Merewether, Colonel,
Commissioner in Sind.

No. 29.

No. 222 P., dated Fort William, 24th January 1872.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, to W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

I AM directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter No. 264, dated 15th January, on the subject of the present rebellion in Khelat, and to communicate the following remarks and instructions of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council :—

2. The proposals of the Commissioner in Sind, which are concurred in by his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council, have, to a great extent, been anticipated in my letter No. 8 C.P., dated 11th January; and the condition of affairs in Khelat, as reported in the Commissioner's letter, No. 868, of 30th December last, does not appear to call for any considerable modification of the views of the Governor General in Council, as already communicated to you.

3. The inquiries which the Commissioner has made appear to establish two points, 1st, that the rebellion, although perhaps mainly brought about by the intrigues of the exiled Sirdars, was to a great degree occasioned or at least favoured by certain injudicious and illiberal proceedings of the Khan in investigating the nature and extent of the landed tenures of some of his influential subjects in Kutchee ; and, 2nd, that the rebellion has so gained head that there is not much hope of the Khan being able to suppress it by force of arms without assistance. Since the date of the Commissioner's letter the rebellion has extended to Kedj, where the Khan's representative has been unable to make his authority felt. The Khan on his part has not been able apparently to strike such a blow in any part of his dominions as to destroy the hopes which the marked successes of the rebels are calculated to inspire.

4. Under these circumstances, the Governor General in Council can entertain little hope that the rebels in the flush of success will be induced to throw themselves on the Khan's mercy and surrender unconditionally as the condition antecedent to the inquiry into, and redress of, their grievances. Whatever may be the merits or demerits of their complaints, his Excellency in Council doubts whether it is wise or prudent, unless the Khan is confident of his ability to assert his authority and suppress the rebellion, to force the quarrel to extreme issues. To insist on the recognition by successful rebels of extreme and absolute sovereign rights which the Khan is unable to enforce, and the attempted assertion of which appears to be one of the main causes of the outbreak, and to listen to no statements in regard to their complaints, unless the rebels, who have hitherto had no reason to anticipate the failure of their enterprise, abandon their attitude of hostility, is a policy of which, to say the least, the prudence is doubtful, and which may only prolong a trial of strength to which the Khan apparently does not feel himself equal.

5. It would have been a satisfaction to the Governor General in Council if he could have felt assured of the Khan's acquiescence in the proposals made in my letter of 11th January last, with a view to re-establish order in Khelat. But the Commissioner's telegram of the 21st instant intimates that the reply of the Khan to the Commissioner's previous letter was unsatisfactory. It is possible that the Commissioner's second letter may produce other results, but some days must still elapse before the Khan's reply is received. The terms on which the Governor General in Council will be prepared to aid the Khan to re-establish his authority are stated explicitly in my letter of 11th January. In the telegram despatched to you yesterday, of which a copy is enclosed, the Governor General in Council has desired that mediation or interference shall not be undertaken unless the Commissioner is assured of the Khan's consent, and that the Khan should be told to weigh well the serious consequences of a refusal on his part to accept cordially the proposals which have been made. If his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council had other suggestions to offer, I am to request the favour of their early submission.

6. With reference to the Khan's remark to Major Harrison that if he failed to obtain assistance from the British Government, he would in the end have to apply elsewhere, either to Afghanistan or Persia, I am to draw attention to my telegram of the 11th January, and to request that the Khan may be reminded that under Article 3 of the Treaty of 1854 he is bound to enter into no negotiation with other States without the consent of the British Government. Under the circumstances stated in the Commissioner's telegram of the 21st, it is more necessary than ever that the attention of the Khan should be drawn to his (engagement) in this respect, and that he should be distinctly informed that any attempt to invite the interference of foreign powers in Khelat affairs will be considered and treated as an infraction of the treaty. It is the sincere desire of the Governor General in Council to see the Khan's authority firmly established, and to give him not only moral, but, when possible, material support. But his Excellency in Council cannot actively aid him unless assured that his Government is established in a just basis, that the rights of his subjects are properly cared for, and their reasonable grievances inquired into and redressed.

7. I am now to advert briefly to that portion of the telegram from his Excellency the Governor, dated 12th January, which is quoted in the margin. The Governor General in Council feels confident that throughout the correspondence relating to the intricate complications in Khelat politics, he has on all occasions given every possible support to the views and proposals of the Bombay Government. In accordance with the views of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay, the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan has been placed in political matters in subordination to the Political Superintendent of the Sind Frontier. In addition to the large sums already expended, an expenditure of rupees 32,040 has been provisionally authorised for the entertainment of Murree and Boogtee levies. In deference to the opinion of his Excellency the Governor, it has been decided that this payment shall be made in the name of the Khan, and that the Khan's subsidy shall not be reduced. The views of his Excellency the Governor in respect to Khelat affairs, as expressed in his minute of 10th February 1871, have also been concurred in, and the frontier officers have been required to shape their attitude to the subjects of the Khan accordingly. After the outbreak of the rebellion, when the Governor General in Council requested the Bombay Government to consider the expediency of making payments to the tribes, the matter was committed entirely into the hands of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council, with the sole proviso that care should be taken to arrange the payments so that on the one hand the British Government might not be committed to taking any part in the struggle, and on the other hand that the money should not be used to assist any of the Khan's subjects in their rebellion. Again, in all the measures regarding the detention of the ex-Jam of Beyla at Hyderabad and his subsequent removal to Bombay, the views and proposals of his Excellency the Governor have been entirely approved and confirmed. The Governor General in Council is unable to recall any single instance in which the proposals of the Bombay Government have not been concurred in, with exception of the proposal made in his Excellency's telegram of the 9th November 1871 to make an immediate payment of money to the Khan. The Governor General in Council did not at the time feel himself justified in authorising a large and immediate expenditure in interference in a quarrel regarding the merits of which he had been very imperfectly informed. The expenditure, however, has been eventually authorised under certain conditions in my letter of 11th January.

"But as my views of the merits of the dispute and course to be adopted have not been concurred in, I am obliged to refer to the Viceroy, to whom your letter of December 30th is sent."

The Governor General in Council sees no advantage to be gained by raising, in the course of instructions conveyed to subordinate officers, questions as to how far the Government of India have concurred in the proposals of the Local Government. No good results can be expected to follow such a discussion, and it should not be continued. Setting aside all such questions, the object to be aimed at is to devise effective measures for putting a stop to the present lamentable anarchy in Khelat and establishing a satisfactory administration in that country. His Excellency in Council has already expressed the grave concern with which he views the present state of things, and he feels sure that his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council will heartily co-operate with him in endeavouring to devise an effective remedy. Should his Excellency the Governor in Council have any modifications to propose in the measures which have commended themselves to the Governor General in Council as likely to be most successful in restoring peace and prosperity to Khelat, I am to convey to you the assurance that they will receive the most careful and attentive consideration.

No. 30.

No. 5 of 1872. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA, FOREIGN DEPARTMENT. Secret.

To his Grace the DUKE OF ARGYLL, K.T., Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

MY LORD DUKE, Fort William, the 24th January 1872.

IN continuation of our despatch No. 185, dated 31st October last, we have the honour to forward, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, a copy of papers* relative to the insurrectionary movement in Khelat.

2. We would beg to draw your Grace's attention to the letters to the Bombay Government of 11th January, and of this date, as containing our views on the subject.

We have, &c.

(Signed) MAYO.
JOHN STRACHEY.
J. F. STEPHEN.
B. H. ELLIS.
H. W. NORMAN.

No. 31.

No. 373, dated Bombay Castle, 20th January 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I am directed to submit, for the information of the Government of India, the accompanying copy of correspondence* from the Commissioner in Sind relative to the state of affairs at Lus Beyla.

* Letter from the Foujdar of Lus Beyla, to Commissioner in Sind, dated 12th December 1871.
Letter from Commissioner in Sind, No. 836, dated 20th December 1871, in reply to above.

Enclosure 1 in No. 31.

Dated Kurrachee, 12th December 1871.

From Dewan Munguiram, Foujdar of Lus Beyla, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, C.B., K.C.S.I., Commissioner in Sind, on Circuit.

I HAVE the honour to submit for your information the following particulars received by me direct from Lus Beyla. The particulars are certainly of an unsatisfactory and discouraging nature, and as such are greatly to be regretted.

Your honour is aware that one of the objects of my visit to Kurrachee was to recover certain moneys from Mr. Noonan, a merchant here. I informed the Shah Gassee that I had failed to come to a settlement with Mr. Noonan, when the Shah Gassee instructed me that pending a settlement I should obtain advances of money from the Soukars here, and sell them the State share of the jowar, moong, and sursee crops, with which advances I was to purchase provisions for the Shah Gassee's troops.

I succeeded in raising money, and despatched the provisions in charge of the Khan's sepoys. A small portion only of the provisions reached Beyla, the greater portion having been interrupted by Ali Khan at Oothul, and by Shere Khan at Soon Meanee, the latter a relative of the former. Shere Khan informed the sepoys that Ali Khan was coming and would kill them, and advised them to return to Kurrachee with all despatch. They accordingly returned.

A couple of weeks since I heard here that Ali Khan Jamote contemplated an attack on the Shah Gassee of Beyla; the information received by me I communicated to Shah Gassee, and asked his permission to gather forces here, and to purchase arms and ammunition with the view to enable him all the more effectually to resist the attack. In the interim I anticipated a reply desiring me to do the needful in that respect, and accordingly I collected a number of men and purchased arms and ammunition.

A large quantity of provisions was forwarded by me to the Shah Gassee in the shape of wheat, &c.

The Shah Gassee sent me a reply in which he made no allusion whatever to the subject matter of my communication.

I was left in a state of anxiety in consequence.

---

* Nos. 16 to 29.

I received further information subsequently that Ali Khan Jamote had collected his forces at Oothul, and Noordeen at Wud, and both marched on Lus Beyla. Ali Khan halted at Dundah, about six miles from Beyla, and Noordeen at Asea, about three miles distant. The Sirdars of the Roonjah tribe, Ibrahim Ali Mahomed, Sallay Ismahil, and Hajee Mahomed played upon the fears of the Shah Gassee's troops, giving them to understand that the enemy had overwhelming forces, and that to oppose him would be to court inevitable destruction. They also alarmed the Shah Gassee. Whereupon the Shah Gassee left everything at Beyla and betook himself, with his family and his troops, towards Jao viâ Lus. The following morning Ali Khan with his forces came into Beyla, Noordeen halting at a garden distant about one mile from Beyla.

I have furnished all the above particulars to the Khan whose answer to my letter I am awaiting; by his instructions I shall abide. In the meantime I shall be obliged by your favouring me with your advice as to how I am to act under existing circumstances.

Apologizing for thus troubling you.

Enclosure 2 in No. 31.

Memo. No. 836, dated Camp Humon, 20th December 1871.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, C.B., K.C.S.I., Commissioner in Sind.

In reply to his letter dated 12th instant, Dewan Munguiram, Foujdar of Lus Beyla, is informed that the Commissioner is very dissatisfied to hear of the flight of the Shah Gassee from Beyla. It appears to have been mainly brought about by the gross cowardice and misconduct of the troops serving with him. His Highness the Khan will issue his own orders in respect to these matters.

2. Dewan Munguiram had no right or authority to entertain men in British territory for service at Beyla, and his doing so was most improper. He is informed that should he act again in a similar manner, his immediate departure from Sind will be ordered.

No. 32.

No. 400, dated Bombay Castle, 22nd January 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to Government, Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I am directed to forward to you, for submission to the Government of India, copy of a letter and of its accompaniments from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 833, dated the 19th ultimo, relative to affairs at Khelat.

Enclosure 1 in No. 32.

No. 2277, dated Jacobabad, 16th December 1871.

From Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind, on circuit.

I have the honour to forward for your information the vernacular reports as per margin, which are copies of letters from Vakeel Mahomed Khan, commanding the Khan's troops at Bagh, to his son, Peer Jan, the Vakeel at this place.

Four reports, from which a renewal of hostilities by the Sirdars may be expected.

A few days ago the Sirdars sent a messenger to Jacobabad with a letter for me. I requested his Highness' Vakeel to inform this messenger that if the Sirdars wished to communicate with me it must be through either his Highness the Khan himself, or through his Vakeel, Mahomed Khan, now commanding in Kutchee, and that I could not open direct communication with rebels to their sovereign.

Enclosure 2 in No. 32.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Meer Mahomed Khan to his Son.

THE state of the Brahooees is that on Monday they having collected all their cavalry and infantry marched from Mittree and entered the town of Hajee. Meer Buktyar Khan Baroozee also arrived at Hajee to see the Sirdars. I, too, was making arrangements to move towards Hajee to-day, or Wednesday, but was awaiting the arrival of the aforesaid Sirdar. I have sent my sowar, Attar Khan Baroozee, to bring Sirdar Meer Buktyar Khan, and it is hoped he will leave Hajee for this to-day, to-morrow, or Thursday. I will move from Bagh with my army to give battle to the Brahooees, who are making preparations for war. This news is sent for your information. By the favour of God all will be well. I will give you further particulars if the Baroozee speak of peace and reconciliation.

Enclosure 3 in No. 32.

Abstract Translation of a Letter to Mulla Peer Buksh, Mulla Mahomed Azeem Khan, Mulla Aman Allah, Mulla Atta-ulla, Mulla Faizullah, Meena Khan, and Mulla Khyr Mahomed.

I HOPE you have perused the intelligence I gave you of the expected arrival of Meer Sumundar Khan. On the night of the 25th of Ramzan, the aforesaid Meer arrived at my quarters in Bagh. To-day, at the time of breakfast, we met and commenced conversation. I informed him in clear terms that with the exception of Sirdar Moollah Mahomed Raisanee, all the Sirdars and chief men should accompany me to Khelat to the court of his Highness the Khan, and that the wishes of the Khan in regard to terms of peace or war should be carried out. Sumundar Khan agreed, and expressed his approval. He has left, and said that if the Sirdars also agreed he would bring them. If he did not, let us see what God does. If the Sirdars arrive I will take them to the presence of his Highness the Khan, and await his orders. If they do not arrive I will let you know of the arrangements that are then made in my next.

Enclosure 4 in No. 32.

Abstract Translation of a Letter to the Address of Mulla Peer Buksh, Mulla Mahomed Azeem Khan, Mullah Aman Allah, Mulla Mahir Khan, Mulla Attah-ullah Khan Mulla Faizullah, and Mulla Khyr Mahomed.

THE news about the Brahooees is that most of them do not desist from plundering caravans and committing ravages in the Sirkar's territories. Many persons came to me and gave me intelligence that it was the intention of the Sirdars to march from Mittree with their whole army (infantry and cavalry) and go to Mungar, near Nandee. Wadera Abdool Khyr Abrah, on hearing this, came to me and asked permission to march. I gave him leave yesterday (being Tuesday), and he has proceeded from Mungar towards the town of Janso. Yesterday, Kaj Mahomed Khan, Lehree, who came from Mittree, brought the same intelligence, viz., that the Sirdars were collecting their troops. To-day, on Wednesday, I permitted Kaj Mahomed to leave, and gave him clearly to understand that if Meer Sumundar Khan arrived and spoke of peace, well and good; if not, it was in the power of God to allow all that he wished to pass. Whatever the Sirdars may like to do I am not afraid. I am ready with the Sirdars' troops to meet the emergency. To-day one hundred faithful sepoys and one piece of artillery have been ordered to the fort of Mungar. This I have written for your satisfaction. If Meer Sumundar Khan should come, I will let you know in full what passes between us. If he does not, I will write you the necessary information. I hope you will keep me informed of the state of the affairs of the family, &c.

Enclosure 5 in No. 32.

Abstract Translation of a Letter to Mulla Peer Buksh, Mulla Mahomed Azeem Khan, Mulla Aman Allah, Mulla Mitto Khan, Mulla Attah-ullah, Mulla Faizullah, and Mulla Khyr Mahomed.

I WROTE to you in my last about sending 100 sepoys and one piece of artillery to the town of Mungar, and hope you have received the letter. Further intelligence is to the effect that I sent a message to the Sirdars, informing them that if they had resolved to fight,

I was ready with my troops to meet them. In the meanwhile a letter was received from Meer Sumundar Khan, stating that he will leave Mittree on Friday, the 24th Ramzan, and join me. He has not yet arrived. As soon as he does I will write and tell you, and will also let you know what passes between us.

Sirdar Meer Bukhtyar Khan has written to say that he will come to Bagh, and I have replied that he is at liberty to do so. By the wish of God, the said Sirdar will arrive to-morrow at Bagh, and I will give you further information in my next.

Kindly buy and send me two silk belts.

Enclosure 6 in No. 32.

No. 832, dated Camp, Shikarpoor, 19th December 1871.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In reply to your letter, No. 2277, dated 16th instant, I have the honour to inform you that the instructions you have issued through the Vakeel of his Highness the Khan of Khelat to the messenger of the rebel Sirdars, declining to hold direct communication with them, are approved.

No. 833.

True copies, with vernacular letters and translations, submitted to Government for information.

No. 33.

No. 459, dated Bombay Castle, 24th January 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

Referring to previous correspondence regarding Khelat affairs, I am directed to forward herewith, for the information of the Government of India, copy of a letter from the Assistant Political Agent, Gwadur, No. 4, dated the 7th instant, received under endorsement from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 35, dated 16th idem, relative to the disturbances in Mekran, as also copy of the Khelat Agent's diary for the week ending 6th instant.

2. Copy of communications* and enclosures since received from the Commissioner in Sind regarding Khelat affairs, also accompany.

* No. 30, dated 13th instant,
„ 46, „ 17th „

Enclosure 1 in No. 33.

No. 4, dated Gwadur, 7th January 1872.

From Captain S. B. Miles, Acting Assistant Political Agent, Gwadur, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind, Kurrachee.

I have the honour to report, for your information, that the whole of the province of Kedj-Mekran, subject to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, is in a state of rebellion, and that hostilities have actually occurred between the inhabitants and the newly appointed Naib of Kedj, Darogah Atta Mahomed.

2. The country has been in a disaffected state for some time, ever since, in fact, the removal of Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed, and the inhabitants have now united under the leadership of Meer Bhai Khan Gitchkee, and Moolla Rehmut Zehree, to endeavour, if possible, to drive Atta Mahomed from the country, and restore the old régime under Faqueer Mahomed, or some other Sirdar. The proximate and assigned cause of this revolt is the obnoxious imposition of new taxes by Atta Mahomed, who has shown more zeal in collecting revenue for his Highness the Khan than the inhabitants altogether approve of.

3. About twelve days ago a collision took place between the parties, resulting in a loss of the Darogah's troops of two or three men, and on the part of the Beloochees of six killed and nine wounded. The fort or "Mirri," on being evacuated by Atta Mahomed, was plundered of all its property and occupied by Meer Bhai Khan. Atta Mahomed retired to Toorbut, which is less defensible, the walls having been partly destroyed by himself soon after his arrival at Kedj, and he is now surrounded by the rebellious tribes, numbering nearly two thousand men. No fighting has occurred since, but a desultory fire has been maintained by both sides.

4. An attempt was made a few days ago by Meer Esau Gitchkee, late Governor of Punchgoor, to effect a reconciliation, and he offered to secure Atta Mahomed a safe retreat to Khelat, if he would leave Kedj; this, however, the Darogah refused to do, and negotiations accordingly failed. I have received two letters from Atta Mahomed, announcing the progress of events, and stating his ability to put down the rebellion, but as he has only a few troops, and none of the Beloochees are on his side, it appears doubtful whether he will be able to do so. In his last letter Atta Mahomed requests to be supplied with ten thousand (10,000) service percussion caps.

5. I have also received letters from Meer Bhai Khan, Moolla Rehmut, Nubbee Buksh, and Meer Kirmnir, informing me of the state of affairs, and giving as the reason for their recourse to arms, the levying of double malyat or taxes which they cannot afford to pay. In acknowledging the receipt of these letters, I have requested Bhai Khan to respect the persons and property of British subjects resident at Kedj.

6. It appears to me that the removal from the Naibship at such a critical time of Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed Bezonjao, a man who had held it for nearly thirty years, and had acquired more power and influence in the country than any other man, was a serious mistake, and has enabled the disaffected part of the population to take advantage of the disturbed state of affairs in other parts of his Highness' territory, to raise a formidable insurrection, and endeavour to obtain by force the redress of grievances, real or supposed, under which they suffered.

7. Rumours have been brought by caravans of a raid having been made by the Afghans under Surfuraz Khan on Persian territory, and a large quantity of cattle and property carried off. Surteep Ibrahim Khan, in pursuing the robbers, fell into an ambuscade, in a pass between Bamm and Seistan, and lost a number of men. The report says that he has since been despatched by the Governor of Kerman with a force to retaliate upon the Afghans, and that his visit to Mekran has consequently been postponed. As Ibrahim Khan was to have been at Bumpoor in the month of Ramzan, and has not yet arrived, the rumour is probably not altogether without foundation.

No. 34, dated Jacobabad, 16th January 1872.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

True copy forwarded to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, for information and for communication to the Political Agent, Khelat, with the view of his informing his Highness the Khan of the unfortunate results brought about by the misdirected zeal of Darogah Atta Mahomed. From Major Harrison's diary, ending 6th January 1872, it would appear as if his Highness had been led to believe that the measures of taxation proposed by Atta Mahomed could be carried out. Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed, declining to accept the government of Mekran on the terms proposed by the Khan, and the information now forwarded received direct from Mekran, should be all sufficient proof of the impolicy of the acts of the Darogah, and the sooner his Highness signifies his disapproval of them, and directs a reversal, with introduction of more liberal measures, the better. A change of governor for Mekran is most desirable, as, even should Atta Mahomed succeed in putting an end to present disturbances, his indiscreet commencement will always make him unpopular, and his work more difficult.

No. 35.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

True copies submitted to Government for information.

Enclosure 2 in No. 33.

Diary by Political Agent, Khelat, from 25th to the 31st December 1871.

On Wednesday the 27th, I received a letter from his Highness the Khan forwarding a report from Nawab Mahomed Khan in continuation of correspondence noted in my diary for the week ending 3rd instant. As the Nawab still persisted in ignoring his instructions and taking upon himself the responsibility of treating with the rebels, his Highness asked the English Government, through me to disapprove of his proceedings and that of the rebel Chiefs. Copies and translations of his Highness' letter and accompaniments were forwarded by special messenger on Thursday the 28th instant. My reply to his Highness was to the effect, that if the rebel Chiefs went into English territory under the same circumstances as the ex-Jam of Beylah, my Government might, perhaps, support him in the way requested, but that if they proceeded to Jacobabad under his Vakeel's guarantee, his suggestion could scarcely be entertained. I further remarked that in my opinion the rebel Chiefs would not be received, and that their object was merely to maintain their present positions in Kutchee and Beylah until the spring, when they hoped to be joined by Azaad Khan and other people, and that it would, therefore, be to his advantage to send some capable person to Kutchee, who would have the courage and ability to carry out the instructions that had been given, as delay would tend to further complications.

On Friday I received the Commissioner in Sind's letter No. 846, to address of the Political Superintendent, covering a letter to his Highness, which quite supported what I had previously written as to the improbability of the Chiefs being received, and the advisability of relieving Nawab Mahomed Khan. I trust that the Shahgassee will be here in a few days en route to Kutchee.

Naib Peer Jhan's Sowar, who brought our post, reported having heard at Bushoree that Shukur Khan and the Naib of Bagh had made a night attack on the rebels at Mittree, killing 120, "amongst them Junda Shawanee;" also that Alladina Khoord has been captured. A letter to a buniah gives the following news on the subject; that when it was known no treaty had been made, Nawab Mahomed Khan was afraid of being murdered, and he went to Jellal Khan's Gote and sent a message to Shukur Khan to meet him with a regiment. The Brahooees sent off to collect at Mittree and have a grand looting in Kutchee. Shukur Khan also received intimation that there was no treaty, and being free to act on his Highness' orders Nawab Mahomed Khan being absent, he proceeded to Hajee-ka-Shere without the rebels knowing it, and from thence made a night attack. The cavalry, it is said, were in hot pursuit after Moolla Mahomed and the rebels.

The news from Beylah is that the people are divided amongst themselves, at first the Roonjahs and Minguls had a dispute, so Noordeen proceeded with a Koran and made anjam; later the Roonjahs and Jamotes, again Noordeen with the Koran was required; the general belief is that when the defeat of the rebels in Kutchee reaches Beylah, that the Minguls will desert Noordeen and return to their separate koochas, and that the Roonjahs being on bad terms with Ali Khan will ask Shahgassee Goolam Jan to return. Dost Mahomed Mingul confirms what I reported last week as to Noordeen's intentions in this direction had I not arrived, viz., that he was about to start for Kozdar and Bhagwanah, and had been promised money and supplies by Ali Khan Jamote to carry out his plans.

At Khelat there have been two snow-storms during the past week and a heavy fall of rain in this place.

No news from Mekran.

Shahgassee Goolam Jan is remaining at Mushka in hopes that his Highness will send reinforcements to enable him to retake Beylah.

Since closing this diary I have just received a letter from his Highness, forwarding a letter from Anriome Shah, Syud of Dadur, from which it appears that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, on hearing that he would not be allowed into English territory, directed the rebels to re-occupy Hajee-ka-Shere. Shukur Khan, commanding his Highness' force, had made arrangements to attack Mittree, hearing that there was no treaty. Both forces arrived about the same time at Hajee-ka-Shere, fighting continued all night and at daylight Shukur Khan divided his party into three divisions so as to command the flanks of the rebel force as well as his own front. After an hour of this fighting, the rebels were utterly routed and pursued to the walls of Mittree, which was then taken by his Highness' troops. The rebel loss was very heavy and his Highness' very small.

The Zingur Mingul Sirdar writes to me as follows:—The Minguls, Ismails, and Mahomed Hussanees collected a force of 500 at Chur Sooruk, in Seistan, and proceeded to plunder Boorjun and Gain. The Persian force went to intercept them; a fight ensued, in which seven or eight were killed on both sides; the Persians fled, leaving 80 camels, 10 horses, and 4 mules in possession of the Belooch. The latter have returned safely home with all their plunder. The force in Seistan is small, and Alum Khan's son resides at Boojud. Surfuraz Khan Sunjranee has returned from Jalk without fighting or making an anjam. The Zingur Minguls, who were compelled by dearth and famine to proceed to Gurin Seih, have returned to Nooshky and are living in Char Raizan.

No. 30, dated Camp Jacobabad, 13th January 1872.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE copies submitted to Government in continuation of Commissioner's endorsement No. 1, of the 1st instant. The account of the fight in Kutchee differs from that before given, in so far as this would make the Khan's troops also assailants. The former account being direct from the Khan's Commander is, I believe, the correct one, and is confirmed by subsequent information that the rebels tried a night attack.

Enclosure 3 in No. 33.

No. 1, Kozdar, 6th January 1872.

Diary by the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 6th January 1872.

ON Tuesday, the 2nd instant, I was visited by Moolla Yoosoof Sirdar, Faqueer Mahomed's confidential agent, who informed me that the people in Mekran contemplated rebelling against his Highness' authority, and that the Sirdar had not reported these rumours to his Highness the Khan, for fear interested motives should be attributed to him. The chief object of this visit, in my opinion, was to ascertain if the rebels in Kutchee had been actually defeated. Moolla Yoosoof stated that his Highness' reception of Sirdar Meeah Kairah was kind; that he declined, however, to present Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed with the district of Toorbut, but had offered to free the district of Kedj from Darogah Atta Mahomed's control if the Sirdar would undertake to pay the same revenue. This Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed declined to do.

A man called Kuchee Dinaree arrived here on Tuesday, stating that he had been sent by Afzul Khan's wife with a post for us, and that it was taken from him by twelve or fourteen armed men close to Paishtkhana. Having received posts despatched from facobabad on the 23rd, 26th, and 30th ultimo, I am inclined to think that the packet was or his Highness the Khan.

Shahgassee Goolam Jan has proceeded to Khelat. Noordeen Mingul is camped in a large garden about three miles from Beylah with 400 men, and Ali Khan Jamote is in possession of the town.

A letter from Shukur Khan to his Highness, forwarded for my perusal, stated that on its being known that there was no treaty, Nawab Mahomed Khan had written to him to attack the rebels, but that after moving out with the force he got a second letter, directing him to remain quietly at Bagh until he, Mahomed Khan, rejoined. Having acted on the first order, he did not think it advisable to retrace his steps, so sent Sirdar Hubeeb Khan Shawanee on to Hajee-ke-Shere, to tell the people not to be alarmed, as he was coming to protect them and the Khan's ryots from the rebels. The above Sirdar returned, stating that the rebel force had left Mittree for Hajee-ke-Shere, with the intention of attacking him. The rest of the circumstances were as narrated by Syed Aurang Shah in last week's diary.

No direct news has been received from Mekran. A kafila from Punchgoor en route to Kutchee has just passed through this place, so I conclude that quiet prevailed up to the time of their leaving.

On Saturday evening during the night we had a little rain.

No. 37, dated Jacobabad, 16th January 1872.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE copy submitted to Government, in continuation of Commissioner's endorsement No. 35, of 16th instant.

2. Intelligence direct from Mekran shows that the ill-advised arrangements of Atta Mahomed to increase the revenues had caused very general discontent, and that the outbreak alluded to by the messenger of Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed had taken place. From the offer made by the Khan to Faqueer Mahomed it would appear as if his Highness had been led to believe that the revenue proposed by Darogah Atta Mahomed could be levied. The Khan had been informed that, in former years, Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed had appropriated much revenue, which belonged to the State. This was doubtless true, but he managed to keep order in the country to a certain extent, which was worth quite as much as he took. The refusal of the Sirdar indicates he considered the Darogah's impositions too high, and the sooner they receive the disapproval of the Khan the better for his Highness' interests and for the country.

Enclosure 4 in No. 33.

No. 89, dated Jacobabad, 15th January 1872.

From Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, C.B., K.C.S.I., Commissioner in Sind, Jacobabad.

I HAVE the honour to forward, for your information, an original letter (with translation) received from Nawab Mahomed Khan, Commanding his Highness the Khan's forces in Kutchee.

2. Also copies in English and the vernacular of my reply of this date.

Enclosure 5 in No. 33.

Dated Bukkra 10th January 1872.

Translation of a Letter from Nawab Mahomed Khan, Agent to His Highness the Khan of Khelat, to the Address of Colonel Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE informed you of my having marched against the Brahooees on the 7th instant. I marched from Bagh and arrived at Bukkra to-day. Before I got here the rebels had fled and had gone by the Naree Nulla into the hills. My intention is to go to Gooloo to-morrow, and from thence I will write you all about the Brahooees and where they are. I hear that those* they have left behind have been placed with the Baroozees. On my return from Gooloo after full inquiry I will ask the Baroozees for these fugitives. If they fight or give any other reply, I will let you know.

* NOTE.—The writer appears to allude to the women and children.—(Sd.) R. P.

To-day Lushkhur Khan, the Kujjuk Sirdar, arrived in my camp and paid his respects. He is with me now.

Enclosure 6 in No. 33.

Dated Jacobabad, 15th January 1872.

From Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Nawab Mahomed Khan, Agent of his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I HAVE received your letter from Bukkra, dated 10th instant, informing me that next day you intended marching with the troops of his Highness the Khan under your command to Gooloo in the neutral territory of Seebee, a dependency of Cabul. You also report that Lushkur Khan, the Kujjuck Sirdar, who is a feudatory of the Ameer of Cabul, had paid his respects and was with you. Also you express the intention of calling upon the Baroozees to give up the families, &c. of the Brahooees who have taken refuge with them, and it appears from your letter that if they refuse your request, you will fight with them.

No one knows better than you do that the two Pathan tribes of Baroozees and Kujjucks are at eternal feud with each other, and that to draw them into their contest will only make matters worse for all parties.

It is, therefore, contrary to the interests of his Highness the Khan that you should carry out your intention of fighting with the Baroozees about the women and children of the Brahooees who have taken refuge in their territory, and on behalf of the British Government. I request that if you have marched your troops to Gooloo for the purpose indicated, you will be pleased to withdraw them on receipt of this letter, because it would be displeasing both to the British Government and the Ameer of Cabul were you to carry out your intentions.

Enclosure 7 in No. 33.

No. 45, dated Camp, Jacobabad, 17th January 1872.

From Colonel Sir. W. L. Merewether, C.B., K.C.S.I., Commissioner in Sind, to Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

IN reply to your letter No. 89, of 15th instant, I have the honour to inform you that your answer to Nawab Mahomed Khan is entirely approved. Gooloo-oe-Shuhr is well within the district of Seebee, which belongs to his Highness the Ameer of Cabul. The Nawab's entrance into that territory with armed men was most unjustifiable.

2. I have to request that copies of the Nawab's letter, of your reply, and of this letter may be forwarded to the Political Agent, Khelat, for the information of his Highness the Khan, who should be again urged to send to Kutchee without delay a person better suited to conduct his Highness' affairs than Nawab Mahomed Khan has proved himself to be.

No. 46.

TRUE copies submitted to Government for information.

No. 34.

No. 462, dated Bombay Castle, 24th January 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

REFERRING to my letter No. 264, dated 15th instant, regarding the rebellion in the Khelat territory, I am directed to transmit herewith, for submission to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, copy of the further papers noted in the margin, from the Commissioner in Sind, and to state that the Right Honourable the Governor in Council entirely concurs in the policy recommended by Sir W. Merewether in his communication of the 10th instant.

No. 18, dated 9th January 1872 with enclosures.
No. 27, dated 16th January 1872 with enclosures.

2. The danger of allowing a divided authority in the Government of Khelat has long been recognized by his Excellency the Governor in Council, who considers the condition of the British frontier in this quarter worthy of exceptional attention. He would urgently recommend that Sir W. Merewether should be allowed a wide discretion in settling Khelat affairs in the manner and on the basis of the policy he has sketched out. He has, I am to point out, a larger experience of frontier affairs, and is necessarily better informed than a Punjab officer can be, while his views are concurred in by Colonel Sir H. Green as well as by Colonel Malcolm Green. His Excellency in Council would, therefore, deprecate the adoption of a different policy, which, in the opinion of this Government, will inevitably lead to anarchy and foreign intervention.

Enclosure 1 in No. 34.

No. 122, dated Kozdar, 28th December 1871.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat, to Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I HAVE the honour to forward correspondence received late yesterday evening from his Highness the Khan of Khelat; as they are important, I have not delayed their despatch to make any remarks on the same. From their perusal it will be seen that Nawab Mahomed Khan is acting in opposition to his Highness' instructions; that the Brahooee force is not such as to prevent their being punished for their conduct, and that his Highness' troops were quite willing to face them, but were prevented from so doing by Nawab Mahomed Khan.

Enclosure 2 in No. 34.

Dated 11th Shawul 1288—24th December 1871.

From his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent.

A REPORT from Nawab Mahomed Khan has just reached me. I forward it, as also letters from Shukur Khan, the Kazee, and Zemindars of Bagh for your information. You, my friend, know the conduct of the Brahooees regarding the plundering of Kutchee from the commencement to the end. Before this no Sirdars nor subjects of mine have behaved as they have done; these ill-fated people have broken all the laws of my country, and in every possible way have ruined my country and subjects. They never thought what the end would be, and have left me no choice to treat with or forgive them. In your presence I sent Nawab Mahomed Khan with a force to punish these people. He has acted in such a manner, that the English Government, who are my friends and to whom I look for support, will, I trust, disapprove of the arrangements of Nawab Mahomed Khan and the rebellious chiefs, and support their good name and show me respect by treating these rebellious chiefs in the same manner as they have done the Ex-Jam of Beylah, Sirdar Meah Khah. Without the English Government will support me in this way there will be neither quiet in the country nor safety for my subjects. The English Government are the best judges of what action in the matter will contribute to their good name. Always consider me your friend and continue to write to me.

Enclosure 3 in No. 34.

From Nawab Mahomed Khan, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

On a former occasion I reported all matters connected with the province of Kutchee. The latest news is that your instructions to fight reached me. By one fight the whole tribe of Brahooees cannot be exterminated, neither can chiefs be apprehended, nor any other advantage accrue, from so doing the whole country and people would be ruined. The regiment and levy left Bagh three or four times to fight; by a thousand artifices and entreaties I prevented them. The Brahooees had assembled at Hajee-ke-Shere and sent me the following message :—That if I did not ratify the treaty with them in presence of the English Government they would fight." Your Highness, thinking it for your advantage in every respect, I have treated with them as the only means of restoring peace in the country and securing the safety of your subjects. Yesterday, Friday, Moheem Khan Raisanee was sent to me by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee to state that if I took them to Jacobabad they mistrusted treachery on my part en route, or that the English Government would be guilty of deceit and treachery, and that I was to give them a written agreement on oath. Your Highness, I yesterday wrote the agreement required and sent it to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. To day, Saturday, I have heard that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Buktiar Khan Baroozai, and others have left Hajee-ke-Shere and arrived at the village of Kutbar, from which place they intended proceeding to Jacobabad. I intend starting to-morrow, 4th Shawul, 17th December, by Shooree for Jacobabad. When I arrive I will report anything that may occur. I trust your Highness will agree to all my arrangements. To write more would be disrespectful.

Enclosure 4 in No. 34.

From Shukur Khan, commanding Khelat Infantry, to his Highness the Khan.

Your Highness, the orders you sent to Nawab Mahomed Khan and myself have arrived. I am prepared to obey them. God keep you in safety. The departure of Nawab Mahomed, what arrangements are being made, and that Buktiar Khan Baroozai has arrived to mediate, will be learnt from the Nawab's letter. The Nawab leaves this on the 4th Shawul, 17th December, for Jacobabad. Moolla Mahomed Raisanee has also left for Jacobabad. I remain with the force in Bagh. Cherisher of the poor, may you always be kept in safety. My petition is that I said and did all I could to Mahomed Khan and informed him that I would fight, as it was your orders to do so. The Nawab answered me that on no account whatever would he allow me to fight, as he considered it to your advantage and that of the cultivators to make anjam. That if I fought the result would lie in God's hands and that the responsibility of success or disaster would rest on me, and that he would make a satisfactory treaty in presence of the English Government.

Being helpless, I have been obliged to remain quiet. You will learn everything from Nawab Mahomed Khan's letter.

Enclosure 5 in No. 34.

From Kazee of Bagh, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

On a former occasion I wrote to you from Sharree regarding affairs in Kutchee, and hope from it you are aware of all that has occurred. By direction of Nawab Mahomed Khan I returned to Beeghoree the 11th Ramzan, 30th November. The whole country from Nuree to Kassim-ka-Shere has been plundered by the Brahooees; they have left the inhabitants neither grain, cattle, food to eat, or wearing apparel. The people are naked, weeping, perplexed, and in such a miserable state; God forbid that any one should see such misery. These Brahooees, although they talk of anjam, are still plundering the country; it is impossible to describe the plundering that has occurred and the state of the country; no pen could write what has taken place. If I live to meet you, I will tell you all that has occurred; for the present I have given you a hint. I pray for you night and day, may God Almighty spare you to old age and bring ruin to your enemies. Always think kindly of me and write occasionally.

Enclosure 6 in No. 34.

From Kazee of Bagh, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

CHERISHER of the poor, may you be preserved in safety. I have given slight information from time to time of what is going on. Since Mahomed Khan has made anjam the people of the country are being daily plundered and have to leave the country. The poor classes have three times gone to Sind and returned. On the last occasion they returned, hearing of the anjam and have been again plundered; they have been so looted that I can scarcely think the Haree country will ever be cultivated again. The country now is in such a state as no one has ever seen.

This is Nawab Mahomed Khan's work; he is well acquainted with anjam arrangements. He has sent for Sumunder Lehree, and that person is expected at Bagh on the 8th December. Uttur Khan Kooruck has arrived from Buktear Khan Baroozai at Nawab Mahomed Khan's request, and the latter is about to send him, Uttur Khan, to fetch Buktear Khan so that the treaty may be pucka "permanent."

This treaty is incorrect; the ryots are flying from the country in consequence of it. The Brahooees are at Hajee-ka-Shere and Mittree; their strength is not augmented. Nawab Mahomed Khan is a clever man and your well-wisher. He well understands fighting and all wordy arrangements. From the above you will be able to judge for yourself. Not a leaf or grain has been left of my crops in Bagh, and on the Shoree Nulla. Moossa Kossid arrived from Khelat, but there was no letter from you to me. I am your well-wisher, why do you forget me? I shall never do anything against your interests, but shall remain your well-wisher so long as life lasts. I hope you will tear this up after perusal.

Written sarcastically.—(Sd.) W. L. M.

I am comforted with the presentiment that the wish of your heart will be accomplished I and my pupils pray for you night and day.

Enclosure 7 in No. 34.

From Ala Dittah, Faiz Mahomed, Lall Buksh, Ryee Khooda Buksh, Hajee Morad, Bais Julloo, Oosman, Rehim, and Moleena, Zemindars of Bagh, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

WHEN the disturbance commenced in Kutchee, all your officials and we poor cultivators were like fishes on dry land; we were so perplexed that we fled with our household property. Most of the people fled like the wind. We, the writers of this letter, and Arhab Jaffer Khan, "since dead," went to Imaum Buksh Rhind and asked him for God's sake to defend Bagh, as it was your Highness' Takht or palatial residence, and that the Belooch and Brahooees were your subjects, and to save us and the Hindoos and Mussulmen from the snake's mouth. In spite of all we could say he left us, and we poor people did what we could and prayed to God to save us from the plunderers.

Bagh is your residence, your officials deserted us, and left us to be plundered by these dogs and wolves, "Brahooees." The Brahooees have only two hands and so have we, and had we been assisted we would have fought. All your people fled for one month and four days; we did all we could to save the town. The Brahooees in your pay and employ at Bagh joined the rebels in looting the place.

Wudderah Ahmed Khan Bolehdee came in the middle of one night and helped us to get our families away, and gave us every assistance. He only had a few men, and the Brahooees were in numbers; in the fight one of his people was wounded. The Brahooees have looted Bagh in such a manner as we are unable to describe what has occurred.

During one month the Brahooees plundered from Bagh to Kunchah, viz., Johi-Kahrah, Beregaree Gaelpore, Gunjlo-Johi, Gool Mahomed Arhab, Oosta, and other villages, carrying off cattle, household property, money, jewelry, and wearing apparel. Many people had buried their treasure, but the Brahooees drew their swords and threatened to kill them if they did not show where it was hidden. Having done this they set fire to many of the villages. Our sighs must have reached heaven; to describe all we have gone through would necessitate writing a book as large as the Shah Nammah; for this reason we have only briefly alluded to what has taken place. If we live we will tell you everything.

No. 18, dated Jacobabad, 9th January 1872.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

True copies submitted to Government for information.

2. These papers show the very grave misconduct of Nawab Mahomed Khan and all the officials of his Highness the Khan in Kutchee.

3. The proceedings of the rebel Sirdars have been most ruthless, and will cause much misery for years to come. They have also lately plundered two kafilas at Koondilana, in the Bolan, carrying off much valuable property. The remainder of the kafilas were escorted into Bagh by the Khan's troops. Latest intelligence is to the effect that the rebels having collected together have advanced to Mittree, and another fight is expected. If the Khan's troops are properly led and handled, and there is no treachery, they should defeat the rebels.

4. Reply from his Highness the Khan to my letter of the 21st December 1871 is now daily expected.

Enclosure 8 in No. 34.

No. 27, dated Camp Jacobabad, 10th January 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.S.C.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to his Excellency the Right Honourable Sir W. R. Seymour, V. FitzGerald, G.C.S.I., Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt to-day of telegram from your Excellency's Private Secretary, desiring me to hold conference with Colonel Phayre and Captain Sandeman.

2. I should at once have carried into effect your Excellency's instructions as in duty bound, and as always has been my practice to do, but before acting on them I considered it right and necessary to bring to your Excellency's notice certain points which are set forth in my telegram in reply (copy of which is annexed), and which materially affect the question as well as, I think, render the prominent action of Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Gazee Khan, in the matter between his Highness the Khan of Khelat most inexpedient.

3. I would, however, in this letter desire to explain myself more fully and enter more into the reasons for the opinion I have given.

4. When I arrived here on the 21st ultimo I found Captain Sandeman already in the place, and I had been previously informed by Colonel Phayre that Captain Sandeman would be here on the 19th to meet me. I concluded this visit had reference to the orders of the Government of India on the plan of subsidizing the Murree and Boogtee tribes which I had just received.

5. On the 21st, as before reported, I had an interview with his Highness the Khan's Vakeel, at which Colonel Phayre was present, and I then declined to have anything to say to the terms the Vakeel had taken from the rebel Sirdars, or to hold any communication with the latter as long as they were in arms against their Sovereign. This was most necessary, as had any consideration been given to the outrageous terms dictated by the Sirdars (that they were dictations their tenor shows) the power of the Khan would have gone for ever, and anarchy and disorder been rife through the whole country. To show how little trust ought to be placed in the actions or words of these Sirdars, and how dangerous it would be to give them encouragement in their proceedings, I may mention here it was afterwards learned that at the very time Moolla Mahomed Raisanee was arranging to accompany the Vakeel to this place to have the terms ratified, as it was said before the British authorities,* he was writing to Sirdar Noordeen Mingul to continue disturbances in Jalawan.

* Part of these terms being:—"That if from this day, Friday, 10th of Ramzan, any of the Brahooees did any ill or any act of hostility in the territory of his Highness the Khan, he would be given in charge of Mahomed Khan, Vakeel, to be punished any way he liked. That whatever misdeeds Sirdars Noordeen and Azaad Khan have committed are forgiven, and the same would not be done in future. That his Highness the Khan was Sovereign and hey the subjects."

After the interview with the Vakeel on the 21st, Captain Sandeman waited upon me, and the subject of the proposed subsidizing the Murree and Boogtee tribes was first discussed. I informed him that I had recently received the orders of Government on the subject, but that in the present state of affairs it was quite impossible to think of carrying them into effect. He spoke of the necessity of some consideration being paid to his frontier, and that delay in arranging with the Murrees and Boogtees would embarrass him. I remarked that the earliest opportunity would be taken to enter upon the new arrangement, I being as anxious as any that the best available measures should be used to improve the existing state of affairs as regarded his frontier and that of Sind, but that at present something more was at stake than the mere settlement of the Dera Ghazee Khan and Upper Sind frontier in connexion with those hill tribes; that the question of the future quiet and well-being of the whole border of Sind down to the sea, and of proper government in the country beyond was involved, and to that my attention must be first directed, and that until order was restored in Beloochistan, it was manifestly impossible to come to any sound arrangement bearing on that portion only occupied by the Murrees and Boogtees. Captain Sandeman then said that, under those circumstances, he supposed he had better return to his district. On my replying in the affirmative he produced a paper from which it appeared he had instructions to come here to be associated in the settlement of the disturbances in Khelat territory. I informed him I had received no such instructions from your Excellency; that I had your orders, which I intended to carry out, and being thoroughly well acquainted with all that had lately passed, as well as having an intimate knowledge of previous events, I saw clearly what ought to be done, and felt myself quite able to do it. I told him he might give me a copy of the paper he had shown me, and he said he would, but has never done so.* Had he I should have immediately submitted to your Excellency with my respectful remonstrance against his being associated in any way excepting such as I saw fit to require in the present proceedings relating to the disturbances going on in the territory of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and in which I hold it particularly inexpedient he should in any way interfere.

* The above is given from recollection, and though not perhaps in exactly the words used, or in all of them, is, I believe, in all essential points perfectly correct.

7. I hold it inexpedient for the following reasons, first, because Captain Sandeman's duties with this frontier are intended to be, and should only be, in respect to the hill tribes of Murrees and Boogtees, with whom, owing to their being immediately adjacent to his frontier, he is necessarily brought into contact, and that it is quite unnecessary, and going out of his way, for him to be concerned with the general policy to be observed between the British Government and that of Khelat; secondly, in re his connexion with the Murree and Boogtee tribes only is he subordinate to the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Upper Sind, and Commissioner in Sind, and he should confine his attention solely to circumstances directly bearing on those connexions, and then under the instructions and orders of the officials in Sind, the object of such subordination being merely to prevent clashing, and different systems being observed on the two borders in respect to the management and treatment of those tribes; thirdly, his position at Dera Ghazee Khan, and very recent acquirement of any information as regards the political state of Khelat necessarily renders his knowledge on that head very imperfect and incomplete, mere hearsay in fact, therefore, no advantage could be gained by resorting to him, for his advice and assistance; fourthly, and this is the most important of all, Captain Sandeman has on more occasions than one shown a marked and public interest in favour of the principal rebel Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee. A messenger of his to that Sirdar was arrested by officials of his Highness the Khan, so that the proceedings and bearing of that officer became known to his Highness. Only very lately Captain Sandeman sent messengers to Seebee to obtain information he said. Buktyar Khan, of Seebee, reported this to the Political Superintendent, and added, "four Muzzaree "Sowars came to Seebee lately to inquire about Sirdar Moolla Mahomed." These Muzzarees went from Rajan in the Dera Gazee Khan district. I do not assert that they were sent by Captain Sandeman, but it was inferred by the people of the country that they were, and it was so stated to the Khan of Khelat. Colonel Phayre very properly objected to these communications with Seebee, and they were then dropped. But these proceedings have caused Captain Sandeman to appear in an obnoxious light to his Highness the Khan, and the fact of that officer being taken into deliberation regarding the present state of affairs between his Highness the Khan, and some of his nobles, including Moolla Mahomed Raisanee, cannot fail to be very distasteful to his Highness the Khan, and at the same time likely to give encouragement to the rebels at a time when it is most desirable such should not be shown in any way.

8. Under these circumstances I trust the orders of Government may be re-considered, and in place of Captain Sandeman's service being employed as proposed I should be inclined to recommend that he may be allowed to return to his district until such time as a better opportunity offers for arranging the subsidizing of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, as sanctioned by the Government of India. Thus will the risk of his presence here being misunderstood be removed.

9. I am well acquainted with Captain Sandman's views on Khelat politics. As far as they go, they are simply those of Colonel Phayre, which Government have disapproved, and being so they can add no additional strength in carrying out any measures I may find it necessary to adopt. I regret exceedingly having had to enter into these particulars regarding Captain Sandeman, and would far rather have avoided doing so, as I entertain a high opinion of his intelligence, zeal, and energy, and shall always without hesitation be gladly willing to avail myself of his valuable services in a legitimate way, and in their proper place. But a sense of justice to myself in the delicate matter that is in hand, as well as of what is due to all concerned, and the desire to bring about at as early a date as possible a discontinuance of the unfortunate disorders now existing in the kingdom of Khelat, have compelled me to lay the above before Your Excellency.

10. What is going on now in Beloochistan is only the natural result of the necessary breaking up of the feudal system brought on by the near approach of civilization and fixed rule. It has been somewhat accelerated by the circumstance of the present Khan being very young, when he came to the throne, and his barons conceiving him to be a weak character, they believed they could easily get him into their hands and all power to themselves.

11. The struggle for power has continued ever since, and will continue until the Government of the country is powerful enough to repress every show of insubordination at once and with a strong hand. If the present Government is upset, and the country is divided amongst a number of chiefs with different and merely selfish interests, anarchy and misrule will prevail throughout the land, until the country falls to the first strong power that chooses to step in and enforce order.

12. The Khan has his faults, which are well known now to those who have had long acquaintance with him, and mine dates from his ascent to the throne (as well as with his predecessor, his chiefs and subjects for years before), and he doubtless has not acted always with the policy and foresight which would have, perhaps, prevented much that has occurred; but then it must be borne in mind that he has been sorely tried, and that it would have been almost more than is in human nature, especially in that of an Eastern despotic Sovereign to look with affection on turbulent nobles, who were perpetually plotting his destruction and overthrow of his rule.

13. The history of the principal rebel Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisanee I have already laid before Government. Sir Henry Green, who like myself was personally acquainted with this Sirdar, offered a little before he left this frontier, to intercede with the Khan on behalf of this Sirdar, then a fugitive, thinking that some allowances might be accorded to him, and that it would be good policy on the part of the Khan to accede to a reconciliation. That officer went to England before this could be carried out. But Colonel Phayre on my instruction took the matter up; unfortunately the manner of the Sirdar's approach to the Khan was misarranged, and instead of his nearing his Sovereign in respectful form, he went accompanied by some other discontented chiefs, and a large body of armed retainers, demanding as it were, instead of begging forgiveness and restoration to his former position. In spite of this, matters were smoothed through the good tact and prudence of the British Political Agent at Khelat, and the Khan most generously conceded to Moolla Mahomed all he had any right to expect. But he, acting foolishly on ill advice of others, spurned the Khan's offers, and started off, saying he would go to Colonel Phayre, the Political Superintendent on the frontier. The latter, however, had previously received instructions from me, and very properly refused to allow the Sirdar to come near him.

14. The above is briefly repeated to show that all that could be done justly for Moolla Mahomed Raisanee was carried out then in 1869. The grievances of most of the other Sirdars in rebellion were fully detailed by me in my letter No. 868, of the 30th ultimo. They are mainly petty, and such as most certainly should not be considered fair justification for rising in rebellion against their Sovereign. Neither would it have happened so had it not been for the opportunity of their dissatisfaction, and the absence of the greater part of the Khan's regular troops on relief happening to be synchronous, and appearing to Moolla Mahomed Raisanee to be a favourable time for his renewing his struggle against his master. I regret also I must add my conviction, as stated in my former letter, that he entertained hopes his proceedings would not be disapproved here. He had failed to obtain any countenance or assistance from his Highness the Ameer of Cabul.

15. As there seems to be some doubt and misunderstanding as regards my views, I would explain that my reading of the Khelat position, and its effects on British interests, is this:—It is of the first importance that there should be a strong Government in Khelat, both for the maintenance of proper order on our border and for the protection of trade coming in and going out of British territory. To ensure these, the ruling power at Khelat must have every support we can legitimately and advantageously give. As long as the ruler does his best to conform to the terms of the Treaty existing between him and the British Government, and the Khan has, I maintain, faithfully done this, it is clearly the best policy to so support him and avoid as much as possible any act that is likely to weaken his power.

16. I do not at the same time at all maintain that the ruler should receive any encouragement in procedure which may be unjust to his subjects. On the contrary there should be constant endeavour on the part of the Political Agent at his court, by good and seasonable advice, to deter the Khan from engaging in any such acts, and the strongest expression of the disapproval of the British Government would infallibly follow his adopting so unwise a course. At the same time the greatest care must be taken that in recognizing any complaints by subjects they are not based on frivolous grounds, or merely the offspring of petty discontent. If the Sirdars have just cause of complaint I should be the last person to oppose their appeal being heard and should be the first to urge that the Khan should be moved to grant redress, or forfeit the favour of the British Government. This latter he would not risk, as repeated instances of his desire to retain it have clearly proved. But then the call for redress must be first precluded by submission, and not conveyed in the form of insolent and unreasonable demands, from men with arms in their hands.

17. The course of action I have as yet followed, and propose to follow, is, I respectfully urge, the true and sound one. The conditions the rebel Sirdars tried to impose on the Khan, and thought to get approved of by the British authorities, were such as the Khan could not possibly assent to and retain any power in his country. The attempt of the Khan's Vakeel to bring the Sirdars to the British authorities here was most unjustifiable and disloyal to his master, and required to be resented at once.

18. The Khan's interests were evidently in wrong hands, and a change of management must be made before anything suitable could be done. I, therefore, urged on his Highness the Khan to at once send his able and faithful Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, to Kutchee, that his interests might be better served, and that the Wuzeer, having full powers, might confer with me as to the best means of bringing the present disturbances to a satisfactory and lasting conclusion. If asked then by the Khan to interfere, I might with perfect propriety cause the rebels to be informed in the name of the Khan, that if they chose to submit unconditionally, I was ready to enter fully into the merits of their asserted complaints, the causes of the hostile attitude they had assumed towards the Khan, and their differences with him. I should then be in a fair position to advise what should be done in justice to all parties, and to place everything on a proper and sound footing. The question of pecuniary or other assistance to the Khan was alluded to by me in previous communications in case it might come forward, and that I might be in possession of the desire of Government in this respect.

19. This I believe to be the really equitable and only true course to be followed. I earnestly hope, therefore, that these views may meet with approval, and that I may be allowed to carry them out, continuing to enjoy the confidence of your Excellency and the Government of India, with the feeling that I am not reckoned unworthy of the trust, or that my many years' experience of the affairs of this frontier and Khelat is not considered to have rendered me unfit to conduct the important duties pertaining to my position, and for the correct performance of which I still believe myself solely responsible.

No. 35.

No. 75, dated Camp, Jacobabad, 24th January 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I HAVE the honour to forward, for the information of the Government of India, copy of my letter, No. 66, dated 22d instant, with accompaniments, to the Government of Bombay, relative to the state of affairs in Beloochistan.

Enclosure 1 in No. 35.

No. 66, dated Camp, Jacobabad, 22d January 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to his Excellency the Right Honourable Sir W. R. Seymour V. Fitzgerald, G.C.S.I., Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

I HAVE the honour to report that I have received a reply from his Highness the Khan, dated 5th instant (copy annexed). It is not at all satisfactory. He is unable to send his Wuzeer to Kutchee, because the wounds lately received by the latter are still unhealed, and states that he hopes the arrangements he is making will prove all sufficient, but says nothing about deputing any other person either to supersede the Nawab, who has acted so badly, or to confer with me.

2. I have therefore addressed the reply (copy of which is appended), and trust it may meet with your Excellency's approval. It has been my object to impress on his Highness the gravity of his position, and the impossibility of Her Majesty's Government any longer viewing unmoved the general disturbances existing so close to the British border, and that the only course now left for him is to frankly and entirely accept the friendly interposition offered, by means of which order may be restored, and good government re-established. I have carefully abstained from holding out any promises, as I had no authority for doing so; at the same time I considered it right to assure the Khan that by assenting to the course proposed, he would secure the high consideration and continued friendship of Her Majesty's Government.

3. Major Harrison informs me in a demi-official letter that there were only two other persons besides the Wuzeer who were thought of to be deputed to Kutchee—Abdool Luteef, the Naib of Quettah, and the young Shahgassee Goolam Jan. The first is a very good and true man, but could not be spared from his very important post; the second had recently failed in his government of Lus Beyla, and was not considered fit.

4. At this season of the year a reply from Khelat can, it seems, scarcely be expected under twenty days. It is just possible that, on receipt of my second letter, the Wuzeer's condition may be so much better that the Khan may be able to send him down. If not, it is to be hoped he will place his affairs unreservedly in my hands, but whichever of these happens, the delay that must take place is, I consider, fraught with great danger, and I would strongly urge that measures should at once be adopted from this to check the disturbances and to prevent more embarrassing complication taking place. I have, therefore, thought it necessary to submit the telegram, copy of which is also appended.

5. Throughout the whole of this business the Khan's representative in Cutchee, Nawab Mahomed Khan, who is also Vakeel at Jacobabad, has acted in a manner most injurious to his master's interests, showing the worst possible judgment with marked pusillanimity. On his return from this to Bagh, at the end of last month, he did little or nothing till lately, when in the most unjustifiable manner, accompanied by his Highness the Khan's troops, he entered the district of Seebee, neutral ground, belonging to the province of Candahar and territory of his Highness the Ameer of Cabul. He informed Colonel Phayre that he was about to do so, stating that the women and children of the rebels had taken refuge there. On my being informed of this, I at once requested Colonel Phayre to write and tell him he should abstain from entering the territory of his Highness the Ameer, and that he should leave the women and children alone. The Nawab also mentioned that he was engaged making another truce with the rebel Sirdars, under which they were to submit to his Highness the Khan, Moolla Mahomed, Raisanee sending his son to Khelat, and, pending reply from the Khan, the Nawab would remain at Dadur. Supposing this to be the case, I further requested Colonel Phayre to summon the Nawab in here to explain his proceedings, but that he was on no account to bring any of the Sirdars with him.

6. To-day information has been received that the Nawab positively did enter the district of Seebee, marched about within it for several days, and ventured to make a meagre attack on the rebels in the hills bounding that district. A truce was then arranged, and the Nawab moved to Dadur. It was also reported that he had endeavoured to draw the Murrees into these disturbances, notwithstanding they had been told from this they should carefully abstain from engaging on either side.

7. All this shows that the Khan's difficulties as well as the disorders prevailing are only being increased by the proceedings of the Nawab, and that it is very desirable measures should be taken to prevent an early settlement of differences being indefinitely postponed by the injudicious proceedings of this person.

8. If the proclamation recommended by me is issued the rebel Sirdars will be only too glad to give in. They are getting pressed for supplies, and their followers are running rather out of hand from having to provide for themselves. The action will be in the name of the Khan, but the Sirdars will know well that every inquiry will be made, and a just decision come to, fair to all parties, while the British authorities engaging in mediation is guarantee that whatever decision is arrived at will have to be strictly adhered to by all parties, as on any breach by either the favour and countenance of the British Government would be immediately and entirely withdrawn from the offending party.

9. It would have been better to have had the Khan's assent in the first instance, but the season is becoming so far advanced that the delay in getting a reply from Khelat cannot be afforded, and Brahooee dilatoriness is so chronic in the race that there may possibly be another reference before the Khan finally assents. In justice to all then, and for the purpose of putting an end to the present unfortunate disturbances which are ruining the country, as well as producing bad effects on the people within our own territory, I consider it to be wise and sound that immediate interference to the extent recommended by me should at once take place.

10. There has not been much change in the state of affairs at Lus Beyla and in Mekran. In the former district Ali Khan Jamote has possession of Beyla, Soumeeanee, and the other towns of Lus, and states that he is holding them only for the ex-Jam. It now appears that Beyla was most unnecessarily abandoned by the Shahgassee Goolam Jan. He had sent 40 of his regular troops into Kurrachee to escort provisions out, but he had still a good number of horse and foot with him. The Jamotes, however, tampered with these and persuaded them that 8,000 to 10,000 men were coming down upon them. The troops on this informed the Shahgassee that they could not and would not fight against such overwhelming numbers, and that he must retire in time. He did so, and Beyla was occupied by Ali Khan Jamote with 150 men only. Noordeen Mingul joined him shortly after, but lives separately, and there does not seem much cordiality between them.

11. The latest accounts from Mekran state that negotiations were going on between the Darogah Atta Mahomed and Bhai Khan Gitchkee, which, it was thought, would end in the Darogah being allowed to leave the country, provided he went at once. Present disturbances would then cease there for a time, but it will be necessary for the Khan to establish a Governor again. This will probably have to be Faqueer Mahomed, as there is no one so well suited. It was an unfortunate move, the Khan letting Faqueer Mahomed leave Kedj, that he did not make it worth his while to remain. He will have now to make further concessions to Faqueer Mahomed than he would have had to do before, and lays open a temptation to the latter to ask for more when he feels inclined, a temptation which I am afraid he has not sufficient patriotism to avoid.

12. The disorders in Mekran have prevented a Commissioner and escort being sent from Kedj to Major St. John, but if Faqueer Mahomed returns there they will be despatched immediately. In the meanwhile, there is no fear of the disaffected chiefs interfering in any way with that officer; they would not risk to offend us, though, of course, it will be as well that Major St. John should proceed very cautiously.

13. I trust my proceedings may meet with the approval of your Excellency.

P.S.—Translation of a letter from his Highness the Khan regarding General Pollock's journey to Seistan is also given. General Pollock should have reached Kozdar en route to Khelat on the 16th instant, and intimation to that effect should arrive in a day or two.

Enclosure 2 in No. 35.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to the Commissioner in Sind, dated the 24th Shawal 1288 (5th January 1872).

I RECEIVED your letter, and made myself acquainted with the contents thereof. The Brahooees have left no stone unturned and no means untried to commit ravages on my country and subjects, and are in every way deserving of punishment for their misconduct and rebellious habits. My policy was the same as that understood by the British officials.

You informed me that Major Harrison, who is the Political Agent on behalf of Government, would be now near me, and be ready to favour me with good counsel on all occasions and times of emergency, and that I should act on his advice. In reply, I beg to state that I have hitherto made good use of his counsel, and will do so in future. I thank you and the British Government for telling me to avail myself of such aid.

You wrote to me to send my Wuzeer Shahgassee to Kutchee to make arrangements of the affairs there. I would have sent him without delay, and the Wuzeer himself would not have lost any time in leaving for Kutchee, had he not been still suffering from the wounds he received, and of which you are well aware. He is, no doubt, my true and faithful Wuzeer, and I have entrusted to him many affairs of importance to the State. By the grace of God, and favour and kindness of my friends and well-wishers, arrangements which will bring matters to a satisfactory conclusion are in course of being carried out Please rest assured, and, considering me as your friend, keep me informed of your health and welfare.

Enclosure 3 in No. 35.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Shahgassee Moolla Mahomed to the Commissioner in Sind, dated the 24th Shawal 1288 (5th January 1872).

I MADE myself acquainted with the contents of the letter you wrote to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and was pleased to find that his Highness the Khan and I are treated with such favours and consideration by the British Government. The reply of his Highness will inform you of the facts. As long as there is a spark of life in me I will not swerve an inch from my faithfulness and honesty to both the Governments—his Highness and the British.

Enclosure 4 in No. 35.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to the Commissioner in Sind, dated the 24th Shawul 1288 (5th January 1872).

I RECEIVED your letter about affording assistance to Colonel Pollock, who is on his way to Seistan, and read its contents. I have written to Moolla Mahomed Khan, Vakeel, and Shukkur Khan, Commander of forces, to get ready Moolla Sahibdad, and a certain number of sowars and footmen for placing at the disposal of Colonel Pollock to act as his escort, and to afford him every aid, and to proceed to where he directs them. He will be shown every consideration, and you need not be apprehensive on that score.

Enclosure 5 in No. 35.

From Commissioner in Sind, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I HAVE received your Highness' letter dated the 5th instant (24th Shawal), and have learned with extreme regret that your Highness is unable to despatch your Wuzeer the Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to Kutchee to attend to your interests there, and to confer with me. I the more regret this as the reason assigned is that the Wuzeer is still suffering from the wounds he received.

As no person has been deputed by your Highness in his place, which I asked, I must now by letter call your Highness' most serious attention to the state of affairs in your dominions.

The district of Kutchee has been overrun and devastated by certain of your Sirdars, who are in arms against your authority. These are still in hostile array and have lately plundered two kafilas of peaceable merchants passing through your country, while hundreds of the poor and well-disposed inhabitants of Kutchee have fled for protection into British territory.

In the province of Jalawan insurgents have taken possession of Lus Beyla, and your Highness' officials have failed to restore your authority.

In Mekran, also, rebellion has shown itself, and your Naib has been forced to leave his seat of government.

It becomes my duty to inform your Highness that such a state of affairs is matter of deep concern to the British Government, and that that Government can no longer view such events unmoved, occurring, as they do, so immediately close to British territory, and being opposed to the obligations of the treaty existing between the two Governments.

They not only unmistakeably convey that wide-spread discontent and consequent disorder prevail in your Highness' dominions, but they also force the conclusion that the existence of good government, which it has always been the earnest desire of the British Government, as well as your Highness' power to rule for the good of your people, are most dangerously threatened.

The causes and reasons for all this I do not wish in any way to prejudge, or, until full inquiry has taken place, to offer any decided opinion, but the effects so prominently brought to notice can only and certainly have led to the impression that there have been serious defects in administration to have produced such grave results—results which give extreme solicitude to the British Government, and which demand an immediate call on your Highness for the adoption of remedial measures and for improved system of government. Your Highness is well aware that during the many years I have had the honour of being in communication with your Highness, it has always been my sincere and undeviating endeavour to assist in every measure which would strengthen your Government and enable your Highness to rule for the benefit of your country and people. My best advice, and that of all officers of the British Government serving here, has also been freely given to that end.

Under existing arrangements, especially as regards those of the officials entrusted by your Highness with the management of affairs in Kutchee, I see no prospect of any improvement taking place, or of return to that state of order and general satisfaction which alone constitutes good government.

I have come to Jacobabad by the orders of Government to inquire into and attend to these matters, and as your Highness is unable to send your Wuzeer to me, it only remains for me to address your Highness and offer my services to promote the restoration of tranquillity in your kingdom, and to urge that you will accept my mediation in the points at issue between your Highness and your Sirdars, and to use my good offices in bringing about more reasonable and satisfactory relations between your Highness and them.

It is scarcely necessary for me to convey the assurance to your Highness that you may confidently trust in a sincere desire on my part to see a firm and lasting government established in your country, and that my best assistance will be heartily given to that object. I would therefore now press on your Highness that you should frankly accept of my offers of intermediation, and that you should at once convey to me full authority to act in your name, and on your behalf, in all necessary points and measures I may see fit to adopt, and that you will express your determination, and undertake to abide by any terms I may deem it requisite to conclude.

By acting thus you will assuredly secure the high consideration and continued friendship of the British Government, and your Highness and people will, I trust, derive lasting benefit in the return of the blessings of peace and renewed prosperity to your country.

I would beg that an early reply may be granted to this letter, and with expressions of true friendship and best wishes for your Highness' welfare, subscribe myself, &c.

Enclosure 6 in No. 35.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, to Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed.

It was with extreme regret that I learned from his Highness the Khan that you were still suffering from the wounds lately received by you. I sincerely trust that they may soon be healed, and that you may be relieved from further inconvenience on this account.

I have to-day addressed a letter to his Highness the Khan, the contents of which he will doubtless communicate to you.

You well know as well as I do that the position of his Highness and his Government is most critical, and that some better steps than have hitherto been taken must now be speedily adopted. I need not urge on so devoted and true a servant of the Khan as yourself the advisability of using your best influence to induce his Highness to accept the advice, which, in regard to his best interests and those of the country at large, I have been led to offer him, and to follow the course which, after mature consideration and under the orders of my Government, has been deemed the only one now left.

I trust soon to hear of your complete restoration to health, and should be glad to learn that improvement in this respect would yet allow of your being deputed by his Highness to join me.

With expressions of sincere friendship, I subscribe myself, &c.

No. 36.

No. 468, dated Bombay Castle, 25th January 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of my letter No. 400, dated the 22nd instant, I am directed to forward herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of a memorandum from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 7, dated 4th idem, enclosing translations of a letter (and accompaniments) from Moolla Mahomed Khan, Vakeel, to his son Moolla Peer Buksh at Jacobabad, regarding the engagement between the troops of the Khan of Khelat and the rebel Brahooee Sirdars.

2. I am at the same time desired to enclose copy of a second memorandum from Sir W. L. Merewether, No. 1, dated 1st instant, submitting, with remarks, diary of the Political Agent, Khelat, from 18th to 24th ultimo.

Enclosure 1 in No. 36.

Abstract translation of a letter from Moolla Mahomed Khan, Vakeel, to his son Moolla Peer Buksh.

I HOPE you have perused the intelligence of the victory gained by his Highness the Khan's troops, and the defeat of the Brahooees in the letter of Shukkur Khan to my address which I sent you in original. I left Shoree, and arrived at Chhulgeree, where I learnt that his Highness the Khan's army had made an entry into Bagh. I also marched from Chhulgeree and arrived at Bagh this morning (Wednesday). I visited the Commander (Shukkur Khan), and he gave me a full account of what had passed. He said that the Sirdars on their return joined the Brahooees at Mittree, and attacked the Khan's troops. The fight lasted for some time, and the enemy was eventually compelled to beat a retreat. The Brahooees, he said, lost about 110 or 120 men in killed, and that in this number was included some men of note, viz., Sadalla Raisanee, Jamal Zehree, son of Mahomed Khan, Rustomzy, Gool Mahomed, and Yar Mahomed, Raisanee, sons of Meer Kuteb Khan, Saheb Khan, and Dad Mahomed, nephew to Futteh Khan, Raisanee. It is not known what other personages have killed.

I enclose for your information the letter I received from the commander of the forces. Everything is getting on well here.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Shukkur Khan, Commander of the Waffadar Regiment, to Nawab Moolla Mahomed.

TO-DAY, on Wednesday the 14th of Shawal, we made a triumphal entry into Bagh. The Khan's troops lost four of the cavalry in killed and eight received severe wounds. The loss of the Brahooees has been very considerable, about 110 or 120 men in killed. Please leave at once and join without delay. The Brahooees are by the grace of God and good fortunes of his Highness the Khan scattered and still retreating. I had given you full particulars of their defeat and flight in my previous letter.

Meehan Khan, Raisanee, has been sent with 100 men to Dadur for the purpose of making the necessary arrangement for the safety of the people there. A large caravan of Afghans has arrived in Dadur. The Government dues will be recovered. I have sent spies to institute inquiries into the affairs of the Brahooees, and as to where they have located themselves.

No. 7, dated Camp, Jacobabad, 4th January 1872.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE translations submitted to Government for information, in continuation of Commissioner's letter No. 868, of 30th December 1871.

Enclosure 2 in No. 36.

Diary by the Political Agent, Khelat, from 18th to 24th December 1871.

ARRIVED at Kozdar on Tuesday. The chief intelligence during the past week is Noordeen Mingul's success in Beylah. The Roonjahs had collected in force to aid Shahgassee Goolam Jan against Ali Dhan Jamote, but joined on his approaching Beylah. The Shahgassee's detachment was unfortunately weakened by the absence of a convoy party and the refusal of some of the men to fight. He was, therefore, obliged to evacuate the town and fall back to his nearest support viâ Jao and Mushka. When last heard of he had arrived at the latter place with about a hundred men, but it is not known whether he will come to Kozdar viâ Nal, or go to Khelat. The Roonjas, Jamotes, and Minguls were inclined to dispute as to who had the right to govern the province of Lus Beylah. Noordeen Mingul, it is said, resigned his pretensions in favour of Ali Khan Jamote, on condition that all his Highness' stores of grain, &c. should be made over to him to enable him to march on Kozdar and Baghwana. Our timely arrival will of course put an end to this arrangement, and if Nawab Mahomed Khan has met with success in carrying out his Highness' instructions, recovering Beylah will be a matter of no great difficulty.

Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed Bezonjao has written twice to my Moonshees to find out what object I had in coming here, how long I was going to stay, and where I was going to. His messenger was informed that they were not at liberty to correspond with him, it being against my orders.

Sirdar Azaad Khan has, I believe, made some arrangement with Noordeen Mingul to create disturbance in this part of the country as soon as the cold weather is over. By our last post I received a letter from Naib Peer Jan, stating that I should know what was going on in Kutchee from his father's daily reports to his Highness the Khan. For some days prior to my departure from Khelat no news had been received from Kutchee, and in a letter just received from his Highness, dated 19th, he mentions that no information had been received regarding Nawab Mahomed Khan's movements. I, therefore, conclude that the rebellious Brahooees have intercepted the reports alluded to by Naib Peer Jan.

No news has been received from Mekran.

No. 1, dated Jacobabad, 1st January 1872.

Endorsed by Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE copy submitted to Government for information. The presence of Major Harrison in Kozdar just now will have the best effect. The relief for Major Harrison's escort is now en route to join him, and both parties can remain with him for a time if considered necessary, but I do not myself think it will be. No one in the country is either inclined or will venture to interfere with or do anything to trouble him. The receipt of intelligence of the success gained by the Khan's troops in Kutchee on the 24th ultimo will remove the despondency which had come over the people at Khelat on hearing Nawab Mahomed Khan's timid conduct in making terms with the rebels. His Highness the Khan should be able to make early arrangements for re-establishment of his Government in Beylah.

No. 37.

No. 693, dated Bombay Castle, the 5th February 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay in the Political Department, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department.

I AM directed to forward herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of diary from the Political Agent, Khelat, for the week ending 13th idem, as also accompaniments thereto, received through the Commissioner in Sind under endorsement No. 78, dated 25th January.

Enclosure 1 in No. 37.

No. 2, dated Khozdar, the 13th January 1872.

Diary by Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, for the week ending 13th January 1872.

ON Monday the 8th Jan Sing Goolam Mahomed informed me that the victory of his Highness' troops in Kutchee had already had a beneficial effect in the Jalawan country in deciding the movements of certain tribes who were merely watching events. The Mahomed Hoossainee Sirdar had gone to join his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and sent his son with 20 followers to the Jan Sing for any service that might be required of them.

News from Wudd states that Noordeen Mingul heard of Sirdar Meah Khan's removal after he left Kharan, but as he had previously written to him to escape and not mind his wife and family, he looked upon this merely a report to deter him from effecting the ex-Jam's restoration. On realizing that the efforts he had made had only benefited Ali Khan Jamote, and that the people of Lus Beyla had no intention of taking up arms on his behalf, he regretted what he had done, and is in great perplexity as to the future.

The Minguls of Wudd have sent to inform his Highness, through Sirdar Meah Mahomed, that they are quite willing to attack Noordeen Mingul and those of their tribe who have settled on the Poorali river in Beyla, if his Highness will confiscate their land in Wudd and present it to them.

A post arrived late on Wednesday from his Highness the Khan containing two letters for the Commissioner in Sind, which have been forwarded through the Political Superintendent, Frontier, Upper Sind.

A letter from Sirdar Azaad Khan to his Highness' eldest son, with reply to the same, as also Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed's answer to the message to him, were forwarded for my perusal. Copies and translations are attached.

Darogah Atta Mahomed writes that the people in Mekran having heard of the occurrence in Kutchee are inclined to be rebellious, and have refused to pay the balance of revenue; but that his Highness may rest assured that he will do his best to quell any disturbance that may arise.

The weather during the week has been mild.

Enclosure 2 in No. 37.

Translations.

From Sirdar Azaad Khan, of Kharan, to Sahibzada Meah Mahmood Khan.

AFTER SALAAM,—By God's blessing everything is well with me, and I hope you are also well. Your father is Khan of Beloochistan, and he is responsible for all the good and evil that occurs in his country. Well, your father sent a force against me at Kharan, and took away my people and slaves, the former he released, but detained the latter. A governor of a country fights in every possible way, but does not make slaves of defeated people. Your father has acted in this way. I am looking forward to the future; "had I not done so," I was quite capable of creating a disturbance. I have received a hint from your father to this effect "that he would give me my slaves and country." On this hint I have sent Mahomed Kumbranee to you; if the slaves are to be released, hand them over to him, and give him one of your servants as escort to Dusht Goran.

Shahgassee Goolam Jan carried off ten of my slaves who are now at Mushka. If the slaves are to be returned, collect them wherever they may be, and send them back. I claim the forts of "Goorjuck and Kooda Abadan; if you give them, well, if not it is in God's hands. I have nothing more to write about.

You Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed are in the place of a brother to me. You are a great man. You have seen fighting, and have just been wounded, now it is necessary for you to restrain your hand and tongue.

Enclosure 3 in No. 37.

From Sahibzada Meah Mahmood Khan to Sirdar Azaad Khan.

You are in the place of an uncle to me. I have received the letter you have sent by Mahomed Kumbranee. I am aware of its contents. You write about some country and slaves. Amongst rulers of countries war is often necessary, and results in the way you complain of. In former years, when there was a rebellion in Afghanistan, all the Ameers, nobles, and chiefs remained true and faithful to him. You, Azaad Khan, having seen the disturbance that a few foolish Brahooees have made, "have got wind in your head." By God's blessing these badly-behaved Brahooees have been well punished: God willing, they will be further punished. Formerly you were the friend and ally of these rebel Brahooees, "now you have held aloof from them. Noordeen came to your 'house, you would not join him, and sent him away." At least such is my father's impression, and he considers that as you are an old man you may wish to break with these Brahooees, and may desire to take service with him and act in the same way as your father did.

What you request can only be settled by a personal interview. Had you written respectfully, and asked for what you wanted in a becoming manner, I would have petitioned my father on your behalf, and have sent for you now or at some future time, and have done all I could for you. By God's blessing we are all well. Be comforted and write me regarding your welfare.

Enclosure 4 in No. 37.

From Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed to Sirdar Azaad Khan.

AFTER SALAAM,—May you, my brother Azaad Khan, remain happy. In the Sahibzada's letter you wrote to me as follows—That I had seen a fight and been wounded and that it was now necessary for me to restrain my hand and tongue. In reply, I beg to state that to use the sword is manly. "May God preserve my Khan to old age." My hope is that, so long as life lasts, I may do every thing I can for those who are well-disposed to his Highness; but as regards rebels and ill-disposed people, "neither hand nor tongue will be restrained." I will do everything I can for his Highness's good and welfare. I have done so hitherto, and shall continue to do so. I have written this separately as it would have been disrespectful to embody it in the Sahibzada's reply to you.

(True translation.)

(Signed) C. H. Harrison, Major,
Political Agent at Khelat.

No. 78, dated Camp, Jacobabad, the 25th January 1872.

Endorsed by the Commissioner in Sind.

True copies submitted to Government for information, in continuation of Commissioner's endorsement No. 37, dated 16th instant.

No. 38.

No. 713, dated Bombay Castle, the 6th February 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to Government of Bombay, Political Department to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of previous correspondence ending with my No. 693, dated 5th instant, regarding Khelat disturbances, I am directed to forward herewith for submission to the Government of India, copy of a further letter (and of its enclosures) on the subject, from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 84, dated 26th ultimo.

Enclosure 1 in No. 38.

No. 84, dated Jacobabad, 26th January 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to his Excellency the Right Honourable Sir W. R. Seymour V. Fitzgerald, G.C.S.I., Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

On receipt of the telegram conveying the instructions of the Government of India that "Commissioner should press terms as strongly as possible on Khan, but should not "issue proclamation, nor enter on mediation with chiefs unless of Khan's full consent; "meanwhile he should let it be fully known that he is in communication with Khan "upon the subject," I weighed the subject well and, taking into consideration the great injury that is being caused by the disturbance now going on, the mischievous effects they may have in unsettling the people within our own border, and the inexpediency of allowing further great delay before hostilities were checked, if possible, I came to the conclusion that the best way to carry out the orders of Government would be to cause the vakeel of his Highness the Khan, now with the forces in Kutchee, to be addressed and informed that I am in communication with his Highness the Khan on the subject of intermediation, and authorizing him to communicate so much to the Sirdars, with intimation that if they at once submitted and sent their followers to their homes, stopping all plundering, the mediation of the British Government, concurred in by his Highness the Khan, would be used, a full inquiry instituted, and afterwards the influence of Government would be exerted to secure to the Sirdars any just rights they may be shown to have. But it must be clearly understood by both sides that this mediation depended on immediate and complete suspension of hostilities; that on the Sirdars submitting, the Khan's forces would be withdrawn to a separate part, and the Sirdars could remain unmolested in any place in Kutchee they chose to select.

2. I accordingly instructed Colonel Phayre to write to the Vakeel to the above effect, and append copy of translation of his letter. If the Sirdars are reasonable, and really only wish for what they have a fair right to expect and claim, they will gladly and at once avail themselves of this opportunity to obtain a hearing, but if they have other views, only desire their own aggrandisement, and to follow their own selfish ends, regardless of the general good of the country, they will hesitate and raise difficulties. These should be firmly and distinctly disallowed.

3. It will be observed by your Excellency that while insisting on submission, and suspension of all hostilities, as a necessary preliminary to our engaging in mediation between his Highness the Khan and the Sirdars, I have been careful to avoid making any promises beyond that, on submission and dismissal of followers, there shall be full inquiry, a patient hearing given, and afterwards the influence of the British Government may be used in their behalf. This is even more than they justly deserve after what they have done, and considering that they are in actual rebellion against their sovereign with whom we have a treaty of alliance. But under the present circumstances and the great advantage it will be to all to have some change effected in the wretched state of affairs now existing in Kutchee without further delay, I decided that this much consideration might be allowed them and the arrangements with his Highness the Khan could then be carried out systematically and in proper form.

4. At the same time, as desired in the telegram, I addressed another letter to his Highness the Khan, urging him to promptly accept my offers of intervention, and pointing out the serious consequences that would follow his not availing himself of them. I also forwarded to him a copy of the letter sent by Colonel Phayre at my desire to the Vakeel Nawab Mahomed Khan, that his Highness might be aware of what had been done here and the measures I had adopted in reference to the correspondence going on with him.

5. The Khan has always shewn himself so ready and willing to abide by the advice and conform to the wishes of the British Government, that I trust he will not on this occasion hesitate as to the line he should take, and I should have been almost disposed to have acted as quite assured that he would not think of withholding his consent. But though it will be some time before an answer can be received from him, and delay is to be deprecated, the object desired will be partly gained in the suspension of hostilities, and suppression of petty outrages, which do far more harm than active operations of war.

6. I do not for a moment anticipate any violation of British territory, or that disturbances will occur within it; but continuance of such proceedings as are daily taking place in Kutchee cannot but have a very bad effect on the people inside our border by unsettling their minds and keeping up a feeling of uncertainty as to what is going to happen.

7. Major Harrison is perfectly safe at Khozdar. He commands easy access to the Moolla pass from there, and can always reach the plains in five or six marches. The rebels in Beyla, whose proceedings are watched from Kurrachee, are in no force at present, and to reach Khozdar would have to force their way through that portion of the Mingul tribe which has remained faithful to his Highness the Khan under the leadership of Meah Mahomed, and which will continue to be so, or Meah Mahomed, a person of influence, character, and popularity, will lose the leadership of the clan to which he has been nominated by the Khan. But even supposing the rebels from the south attempted to move towards Khelat, they would carefully avoid Major Harrison's camp, because it would be their very worst policy to get embroiled with us, and the last thing they would dream of. Major Harrison would of course not interfere with them in any way, which he fully understands.

8. I am glad to be able to report that General Pollock was met on the 15th at Gooroo, the last march according to the route I gave him before he would reach Khozdar. He had therefore done his marches exactly as was arranged, from which I conclude he had experienced no difficulties. The native officer commanding the party of the relieved escort, who met General Pollock, reported that all was well. I was told by Colonel Phayre that there was a report in the bazar of General Pollock's baggage having been fired upon; but it was mere bazar rumour, and though measures were taken that every inquiry should be made into the truth of the report, I did not consider it necessary to telegraph such doubtful circumstances to Government, and I would beg to suggest that Captain Sandeman should, while he is here and supposed to be acting under the orders of the Sind authorities, be directed to communicate with me, and take my orders, before he sends such hasty intelligence, which is only likely to mislead. If he confined himself merely to the matters which are entrusted to him, and belong to his office and position, such mistakes would not occur.

Enclosure 2 in No. 38.

No. 76, dated Jacobabad, the 24th January 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Frontier Upper Sind.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that Government have expressed their approval of the nature of the last communication addressed by me to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, copy of which was furnished to you, and are desirous that just mediation should be undertaken in the questions at issue between his Highness the Khan and certain of his Sirdars, with the view of bringing the disturbances now going on in Beloochistan to a satisfactory and lasting conclusion.

2. I have the honour to request, therefore, that you will inform his Highness' Vakeel Nawab Mahomed Khan, by letter, that I am in communication with the Khan on the subject and that he, the Vakeel, is authorised to inform the Sirdars to that effect, and that if they at once submit abandoning all hostilities and dismissing their followers to their homes, the fullest inquiry will be made by me into all that has occurred. All just claims the Sirdars may have will receive a patient hearing and the influence of the British Government will be used with the Khan to secure any rights they may truly be entitled to, both now and for hereafter. That it must be fully understood both by the Sirdars and the Vakeel that this mediation will depend on condition of immediate and complete suspension of hostilities and the Sirdars entrusting their case to me, that all petty plundering or injury to peaceable people be carefully repressed, any persons offending being at once seized and given up for punishment; all operations by his Highness the Khan's troops to immediately cease on the Sirdars so submitting, and they withdrawn from the neighbourhood of the Sirdars. The Sirdars can reside unmolested in any place in Kutchee they may select until such time as the inquiry above stated may be commenced, when they will be received into the British camp, perfect safety guaranteed to them, and full freedom to come and go as they please.

Enclosure 3 in No. 38.

Dated Jacobabad, the 24th January 1872.

From Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Frontier, Upper Sind, to Nawab Mahomed Khan, Vakeel to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

AFTER COMPLIMENTS.—I have to inform you by the desire of Sir William Merewether, the Commissioner in Sind, that he is now in communication with his Highness the Khan of Khelat on the subject of the present disturbances in Beloochistan, and of his giving his offices to mediate between his Highness the Khan and the Sirdars now acting in opposition to his authority, such mediation being desired by the Government of India.

I am also requested to tell you that you are authorised to inform the Sirdars to the above effect and add that if they at once submit abandoning all hostilities and dismissing their followers to their homes, the fullest inquiry will be made by Sir W. Merewether into what has occurred, all just claims the Sirdars may have will receive a patient hearing, and the influence of the British Government be used with the Khan to secure any rights the Sirdars may truly be entitled to.

That it must be clearly understood both by the Sirdars and by you that this mediation will depend on immediate and complete suspension of hostilities and the Sirdars entrusting their case to Sir W. Merewether; that all petty plundering or injury to peaceable people be carefully repressed, any persons offending being at once seized and given up for punishment.

All operations by his Highness' troops to at once cease on the Sirdars so submitting, and the troops to be withdrawn to a separate place.

The Sirdars can reside unmolested in any place in Kutchee they may select, until such time as the inquiry above-mentioned may be commenced, when they will be received into the British camp, perfect safety being guaranteed to them and full freedom to come and go as they please.

You should attend to this without delay, informing me that you have done so and the result.

Enclosure 4 in No. 38.

Dated Jacobabad, the 25th January 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. R. Merewether, C.S.I., C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

After Compliments.—Since writing to your Highness on the 21st instant, I regret to say that intelligence from Kutchee shows that affairs are assuming a still worse aspect, that small bands of robbers are scattered over the district, engaging in petty plunder and injury to poor peaceable people.

2. A kossid conveying a letter from me to your Highness was stopped, beaten, and the letter taken from him.

3. All this, as well as the late plunders of the kafilas in the Bolan Pass, not only causes great discredit to your Highness' Government, and grievous injury to your subjects, but I must also point out plainly and distinctly is in direct contravention of the terms of the treaty entered into with your predecessor. In the 5th paragraph thereof it is stipulated that "Meer Nusseer Khan binds himself, his heirs and successors to prevent all plundering or other outrage by his subjects within or in the neighbourhood of British territory, to protect the passage of merchants to and fro, &c.

4. I must not disguise from your Highness that recent events have caused extreme concern to my Government, and that a continuance of them must produce the worst possible results.

5. I would again, therefore, urge your Highness' most earnestly and strongly to assent at once to the proposals made in my letter of the 21st, and give me full authority to act in these matters on your behalf, as that is the only means now left of bringing about a more favourable state of affairs. I must also impress upon your Highness that very serious consequences must follow if my offers are not availed of, and my proposals for the benefits of your Highness and country not cordially accepted.

6. Knowing, however, from past experience the readiness which your Highness has always shown to take the advice of the British Government when it has been tendered to you, and the desire you have always displayed to act with all sincerity in accordance with its wishes, I have every confidence that you will not hesitate a moment in following the course that the British Government has proposed that you should adopt.

7. In this confident expectation I have to-day caused your Vakeel to be addressed in the manner shown in the letter copy of which is herewith forwarded, and I feel sure that your Highness' action will be such as to prove you are in strict accord with the views I have taken, and that you are prepared to fully concur and co-operate in the measures I have considered it advisable to adopt to save increasing evils which the delay in referring to you at Khelat gives opportunity for being brought about.

With expressions of sincere friendship and best wishes for your Highness' welfare, I subscribe myself, &c.

No. 39.

No. 817, dated Bombay Castle, the 10th February 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of previous correspondence regarding Khelat disturbances, I am directed to forward herewith, for submission to the Government of India, copy of the Khelat diary for the week ending 20th ultimo, and of its enclosures, received through the Commissioner in Sind under endorsement No. 98, dated 31st idem.

Enclosure 1 in No. 39.

Diary No. 3 for the week ending 20th January 1872.

The escort furnished by the 2nd regiment, Sind Horse, left this en route to Jacobabad on Sunday the 14th.

A post from his Highness the Khan was received on the 15th, forwarding letters from Nawab Mahomed Khan, Shukkur Khan, and Lusker Khan, the Gujjuck chief. The former reported that a force had gone into the hills usually occupied by the Lehrees, but that they had fled. Two Kafilas had been plundered by the rebels under the leadership of Yar Mahomed Khoord, eldest son of Sirdar Alladina, and his Highness' force was about to march on Meeskab, where they were assembled. Shukkur Khan reports that the Khan of Seebee had refused to allow the rebels to enter his territory. The Gujjuck chief's letter was to the address of Shukkur Khan, stating that he had always considered his Highness the Khan his friend, and thought him wanting in friendship not to have asked him for assistance against the Brahooees; that the latter were collecting in force, and the sooner he attacked them the better. Further, that he would supply them with provisions and join them, if he wished, with an auxiliary force. This chief stated the Khan of Seebee's * people had joined the rebels, and were giving them every assistance, owing to the enmity which exists between Gujjucks and Baroozyes. Shukkur Khan's statement is considered most reliable.

* Meaning thereby Buktyar Khan Baroozye of Kurruck, near old Seebee. The Gujjuck Chief was merely desirous of playing off the Vakeel against his old enemy, the Baroozye Chief. The Vakeel had no business to enter the Seebee district.
(Sd.) W. L. M.

On the 15th a detachment of Regular Infantry, strength 50 and 10 sowars, arrived from Khelat to garrison this fort.

Major-General Pollock and Dr. Bellew, accompanied by Naib Peer Jan, arrived on the 16th from Jacobabad with a detachment of the 3rd regiment, Sind Horse. Their baggage animals being fatigued and unable to march, Major Harrison and I placed our private camels at their disposal as far as Khelat, no carriage being obtainable here at this season of the year.

Naib Peer Jan received a letter from his father at Kotra, stating that he had occupied Goolooke Shair,* and that the Murrees and Dhoombkees were co-operating with him against the rebels. From amongst the latter the Lehrees, with the exception of Sumunder, had returned to their allegiance, and several other Brahooees, who had joined the rebels against their will, were most anxious to make their salaam to him. The rebels, it is said, have neither food nor grain, and may be obliged to capitulate or disperse in the course of a few days.

* Is in Seebee, where the Vakeel has no right to go.

Major-General Pollock, Dr. Bellew, and Major Harrison, who accompanies them as far as Khelat, left this on the 18th with 30 sabres from the detachment of the 1st Sind Horse, his Highness the Khan's escort not having arrived.

Information from Beyla states that all the people of Lus have agreed to rejoin his Highness the Khan directly a force appears, except Ali Khan Jamote; also that the Minguls have left Noordeen and returned to their homes, but that he is waiting there, hoping to effect a junction with Jam Ali the ex-Jam's son. He has sent people to this neighbourhood to ascertain if he will get assistance, should he raise a rebellion. Ali Mahomed, Sirdar Meer Khan's vakeel, and Aboo Bukkur Roonjah have been directed by him to go to Kurrachee for the purpose of buying gunpowder, and to see if anything can be done regarding the ex-Jam's son, to whom they have sent a hoondee for Rs. 5,000.

Meer Kaira, son of Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed Bezonjao, wrote to Alum Khan, one of the chiefs of the Kumbranees, not to go to Beyla, or join in any disturbances against the Khelat Government.

Sahib Khan Choota, and Khalifah Munjah, Borah of Lus Beyla, have had a dispute. The former is preparing to attack the Borahs.

No news from Mekran has been received during the past week.

On the 20th there was a continuous fall of rain during the night, and of snow in the morning at this place. It is supposed that General Pollock and Major Harrison may be detained two or three days at Lack Koran, where they have met with a severe snow-storm.

The accompanying letter, with translation, from Darogah Atta Mahomed to his Highness the Khan regarding affairs in Mekran has just been received.

(Signed) R. Bowman, Assistant Surgeon,
Khozdar, the 20th January 1872. Khelat Agency.

Enclosure 2 in No. 39.

Translation of a Letter from Darogah Atta Mahomed, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

After Salutations.—On a former occasion I informed you of what was occurring here. On the 24th December, Sirdar Bhai Khan, Gitchkee, joined those refractory people. He also assembled a force. On hearing this, I collected your troops, guns, and mortars, and marched against Goshie Kila, in which place they had fortified themselves. A fight took place, in which the guns were chiefly used. How many people were killed

I do not know, but the rebels were somewhat dispirited. A second time he sent a force against Turbot, which I heard of, and followed up. They had nearly reached Turbot when I overtook them. A fight ensued, and they were defeated.

In your force one chakar and two other sepoys were wounded. Among the Gitchkees, Lalla Nowsherwan was wounded on the shoulder-blade by a bullet. Shakaroolla and Shazaree, Gitchkees, residents of Buhidee, were killed. Many people of no note were killed and wounded. After this defeat they re-assembled, and have come to attack Turbot. Another fight is about to take place. What occurs I will let you know. You are my sovereign.

(True translation.)
(Signed) R. Bowman, Assistant Surgeon,
Khozdar, the 21st January 1872. Khelat Agency.

No. 98, dated Camp Jacobabad, the 31st January 1872.
Endorsed by the Commissioner in Sind.

True copy, with accompaniment, submitted to Government for information.

2. The District Superintendent of Police, Hyderabad, has been directed to warn Sirdar Meer Khan's son against being misled into any connexion with the rebels in Lus Beyla. Instructions have also been sent to the District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, not to allow munitions of war to be taken from there to Beyla.

No. 40.

No. 856, dated Bombay Castle, the 13th February 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I am directed to forward herewith, for the information of the Government of India, copy of papers received from the Commissioner in Sind under endorsement No. 115, dated 3rd instant, regarding Khelat affairs.

Enclosure 1 in No. 40.

No. 224, dated Jacobabad, the 29th January 1872.

From Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind.

Herewith I have the honour to submit statements by Major Harrison and Nawab Mahomed Khan regarding Syed Ali Mahomed, of Mustoong, as called for in your letter No. 834, dated the 19th ultimo.

In the press of business recently, Major Harrison's letter was overlooked, or I should have forwarded it on receipt.

Enclosure 2 in No. 40.

No. 1, dated Khozdar, the 8th January 1872.

From Major C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of memorandum No. 834 (Political Department) by the Commissioner in Sind, dated 19th December 1871, with remarks on the same, contained in your memorandum No. 2348 of the 28th ultimo, and beg to submit the following report on the subject.

2. Syed Ali Mahomed, of Mustoong, was in former years highly esteemed and respected by his Highness the Khan. In 1863, however, he sided with the chiefs through whose instrumentality the present Khan was dethroned, and appointed Shere Dil's Wuzeer, or Prime Minister. His tenure of office only lasted a few months, as Shere Dil was murdered, and his Highness re-seated on the Khanali. Syed Ali Khan was then looked upon with disfavour from the active part he had taken against his Highness, and the position he occupied, but I never heard of his being badly treated.

3. His Highness the Khan not having visited any of his districts for some years, proceeded to Kutchee in 1870, and at different places examined the revenue accounts from the date of his last visit; from thence he proceeded to Quetta, and, having audited the accounts of that place, went on to Mustoong.

4. At the latter place his Highness followed the same procedure, and on looking over his accounts found that Syed Ali Khan had embezzled large sums of money, and disbursed other amounts without the sanction of Shere Dil or himself. On hearing what was going on, I strongly advised his Highness, through Mahomed Khan, to look upon this and other similar transactions as bygones, and only to examine accounts from the date of his restoration. The reply I received was that the case had progressed so far that his Highness could not withdraw from the same. After a full inquiry it was ascertained that he had taken about Rupees 8,000, and was in possession of a document with Shere Dil's seal on it, making over the whole of Quetta to Afghanistan. His Highness called upon him to refund the money and produce the document alluded to; the latter order was at once complied with; but being in pecuniary difficulties, he asked Nawab Mahomed Khan to intercede for him, and it was ultimately arranged that he should give up a garden to liquidate this claim, and that the Nawab would take the first favourable opportunity of getting it restored to him.

5. Syed Ali Khan had left before Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed had defeated the rebels at Mustoong. Some weeks afterwards it was reported that he had gone to Cabul. His Highness' Wuzeer having full powers restored the garden to the Syed's son.

6. The above are the facts in connexion with the Syed. I have no doubt that he was interested in the proceedings of the rebels, but it seems incredible that the rebellion should be attributed to the story current in Kutchee, viz., that the disturbances arose from his Highness' bad treatment of the Syed.

7. I would respectfully invite attention to the accompaniment of my letter No. 85 of the 21st October 1871, and ask whether subsequent events have not proved that the rebellion originated with Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen; the accompaniment was addressed to Saloo Khan, Raisanee. In it particular inquiry is made as to the views of Sirdar Jehangir and this Syed regarding a rebellion; opportunity and money were named as requisite to ensure success. Subsequent information shows that difference of opinion existed amongst the rebels as regards opportunity. Jehangir, Lehree, recommended that they should wait until the Brahooees went down to Kutchee and create a disturbance there; others advocated an immediate attack before his Highness' regiment could return from Beyla. The latter course was adopted, and the rebels were headed by Jehangir, Lehree, of Nurmook. The letter found in his pocket shows at whose instigation and in whose interest he fought. After his death Sumunder assumed the chieftainship of the Lehrees, and openly boasted that the rebellion had been got up by them, and refused to acknowledge Sirdar Dina Khoord and Mahomed Khan Rustamzai, both of whom looked upon themselves as Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's representatives. By plundering Kutchee the Brahooees doubtless thought they were carrying out the instructions in accompaniment above alluded to as regards opportunity and money.

8. Since the commencement of the disturbances I have asked his Highness on more than one occasion if he had done any thing to annoy or excite the people, or committed any injustice, such as taking away land, &c. He repeatedly assured me that he had given no cause whatever for the outbreak; that it was undoubtedly organized by Moolla Mahomed and Noordeen: and that they took advantage of all his infantry being away to create this disturbance. The Shahgassee also confirmed the above, stating that his Highness had acted justly, but had shown no generosity; as an example, his Highness, on examing Sirdar Jehangir's sunnud, found that, though only entitled to fourteen bunds, he had enclosed several more crown land. His Highness therefore ordered that revenue was to be paid on whatever was in excess of sunnud. Sirdar Jehangir said that he would keep what he had got or nothing. His Highness not having yielded this point accounts for Sirdar Jehangir's hostility to the Khelat Government.

9. In conclusion, I would respectfully allude to that part of my diary ending 26th November which refers to a conversation with Wullee Khan, as it not only shows how unreliable stories of this kind are, but supports his Highness's own statement, that he had done nothing that could account for this rebellion.

Enclosure 3 in No. 40.

Statement of Nawab Mahomed Khan, Vakeel of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, regarding the flight of Syed Ali Mahomed from Mustoong.

"Syed Ali Mahomed is the Moorshed or spiritual adviser of the Brahooees. He was at one time Minister to Shere Dil, some time Khan of Khelat. When the present Khan this year arrived at Mustoong, the Syed was directed to produce his accounts. Directly that he was informed of this, he came to me and said that he would render a statement of his accounts, and at the same time he requested me to take the ornaments belonging to his family to his Highness the Khan. After this a large quantity of women's gold ornaments were made over to me by another Syed, called Azeem Shah. These ornaments I myself took to his Highness, who refused to take them, saying that he did not want these, nor did he desire to do any oppression. All he asked for was that the Syed should render true accounts of the money affairs entrusted to him. The Khan himself directed me to get this from Syed Ali. The accounts were to be made up with the aid of arbitrators, and the Syed was to give a bond, signed by the Kazee, for whatever sum was due to his Highness by the Syed. This was done, and Rs. 6,500 (more or less) was fixed as due by the Syed to his Highness, and the Syed gave a bond for the amount, signed by the Kazee. This was made over to the Khan, but by whom I cannot say, as whole affair took place in the Durbar. After this, by the Khan's desire, I comforted the Syed, saying to him that he ought to treat the whole affair as a joke; that the Khan had authorized him to say privately that, after the Khan's return to Khelat, the bond would be returned to him, Syud Ali, and the Khan had no desire to take one pice from him. His Highness shortly after this left for Khelat, and the day after his arrival there the present Brahooee disturbances broke out. Upon this Syed Ali fled to Candahar, but the reason for his doing so was partly because he had no hope that the Khan would do as stated and return the bond, and also partly because he feared that the Brahooees would implicate him in their dispute with the Khan. Directly I heard of Syed Ali's flight, I received the bond from his Highness, and sent it after him to Candahar, telling him that the Rs. 6,500 would never be taken from him, and not to fear. My letter reached him all right, and he replied that he would return home to Mustoong after his son's return from Cabul, where he had gone on business."

Question by Colonel Phayre. Explain what accounts of the Khan's were kept by this Syed, regarding which he required a statement?

Answer. " I cannot say for certain. For some time the Syed was the late Shere Dil's Wuzeer during the time he was Khan, and he kept the revenue and other accounts of the Mustoong district. He was also Naib for some time during the present Khan's rule. I believe the accounts he was called on to produce were those of the collections of revenue, &c., made during the time he held these offices."

Question. Do you know anything about Commandant Atta Mahomed, of the Khan's troops, having questioned the Syed about money he was reported to have accumulated during the time of the late Shere Dil, Khan of Khelat?

Answer. " I myself told the Syed that Atta Mahomed had made such a report to the Khan, and the Syed laughed, and said the whole story was false, and was an idle tale. The Commandant himself is at Kedj, and has been there for more than a year."

Given before me,

(Signed) R. PHAYRE, Colonel,
Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

Jacobabad, the 20th January 1872.

No. 115, dated Camp, Jacobabad, the 3rd February 1862.

Endorsed by the Commissioner in Sind.

True copies submitted to Government in continuation of Commissioner's letter, No. 868, of the 30th December 1871.

No. 41.

No. 857, dated Bombay Castle, the 13th February 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I AM directed, with reference to previous correspondence, to forward to you, for the information of the Government of India, the accompanying copy of papers received from the Commissioner in Sind, under endorsement No. 122, dated 5th instant, relative to Khelat affairs.

Enclosure 1 in No. 41.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Nawab Moolla Mahomed, to Colonel R. Phayre, dated 19th Zoolkaid 1288.

I RECEIVED your perwannah dated the 13th instant about communicating certain matters to the Sirdars, &c. I have furnished you before this with the detailed information of the flight of the Brahooees into the hills, and of the conversation about truce between the Commandant and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Alladina on the following day, and hope it has been received by you. I have sent the same information to his Highness the Khan, and have not received any reply. Now that I got your perwannah, I at once, on the 16th instant, despatched a copy with my letter to the Sirdars, and herewith enclose, in original, their reply, which came to hand on the 19th. I submitted your letter, in original, to his Highness the Khan, and also a copy of the Sirdar's reply. I am ready to obey any orders that you, or his Highness the Khan, who is my master, may be pleased to communicate to me. I received a copy of the former letter that you had sent me, in the belief that the original may have miscarried, and sent it, in original, to the Sirdars. Some of the Brahooees (i.e. Sirdars) are living in Seebee, and some in the hills.

Enclosure 2 in No. 41.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Sirdars Jundo Khan, Sumunder, Alladina, and others to Moolla Mahomed Khan.

WE received your letter and copy of Colonel Phayre's to your address, and made ourselves acquainted with their contents. We have had before this some conversation on the subject, and we distinctly stated that we and his Highness the Khan would not come to binding terms without the intervention of the British official, Colonel Phayre. Our statements on this head were all not listened to by you; and now that the order from the aforesaid officer has been received, and a copy has been sent to us, we consent to abide by it, and express our approval of it. Now from the 18th of Zoolkaid, the date on which a copy of the letter of Colonel Phayre has reached us, we give information of the contents of the above copy to the men with us, and to Sarabuns and Jalabuns that we are here, and write and inform the other Sarabuns and Jalabuns to abstain from all wrongful acts. We will communicate the contents of the perwannah of the English Government to all the Sarabun and Jalabun people, for now the British Government is our sovereign as well as yours, whereas the British officer on our frontier is Colonel Phayre. If after this any unlawful act is committed by a Sarabun or Jalabun, information of it, after the necessary proof, may be given to us, that we may hand over the offending party to Colonel Phayre. According to the order of the British Government and Colonel Phayre we dismissed our followers, who will go and reside in any place they like.

You should move from here, and return to Bagh or Gundava, which is the capital of the Khan's dominions in Kutchee. Be at ease and keep us informed of what passes there.

No. 122, dated Camp Jacobabad, the 5th February 1872.

Endorsed by the Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE translation submitted to Government for information.

2. The tone and some of the expressions in the Sirdars' letter are worthy of notice, wherein they try to make it appear they consider themselves the subjects of the British Government. This will have to be most carefully met in any proceedings and arrangements that may take place, and it must be clearly established that the British authorities only engage as mediators between the Khan and his Sirdars, and that the latter can only be regarded as the subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

3. The Political Superintendent has been instructed to inform the Vakeel that, under this change in circumstances, he should at once withdraw with the Khan's troops to Gundava, and there await the arrival of his Highness the Khan from Khelat, expected shortly; also that, should there be any renewal of hostilities or disturbances by either side, the initiating party will be held to blame.

No. 42.

No. 1012, dated Bombay Castle, the 19th February 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of the letter from this Office, No. 857, dated the 13th instant, I am directed to forward, for the information of the Government of India, copy of further papers received from the Commissioner in Sind with endorsement No. 124, dated the 6th idem, relating to the present state of affairs in Khelat.

Enclosure 1 in No. 42.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from Nawab Mahomed Khan to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, dated 28th January 1872.

I received your letter dated 17th January 1872, asking me to come with all the papers regarding the recent truce. From Bagh I went by several stages to Deh Narree, and arrived at Peer Kutto, and found that the Brahooees had before my arrival fled to the hills. On the second day the commander, one Ressaldar, and a few trustworthy persons of my side, and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Alladina, on the part of the Sirdars, had some conversation, when they came to the following terms, viz., that if his Highness the Khan will pardon all the wrongs committed by the Brahooees; 2ndly, if they (the Brahooees) are not obliged to make good the losses of which they are the cause; and 3rdly, that if all the allowances and grants received by them (the Brahooees) are given back, all the Sirdars (with the exception of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed), as also the son of Moolla Mahomed, will proceed to appear in the presence of his Highness the Khan. That for the present we should go with our army to Dadur and report the whole matter to his Highness the Khan. In case the Khan consents, they should be sent for, when they will leave for Khelat; but if the answer is in the negative, they will not give up their plans of aggression. At the same time the Brahooees agreed to remain at the foot of the hills till such time as the reply reached Dadur, where we were to stop. I marched, and coming to Dadur, submitted a full report of the proceedings to his Highness the Khan, whose reply is not yet received by me. No paper was drawn up at the time that I should bring with me. If you desire me to come in, kindly let me know soon, that I may, after leaving the commander and the forces at Dadur, return to Jacobabad. Nothing was done in writing, but all was oral. Favour me with your orders that I may obey at once. I received your letter yesterday in the evening.

Enclosure 2 in No. 42.

No. 105, dated Camp Jacobabad, the 1st February 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, to Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

In reference to the letter from Nawab Mahomed Khan, forwarded under your endorsement, without number, dated 29th January 1872, I have the honour to inform you that, under present circumstances, it will be better to let the Nawab remain where he is. No answer, therefore, is necessary.

No. 124, dated Camp, Jacobabad, the 6th February 1872.

Endorsed by the Commissioner in Sind.

True copies submitted to Government for information.

No. 43.

No. 1122, dated Bombay Castle, the 24th February 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Political Department, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

REFERRING to previous correspondence regarding the affairs of Khelat, I am directed to transmit herewith, for the information of the Government of India, copy of further papers on the same subject, received from the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, under endorsement of the Commissioner in Sind, No. 135, dated the 7th instant.

Enclosure 1 in No. 43.

No. 280, dated Camp, Thoole, the 4th February 1872.

From Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind.

Two messengers from the Sirdars arrived in my camp this morning, bringing to me the enclosed letter, which I forward, in original, for your information, together with a copy of my reply.

2. One of the copies sent by the Sirdars is of the original letter received by me yesterday and submitted to you, the other is a copy of the letter written under your instructions to Nawab Mahomed Khan on the 24th ultimo.

Enclosure 2 in No. 43.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from the Sirdars to Colonel R. Phayre, dated 19th Zoolkaid 1288.

AFTER COMPLIMENTS,—We received a copy of your perwannah and order to Naib Moolla Mahomed Khan through the said Naib. According to your perwannah we expressed our consent and approval, and sent a letter giving vent to such expressions to the Naib. We append a copy of our letter to the Naib, as also of the one addressed by you to the Naib and forwarded to us. We hope these will be perused by the Sirkar. There is nothing particular that we can mention. Be at ease and favour us with a reply.

Enclosure 3 in No. 43.

Dated Camp, Thoole, the 4th February 1872.

From Colonel R. Phayre, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier to Sirdars Moolla Mahomed, Alladina Khoord, Sumunder Khan, Jinda Khan, Mahomed Syed Khan, and Shadee Khan, Bungoolzai.

I HAVE received your letter dated 31st January 1872, enclosing copies of letters as per margin for my information.

1. Copy of letter from the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to Nawab Mahomed Khan, of 24th January 1872, containing the orders of the Commissioner in Sind.
2. Copy of letter from the Sirdars, to Meah Mahomed Khan, in reply to above letter.

2. In reply I forward to you copy of a letter which I addressed to Nawab Mahomed Khan yesterday, from which you will see that the Commissioner in Sind has invited his Highness the Khan to confer with him in Kutchee about these affairs, and that until his Highness the Khan arrives, the Commissioner has requested Nawab Mahomed Khan to remain with his Highness's troops at Gundava, and that you should remain quiet until his Highness's decision is made known.

No. 135, dated Camp, Jacobabad, the 7th February 1872.

Endorsed by the Commissioner in Sind.

TRUE copies submitted to the Government for information, in continuation of Commissioner's No. 122, dated 5th instant.

No. 44.

No. 1173, dated Bombay Castle, the 26th February 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, in the Political Department, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

Referring to previous correspondence regarding the affairs of Khelat, I am directed to transmit herewith, for the information of the Government of India, the accompanying copy of a "summary of news" from the 18th to the 25th ultimo received from the Political Aent, Khelat.

Enclosure in No. 44.

Summary of News from the 18th to the 25th January by the Political Agent, Khelat, dated Khelat, the 25th January 1872.

Thinking I might be of some service to General Pollock if I accompanied him as far as Khelat, I left Kozdar with 30 sabres on the 18th instant, leaving the remainder of my escort with Dr. Bowman, as forage would not be procurable except for a limited number of horses.

2. The climate was pleasant until we arrived at Lahran, three miles from Anjeera. From that place we started in a snow storm and experienced several showers of snow and sleet before reaching Lohrab. From the 21st to the 24th the sky was clear, but a cold cutting wind, with the thermometer in the early morning at 8° or 10°. On the 23rd we reached Khelat at 2 p.m., and later in the afternoon I introduced General Pollock and Dr. Bellew to his Highness, and on the following afternoon he returned their visits. General Pollock and Dr. Bellew left to-day, the 25th, at 11 a.m., escorted by 50 sowars. They appeared to be pleased at the hospitality and attention that had been shown to them.

3. On the morning of the 24th I visited his Highness to see that suitable arrangements had been made for General Pollock between this and Quetta. The conversation then verged on affairs in Kutchee; and on his Highness informing me that the chiefs had asked through Shukur Khan to be pardoned on any terms he (the Khan) might think fit, I strongly advised that Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed should be sent to Kutchee to assist in coming to some understanding with the rebel Sirdars. The Shahgassee, however, appeared to think it more desirable that his Highness should proceed and confer with the Commissioner in Sind on the subject. No decision was arrived at beyond its being agreed that a special kossid should be sent off informing the Commissioner in Sind that either his Highness or the Shahgassee was prepared to start on knowing with whom he wished to confer. Pending an answer to this question I have consented to remain at Khelat. Should his Highness proceed to Kutchee, he would probably expect me to accompany him, and, to save time, would proceed viâ Lehree and the Tahree Hills.

Before leaving Kozdar I received a letter from Sirdar Faqueer Mahomed, who reported all quiet in his districts, and that Sirdar Azaad Khan, of Kharan, had steadily refused to join in any intrigues. News from Nooshky leads me to doubt Azaad Khan's good intentions.

Two letters have just been received from Sirdar Abdool Khaman, Zuggur Mingul, one to his Highness' address, the other to me. In the former he writes: I have sent a man to collect all the people who will obey me. Dost Mahomed and his tribe will follow me, but Alum Khan and Poor Dil Khan are inclined to join Azaad Khan. The Bareechees stole some of my camels, but I recovered them.

This Sirdar, in writing to me, states the following is the latest news from Seistan: Alum Khan, Boorjundee, has arrived in Seistan, and made arrangements with Surfuraz Khan, Sunjravee of Chaga, and is now making other arrangements regarding Afghan boundary. He has also written to me to take service with Persia and acknowledge her rule. I and the Mahomed Hussainees have refused to have anything to say to them, consequently we have been plundered.

On arrival at Khelat I heard that a man had been blown away from a gun at Mustoong; so asked his Highness when visiting him who it was, and why it had been done. In reply, he stated that the man was Balack, Lehree, who cut down Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed in the Mustoong outbreak. Being wounded in the flight he had concealed himself in the neighbourhood, and on this being known he (the Khan) had ordered Balack's arrest as a bad and dangerous character, and directed his Naib to punish him in the way I had heard.

Between Sohrab and Khelat we met two small kafilas laden with wool, about 60 loads.

(Signed) C. H. Harrison, Major,
Political Agent at Khelat.

No. 45.

No. 1174, dated Bombay Castle, 26th February 1872.

From W. Wedderburn, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

REFERRING to my letter No. 958, dated the 13th instant, I am directed by the Right Honourable the Governor in Council, to transmit herewith, for the information of the Government of India, copy of a letter from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 170, of the 17th idem, giving cover to copies of letters from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, according to him (Colonel Merewether) full authority to act in his behalf in bringing to an end the present disturbances in Kutchee.

Enclosure 1 in No. 45.

No. 170, dated Camp, Jacobabad, 17th February 1872.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir W. R. Seymour V. FitzGerald, G.C.S.I., Governor and President in Council, Bombay.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith copies of abstract translation of letters from his Highness the Khan of Khelat in answer to my letters of the 21st and 25th ultimo. From these your Excellency will observe that his Highness in his accustomed desire to meet the wishes of Government has unreservedly accepted the proposals contained in my letters, that he entrusts me with full authority to act for him, and will willingly give his approval and assent to all the measures and arrangements adopted by me for the good of his country. He also expresses his concurrence in the letter I requested Colonel Phayre to write to the vakeel, Mahomed Khan, copy of which was forwarded to me by the Khan. His Highness has issued a proclamation suspending hostilities, translation of which is appended.

2. His Highness most impressively urges that he has up to this time countenanced no wrong to his subjects, or anything that endangered the safety of their persons and property, and that he has ever acted up to the terms of the treaty of his predecessors. I shall be better able to speak more fully on these subjects after I have heard fully all that can be said on both sides at the coming meeting with his Highness, and reserve any further remarks until then.

3. I wrote from this on the 1st instant to Major Harrison, requesting the Khan would himself come to Kutchee with his Vizier and Major Harrison. That letter, carried by a special messenger, was expected to reach Khelat about the 7th, and as the Khan was quite ready to start, I conclude he is now on his way, and that he may be expected to reach Gundava by the 23rd or 24th instant.

P.S.—I would draw attention to His Highness' remarks on the plunder of the kafilahs in the Bolan, the people with the kafilahs were warned against following that route, but persisted in taking it, giving documents to the Khan's officer at Quettah to the effect that they adopted it at their own risk. These documents, the Khan says, he has in his possession, and presuming they are of the above tenor, the Khan may be clearly absolved of all responsibility for the losses incurred by the merchants.

Enclosure 2 in No. 45.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to the Address of the Commissioner in Sind, dated 25th Zoolkaid 1288.

I BEG to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 25th January 1872, relative to the disturbances in Kutchee and in the neighbourhood of the English territory in contravention of the terms of the Treaty, and to giving you authority to act on my behalf, &c. In reply, I state that I have not up to this time countenanced anything that has wronged my subjects and endangered the safety of their persons and property, and have ever acted up to the terms of the treaty of my predecessors. I have ever tried my utmost to enhance the welfare and prosperity of my subjects, and have now hopes that by your kindness all will be made straight. I with great pleasure consider you master of all my affairs, and entrust you with full authority to act for me. I will with willingness give my approval and assent to all the measures and arrangements adopted by you for the good of my country. I highly approve of the letter addressed by Colonel Phayre to Naib Mooila Mahomed on the 24th January 1872.

If it please God, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed will leave for Kutchee in two or three days, and will, it is hoped, arrive at Bagh about the 23rd February 1872.

Enclosure 3 in No. 45.

Abstract Translation of a Letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to the Commissioner in Sind, dated 25th Zoolkaid 1288.

